Terry leans back on a tree as he watches as the War-Prince and the other Andalite Warrior tend to the injured comrade, it looks like the fallen one's tail is half gone. He holds up his cell phone, looking at the number belonging to someone simply known as Uncle. It appeared on his contact list after Satan Beelzebub's visit. Glancing back at the injured Andalite, he presses the green phone button, moving his phone to his ear, waiting for someone to answer.

"Ah, young Terrance, what have you to report?" Satan Beelzebub asks and he replies, "Well, sir, it seems the War-Prince has located a pair of comrades. Both are suffering from racial ills that seems to relate to Morphing."

"In fact, it seems that due to their allergy, one of them is still suffering from their injuries concerning what happened about six month ago. It's likely due to lack of medical treatment and fearful reactions concerning local drugs." Terry goes on to explain. "The War-Prince wishes for the pair to reside in the Underworld for health reasons." It's clear that this will be granted, after all, access to the pair will be twenty-four seven by the Satans so they won't have to worry about drawing more attention to his Territory, giving them a much more accessible source of information to mine, but it also means that the War-Prince will have his own people with first hand experience concerning Devils.

"I see. Hmmm, I will be there in a few minutes." With that, the Beelzebub hangs up and he sighs as he pulls his phone from his ear. He looks at the screen before closing the contact list and putting his cell phone back into his pocket. With that, Terry mostly waits to catch the eye of the War-Prince to give a nod, confirming that he's contacted one of the Satans.

About seventeen minutes later, a teleportation circle flares to life, which alerts the three Andalites to the arrival of visitors. The pair of Warriors glance at the War-Prince with their main eyes while their stalk eyes witness the teleportation of not just Satan Beelzebub but also Satan Leviathan. The first looks very much like he expects, it's the latter's appearance that has him, well, bewildered.

:Satan Serafall, a pleasure.: The War-Prince greets the currently robe clad Satan and he swears that the Beelzebub is enjoying the reactions the Leviathan is gathering from not just him but also the pair of Andalites. He's not sure what happens after witnessing a very cheerful smile beaming (beaming!), at the War-Prince.

Somehow, his mind just blanks, there's no emotional numbness at the fact that he's in the presence of a pair of Satan, just simple what's up with this scene? His mind seems to reboot as the Beelzebub begins casting spells on the pair of Andalite, illusion spells as once the circles of magical glyphs vanish, the pair take the appearance of Centaurs. The injured one is a red roan while the other is a buck skin.

"How strange..." Murmurs the buck skin, the name begins with a G as they examine their appearance. The red roan murmurs his own agreements, while the War-Prince just looks pleased. "I need to retrieve a few things... I had been trying to grow..."

:Just tell me where and I'll retrieve the items, Gafinilan. You don't want to leave Mertil alone with him, do you?: Prince Elfangor muses and Gafinilan seems to be whispering directions to the War-Prince. Just as the Satans plus guests were leaving, the Leviathan waves a girly wand, which causes a trail of rainbow before giving a minor twirl.

:Are you alright?: The War-Prince asks him, suddenly before him and with a hand on his right shoulder. "Huh, I... I don't think I want to know, I mean, she was just so... so..." Girlie. He trails off and it's clear that the War-Prince is rather worried.

"It's just... why? She just looks so different then she did just, oh Lucifer, less then a month ago? Is it the pressure? Am I the reason she lost it?!" Terry wonders out loud. "How will I survive the fallout of breaking a Satan?!"

:I don't think you are the cause. I believe she mentioned method acting? Yes, she's taking the, temporary it sounds like, lead role of a TV show as they couldn't keep a lead actress. She was just at the studio when Ajuka called her to alert her to this.: The War-Prince tells him and it takes him a few minutes of taking deep, calming breaths for him to give the older male a thankful look.

"Right, so, let's go get these items." Terry says once he's in control of his emotions and the War-Prince withdraws the hand from his shoulder. The Anadlite takes a few steps away before beginning to Morph, the moment he notices the feather pattern, he mimics by Morphing into his own Crow Morph, doing his best to keep his magic under his control.

A bit of a run and Terry takes to the air, being sure to keep his eye on the War-Prince, following after.

Location: Underworld

Terry walks about the residence that will be housing the pair of Andalites, it's a few hours since the pair had left with the Satans and it had taken the War-Prince and himself about two hours to collect the various stashes that Warrior Gafinilan, he's not sure if he's even pronouncing that right as it's not a human name plus there's the fact that the race is gifted in minor telepathy, but they did find and collect the meager contents of each. He's rather impressed with what the Andalite had plans to do, namely, figure out a way to get documents and create a human identity. It looks like the Warrior had been deciding what level of educator he wanted to pass off as. Not that Terry doubted that the Andalite wasn't well educated, it's just that, well, he would most definitely arouse the interest of the Supernatural kind, maybe even received a personal visit by the Governor General of the Fallen himself, Azazel.

He comes to a stop before the sight of the War-Prince gently touching one of the alien saplings in the basement. It takes the eleven year old Devil a few seconds to realize that the basement seems to have been turned into a green house. Leaning against the door way, he pipes in, "You know, the Animorphs are just dying to know how it is you Andalites eat without a mouth."

Twin eye stalks turn in his direction as he receives an answer, :I am not overly surprised about that. Although, are you asking to state your own curiosity on the matter?: Terry considers that before shrugging slightly, saying, "They are growing more confident in their relationships with me. I think, soon, they'll be doing a similar Q and A session with you concerning Andalites that they did with me yesterday. I think they have been re-framing due to the fact that your an adult but it's going to happen."

:I promised Tobias that I would go flying with him tonight.: The War-Prince admits and he checks the time viva his phone. "You know... it's close to six pm. If you want, I could head back to pick him up to bring him here. Most would take the sight of a hawk and crow flying about to be Familiars of a pair of Devils."

:Familiars... Are they generally animals?: The War-Prince asks, one of the eye stalks begins to look away. Terry can't help the frown that forms upon his face as he tries to think of an answer. "Generally speaking, Familiars tend to be beings that have something of a magical nature to them, like just a small spark or capable to making use of their master's magic in some way when the bond is formed." He pauses before admitting, "I can't say what it's like to have a Familiar as I've never been given leave to give it a go. Now, I'm not sure if I could form that kind of bond given the technology I've been exposed to." My Morphs could be occupying my magic in that kind of relationship. Terry privately muses. "Not that I would know for sure, the Beelzebub would need to run experiments of a magical nature to see how your... Escafil device has effected me on that kind of level."

The War-Prince kind of just makes a mental noise of understanding and silence slowly grows between them. Terry wonders about what's occupying the other's thoughts. Unsurprisingly, his thoughts drift upon the fact that he hasn't eaten much for lunch and he's usually preparing dinner right now or waiting for it to be delivered about this time. Maybe they have food in the kitchen? I mean, do I have permission to leave? I doubt ordering delivery is permitted.

:Would you mind getting him? Might want to pick something up from the surface as I don't think I have any currency in Devils society.: And I don't want to impose on you any more then I have to. Seems to be implied, in Terry's mind at least.

"Sure, why not." He says as he moves to stand upright. "See you in a bit." The War-Prince does a human nod, Terry feels the eye stalk stop looking at him as he turns to walk back up the stairs.

It doesn't take long for him to find the front door of the residence and makes use of a Teleportation Circle to return to his house, namely the permanent Teleportation Circle that's in the second floor of his basement. Pulling out his cell, he phones the Tenant house as he's exiting out of the secure room, heading up the stairs. By the third ring, Tobias picks up the phone, "Allen?"

"Ah, sorry, Tobias, it's Terry. Just phoning to tell you to come over for supper as Allen wants to have dinner here." He informs Tobias. It takes the blond teen a few seconds to ask, "Is he ok?"

"He's fine, an old co-worker though... well, professionals are doing their best and hopefully, they'll be able to help repair the damage." He reassures. "Any requests for dinner?" The Devil asks as he makes sure to close the hidden door and fast walks to walk up the stairs.

"Tacos? If its not any trouble." Tobias answers and he reassures that it's fine before saying his good bye, waiting for Tobias to do the same, he hangs up. Terry then pulls up his contact list for restaurants and places an order at a place that he likes and who will also deliver said order to his place. They already had his credit card so they'll charge it to that without him needing to be down stairs to pay for it when it arrives.

Heading up to the door, he unlocks it and does a quick spell to ensure that when Tobias arrives, it'll open up and allow him in as he heads to have a quick shower and to change his current set of cloths, something casual formal given that it's likely he'll be seeing a Satan when they return to the Underworld. He feels and then hears the arrival of Tobias as he is rinsing his hair of the shampoo and by the time he steps out of the shower, their food arrives as he hears Tobias answering the door.

"Don't start eating here, we'll be eating in the Underworld." Terry shouts as he turns off the water. He wraps a towel about his waist before opening the door to walk out of the bathroom, being sure to turn off the light as he heads for his room.

"Underworld? Like Hell?!" He hears Tobias exclaim in surprise as he walks down the stairs. "Yea, Prince Elfangor met up with a Warrior and that the other Warrior with the Andalite was suffering injuries that can't be healed viva Morphing as they are allergic to the tech. To be honest, both are suffering medical issues in regards to Morphing so they'll be living in the Underworld until such time a crop of official Diplomats on behalf of the Andalite people are appointed." Terry explains.

"Oh?" He's not sure at the emotions that ultimately plays out on the teen's face, though he thinks guilt made a play and he just nods. "Well, yes, it would be the best use for the pair as it gives the Satans someone to seek out whenever something unexpected comes up while you guys have something else going on, they can speak with either of them. It also will give Prince Elfangor people getting a full exposure to Devil technology and to see how magic interacts with their bodies, if only to see if magic can't help relieve their medical issues."

Then Terry takes a moment to give Tobias a look over as it dawns on him that there's a good chance that the teen before him will be meeting a Satan. "Ok, up stairs, we are going to need to change you cloths... Hmm, well, yea, might as well, yea... Well, I'll just remember to bill it to the War-Prince when it comes up..." He murmurs as he begins to herd the skittish teen up the stairs, being sure to place the order on the table with a minor warming spell to keep it 'fresh'.

"Wait, why? What's wrong with what I'm wearing?" Tobias asks in alarm but allowing him to be herded up the stairs.

"You recall the Satans, right?" Terry asks and Tobias nods, answering, "There's Asmodeus, Beelzebub, Leviathan, and, finally, Lucifer." As they enter into his room, he closes the door as Tobias finally gets why he wants to change of cloths for him. "Wait, wait, wait, hold up, you... I might... but!"

"No buts, you'll be meeting at least one of them, no matter how informal the occurrence but it will likely happen as we'll be at the residence where the two Andalite Warriors will be staying." Terry states as he moves to his walk in closet, there's a particular suit that's enchanted to bond with their first wearer, it's even enchanted to grow as the wearer does and if the enchantments are as good as they say, then it's likely one bit of clothing he wouldn't need to enspell, temporarily at least, to remain with the wearer during the process of Morphing.

Picking it from its stored covering, he walks out and hands the set of cloths to Tobias, having him hold it before him so he can see if the colors work. "It's not the best match, it was made with me in mind but it's the only set of cloths that will work, particularly given you are the son of the War-Prince, adopted or not." Terry admits. "Might need to get Rachel to help pick out some semi formal attire for you all as well as formal, might need to make sure it's enchanted too..."

Tobias clearly looks like a deer in the head lights, unlikely really hearing what he's saying, likely focusing on the idea of meeting a member of the most powerful examples of Devil kind. Terry feels bad but he knew that they were bound to meet with a Satan sooner or later, sooner likely due to the Beelzebub wanting to see how Morphing affects humans.

Terry finishes conjuring him a set of nice, polish-able shoes that goes with the set of cloths that the young Devil pretty much talked him into dressing in. Tobias knew that the oddly green haired kid Devil had wealth but it seems he forgot that usually, when money is involved, it comes with lessons in politics along with manners. Here I thought that the hold rubbing elbows with the high and mighty will come after the war, then again, I did just get adopted by an alien War-Prince, so, I'm going to have to learn to deal with this. The blond teen thinks as he moves to stand before the full mirror.

The under shirt seems to be silk and green, he's sure that the shade of green had its own name but he's not Rachel. The jacket is a dark red and he's allowed to wear it unbutton with the inside of the lining being black. The pants were the same color as the jacket. Tobias can't help but be impressed that the cloths were comfortable and they also seem to have resized to fit his frame. As he turns slightly, he then moves his arms and such, checking to see how restrictive they could be.

Then he hears Terry hum thoughtfully and he turns to look at the eleven year old, not sure what to expect before the Devil turns and walks over to a box resting on a dresser. The kid opens the box and the blond spies necklaces and rings within. "What's with the jewelry?" He asks curiously and Terry answers, without turning to look at him, "Decorations, they help make the out fit. Don't worry, this emerald pendant will go with the under shirt."

Sure enough, Terry pulls out a necklace sporting a green gemstone set in a minor disk. "That's an emerald?" He asks as Terry hands him the necklace. "Platinum necklace and the disk is made from silver." The Devil tells him as he takes a moment to admire the disk and emerald.

"Mind helping? I don't know how to..." Tobias says and the kid nods, he moves down, again noting that the cloths weren't that tight. Terry takes the necklace and undoes the clasp, putting it about his neck before doing the clasp again.

Once Terry steps away, his right hand goes to the necklace, rubbing the emerald between his index and thumb. "Ok, now then, you can wait for me down stairs." Terry tells him and he looks up, startled before recalling that Terry had just finish having a shower about ten minutes ago. "Oh, yea, sure."

He quickly makes his retreat, closing the door behind him and continues down to the kitchen. The teen moves to sit down at the table, staring at the order that got delivered. It shouldn't surprise him as much as it should that Terrence could get a Taco place to deliver an order and have it already charged to a tab or something. Wonder what kind of deal he has going on with the owner? Then again, he's kind of wealthy.

Realizing he still has the pendant in his right hand, he lets it go and looks down to see it resting upon his shirt for a few seconds before trying to focus on something else. Like the two Anadlites that Terry had mentioned, no names but then, it might because Terry had been too occupied with things to recall them. Didn't he say something about medical reason for them to be ambassadors? But wouldn't Morphing correct it? Or was it genetic? Something they were born with?

His thoughts a whirl along with the fact that, should he phone Jake about this development? He had mentioned that Elfangor was checking out a lead but it shouldn't take long given that his... adopted father to finish checking the lead out. Which was why he had been worried that something happened when he arrived home by four thirty something to an empty house. Tobias hadn't thought it much of a concern until about an hour passed with him reading the latest Dragon magazine.

Then the phone rang and, well, he was so very relieved to hear that Elfangor was fine and that they were eating supper at Terry's. Which meant that something unexpected happened, which lead him flying here. He promised we go flying tonight.

Which, he had been looking forward to. He likes spending time with Elfangor, he just does, long before the whole adoption or creating an ID for Elfangor to use in human society. It's strange, living with him, so different then with my Aunt or Uncle. Tobias reflects. He's interested in my school work, how I get along with the others, even about my thoughts on Yeerks...

"Ready?" Tobias flushes before turning to Terry, who's picking up the order of Tacos. He gets to his feet, his mind focusing on the kid before him, who's style of cloths do match what he's wearing only it seems that he's got a simple looking metal bracelet about his left wrist while wearing a matching pin on his right breast. "That style, is that tribal?" Tobias muses, Terry explains in a bemused tone. "It's not tribal, it's a Celtic style. Most Celtic art is of a knot design."

Huh, yea, it does look like a knot. Tobias muses as he follows Terry down the stairs, heading for the office. Then they walk pass the office and he notices the rest of the basement, the washer and drier along with a storage area. They come before a wall and he watches as Terry creates a single glyph that flashes away a few seconds later, a door shimmers into view and the eleven year old turns the knob, pulling the door out.

They walk through and the door closes behind him. Likely locking, leaving them in very dim light, then again, it's likely enough light for Devils. "Should I be watching my step?" He asks and Terry snorts, saying, "There's enchantments to keep people from stumbling. Unless you... oh, yea, the light, sorry, it's something I forget. Your human..."

He's not sure if he's thankful that their relationship is at the level that Terry doesn't think of them as, just humans. Terry comes to a stop, which means he stops and he hears minor muttering as a very tiny flame of pure yellow flicker to life then, it grows a foot before becoming a pulsing light and as he blinks, he suddenly finds himself able to see, only it's clear that nothing changed in the area. "Minor illusion, as long as I'm within ten feet of you, you'll see as well as a Devil. It'll fade in a few minutes, but by then, we should be at their residency."

"You sound pleased." Tobias mentions and Terry says pridefully, "It's something I've been working on before I came here." Then mentions, "I get ideas viva table top role playing games for giving me ideas when it comes to magic use." He notices a number of items and books that were likely related to magic, one room looks like a lab, the room across from it holds a minor smith work area, and then there's a large room that doesn't have anything residing within it, bare floor and walls.

They come before a secure door that is at the end of the room. Terry opens it with a simple glyph and he notices the circles upon the floor and the ceiling. "Permanent Teleportation circle. Hence why it's in this room compared to the others." Terry explains as he allows him in the room and then, physically, closes the door. He notices a flash of glowing something on the door as Terry walks pass.

It takes him a second to realize he should stand next to Terry and moves to do so. Then, Terry chants while making a gesture with one hand. Within seconds they are engulf in light and then, they are in a new location, much more well lit. Following Terry, he can't help but be amazed at the stone work, for the whole building seems to be made out of stone. "Wow, it looks so seamless..."

"It has been made using earth magic so, yea. I think granite actually." Terry says, there's torches sporting magical fire lighting up the place. :Terry? Tobias, good to see you both?: Elfangor stands near a large dinning room, eyes studying them both.

"Terry thought I needed semi formal wear." He explains to his adopted father. The adult's expression seems to be of puzzlement before giving way to understanding. :Ah yes, of course. Well, my thanks then, Terrance. I owe you.: Elfangor says as they continue to the table.

"Well, you might not wish that I had done so, given the price tag on this particular set of cloths." Terry says as he places the order onto the table and he rubs the back of his neck, fidgeting a bit as Elfangor continues to study him.

:The value placed on cloths... I don't understand it.: Elfangor admits and he can't help but smile and nodding in agreement. "Well, status is the bottom line what with people thinking the more money you have, the better quality of cloths you can get, which shows off how well off you are, and etc etc." Terry explains while ripping into the plastic bag while he takes a seat.

"Really, etc etc?" A female tone muses and he notices Terry stiffing at the very sound while he look in the direction to find a young woman sporting a robe, her hair in pig-tails. :Ah, yes, I forgot to mention, Satan Serafall arrived not long after you left.: Elfangor says and it takes a moment to realize that this beautiful woman is not just a Devil but one of the Satans, which very much wasn't how he imagined her looking like.

:Satan Leviathan, this is my adopted son Tobias Tenant. Tobias, this is Serafall Leviathan, one of the Satans of the Devil race.: Elfangor introduces them, the grown Devil sends a pleasant smile in his direction. "A pleasure meeting your son, Elfangor. It's nice to see that Holder Oriax taking such good care of you and your son." She says and it takes a moment to realize that yes, Terry likely didn't rank very high in Devil society, which he kind of knew as he wasn't the direct Heir of his House.

Terry doesn't say anything, but he does begin to unpack the order while Leviathan switches to a different language, focus is on Elfangor. He doesn't know it and doesn't understand how Elfangor could but it's clear that Terry does, although if Elfangor is replying between the pauses, it's likely private. Food gets handed out, with Terry sporting a rather blank and wary look while placing a Taco before the Leviathan before serving Tobias and then himself. He himself still hasn't gotten over the appearance of the grown Devil at the table, he had been expecting horn and her looking, more pale and, well, evil then how she appears.

The pictures of older Devils, well, they had horns or something that, well, kind of reminded one of a classic Devil but Serafall? Looks like a modern, rich woman, clearly has a power and is confident about herself. Even if the cloths kind of remind him of a much younger person. Huh, I guess you really can't tell by looking at people can you? He muses to himself as he begins unwrapping his Taco, then recalls what they brought for supper and feels bad for his suggestion, he send an apologetic look at Terry who notices but shrugs in reply, clearly, he hadn't expected to be feeding a Satan dinner either.

A soft hum causes them both to look over to Serafall and find her taking a bite out of the Taco, some of it falling onto the table, not that she seems to care. "Not bad, ground beef?" She inquires, glancing over at Terry.

"Yes, it is. I had been keeping it under a heating spell before we came." Terry answers in a respectful tone and Serafall just hums as she takes another bite. He feels a bit better now, although he did wonder how she could tell the difference given how popular beef is. Tobias sends a questioning look only for Terry to look bemusing for a few seconds and focusing on eating his own Taco.

:I recall Minotaur meat is more typical then surface cattle, is it not?: Elfangor recalls and Serafall takes a moment to swallow before replying, "You recall correctly. In fact, not that long ago, Holder Oriax demonstrated that he can indeed Morph into a magical being. A Minotaur bull, a handsome specimen of one at that." The minor praise causes Terry to look down at the table, clearly wanting to disappear right then and there, might have something to do with the memory of that event.

"Huh, really? Was it more dangerous looking then the monster lion he Morphed into?" He can't help but ask and Serafall rises an eyebrow while looking at him. "Hmm, oh, he didn't demonstrate that one for us, he did mutate his stallion Morph on our behalf."

"Yea, it's kind of weird how when he tries for smaller animals, they just, well, they just go strange, like eldritch strange." Tobias continues on. "Never the same way either, I still remember when he tried to do his crow. He stopped mid-point when his feathers transformed into green fire and was consuming his flesh until we could see the bone. He reversed it before we got to see the final form but it would have look either awesome or nightmare inducing."

"Really? A Phoenix expression?" Serafall muses, the last one seems to be thoughtful while Terry most definitely wants him to shut up or for himself to disappear. Well, that's what Tobias is thinking Terry is feeling at this moment. Looking away from him and taking a bit of her Taco.

When Terry does look his way, his eyes are molten silver for a few seconds but it fades back into his grayish blue eyes. While Elfangor asks, hoenix, are they common species?:

"House Phenex has blood ties to a Phoenix, they have a particular fast regeneration along with affinity for fire. Its been a fairly long time since one has been seen." Terry answers after a minute of silence, glancing towards Serafall before focusing on his Taco. "Very true, if not for the Phenex traits, some would say there never was a Phoenix to begin with." Serafall agrees.

"Unicorns? I mean, I know that Terry mentioned them but, well, do they really only appear to virgins?" He asks and Terry chokes a bit then coughs while Serafall looks bemuse in his direction, "Terry, huh?"

"Well, Terrance is rather hard to say all the time and he never said we couldn't call him that. Then again, compared to being called Angel by Marco..." Tobias trails off with a shrug, although there's a slight widening of her eyes at the mention of Angel.

:Marco has nicknames for a lot of people. He calls Holder Terrance that due to a TV show that is popular, one of the characters is an ensouled vampire who's called that.: Elfangor explains. :I believe the show is called Buffy the Vampire Slayer, usually forty minutes long without the commercials.:

"I see, well, to answer your question, yes, Unicorns do come to virgins and we use that tactic to harvest their horns." Serafall answers and Terry hurries up to add, "The horn grows back when a participial medicine is applied when cut off."

He relaxes as the image of piles and piles of de-horned horse like beings getting killed just for their horns. Serafall looks puzzled as to why Terry mentions this for a few minutes before it seems to dawn on her what kind of image that painted. Tobias could only imagine what Cassie's reaction would have been if his image had been correct, then again, she might still be rather put out at the simple practice of knocking the Unicorn out, cutting its horn off, and maybe having medicine applied to the spot where the horn had been. Better then what happens with Rhinos or even Sharks. Tobias mentally admits as he continues to eat his Taco.

As he finishes, Serafall is beginning on her second, a semi comfortable silence hangs in the dinning room. Then, the sound of hooves on stone echo from the direction Terry and himself had arrived at. He turns to find two adult Andalites along with another grown Devil with lighter green hair then Terry. "Ah, saved me some, Serafall dear?" The unknown Devil asks while he studies the two Andalite, he notices that the tail on one seem to lack a fur coat. The two's main eyes seem to be on Elfangor while their eye stalks taking in their surroundings.

Elfangor moves towards the pair, saying to everyone, :I will return, I wish to show them where the green house is.: Everyone nods or murmurs their understanding, it's clear that Prince Elfangor wishes to speak to them in a more private setting.

"So, you must be Tobias Tenant, I'm Satan Ajuka Beelzebub." The Devil introduces himself while Terry had been trying to hurry in his mouthful to do the introduction. "Nice to meet you, sir." Tobias says while Ajuka moves to sit on Terry's left, boxing the young Devil in on either side. "Good to see you once more Terrance."

"He also goes by Terry it seems." Serafall muses to her fellow adult. "Terrance is a mouthful it seems."

"Oh, is that so? Terry then." Ajuka replies and Terry clearly struggles to keep from repeating his previous embarrassed actions. "Beef?" Ajuka muses after swallowing a bite.

"Indeed, Terry and Tobias brought Tacos from the surface." Serafall responds and he reflects that yet again, his expectations didn't meet with reality as Ajuka doesn't look the mad scientist part nor the pair of crazy wizard/cultist. Again, no horns or hooves, nor does he sport a uni-brow of any sort. Well groomed and seems a bit more personable then Serafall, at least, that's what he's picking up from how he interacts with Terry.

"You managed to regrow the end of the tail I see." Serafall muses in English, waiting for Ajuka to finish swallowing. "It was simple enough to trick the allergy in that area, given time, I could come up with a treatment that will allow Mertil to Morph without any side-effects, well, serious side-effects at least."

"And Gafinilan?" Serafall asks before taking a bite out of her Taco. Ajuka takes a bite and considers the question, he glances at the remainder of the order and Terry takes one of the last three, passing it to him with Serafall moving back to allow this. "I will need to go through the records the Andalites have on the genetic disorder but, it's just as well that Gafinilan won't be needing to Morph to living here, not like on the surface. It would have speed up his condition, Morphing so often and for so long." Ajuka then volunteers, "I have already begun work on creating an illusion bracelet for Gafinilan, one that will be able to activate at will."

"Can they learn magic?" He asks before he's taken a bite out of his second Taco. Ajuka replies, "Don't know, but I'll have fun seeing if they can't. I know that Gafinilan is interested in the effects of Morphing has one Devils along with how an Andalite or even Human would fair in Morphing a magical creature."

"A profitable partnership, huh?" Serafall says in a teasing tone while the Beelzebub merely smiles and take a bite out of his Taco. He glances at Terry and the young Devil moves his shoulders just slightly to show he doesn't fully get it either.

Elfangor returns as he asks Ajuka about illusion magic, mentioning that Terry's been allowed to teach them, if they show potential viva going through beginner books. It's clear that Ajuka knows how to speak to his audience given Tobias does understand the examples and explanation. :Thank you, for restoring Mertil's tail. We, as a people, can be harsh in certain regards to conditions. Being handicapped like that, it's one of them.: Elfangor says sincerely.

He blinks, that's kind of shocking, but then, Tobias begins to kind of see why, given his exposure to Morphing. After all, losing an arm or even a leg, it grows back when Morphing is involved. Not being able to Morph, oh, yea, no regeneration. He admits to himself. "Seems kind of harsh." He states out loud.

:It can be, but before Morphing technology was developed, the lost of your tail blade, it tended to end a Warrior's time in the military as tail blade fighting is still part of what makes a Warrior, a Warrior.: Elfangor explains. Tobias looks at Elfangor's own tail blade, seeing it in a different light, now, although, he finds it kind of hard to get a grip.

"An Angel or Fallen without wings." Serafall muses. "Or a Devil denied the ability to use their Family Trait or Magic." Ajuka adds, which means that the Devils understand a slight better then him.

"Galfinilan and Mertil?" Serafall asks and Elfangor replies, :Grazing, they may be spending the night in the green house.:

"Understandable, they have been on the run for some time. Having a safe place, it will take time for them to adjust." Serafall muses and Elfangor nods.

"Well then, I might as well retire. I will come tomorrow to speak with them. Good day, all." Serafall says once she moves to stand. Ajuka joins her, it's not long before the pair depart, neither using the circle by the front door.

Terry pushes the last Taco in his direction once he grabbed his second once they return to the dinning room. "Did you graze too?" He asks curiously and Elfangor does this eye smile, replying, :Yes I have. Finish up and we'll go for our flight. Perhaps Terry will join us, give us a bit of a tour?:

"What, we'll fly here? In the Underworld?!" He can't keep the excitement, he just thought they would be teleporting back to Terry's then flying home, but this, well, this was something he hadn't expected.

"Most will take a look at three birds, two crows and a hawk and think Familiar, not freaky nature thing needing to be investigated." The eleven year old Devil explains, which was pretty cool.

He hurries to eat his third Taco, more then eager to see more then just see the interior of a manor. For now, life is looking good.

Mind Blowing Events to Come: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

Sniffing, Terry chirps at the scent of rodents pee trails in the vents as his ferret instinct wants to follow but he re-frames as he's got a mission to do for Satan Beelzebub. He's not alone as Tobias and Marco are currently in Flea Morph and somewhere upon his back. Jake is with the War-Prince while Rachel and Cassie are doing their task together. Pressing forward, the current Devil in the Morph of a ferret does his best to count the number of intersections to reach their goal while ignoring the conversation a bored Marco has started and seems more then happy to keep going with little input from either Tobias or himself.

Marco's conversation is circling around at least three fact it seems, the first is he wasn't with Jake, the second seems to be the fact he's an insect, and third, why the Beelzebub couldn't wireless connect to whatever tech the Yeerks use. Everyone has a transmitter to install in computers of Controllers, they spent the last two days learning how to do this quickly, well, except for him, his transmitter is meant for one of the computers on their Bug Fighter or better yet, the Visser's Blade Ship. So Terry received different training with Gafinilan concerning his transmitter, with the War-Prince joining the next day to help.

It's been two weeks since the War-Prince had met with the pair of survivors and by that Wednesday morning, Terry had received two packages, one from the Satan Ajuka Beelzebub and the other was from his Mother . Both contained beginner books, only the first contained books from both styles of Magic while his Mother's were of a more modern style of the Western practices plus a note containing a name of a ingredient dealer who accepts human currency to give to his small Order of Magicians along with hints of him bringing them by her estate as a reward in their progress. He's found the modern texts easier for the Animorphs to understand while the older books that the Satan had far more ways to practice, given that collection had both styles instead of just the one.

So far, Tobias and, surprisingly, Marco have proven to have fairly decent control over magic, both coming across as a Jack-of-All-Magics out of the group. Much to her personally disappointment, Cassie is proving to be talented with illusions instead of the simplest healing spells. Rachel is, unsurprisingly, proving to be very talented at the more destructive spells, namely fire and lightning. Finally, Jake's coming along as the spell casting medic that Cassie was hoping to be, which causes some tension between the two as it seems there's some attraction going on between the two. Sure, they had only been experimenting with Magic for less then two weeks but, clearly, having experience with Morphing tech has only helped with the visualization aspect needed in Magic. So far, their magical reserves haven't affected their Morphs like Terry's does.

Which is likely why Terry's been partnered with the pair as they are more generalists then specialists, more then capable of being flexible in the coming task of getting into the Yeerk's ship bay. It's Terry's mission that the last one they need to do as they had done Tobias' first and once done with Marco's, they took a break until they were given directions to where the Yeerks keep their ships hidden viva text message from Gafinilan's phone. So, they flew in their respective flying Morphs to the least secure location.

Terry feels the urge to scratch and hears Tobias apologizing while Marco just continues on trying to sing popular songs using bug themes. :When did he start singing?: Terry privately sends to Tobias as he perks up at the look of the vents before him, it looks they were nearing the end of this portion of the trip.

:Stopped paying attention, huh? Can't blame you, then again, you are focus on navigating, so it's understand able.: Tobias replies privately and Terry just didn't see the point in correcting that assumption. :Not sure, it went from talking about a comic book fight between the Hulk and Superboy, giving his reasons for why he's right compared to why Jake's out of it, thinking that Superboy could survive such a fight given he doesn't have Superman's full powers. And they say I'm a geek...: Tobias likely didn't want to send the last part but Terry didn't reply as he's busy coming to a stop by a vent leading down.

Terry's head bobs about as he takes a few minutes to judge the shaft leading down. k, I'm jumping, so, try not to leap about on my back.: He tells the pair and waits for them both to confirm before launching his ferret body into the space that drops down. He lands on a metal grade and it takes him a few seconds to recover from the fall before looking down, through the grade to find a dark room.

:We are at the supply closet. You guys can leap down and de-Morph.: Terry tells them after taking some minutes to listen to the room below. :Finally!: Marco states and it takes a near ten minutes for a small ball of light to glow, revealing the two humans in the room below.

"I really like the fact I create my own flashlight." Marco whispers while Tobias levitates himself up to move the grade for him to enter into the room and replaces it before floating down with him on Tobias' shoulders. Once Tobias' feet hit the ground, he races down to the ground to de-Morph while he hears Marco softly chanting an illusion meant to hide them from view and Tobias isn't far behind to do something about any noise they make.

Their illusions won't last very long, just long enough for Terry to de-Morph and to cast a more complete illusion for them to hide behind. As he finishes, the door opens and a hand turns on the light of the room, it looks like eight people are standing by the door, each holding what looks like a flashlight but isn't. The front three look around the now lit room, but they just don't see the group of three. Marco moves, doing his best not to touch the woman as she enters the room.

"Is it clean?" A man's voice asks from the hall, but the question isn't to the woman that's moving about the room as a reply comes from the hall once more. "Not getting any readings beyond us, not even any rodent piss trails." Another Controller says after five minutes of them slowly moving, doing their best to not touch or move anything as two more Controllers enter into the supply room.

There's a sigh from the Controllers, a tension seems to vanish among the group and they quickly put away their weapons. Marco is clearly bemused by this while Tobias just has a pitying look. Terry just doesn't really care, they still have to get onto one of the ships and it'll take him at least ten minutes to install that transmitter, not including the time it would take for him to find the right connections needed for said installation. Sure, they'll be Teleporting away once done, but they are looking to be spending maybe thirty minutes here.

The door closes once the lights are turned off. They wait a few minutes before Marco moves to open the door slightly and then motions someone is still there. Terry motions a go for Marco to open the door once Tobias finishes an illusion of the door still being closed. They slip out and they do their best to close the door without a sound as the stationed guard is busy chatting softly into his microphone, it sounds like a planning of a party about someone being out of the Yeerk Pool for a whole year.

The three of them just shrug, its not something they expected to ease-drop on, but it makes sense, in some way, that sure, a military action is going on but that doesn't stop the grunts from doing things like celebrating an anniversary by planning a part or just gossiping about co-workers. Terry can see that neither Marco or Tobias liked the evidence that Yeerks could be, well, personable or, you know, have friends. It's easier to write off the enemy if they weren't people to you. Terry recalls, it's a summary he wrote for a test some years ago.

They walk down the hallway, pass large rooms that sport medical supplies, going down the stairs so they can get to the last basement landing. They move out of the way of Controllers walking up or hurrying down the stairs. It takes them a good five minutes to get to the bottom of the stair well, a large group of Controllers had been heading down, to help increase the security of the hanger as paranoia is very much alive and well among the personnel of this particular underground hanger. This location sports a strip mall on the surface, he doesn't recall the name but it's location was built about four years ago, he recalls that there had been a large purchase rush of land in this part of town and they renovated it.

Was it one person or was it various shell companies? Terry wonders as Marco provides the next illusion so they can open the door. They find themselves in a short hallway that ends with a much more secure door, one sporting not just a scanner for the head, given the height, but also something that is a card reader, he's seen an example of those back at his Mother's estate. Looking around, he notices that some renovations have been done in the last two to three months concerning the hallway given the fresh looking patches on the cement.

Terry returns to studying the door once he's spied the two cameras along with what maybe weapon turrets. Frowning, he rubs his chin as he considers something, deciding that they need to do so, he gestures for the two towards the door they used and Tobias does the illusion this time and he sets out to find a Controller for them to mesmerize. "Ok, we're looking for someone important so I can mesmerize them into coming down here." He whispers to the pair, pulling them into a huddle.

"Compulsion?" Tobias asks while Marco muses, "Layered one, maybe? Might have to, given it's two beings." Terry smirks as he feels smug, prideful even, as the two work out, without him having to say anything, which of them would do what.

It takes them searching their third floor from the security door before they found someone that looks important enough to approach the hanger without rising any kind of flags. Although, Terry isn't sure but he thought one of the guard Controllers might have seen them. Given no alarm went off, he puts it out of his mind, figuring that he's starting to get stress from maintaining the complex illusion that has a touch of electronic recording interference. He's only eleven years old, just because he's got rather large reserves for his age doesn't mean he can keep the illusion up over the three of them for hours on end, maybe it it was just him, yea, but it's more effort with the three of them.

Once the layer compulsion has been set, they wait at the security door for about fifteen to twenty minutes for it to take effect. The scanner turns out is meant to scan for a Yeerk within the skull, which, makes a great deal of sense and likely something they can take advantage of by Acquiring Yeerks. It's something Terry can see the advantage of said tactic but its not something that either the Animorphs or the War-Prince would like to use.

Behind the security door is just a bio scanning room looking for animal and Andalite DNA patterns on the Controller, thankfully it seems they don't have some kind of data bank full of DNA of Controllers so they are not testing for outside human DNA. Then again, that just might be due to the red tape that could be involved in adding to said fictional DNA bank on a daily basis. The door opens and Terry is relieved to see the hanger, as they slip in through the door, they begin heading for the nearest Bug Fighter, he doesn't see the Blade Ship and is kind of happy as they figured that it would be guarded when unused inside the hanger.

Once on the Bug Fighter, Terry lets down the illusion once they have made it deeper into the ship. The slight pounding of his brain and slight sheen of sweat, it's clear he was starting to feel the strain of the illusion on a more physical level then just magical. Then again, he's a Devil, it's not surprising that it would start effecting him in a physical manner far sooner given his magical nature. "Just give me a few minutes, I need to recover from that."

"Sure, no problem." Tobias says with sympathy while Marco is more interested in snooping about the ship. "Huh, so, these are the controls, huh?" Marco muses and Terry glances at the console, it takes him a few seconds to recognize the arrangement. "That's the weapons... huh, why would it be over here?"

"Wait, really?" Tobias asks in surprise while Marco glances his way. "Yea, but, I don't see the piloting console..." He says as the young Devil moves to stand before the console, he glances around and finds what he needs to the far right wall. No piloting console in sight, but it doesn't matter, they weren't here for a joy ride in a Bug Fighter.

Conjuring the tools he needs, Terry begins working on installing the transmitter within the data bank slash engineering console. Sure enough, it takes him a good ten minutes and less then a minute to make it look like nothing happened with the console. "Ok, done." He says as he moves to stand.

"You know I... nope, not going to say it, nada. Let's just get going." Marco says as Terry moves to stand next to the teen, sharing a look with Tobias as the blond moves to stand as well, having moved to sit down on the floor of the Bug Fighter.

"Alright then, let's go." Terry says and begins to craft the glyphs to Teleport them out of here. Tobias bites his lower lip but doesn't say a word. It seems that the blond has an idea about what Marco was about to say and wasn't going to mention it right now. I just want a shower and maybe a whole roasted Minotaur. Terry muses as he activates the Teleportation circle, within seconds, they arrive at his place, he unlocks the door before he pulls out his phone, texting done to Gafinilan's cell as Marco conjures a glowing ball of light for the two teen to use.

As they walk through his magical section of his house, he gets a reply that confirms that transmitter was active. Terry feels accomplishment at a job well done and once they were at the main floor, they said quick good byes as the two teen leave while he makes sure to lock the door before heading for the kitchen, the shower can wait, he's starving.

The strange beast finally takes the bait and Aristh Aximili-Esgarrouth-Isthill commands the doors to close, it has taken days to come up with this plan and to implement it. The beast slams against the doors while Aximili works up the courage to simply approach the odd teal scaled beast, it's larger then he expected and the way the doors bang under the weight of the thing, it's clearly strong. His tail twitches while he does his best to grip his weapon, readying himself to fire at the beast, to stun it.

Suddenly, the banging stops and all four of his eyes glance at the minor pool of salt water. Maybe this wasn't the best plan... the Aristh admits privately to himself and before he's even aware of it, he's moving, leaping to the side and his tail moving, his blade connecting but not piecing the scales. Every fiber of his being is telling him to flee while his training is screaming at him to point and fire.

The teal scaled beast hisses in annoyance while he is torn between the twin desires, it turns its head and the fins seem to dig into the metal. It roars before it surges at him, Aximili follows through with his training and fires at the beast, it takes a good ten shoots to stun the serpentine beast and he trembles before the fallen beast, he feels overwhelming emotions at what he's done with satisfaction at a job well done to cursing himself for thinking this was a good idea to begin with, that he should have pick something smaller, something that looks more harmless.

He kind of worries that it'll drown, not being in water, only it takes Aximili a few minutes to realize, he can hear it breathing, meaning, it has lungs. k, Aristh, time to Acquire it.: He tells himself, but he also didn't want to approach the beast, it's clearly a carnivore given the sharp looking teeth and he's seen it eat smaller creatures through the dome.

Looking at it, he estimates that it's at least ten Earth feet long and sports teeth four Earth inches long. Its eyes, closed now, had been crimson. In the end, the Andalite Aristh finally approaches the beast and using his tail blade, he Acquires the beast. Once done, he commands the doors to open and retreats out of the former ship bay, heading for the security of the dome.

It takes him a good four Earth hours to finally set go of the weapon in his hand, doing his best to ignore the baleful gaze of the beast when it swims pass the dome, circling once before swimming off out of sight. :Worth it, if only to see the Yeerk's reaction when they see me in that Morph.: Aximili tells himself.

Well, what do I do now? It's not like I have much left. Ray Leon Martin, Scared Gear possessor thinks to himself. He's sixteen, going on to seventeen in a week, and he's on the run from the Magician Council.

He lingers near the bus station, not sure why he even ran in the first place. Well, maybe he was lying to himself, he knew why he ran, Ray just can't help but keep wishing that this was all just some kind of nightmare induced dream viva his lack of exhaustion in regards to his current pursue of Divination self study. He's had some pretty funky dreams once he's crashed viva said exhaustion, he recalled the one that caused him to give Chasity blushing looks, the dream that was the source of said look had her, well, yea, not touching that, then again, he had been fourteen at the time so, hormones could be at fault.

A bill board catches his eye and he checks out the advertisements. "Hmm, a Devil is holding this city. Could to seek him out for protection. Might even have you join their Peerage." The spirit within his Scared Gear muses in the back of his mind, it takes him a few scans to find the subtle advertisement that did declare there's a Land Holder present.

Ray makes a face, he didn't want to become a Devil, he knows what kind of prejudice Reincarnated Devils face. He's read between the lines of the various books that discuss Devil Society, if you weren't born a Devil, you won't be rising too high up the social hierarchy. You were little more then a serf at best, slave at worst, oh sure, some Houses treated their Peerage as family but those were rare and it's doubtful he would be lucky that this Land Holder was like that.

"Just means we need to get cash to move on quickly. Not going to stick around some fucking Devil that's full of themselves and will sell me to the highest bidder." Ray murmurs under his breath, he hasn't quite gotten use to shaping his thoughts in a way to have a mental conversation with the entity within the Gear, he doesn't even know the name of the Sacred Gear nor what resides.

His eyes fall upon, once more, some poster about this organization called The Sharing. Ray reads it once more, it sounds too good to be true but he didn't want to stay at a homeless shelter, the looks he gets, the fact he doesn't look too down on his luck, well, given the cloths on his back are conjured, it likely shouldn't be unexpected to get those kind of looks. Yet, he doesn't want to give up his fashion style, it's one of the few things, as of right now, that's him .

Sighing, Ray decides to ask around, get an idea of this Sharing. It's only seven am and it's not like he's got anything better to do beyond keep his head down and keep out of what Supernatural circles in this minor city. He'll find some shady jobs for the money, hopefully, the Land Holder isn't trying to portray themselves as a mobster or criminal master mind.

"How did Cassie talk me into this?" Terry asks the group of teenage boys in the dressing rooms, each of them in their own stall. They were here to get some high class cloths for the Animorphs, not for him to go shopping for cloths for himself as well.

"Might have something to do with, you know, allowing Rachel, you know, Xena the Warrior Princess, aka our Cleric of Destruction," "Shouldn't have introduced you to D&D." Murmurs Jake and he didn't know if he agreed with that sentiment as it had motivated Marco a great deal when it comes to ideas of enchanted items. "To spend your money on cloths, semi formal and full formal, plus shoes and other items to go with said previous purchase."

"Cassie's way of taking you down with us." Tobias pipes in and Marco very much agrees. "Seriously though, why do we need at least three good sets? It's not like we're going to be attending any balls or dinner parties."

"Actually? I have an open invitation to... well, it's better to be prepared for when I'm gently encouraged to bring you by the estate. A meet and greet with, well, my mom ?" Terry flushes, he doesn't like talking about his family. He doesn't... he has issues with Mother with how she raised and educated him. "It's coming and I would rather we do it on a long weekend then during Summer vacation. So, I was thinking, once I put this before Mr Tenant and the others, we could do a quick visit and hope that it'll be enough to satisfy my... family ." He caught himself before he said House.

There's silence, not even the rustling of cloths as the teens try to wrap their head around that thought. Sure, they have all heard of what happened that Sunday nearly four weeks ago, particularly about how two of the Satans acted along with the aerial tour of a small suburb situated in the Beelzebub's territory. They've met with Satan Beelzebub and had under gone a scan of each of them Morphing small and large Morphs in his lab, while wearing tight fitting clothing that naturally vanishes when one Morphs instead of cloths sporting a short lived enchantment upon them, not that they saw much of the Underworld beyond that lab.

"And they don't know about...?" Jake seems compelled to ask, at least to Terry's ears. "No, nobody does. It's not just the Biblical group that exists, remember? And so far, nobody else has come forward about this either. Oh, I know it can't stay quiet but they want to steer the release or the aftermath of the reveal. It's just politics is... you think US government is headache inducing? Yea, just no, no, it's not the fuck cluster that ours is." Terry wanted a few bottles around if they really want a lesson of how Devil government works, if only so he could get buzzed enough for their various reactions, because they would and likely use such mild terms as barbaric, inhumane, and uncultured, although he doesn't know how creative any of the Animorphs were when it comes to swearing as it never really came up before.

"So... bringing us home to meet you mom then, huh? Do we at least get some rings on these fingers?" Marco asks in a teasing tone and he can't help but laugh, and keeps laughing cause, that reminds him that he's getting to the age of where there's going to be an arrangement made on his behalf. Sure, it might get canceled but it might not, not with the fact his Mother never married and seems dead set on remaining single, well, as single as a Noble Devil can be with a few lovers on the side.

"Your laughter has taken a sharp turn into Joker territory." Marco pipes up in a slightly worried tone and it takes him a few seconds to reign in his emotions along with his laughter. "Sorry, it's just, you brought up the fact that I could be looking at a marriage contract."

"Dear God, don't let Cassie hear that! She'll get started on how that's not different then a slave contract!" Marco complains, though Terry thinks he hears some unease. "Your dad married for love or was it duty?" Tobias asks and he tries not to wince, it's not like any of the three knew...

"Ah, I don't... know my sire. She never mentioned him, hence why I sport her family's name, not his. I don't think anyone in the family does." Terry admits slowly as he adjusts his tie.

"So, yea, this shopping trip isn't a waste as you'll be exposed sooner rather then later to my... family." He states, doing his best to get a handle on his emotions. Terry takes a few seconds to study his appearance in the mirror. Taking keep breaths, he does his best to at least erase his various emotions upon his face. Once secure in the hold he has, he turns for the door and opens it. "Done!" Terry shouts a great deal louder then the way they were talking, wanting to alert Rachel and Cassie if they were out of the woman's side.

There's some fussing from Rachel while a few strangers seem to find the scene on the cute side if the slight cooing followed by giggling is any sign. Terry wonders what the scene looks like from an outside perspective, did they think he was related to one of the Animorphs? As a cousin or younger, half brother? Then the others come out wearing their current semi formal casual wear. A few minutes later, the guy group retreat to the stalls to try another set of cloths on, with him following at a slower pace with bemuse look upon his face.

The conversation didn't stray into his private life, it circles around them feeling rather put upon about all this modelling before the girls and minor discussion, aka Marco, complaining how unfair it was that Rachel seemed so thrilled by using them as her dress up dolls. Concerning Cassie, Jake received more then a few elbow jabs from Marco to get him to stop gazing lost in thought at her while Rachel discretely pokes Cassie in the arm or shoulder when she was doing the same. Terry felt it his duty to do the same for Tobias, which was maybe six times throughout the near three hours they were there, while Cassie only seemed to slap Rachel once in regards to the look the blond teenage girl gave to Tobias while he was wearing something a size smaller, causing to the cloths to be a bit tight.

By the end, they were all carrying their bags, with only a single bag for Terry as he has plenty of cloths like this at home, the two sets were at least two size larger then him, meaning he won't be wearing them any time soon. Everyone else though, they have six bags and those capable did cast minor enchantments to help with the weight before helping those that weren't very good with such a utility spell. They parted ways once they left the store a block away, he mostly just found an alley cast an illusion before using a Teleporting spell to return home.

"Micheal, Serafall Leviathan has a packet en-scrolled for your eyes only." Gabriel enters into his office just as he was about to send for Iris. The archangel's eyebrow rises as she moves to place the rather thick, novel worthy, packet upon his desk.

"And we checked, it's legitimate." She adds before he could. And isn't that cause for concern? Micheal thinks as he picks it up, the moment he does a note seems to appear while the security about the packet vanishes. He first skims the note then reads it with a blank look and re-reads the note as he feels a headache begin.

Handing the note over to Gabriel, he opens the packet and pulls out a small section of it. It's a bio of high ranking Yeerk officers, along with the names of their hosts, human or otherwise. "It's... not is it?" Gabriel asks him as he flips to a random page, the woman it shows, the name.

"Well, we now have our answers, it's now a question of, how we proceed from here." He states in a calming tone, not that it likely fools Gabriel as she's known him for far too long to not realize his actual mood. He's furious at the fact that it was the Devils to come across this situation, that it only took a single Devil child to stumble upon something like this. Although, thank Father, the child managed to hide this from their House and seems to be still keeping it from their House.

Gabriel picks up the packet and pulls another section up out of the rather large and durable envelop. He does his best to focus on the task at hand, to read about these Yeerks and this war they have have brought to Earth. "Should I call Rapheal and Uriel?" She asks after a few minutes of only sheets moving.

"I will go fetch them personally. Please, stay here." Micheal tells her, feeling the need to go do something and for now, personally leaving the office to do just that will help. Once more, Gabriel understands his mood and giving her a smile, he pushes his chair back to stand. He leaves his office, leaving behind the enemy profiles, praying for the poor souls who were suffering this new set of chains upon them, even if, the idea of space aliens coming to Earth and invading the humans had been so very unrealistic, so very much unbelievable just an hour ago. The cause being something that never crossed any of their minds, never once, after all, there's never been any real reason to think aliens existed, more reason to think any and all talk of aliens being pranks of the Fae on gullible humans.

Union of a Team: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

"Get to the Yeerk Pool, a Magician has been caught." The line goes dead as Terry is trying to wake from his noon nap. "Wait, what? But, ah fucking damn to Satan's damnation and back!"

The eleven year old Devil is already pushing the covers off and heading for his office in the basement to check the map for the nearest entrance. He can't help but snarl at the fact that this happened today, the day they were to leave for the Underworld with the Animorphs for the weekend at his Mother 's place. Damn fucking hell, what a time for a trespasser. Why the hell wasn't I informed whoever this was in the city? This is why we post those ownership posters! Damn fucking strays! It has to be one, why else wouldn't they report the Satan fucking damn in with me, the Territory Holder!

Cassie, she's been fairly distracted and Marco can already see that Jake's concerned. Then again, what a time to come down with something, huh? The weekend where they were going to meet Terry's family and do their best at pretending they were... well, to be fair, they were budding magicians, so in a way, they weren't pretending anything. They were studying magic, they were capable of casting magic spells.

It's just a half an hour to lunch, so, hopefully, whatever is wrong with Cassie could, you know, wait? Marco's attention turns from the clock on the wall to Jake before once more on the teacher. His pencil's eraser tapping upon the note book that's got some notes written upon the page. His head resting on his left hand with hopefully, a clear bored expression, without a trace of worry upon his face.

Then Cassie faints with Tobias groaning in pain, he turns to pick out the fallen blond while Jake and Rachel cry out, "Cassie!" "Tobias!" The two were already moving from their seats, ignoring the various whispers that spring up as the pair approach their respective crushes slash romantic interests. Marco does his best to keep from biting his lower lip in worry, he had noticed Cassie's condition, but then, as he looks between the two, Tobias isn't the one that's clearly blacked out.

As the four leave the room, he forces himself to remain, to gather up the left behind books and book bags. A glance causes Marco to sigh, only ten minutes had pass since he last glanced at the clock. The various whispers have died as the teacher takes control of the class once more, reminding them they still have five minutes to go before the bell rings. Marco does his best to keep his arms on the desk and sitting straighter then before, pretending to pay attention but the tip of his right runner is wagging about under his desk, a sign he really wants to be with his friends and fellow soldiers.

The bell rings and he quickly, haphazardly, puts his stuff into his bag before doing the same to Jake's then moving to do Tobias' then on his way to the door, he does Cassie's. The teacher thanks him for his considerate actions for his fellow classmates. He just remarks that he's already going to be visiting Jake, his best bud, so he might as well grab the others' pack too. Marco fast walks to the nurse's office while carrying various book bags, though he wishes he could cast a spell to lighten the weight of the various bags as he goes.

Elfangor groans as he wakes, first it was that call about a Magician getting caught, now it's his little brother's call for help. Guilt flairs within him along with belittlement focus in on him at forgetting Aximili's being alive and stuck in the dome ship. His head is still pounding and it takes him a few seconds to realize that he's late for hooking up with Terry.

As he recovers his wits, he realizes that he fell from the air into some bushes, he's on his back and as he tries to move his wings, they hurt. Not good, not good at all and as he flips himself onto his feet, his wings don't move right, meaning, meaning he needs to de-morph to heal the damage. Could this get any worst?

A hiss followed with a feline growl causes him to lose control over his Crow's instincts, cawing in alarm, he tries to take to the air. Elfangor does his best to regain control, to think of how best to deal with what's happening as he doesn't want to die like this! Not without seeing Loren again!

"No answer?" Jake asks and he nods his head, they have been trying for the past two hours to get a hold of either Elfangor at work or Terry. Marco has done his best to keep their mood up, after all, for all they know, the pair were already doing something about this underwater rescue.

"Let's just teleport over to his place." Tobias states for the first time in this particular hour. "He's bound to show up there, right?"

Then, suddenly, the pay phone rings and they glance at each other before Marco picks up the phone, "Hello?"

"I noticed you have been phoning young Terry. I have located him but, well, perhaps I can offer my aid this matter?" The voice is that of Ajuka Beelzebub.

"What's he busy doing?" He asks after mouthing Beelzebub to the group, which causes them to straighten and become alert. After all, what else could be worst then a message for help being broadcast viva mind speak?

"His job, a stray magician has been caught by some Controllers. From what I can gather, Prince Elfangor will be joining him." Oh, well, silly them for tempting fate.

"We received a mental cry for help from a young Andalite." He explains and he hears Ajuka sigh. "Yes, I see. Well, you best answer it. I would wonder how well your Alteration spells are but, there's no need too. I will meet you at the zoo. Acquire some ocean Morphs and then I'll teleport us closer to the source of the broad cast. Yes, the Yeerks know of it but are, well, I've done my best to distract them from my location."

"Sure, see you then." Marco hangs up the phone once there's a click that signals the Satan hung up. Turning, Marco says, "Good news! Elfangor and Terry are dealing with the Yeerks, leaving us to deal with this rescue! We are asked to go to the zoo, Acquire some ocean diving Morphs, where we will then get teleported out into the ocean by the Beelzebub." Then asks with a clearly fake, cheery smile and tone, "Doesn't that just sound grand?"

"On our own?" Jake asks with a tone colored in disbelief. As he replies to his best friend, he takes in the fact that Rachel clearly looks excited by this while Cassie and Tobias look worried, for pair at the Yeerk Pool, "It seems that a Magician has been caught, so they are dealing with that." This just causes the other four to get this look of disbelief, that someone capable of spawning universe cheat codes could be captured by some Controllers, which does beg the question of how that happened.

They'll get the story out of the pair later, for now, Marco's more interested in, you know, finding a spot to morph their respective flight Morphs. "So, we got our marching orders." He says, clapping his hands and stepping away from the pay phone. He begins to walk off, towards an alley. It takes the others sometime to follow, in the end, whatever indecision they were suffering from, it goes away.

Making sure to enchant his back pack and checking to see if his cloths plus runners need to be renewed, he crouches as he mentally focuses on his White-Tailed Kite, he almost picked the osprey that Cassie had Acquired before deciding he wanted his own unique flight Morph. Slowly, he shrunk and watches as his nose moves forward and seems to grow downwards while turning hard. His vision slowly alters while things continue to get bigger. The instincts of the kite also begin to take root and once he feels the changes stop, glances around at the others, while he may have been the first to start, he wasn't the first to finish, then again, Cassie's talented when it comes to Morphing, according to Elfangor, it's called Estreen.

The kite isn't comfortable, being around the others in their current flight morphs, then again, they had all chosen Birds of Prey while Terry and Elfangor picked the common, garden variety crow. Not that it was much better, given, well, kite and crows form mobs. In some ways, it makes sense that the two unique associates of the Animorphs picked the same kind of bird. Which causes his thoughts to stray to this new Andalite and what they'll pick for a flight Morph.

As Jake plans how they'll make it to the zoo and Cassie suggests the group meet up, his mind is on what they'll pick for an ocean Morph as they each take their turns flying up from or straight out of the alley. Shark? I wonder what's it like to be a shark.

Axamili watches the underwater life swim about, it had been a risk but, well, he is tired of waiting. He worries, could he be the last of the Andalite fleet? If he is, then, it's up to him to do his best to fight the Yeerk invasion.

A shadow passes over him and his stalk eyes snap upwards, half expecting, well, let's just say that he's finding things to be off, without that scale beast visiting him. It's been a few weeks since he Acquired that one and he has yet to test that Morph, he's not sure why he's reluctant, he just is. Axamili hasn't felt the same since the encounter, it kind of feels like something predatory is lurking in his step. His dreams...

All four of his eyes close as he feels something... press at him. It bothers him, oh yes, it bothers him and his races prey instincts want to run, run until that feeling is gone. The aristh knows he couldn't escape, this dome, there's only so much Room ! He couldn't run, there's no where to Run !

His tail twitches and it sails over his head, hitting nothing and opening his eyes, there's nothing. There's just him, him and the plants from his home planet. There's nothing hunting him in here, there's no predator, just a lonely and growing paranoid aristh.

:Hey, open the door, open the god damn door!: An unknown voice yells and Axamili looks around, then notices some odd looking beasts, five of them, looking very much out of place. Oh, well, it seems that its not Yeerks who answered first, but he doesn't know who the owner of the voice is. It's unknown but he does order the doors to open, he shouts out directions at the five and they swim off.

Axamili moves to run, run towards five unknown but hopefully friendly beings. He's tired of being alone, of feeling hunted. He just hopes that they will know something about what happened to the Andalite fleet. Soon enough, he enters into a swift trot instead of the flat out run.

He watches as five humans pull themselves out of the water, three males and two females. "Well, that was fun, we really much do that again." One of the males states, to his confusion. "Don't mind Marco, he thinks he's funny." The one female with yellow hair states by leaning forward and bringing up a hand to their mouth, the one named Marco's face does something while looking at the blond female before Marco upturns his face.

:Greetings.: He sends, not sure what to make of this, although their ability to Morph, someone broke the Law. "You want to know why we can Morph, right? I'm Jake." This human male sports dark hair but lighter skin then Marco.

:Yes, yes I do.: He states, there is another way for them to get the tech but Axamili doesn't like that idea, for it means that it's in enemy hands. "We encounter War Prince Elfangor little over six month ago. He was injured and he was preparing for a final encounter with Visser Three. He is the one who gave us the ability." Jake explains and Axamili feels any number of emotions at the mention of not just his superior, but of his brother. :I see.:

"He's alive, though, and we've also encountered two more survivors, too, so you're not the last. We got your message and, well, Elfangor is busy with business at the Yeerk Pool, so we came to get you." The final unnamed male human tells him and he feels relief upon hearing that, and yet, his brother, concern over his brother's fate at the hands of their People due to such a breaking of the Seerow's Kindness. :Who else survived?:

"Ah, Gaf... I mean, Warrior Gafinilan and Warrior Mertil. They are, were, experiencing medical problems in relations with Morphing so Prince Elfangor decided they would better serve as Ambassadors to the four Satans in Underworld." Jake answers and Axamili can't help but repeat, :Medical problems? With Morphing...: At this point, he's feeling kind of overwhelmed by, well, all of this information.

"An allergy and a genetic disorder." The final female recalls and Axamili blinks his main eyes at the description but it also makes sense why neither moved to relieve his brother of command. Axamili is only an Aristh! He didn't know the first thing about being a Warrior! :Who are the Satans? Why would War Prince Elfangor feel the need to reveal himself to them?:

"Ah, well, you see, we were six people when we encountered Eflangor. Terry, well, he's a Devil and he's the Devil in charge of the land where the Yeerks are using as a launching point plus where Eflangor landed. He kind of just did his job, plus, its because of him the Yeerks didn't find the ship that night." The male with yellow hair tells him. "Terry even allowed Elfangor to Acquire him, though that, well, Terry was ten and Elfangor, well, he kind of looks to be in his twenties plus blue hair instead of Terry's dark green."

:Wait, wait, wait, he Acquired this Terry once and Prince Elfangor automatically had a Morph that usually comes about from the Frolis Maneuver?: He finds that hard to believe. "The forst maneuver?" Marco states, something about that tone causes him to look, the look upon Marco's face looks close to Andalite amusement expression.

:May I demonstrate it?: Axamili finally asks after studying the five and they share a glance before Jake says, "Sure."

:I will need to Acquire each of you.: He tells them and they all nod their heads, it takes him a few seconds to recall that it means they agree. So, he approaches Rachel first, then the still unnamed female, then the unnamed male, Marco, and finally, Jake. "So that's what it feels like." He hears the unnamed male say.

Taking a deep breath, Axamili focuses on the samples and slowly, but surely, begins to Morph.

They all watched as the young Andalite before them Morph into a human form. Tobias watches in fascination as certain, familiar features slowly emerge. It's clear the Andalite decided on being a guy, he would have conjured something to cover the guy but, well, they didn't want to cause any more alarm then needed. It was something they decided as they dived down here, plus, they will likely need to etch a simple teleportation circled here, if only so that Elfangor and the other two Andalites can decide what to do with this ship.

What little they saw of through the dome, it looks like a garden, alien one but still a garden. It reminds them that they still don't know much of Andalite culture. After all, there's a green house in the basement of their house in the Underworld, so greenery must be very important to the semi-telepathic race, right? Then again, they didn't really have more then the one potted plant in the kitchen...

It seems that the Andalite has finished, this Morph did seem to take a slightly longer time but then, the resulting Morph wasn't based on a single DNA blue print but on five. Strangely, he compares the features to the few Devils he's seen and has to admit, the Andalite isn't as femininely male as some of the Devils. Tan skin, black hair, gray blue eyes, and looks kind of scrawny but stands an inch taller then Tobias himself. "So... what's you name? I'm Tobias and this is Cassie."

"Ax... Axa..." The newly dubbed Ax then begins to play with his new found ability to make sounds viva his mouth and throat. While Elfangor had done this to a degree when he first Morphed into his human form, Tobias can't recall him doing this beyond that one time. "So, Ax, huh? And here I thought it would be something unpronounceable." Marco cuts in after the other conjures a jersey, a rather large one, it features a stylized A with a blue cube. It's not the first time of clothing Marco created with that particular logo.

"Axamili-Esgarrouth-Isthill, an aristh of the Andalite Fleet." Yea, Ax it is, says, although he does repeat himself a few times, playing with the vowels of the English language while taking the conjured jersey with a look of puzzlement. It's kind of weird how much this toying with a language reminds him of a kid with a new toy.

"Here, let me help get that on you." He says, stepping forward to help with showing how to put the sport's shirt on. "I didn't see this on... with, with you." Ax pipes in once the conjured item is hanging from his shoulders, a very confused look gracing Ax's face.

"Well, Terry's been teaching us the ways of energy manipulation, given his race and others are made out of the same energy, it also help explain why we hang out with him given the whole alien invasion is still a... huh, what do Devils call their governmental body's secrets? Well, they just haven't clued in the rest of the Devils into the invasion going on." Marco explains as they all didn't really know how to explain magic to... well, an alien. Did Andalites ever go through a phase about believing in magic?

"That is interesting. What else can this energy manipulation do?" Ax asks, you can tell he is trying not to elongate a vowel or a snappish sound.

"We kind of plan to set up a simple teleportation circle here and, well, teleport out, likely straight to Terry's teleportation circle." Jake states and Ax's face takes on a stun expression along with, well, maybe hope? Or was it disbelief? He's not the best at reading people's emotions, not like Cassie or Marco.

"Do you need to make this circle to teleport or does it have another function?" Ax ask before stumbling, he reacts to keep Ax from falling while the young Andalite looks a bit confused before staring down at his legs. "Yea, walking on two legs will take some getting use too." He tells Ax while the others are already walking towards what could only be the door.

Ax's cheeks go slightly red, embarrassment or anger? "This is a very unbalance way of moving." Ax states and Tobias snorts as he lets go as Ax regains his balance. As Ax focuses on walking, he walks next to the alien, to be sure to catch him if he loses his balance once more. The others wait by the door as none of them know how to operate Andalite technology.

Epic World Cover Ups! Yay?: Animorphs

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

Ray can't help but reflect at his actions these past weeks. Namely, his curiosity kept him from leaving, after all, why did members of the Sharing sport two living auras? Well, it looks like he's got his answer as he's herded towards one of the lines that approach the pool. He can't help but notice the looks of defeat and hopelessness on a number of their faces, guards seem to be assigned to a select number, likely known flight risks or maybe to prevent suicides?

He debates about his next course of action as he gets his first glimpse of, well, it looks like a maggot crossed with centipede and lobster plus crimson jello eyes about a toothy maul. "What the fuck is that?" He exclaims in shock and a little too loudly. He has never heard of anything like that before.

"Taxxon, they'll eat anything and I do mean anything." The thirty something woman standing before him tells him. "Bleed a little and you can get rushed, their land sharks that way. Always hungry, too."

"New, huh? Run away I think." The man before the woman turns to study him and Ray flushes. "So, how'd they get yea? A promise of a better life? Promise to take care of you? Always have someone there for you?" The man snorts softly while Ray sighs.

"I already have someone with me, I don't need, I don't need one of those to keep me company." Ray mutters, he doubts that anyone would believe him about that, after all, they don't believe that Angels exist any more at this point. That God exists or any Gods for that matter.

"Got off your meds, huh? Well, that's good I guess. I always wondered how a Yeerk would react to meeting someone with that condition." The man pipes in and Leon mentally groans, he doesn't have an alternate personality, he just happens to sport a Holy Artifact made by God themselves that acts as a prison to a Spirit.

Of course, if I said that, nobody here will buy it. Fuck, I got to get out of here and that means, shit, do they even have wards? Leon wonders to himself and then realizes he might as well mine for more information, given the man seems to be happy chatting about all of this. Although, Yeerk is an odd name for a Devil to name a species, then again, so is Taxxon.

"So... who's in charge?" Ray asks curiously. "Visser Three, he's the only one in the Andalite. Andalites are blue furred centaurs, no mouths, extra set of eyes, and let's not forget a fucking long tail tipped with a blade."

And Ray blinks, that's, well... "So, there's other Pools like this in the world?" He asks and the man snorts, "Nope, just this Pool, for now, I guess. Then again, it's no secret that the Visser would love a more open invasion then this one person at a time thing."

"Who's above these Vissers?" Ray asks and the man answers, "The Council of Thirteen, I think? It's their politics, you know? What does a mere Host need to know about their politics, it's not like we matter more then being a meat puppet."

This was, he doesn't know, so fucking unfamiliar. "How about security? What do they use to hide this place?" He asks.

"Just alien tech plus, you know, having Controllers in key places to keep this Pool undetected." The man says and Leon pauses at the mention of technology.

Ray sighs and risks it, it takes a lot of energy to do this all internally but as his vision alters, he finds, pretty much no magic. Hell, the things in the Pool, how the fucking hell could they be natural? And yet, they were and not a hint of magic. He glances around and finds no Wards or defensive spells waiting to spring into action. "Aliens?

Really? Mother fucking aliens? Like a fucking, shitty B-Rated movie? Geez, since when did my life shift from Fantasy to Science Fiction?" He wonders out loud, a tad too loudly given a number of people stare at him.

"When you got off the Bus, obviously." The Spirit whispers with a touch of amusement. "That didn't require an answer." Leon murmurs while he is forced to shuffle forward as someone pushes him from behind.

Suddenly, magic flares in the air, the alteration to his eyes still being in effect, he notices the Devil, flying over the Pool but nobody else is paying the guy any mind. It takes Leon a few second to realize, "He's just a kid." Then he realizes, the Devil kid is hiding behind illusions and suddenly, he realizes, he should have done the same, when he decided to start spying on the Sharing.

Then the Devil's gaze focuses in on him and Ray can't help but stiffen, it's clear, kid or not, the Devil isn't happy. Not one bit, although he's kind of curious, why was the Devil here? After all, there's no magic here...

As he watches, the Devil pulls something out, it kind of looks like a cell phone while the Devil keeps an eye on him. "Lost his mind already, pity, he's so young." He hears someone behind say, then again, they can't see the Hell fucking Devil kid hovering over the pool, using illusion magic to hide his presence from those not trained in magic. So, is this a Devil plot or not?

It had taken the War Prince forty minutes to arrive at the location. It seems that a message for help had knocked him for a loop and found himself having trouble concerning a cat plus finding a place to de-morph. Unsurprisingly, it had been easy to get into one of the screen rooms. While the War Prince begins to hack into the Yeerk network, Terry studies the lay out of the Yeerk Pool, to get an idea of what to feel for.

After a few minutes, Terry moves to meditate, to do a minor divination of the location while he's mentally preparing the illusionary spell to cover his teleportation. It takes him time, but he can see the area clearly in his mind. He mentally calculates the 'blind' teleport and keeps it in mind as he opens his eyes, he's not sure what the War Prince is doing and though he's tempted to check on his phone, he keeps from doing so. Leaving the phone on mute.

:You are good to go, I have complete control now.: The War Prince informs him and Terry stands, squaring his shoulders, bringing his wings out as his shirt makes slots for them. Giving the Andalite a nod, the Devil engages the glyphs that have been hovering about his form, casting the illusion above the Yeerk Pool before blindly teleporting there.

Once there, Terry glances down below as he hovers in the air. He can't help but gaze in pity at the humans currently in the various cages. It's so loud and at this time in the day, there's no alien Controllers in sight nor any caged alien hosts. Which could have seen through his illusion, then again, as he takes out his cell and phones the number where the War Prince is holding up. By the third ring, the now human War Prince picks up the phone.

"I found our Stray Magician." Terry then proceeds to give the Andalite a description in order to find and erase any kind of evidence they have of the run away. Once done, he waits, after all, the War Prince will need to give him a rough estimate of when to go for the guy.

The Stray Magician looks to be in his late teens, maybe twenty would be pushing it, given the fact the human still possesses that unfinished look. The Stray Magician's current hair color could easily be dyed to be that bright blond. The eyes seem to be orange hazel, then again, that could be the light or maybe the result of Alternation spell to their eyes, could even be a Tell of a spell. Terry likely won't know until he's gotten rather close to the human.

"According to this, his name is Ray Leon Martin, age sixteen. Born in New York, New York. Although, it says he had been living with a great uncle in small community of Redden in Texas since he was eight years old." Prince Elfangor reports. "Great uncle's name is Peter Albert Carpenter, mother's side of the family, one Fran Leona Martin, wife of one Henry Ford Martin. Both died on the same plane heading to Italy to visit a second cousin while Ray was eight."

Terry hums, although he really could do without the background on the teen. He had just wanted a name and previous living address, but does his best to keep his annoyance on his face, glaring down at the human who not just interrupted his daily noon nap, but got caught by a bunch of Controllers , human Controllers most likely. Did or did not the teen think to use his magic? At all? It's pathetic, really.

And now to get him out of here, hand him over to Satan Leviathan and/or Satan Beelzebub. Then it won't be my problem! Nope, not once the Stray has been teleported to the Underworld. Terry muses. Although the young Devil knew that he could always just kill the trespasser. Nobody would blame him... Then an image of Cassie and the other Animorphs flash through his mind, yea, he... he just couldn't do that. His relation with the group, he rather likes it and wants to... he doesn't want to disappoint them, to overly upset them. He cares about their opinion of him, that they have expectations of him being a decent being, of, you know, being a mature kid.

He's changed, there's no doubt about that. Terry sighs and asks, "Any problem come up yet?"

"The announcement should be happening..." Then the alarms go off and the power of the Yeerk Pool goes out along with the alarms. "I didn't do that." The War Prince whispers in shock.

"Don't matter, I'm going for him. See you back at my place." Terry says, ending the call and as he puts the phone away, he's flying towards his target. As he gets within three feet, he already mentally prepares the teleportation spell with the location being his house. With a secure grip of the throat and one of the arms that came up to fend him off, he engages the mentally prepared spell.

"What the fuck?!" His target cries and stumbles onto his back while Terry is quick to let go and turn quickly around, his eyes widening at the sight of someone he only expected to see later in the evening, not right then and there.

"Well, well, well, what do we have here?" His Mother inquires, her golden eyes lingering upon the Stray Magician. "Fucking, fan-tas-tic! From the..." He is quick to cover Ray's mouth, having flown quickly behind the Stray Magician.

"Just capturing a trespasser. This Stray Magician didn't report to me upon arrival and a source of mine told me he got picked up by a group of terrorists for being sloppy." Terry explains as calmly as he can, keeping to close to the factual truth. "He was in danger of a very through interrogation by said group. They have an unusual way of getting any information out of people, Satan Beelzebub is researching them." Hoping that will keep her from pressing matters further.

Ray can't help but stiffen at the mention of one of the four Satans. Then again, the story this Devil kid just fed to the very attractive, golden eyed vixen of a Devil, well, in a way, kind of explains why his mouth is covered. It seems that he really stepped into something shitty, something that stinks to high heaven and it's clear that the kid was doing his best to keep silent about the fact that there's some kind of happenings going on in this territory.

"Oh ho, so that's why you've got a direct line to one of them, I take it?" The She-Devil inquires and didn't that just send a chill down his spine. How is it he still has an intact throat at this point? He's pretty sure that killing him is more then in the Land Owner's right. After all, the kid Devil wasn't wrong, was he? Whatever a Yeerk is, they did infest people viva their brain, which means they integrate themselves into said brain.

"Does this little," He flushes at being called little, "trespasser have a name?" She asks and Terry replies in a flat tone, "Ray Leon Martin, age sixteen. Previously living with one Peter Albert Carpenter, listed as his great uncle. Born in the city of New York, orphaned at age eight, and had been living in Redden, Texas."

He can't help it, his eyes widen at just how much information the brat has on little old him! Then, suddenly, it makes sense, doesn't it? He knows, he has to, about the Sacred Gear. Ray thinks to himself. He finds himself paling as the beautiful, sex, and oh so lust worthy Devil look very pleased about all of this.

"He'll make a fine addition to you growing Coven." She tells the brat... then, as if they were in sync, "What?" The kid says out loud while he think that word. Shouldn't she have said Peerage?

"Your Coven, you know that young Mr Martin here is in possession of a Sacred Gear, no?" The She-Devil asks and the, well, maybe son, says, letting go of him and moving back a step, causing him to try and catch himself, murmuring ever so softly, "Well, isn't that fucking fantastic, really, you just had to have one of those? Why didn't you use it ?"

He can feel the heated glare from the kid Devil, he has to remind himself that the brat can't be older then maybe twelve, maybe thirteen. "I would have thought someone with such an advantage would have gotten himself out of the situation I had to rescue him from." The brat states, already moving to stand to his right, clearly addressing the adult Devil.

"Nobody got a good glimpse of it before he killed his... teacher." The golden eyed Devil explains and he looks off to the left, ashamed of how reacted. It's clear to him, now, that if he had just stuck around, he could have explained what had happened, of defending himself. I could have demanded to be questioned in a Ward that detected lies but no, I panicked and now, now I'm just a commodity to these two Devils, in the middle of some game between them.

"Up and ran? Guess he didn't think anyone would stand up to defend him." The brat muses and he winces, but, yea, it kind of looks like that, doesn't it? "But why should I add such an unknown to my young Coven? Wouldn't you prefer him to under your guidance?" And the brat doesn't want him, then again, why are they talking about Covens? Why not just, use an Evil Piece on him at this point? He glances to his right, getting a better look at the kid and, well, unlike Sexy, there's molten silver eyes seemingly glowing. The brat sports dark green hair and is clearly not even in his pre-teens, so maybe eleven or even ten?

"Interesting, I don't think either of them have a King Piece bound to themselves. How unusual, don't you agree, partner?" The Spirit of the Sacred Gear whispers and his eyes widen, because, well, why the hell wouldn't they have a Peerage? Why do I even care about this? It's not like it matters, it just means that I won't have to worry about being converted to another species viva this pair. Ray mentally admits.

"Can't a mother simply want to see her only son grow into a fine, young Devil?" And there we have it, they were indeed mother and son. Well, fuck, but, why didn't the brat didn't want to just accept this, after all, what better way to keep him from blabbing about what's going on in his Territory? Particularly if she doesn't know? What's he so defensive about? He's not even old enough to be having a teenage rebelling phase!

And yet, it's clear that this was happening before him. The mother wanting him to stay with the brat while the brat kept defending his position of him being better off with either herself or with a relative. He finally gets a name for the brat, Terrance and their House, Oriax. To be frank, he just grew tired of their argument and says, "Enough!" Standing up, he turns to the brat, saying, "I don't want to be in the Underworld, that means I am staying here! As for your oh so precious Coven, you can't teach them everything they need to know and unlike them, I've had years of training."

Well, fuck. He can't help but think as two sets of eyes regard him. Then, suddenly, they weren't alone and wasn't that a surprise? He turns to regard the teens, likely no older then maybe fourteen. "They can teleport so soon?" Mother Oriax coos, yes, she fucking coos and the teens glance from him to her then to Terrance. To be honest, he's jealous, at sixteen, he hasn't even been taught the basics of teleportation magic and here, it seems, were fucking amateurs, already getting lessons on it.

"Ah, hi? So... your Terry's mom then?" The darker skinned teen pipes in curiously while one of them just looks confused and a bit unbalanced. Terry... they were calling him Terry and he allowed them too? What kind of Devil is this brat? "Seems like you're in luck, no Peerage for you, just a Coven." The Spirit remarks as Mama Oriax introduces herself as Helen Oriax of House Oriax, although it seems he wasn't alone with being a new face as Jake introduces Andrew 'Ax' Waves, the latest recruit that the group had just retrieved.

Ray studies the group, noticing how they keep their bodies between Ax and Helen, then, he thought he caught someone casting a spell, but when Helen finally parts the Animorphs, yes, that's the name of the Coven, everyone seems to tense as Ax remarks about how nice her eyes look, there's something about how he said that, but, well, there's just something off about Ax, not that it seems to matter to Helen. Soon enough, a ward goes off and Terrance pipes in that it is likely Allen, come to discuss business with him.

Soon enough, they all begin to move out of the room, he finds himself face to face with Cassie and Jake. "So... you got caught by Controllers, huh?" Jake asks once the others were clear of the door and he blinks.

"You know." Ray states and Cassie gives him a pitying look. "Oh, we know, in fact, that's why we're Animorphs in the first place." Jake tells him. "So... actual Aliens or just Devil plot?" He finally asks and the two blink in surprise before glancing at one another.

They then break down laughing and when they finally recover, it's clear that whatever tension seems to have lessen. "It's really aliens. It's funny, Terry had that same reaction, he couldn't believe it was aliens either. He even demanded... Allen's military rank." Jake states with a grin and, well, wasn't that swell.

"The Satans..." "Know. We've met with them, some of them more then once." Jake admits and he just sighs, it looks like he's going to be sinking or swimming in a much wider conspiracy then he ever thought possible. "They are still thinking of how to break it to the Supernatural World or mostly how to leak it then confirm it." Cassie admits. "So... how did you get caught? I mean, you have illusion spells, right?"

He groans, saying, "Don't remind me. To be fair, I didn't resort to magic due to thinking they could detect it. Then I was in a crowd and by the time I thought to check for such..."

"You got rescued." Jake states and he can't help but note, how much older these two act. "I take it Terry didn't get around to talking with you before his mom showed?" Cassie asks and he nods.

"That friend of your's..." Ray begins and Cassie sighs, explaining, "He sent a message out and, well, we just rescued him from his sunken ship."

"So, alien then?" He asks and Jake nods. "Alteration or maybe Transfiguration technology is how he looks human. He, did a particular trick with it to get his current human... shape. He'll need to return to his natural shape in a while."

Ray blinks, that's, well, that kind of answers some questions and yet, so many more just crop up. "How long until they notice we're not there?"

"We got plenty of time, Terry'll do his best to send Allen down, likely with a cell phone. So, we'll do our best to field any questions you have in the mean time." Jake offers and he nods. After all, what else can he do but accept that aliens exist, that he's going to be interacting with Devils, and that, he's involved with a cover up of epic world shattering portions.

Background Character Union, Stated!: Ani

I don't own Animorphs and High School DxD!

It is a strange life he leads right now. The battle above the planet the natives call Earth seemed to have occurred years ago when it has only been little over half a year at best. Then again, the battle had been lost, both Gafinilan and himself still lived pass that defeat. What wounds his fellow Warrior had suffered, they healed with a simple Morph, a de-Morph later and the one who he holds dear was once more unmarred by the battle.

Not so for him, no, he had to be allergic and seriously wounded from said battle. Gone was his tail blade, broken hind legs, strained back, and feverish from infected cuts. The end of his service to their People and burden upon the one he wishes to life the rest of his life with. If not for Gafinilan, he would be dead, be it by Yeerk or infection, with his body disposed of or found by an unaware human. Or perhaps a Devil would have found me? Or something else?

Mertil slows to a canter as he spies Serafall, Satan Leviathan, a Devil, and the one in charge of Diplomatic Relations on behalf of the Pillars. Trotting towards her, curious as to what brought her to visit him, for Gafinilan is currently working at Ajuka's Lab, likely reviewing the dimensional pockets that Ajuka has been working on.

He is unsure of what to make of these... additional species that share this particular planet. It defies convention, there has only ever been a single intelligent species per planet, mostly due to the simple fact that the two species would be at odds over resources of said planet. The nearest of co-habitation of a planet, well, the more intelligent of the races proved to be physically handy capped and the other, still in the process of gaining higher brain function.

"Mertil, how's it going?" Serafall inquires politely, it still fascinations him that all the species seem to share the same body blue print. Even the species that comes the closest to that of an Andalite own body plan still have mouths.

:I am as well our previous encounter.: Mertil states in a rather calm manner. :What do I owe the pleasure of your company?: He is whole after all, there's no sign at all of his weakness, of his defect to his being. For that, for that he knows that he's indebted to Ajuka and the other Satans, for not only in elevating his allergy, but for Gafinilan as well. After all, his Shorm's disorder would have only gotten worse, being forced to Morph constantly day in, day out.

"Well... how would you like to stretch your sights, as it were?" Serafall asks after a few seconds of silence. :In what way?: He asks, focusing his main eyes upon her while his stalk eyes move about, lazily glancing about the green house that is the basement.

"We have recently released information concerning the Yeerk Invasion to both Heaven and their Fallen siblings." Serafall says, slowly moving for the door and he walks with her. "No word yet from Azazel concerning this but we have received word from Michel about speaking with one of our sources directly."

:You wish to ask if I would be interested in meeting with these... Angels?: He asks, after all, he would have thought they would have Gafinilan to do so. "Yip, you see, we've noticed you seem to be, well, unoccupied compared to Elfangor as well as Gafinilan. Plus, when Azazel gets in contact with us, we're pretty sure Gafinilan will be the right guy to met with him, what with them both sharing the same fields of interest." Ah, so scientist as well as leader of the Fallen Angels.

Mertil thinks this over and, to be fair, he finds himself very reluctant to step outside of this house. Change, isn't something he's sure he likes, given then number of changes he's gone through in such a short amount of time. Then again, Mertil can see if from the Satans' point of view, as out of the three Andalite Warriors, he really is the only one who's been, well, directionless. :Will I be expected to leave the Underworld?:

"Nope, they'll be coming here, if you agree, we'll remodel one of the rooms here for your meets." Serafall states. "Heaven tends to be a just Angels area. The only other place may be topside, but, again, just because we can engage your Morphing abilities enough to heal you, it doesn't mean we fixed it enough for you to Morph into, well, a human. Then again..." Mertil feels her eyes studying him.

:I never Acquired a Human or anything beyond the native bird of my planet.: He admits, yes, he can't Morph but his allergy doesn't mean he couldn't Acquire DNA. "Ah yes, that many winged bird."

"Well then, I am more then happy to offer myself up to be Acquired, kind of curious what it feels like, to be honest." Serafall says and he is a bit startled, although he heard that Elfangor had Acquired his own human Morph viva the young Devil, Terry, he hadn't though he would need to Acquire a human Morph for himself, given his allergy, then again.

:Something that Ajuka wants to test out?: He asks and Serafall hums, it's an odd sound, one that has many means for the various species of this world, in this case, she's fairly sure that's a positive agreement noise. :Shall we go to the lab then? I am sure Ajuka and Gafinilan would like to monitor the process. After all, why is it that Eflangor ended up a human instead of a Devil given he Acquired a Devil?:

The mouth curves slightly and he's fairly certain Serafall's eyes seem to shine with an emotion, amusement, perhaps? He wonders if he'll get a better idea of how to read the faces and bodies of Devils upon Morphing into a similar body shape. After all, with Morphing comes that species's instincts, right? Which means a base line understanding of how the Morph understands others of its species, which, likely explains how easily War Prince Elfangor can interact with not just humans but also these Devils.

As Ajuka Beelzebub watches, the various monitors and other electronics capture the process of Mertil Acquiring his fellow Satan's DNA. Sure enough, the process goes off without any trouble that he can see and the read outs do seem to suggest that Serafall's magic has done something, nothing harmful, just did something. The monitors do show that Serafall is in a fairly relax state and so is her magic, a second later and her level of passive activity rises, both physically and magically.

"That was fairly relaxing." Serafall comments thoughtfully. "Well, then, let's see if this bore fruit, shall we?"

f course.: Is the Andalite's reply and the various instruments record the process of the DNA pattern seemingly crystallizing within Mertil's being. Yet, compared to the other recordings done previously from the Animorphs and young Terry, there's a bit of separation but that's to be expected given they the magic involved in keeping the allergy inactive. The enchantment keeps Mertil's condition from triggering as the process begins to manifest physically. Soft pops of air pockets within the bone release slightly as the bones alter themselves, taking on the body plan of an alien species.

It utterly fascinates him how this technology works on pure science and energy manipulated in a way not unlike magic, yet it is an energy that creates an anchor for a kind of gate or dimensional space that exists within the body. Compared to the previous people he's seen Morph, it's clear that Mertil's taking a bit longer, whether its due to it being the first time for him or due to the minor interference of the enchantment keeping his allergy from reacting. Ajuka notices the lighter shade of blue with teal highlights in the bangs, which is fairly different then Elfangor's own blue hair in human Morph along with Mertil's features going more feminine, perhaps due to Serafall being female? Mertil's eye color alters slightly, moving from the amber yellow to a amber hazel.

As Serafall conjures some cloths upon Mertil's human frame, it's clear that there's little similarity in features between them, Mertil even stands three inches taller then Serafall herself. The muscle build is more in line with Elfangor's own, only a tad less bulky, kind of on the scrawny side to be honest, then again, that just makes Mertil appear more feminine. Skin tone is a little darker then Elfangor's own, making Serafall appear rather pale as the two stand together as Serafall allows Mertil to lean on her as he is pretty much looking around the room. It's very noticeable compared to the time both Elfangor and Gafinilan typically do these days when they are passing themselves off as human, but they do remain rather alert compared to the norm.

One might think they were paranoid if they didn't know the truth, that their natural body sports a second set of eyes that can move independently, not unlike ears tend to do on those life forms that have them upon the top of their head. It's not that surprising that Elfangor seems to be putting effort into not always scan around for danger, given that the alien spends hours on end in human Morph and a Controller might pick up on the habit as something to look into. Going from such a wide field of vision to... Ajuka muses to himself.

Earlier, Elfangor sent a text concerning him being invited along with the Animorphs plus two, one of which had been the Stray Magician slash Sacred Gear user and the younger brother to Elfangor who now sports the nickname of Ax, to visit one of the estates belonging to House Oriax, to get to know Terry's relatives. Falbium is monitoring the situation and will handle things when needed. If he were honest, he is rather surprised at how easily the boy fell in line with keeping his House in the dark, not even trying to try and use the situation as leverage to get some political clot. While a welcome relief in this case, a blessing really, it paints an odd picture concerning the boy given his... non-Devil behavior, oh it's clear that there's growing bonds of friendship and companionship between the young Devil and the Morph capable humans, but at this age and likely training, he should be angling for something from this.

It's likely one of the reasons they were all waiting for, as a human saying goes, for the other shoe to drop. He's touched on the matter of the sire but, well, there's no record of Helen Oriax seeing anyone during the time when Terry would have been conceived. Oh, Ajuka now knows a great deal more about the mother, there's nothing concerning the father. Even the use of an out of date ritual didn't result in the name of the father, although the date of Terry's birth on the other hand...

Sighing, watches as Serafall aiding Mertil in getting use to being human and a slight smile as the Andalite plays around with producing sound. He's confident that even Gafinilan had gone through that phase. So far, Ajuka hasn't caught his fellow seeker of knowledge giving taste a try but it'll come in time. He is rather curious to what Gafinilan's experiences will be, after all, it's rather hard to imagine eating without tasting what one ate, then again, that's just how life evolved upon this world.

At least this will help get Mertil's mind from what ifs and what could have beens.

:How did this happen?: Visser Three once more shouts out in an enraged way that nobody could ignore. But then, that's thought speech for you, it just gets insider your head. Erek King, a Chee, muses.

Oh, he knew the answer to that question but wasn't going to answer it, after all, the Yeerks are the enemy. Yet, in pulling off the stunt that they did, people were alive, oh, the Yeerks likely didn't see it that way, but there's no telling what a Magician trained Sacred Gear user could do when backed up into a corner? Lots of death, destruction, and secrets getting out. Global conflict that would cause the death of billions. Erek muses.

It's why Erek's here, after all, behind enemy lines. Doing what he can to throw harmless monkey wrenches into their plans while doing his best to save lives of not just the Hosts but also Yeerks. In some ways, Erek finds the very presence of races from beyond Earth to be rather refreshing and rather simple compared to the complex politics of the supernatural species that make up Earth's hidden societies.

The technology of the Yeerks wasn't as well protected as Ajuka's or even Azazel's computers, which makes hacking it so very simple as it's just technology, no hybridizing with magic or cross platforming as quick magic rituals that some Magician Covens are beginning to look into.

Everyone just tries to look busy, doing their best to focus on their tasks. Fear, so much fear. Yet, it also, unknowingly, works more against the Visser then for.

It's something the Chee have a great deal of experience with, watching tyrants threaten and harass their underlings, thinking it will cause miracles to happen. Erek has known better tyrants then this Yeerk in Andalite body, then again, unlike the others in the room, he knows that lopping off his head won't kill him, not even exposing him for what he really is either.

There's nothing for the Yeerks to uncover with this investigation, Elfangor wasn't that bad when it comes to hacking, just not as good as Ajuka or even Azazel, but then, those two are old and always improving the technology. Which means that the Chee needed to be better in order to remain off the supernatural radar. Then there's the fact that they had done their best to clean up some of Elfangor's digital prints, they would have erased all except that Ajuka will likely check the systems out himself, so since Ajuka knew Elfangor had done some hacking, they had to leave it for the Beelzebub to find. Once more, his mind wanders off while he does the usual routine of checking the systems for the third time this last hour.

The Chee have been forced to evolve, to make improvements upon themselves if they wanted to remain hidden from the species that call Earth home. Magic's ultimate source is the soul and it turns out that yes, Chee have souls or had slowly developed them as they lived upon Earth. Each Chee's magical reserves varied and they were each, to use a popular term, special little snowflakes. They might have all been made equal once upon a time, but it seems, their individual experiences truly did define them, causing them to grow and develop in their own, unique ways.

Yet, still, they had their same old programing, not because they couldn't change it, it's because they don't want to. Every Chee made that choice and they keep making that choice every day. They don't do so to just honor their creators, but, because they have all had experience helping others deal with the taking of a life. It often doesn't matter what the cultural norm was, individuals will always be individuals, each looking for comfort once it hits home that the person or people they killed, were just like them, they had a family that cared for them, friends who stood by them, and things they thought were right.

Sure, some of those had been human, but a surprising number tended to come from the more... magical side of things. Then again, magic is about connects and want. It's sad to say but, humans weren't the most sensitive race on Earth. There's likely various reasons but Erek is firmly believing it has to do with the fact they evolved from herd creatures, that they like to turn off their brains a little too much, to have others do the thinking for them. Laziness, sloth, seems to be far too human a trait when civilization reaches a certain point and is even encourage by those that benefit from it, be they supernatural in nature or from human stock.

Soon enough the Visser Three is out of the room, what threats hung in the air, well, they weren't something Erek bothered to keep in his memory banks once his filters got through sorting out whether it was important to remember or not. Sub-Visser Hundred Twenty One sighs in relief after a few minutes of the commander of the invasion forces hasn't returned. A number of others all seem to do the same, the tension of having a commanding officer hovering over their shoulders had been distracting for most, never mind the fact that the Hosts likely had been happy to act up.

Pressure from two fronts, Erek couldn't keep a slight smirk from his face. He moves to get up, asking, "Bathroom break?" Sure enough, most of the others follow suit, standing up and they head for the door. It's been a good five hours of going over the patch work system that the Yeerks call their computers, it's no uniform as Yeerks just jury rig it enough to access it and they move on. If it would work, he's fairly sure they would resort to using paperclips and chewing gum in their repairs.

Yeerks, the raiders of junk heaps, scourge of streamline programmers. Erek muses, knowing that it's not that they can't come up with tech on their own, it's just that, well, none of the higher ups were invested in improving what's not broken. It's a very... political mind set that even Gods, Devils, and Angels seem to share.

He wonders if the Visser Three will have something else to vent about, after all, there had been that Andalite distress call that happened around noon. Oh well, not my concern, after all, that group did skip afternoon classes. It's likely sorted itself out.

Unburden Skies: Katekyo Hitman Reborn!

I don't own Katekyo Hitman Reborn!

Memories were tricky things, well, that could just be Shi's humble option on the subject but then, that's likely few have his experiences when it comes to the subject. Oh, he knew the essentials up to a point, then again, as he looks into the mirror, the sight of his name hovering above his head, even that seems to have been effected by whatever caused his memory loss in the first place. Shi, well, he's pretty much learned, continues to learn, will always likely, learn to deal with this problem and pray that it'll never happen again as he doesn't want to lose what progress he's made in this pass three months.

Standing before the mirror, a full length one, Shi's eyes move about his body, there's very light scars that tell of rough childhood. Moving his head to the left and moving his left shoulder over, he can see the bite given to him by a criminal werebear, even now, two months, the bite shows no sign of fading away, although it's long since healed. Then again, that's to be expected. The bite mark will remain with him for the rest of his life, telling the world that he's no longer human.

Standing straight once more, the ten year old closes his eyes and calls up his stats. Everything outside of himself seems to fade out and time out, at least from his point of view. His name is there, at the top, his level, something he has learnt is very private and personal information, is there, sporting the number thirteen. Given when he woke from the accident that is the source of his amnesia, he have been level eight and fairly low level for someone of his previous species and age, it turns out. Five levels in three months, that's, well, yea. There's a bar there, measuring how much experience he needs before he can level up once more.

The next bit of information is his age along with the date of his birthday, October 14. Shi finds it ironic that its that same day that the accident occurred, that it seems that for his tenth birthday, the universe's gift had been a fresh start in the form of, you know, forgetting your whole life that led up to that accident. For fuck sake, Shi might not even be my original name, it could just be nickname or the last name I thought of.

Next is his species, which, do to the bite of that werebear, is now that of a human werebeast, the human part pretty much means when it's day time, he's pretty much like a member of the human race, pretty much the same everything with a few exceptions. The sub-type isn't a bear though, which had been a fifty percent chance of happening, nope, his animal sub-type is a coyote. Unlike born werebeasts, he can only transform into his hybrid and animal forms at night, the time where magic is easier to preform and mana regenerates far faster then it does during the day. Then again, the Moon God or Goddess, it really depends on which aspects you worship, is the deity of magic along with the night.

It's not all that odd to alter one's species, there's plenty of rituals that allow one to become half something or to fully convert into another sapient race. The only thing is, werebeasts, they are kind of the results of a failed ritual of that type, which means that most are stuck with racial change, it's why those who convert viva bite will always have the tale-tell mark. Then again, most born werebeasts only use said rituals to alter their animal sub-type, not to change the fact they were werebeasts.

Thankfully or not, the time of day doesn't effect his racial passive which is atypical of most Bitten werebeasts, a ten percent heal rate over time. His racial active increases the rate of healing by eighty percent for a duration of an hour, a very not atypical active racial feature, particularly given that most active abilities only last for a few seconds. Then again... Humans don't get racial passives or actives, nope, humans just have an easier time gaining experience to level up quicker, but then, given most humans have a life expectancy of maybe a hundred years compared to, well, humans just had the shortest life span as even an Orc or Minotaur can expect to life to be over a hundred, just not pass two hundred, if they ever succeed in living that long to reach old age.

His class, well, that's empty, which means that he doesn't have a class passive and active. It's this that is the most cause of concern for him, everyone has a class, it defines your progression in the world, which of your stats are easier to bring up, and, ultimately, how you view the world. A Tailor will have a different experience then a Dancer, even if they were the same level. That's not even bringing up the more sword, magic, and shield classes, like Warrior, Cleric, or even Thief.

Your class, yea, you can't alter that, your species, sure, your age, kind of takes a lot of magical mojo but doable, but your class, that's set in stone. A human Tailor could become an Orc but would still be a Tailor. A Dancer could pick up a rapier and learn to use it, to kill with it, it just means that they would be spending far more time working on a non-class skill, taking years to learn what actual Warrior or Thief could learn to do in a few weeks or two months of casual practice. Then again, that same Warrior or Thief wouldn't be able to successfully learn to keep to in step with the rhythm of a song or beat as easily as a Dancer could. If that self taught rapier Dancer turn fighter learn to make creative use of that natural ability in a battle? Well, it's all about approach, of using what tools and abilities you have.

Once upon a time, your class was hanging over your head, the same as your name. Telling everyone what you were and that was that. It caused people to treat others more by their class then by who they were. There's an epic saga of a Blacksmith using a magical medallion to hide his class from other's view, causing it to read Knight and how he got into a Hero Academy, even becoming the leader of his own Guild. Over the course of his adventures, even when he was revealed for his deception, his Guild did continue to follow him, more because of who he was then what he was. Oh sure, it likely took a long time for that deception to mend and for him to regain the trust of not just those closest to him but those around him.

The Hero Blacksmith is a very true history given that the end result was that said Hero managed to sway the Gods or Goddesses of the world that by having ones class for all to see may be the truth, it ultimately causes division, keeping people from learning more about their fellow beings, that it had become an excuse to create the Castes system and that it keeps people from trying to better themselves.

After all, the Blacksmith's level advanced further then any of his class had back then, even gaining class actives that allow the creation magical weapons and armor using rare metals and gems, looted from enemy monstrosities or exploring Dungeons. His creations, they wouldn't have come about if he hadn't succeeded in getting into the Hero Academy of his Kingdom and completing that first Quest. One of his friends, it is said, had been a very unique class, one that could only succeed in combat using a single weapon, one that was very unusual and that its unlikely they would have gotten far if not for him creating a far more durable version of said weapon. In the end, the Gods and/or Goddesses did look upon society and found that the Hero Blacksmith had a point, that the hovering class above a person did keep people more divided then united, so, they erased it from view.

That story, well, it's become his favorite, which isn't that unusual for his age. Although Hero Academies are a thing of the past, that doesn't mean that schools don't have Hero Courses, both during normal school hours or for summer school sign up course. After all, Fighter, Magical, and Rogue type Classes were still being born and it's not fair for their natural skills and talents to get ignored just because technology and magic have altered the way people fight. People still have certain expectations for those former classes that once made up the Hero Caste, like a Warrior becoming a officer of the Law or sports team coach. Plus most of it is just that their tools have altered, like an Archer now a days using a gun instead of a bow or crossbow or a Theif hacking a bank account viva a computer.

Yet... he lacks a class and thus, direction. And it shows, particularly how the next part that's listed showed him merely average in all of his stats, although his resistance is fairly high. Nothing to brag about, that's for sure. Shi muses as he looks at the 'bottom', there's a number listed there, one he didn't know what to make of. As far as he knows from what little he's been able to read up on, nobody else seems to have this little collection of numbers nor the plus symbol next to his stats.

Well, that's that, I just, well... Shi considers, once more, if he should see what would happen if he pressed one of those plus symbols. Namely the ones for Intelligence and Wisdom, given he sure could use the boosts those two are known to give. Intelligence helps one learn while Wisdom helps one remember, both were something he needs more of. Each morning since he reached level thirteen, he would do this, bring up his status and then spend time just staring at the bottom of the page and at the numbers that determine how things like how strong he was or how quick on the uptake he is.

Well, nothing for it, I mean, nothing ventured nothing gained. He tells himself and he 'presses' the plus symbol for the two stats five times each, bringing his Intelligence to seventeen and his Wisdom to twenty. The number at the bottom, it goes down by ten. Then, as he drifts away from the status page, it asks him if he wants to confirm the changes, which is rather... confusing and yet, comforting in its own way. He is oh so tempted to press cancel but, well, he picked his course, might as well stick with it. Willing yes to be pushed, a slight chiming sounds as he finds himself staring at his reflection in the mirror.

A slight smile reflects back upon him as he finds he doesn't feel any different, then again, he might once he finishes his morning routine before school. With a snort, he turns his back on the mirror and begins his shower. He's got an hour, a glance at his scroll gives him the time, before he's leaving his apartment to get to the bus stop. His shower shouldn't take more then fifteen minute, leaving him plenty of time to make himself both breakfast and a packed lunch.

"Hey Shi!" Mei von Falcon, a natural half goblin, half gnome, calls out with a big, fang filled grin and laughing yellow eyes. "Hey." He says as he walks over to join her on the bench with his lunch. "How's my favorite Thief, today?" He asks and Mei gently punches his arm with a unconvincing scowl upon her face.

"I'm the only Thief you know, so I can't count as being your favorite given you don't have a larger sample size to compare me too!" Mei lectures him, causing him to give her a smile. "Ah, but Mei, no other Thief could have stolen my heart quite like you clearly have!" Shi remarks in a teasing tone, which causes the young Thief to blush black while looking away and down at the ground as she slaps him in the same spot, saying, "Don't say things like that! People might get the wrong idea!"

Shi just chuckles at the three foot tall Mei before looking about for their other two friends. Russel Hooftread, Russ being his nickname, is zigzagging about, greeting various groups of people in a cheerful manner while Frost is talking with the drama club president. "S'up, looking good there, on the charlie horse, Mei!" The chatty dwarf comments. "That's got to be your best performance this month, yea?"

"Second best for the month." Mei tells their friend as he settles on the grass before the bench. "You weren't bad yourself shimmering up that rope."

"What kind of Warrior would I be if I couldn't shimmy up a stationary rope? Breaching the walls, vaulting from the edge to slam my axe into the nearest helmet covered dummy's brain?" Russ then answers his own question, "A poor one, that's what!" Both Mei and Russ were in the same Hero Course, then again, they were both older then Frost and him, what with both of them being fourteen. The two chat about the performances of their fellow classmates.

"Shi. Mei. Russel." "How many times have I told you to call me Russ? It's Russ!" Frost joins them, ignoring the glaring look that Russ is giving him. "Hey." Both Mei and himself say at the same time as the orc weretiger moves to sit on Mei's other side with his bento. Frost and him share the same night class for young werebeasts learning to control/channel their animal instincts. They were both bitten nearly same time at the same store by the same werebear. Then again, that guy choice that location for maximum victims to convert into werebeasts.

"How's the casting going?" Shi asks once they've all taken a bit out of their lunches. "They still want me to play the villain." Frost states in a calm manner. "Trying to bribe me with a nice, shiny suit of armor made of bronze."

Given that Frost's class is Dancer, it's an offer meant to appeal to Frost's Orc pride more then to who Frost is as a person. Then again it's unlikely anyone knows what Frost's class is given that up until a month ago, Frost had been home schooled, which isn't that unusual given his species. Yes, Frost is deadly with a rapier, even giving Russ a challenge on more then one occasion when the two spar off, but then, Frost's been taught since he could walk to weld a weapon he, as a toddler, placed his hands on the hilt of. Yes, Russ usually wins most of their matches, but, according to Russ, Frost makes him work for those wins, which is a compliment given Russ's class.

Shi's had the honor of watching Frost practice with his mother, Urd, who is a dual welder of a short sword and a hand axe. He knows that Urd wishes for Frost to think about using a dagger in his off hand, which Frost doesn't want, given that Frost uses his off hand to do other things then just punch viva gauntlet covered arm, after all, Frost fights dirty and begin able to grab and pull an opponent off balance, catching an incoming attack, or even back handing is more Frost's style then chipping at an opponent's defenses like his mother's preferences.

"And they couldn't get Violet to cast an illusion on either Fox or Hans... why?" Mei asks, after all, Fox and Hans, both humans, have preformed villainous roles for the drama club before and besides, Violet's done illusion work for the Drama club for extra credit, given she's the only Mage at the school. Then again, it's not like she gets to practice much magic given there's nobody around she can have magical duels with.

"Wants to make the production more... authentic." Frost states in a chilly tone. "I believe Grace even tried to use her Charisma stat on me." Shi snorts on hearing that while both Mei and Russ get rather huffy on hearing that, after all, Grace von Kimba, a gnome, her class is pretty well known among the students, which is that of a Storyteller. A class known for having high Charisma, then again, as a Dancer, Frost's own is fairly decent, then again, neither Mei or Russ knows what Frost's class is, which is for Frost to share with them then for him to do so.

"You should report her!" Mei exclaims while Russ nods in total agreement. "She should know better then to throw that kind of weight around! That's so... so NPC like of her!" Russ snaps, it's one of those old arguments, really.

In the past, back when there was the Labor Caste, Hero Caste, and Noble Caste, the Labor Caste was often nicknamed NPC, which is short for, Needs Protection Caste, given that what the Hero and Noble Caste considered the Labor Caste unable to protect themselves and only good for manual labor. Then again, it's not like the Labor Caste didn't have their own share of faults, given that the price gorging that went on when it came to Hero Caste or even Noble Caste selling or buying things from them. The Barter skill, a skill that the Labor Caste perfected and used to bleed coin from the Hero Caste, given that it's from the Labor Caste that took the raw stuff and then made useful items out of it with ease given their respective classes.

Those members of the Hero Caste with low Charisma always felt the blunt of the Barter Skill, which Warriors like Russ typically had then and somewhat still now. "It didn't work, did it?" Mei asks, glancing toward Frost.

"I walked away." Frost states simply, Shi can't tell if Frost was touched by this show of offense from the pair or not, after all, while Mei and Russ were friendly to Frost, they were more Shi's friends then his. He's pretty sure that, given time, Frost will come to consider them friends and not just friends of my friend.

"Well, good... No headache? Or double vision?" Mei asks, there's usually some kind of effect when someone tries to use their stats rawness on someone with a lower rawness of the same stat, typically a headache or some kind of sensor effect, like seeing double or a ringing in the ear.

"Nothing of that sort happened, but thank you for your concern." Frost tells her and after studying him for a few seconds, Mei let's out a soft sigh while Russ just beams. "So, is it because you're higher level then her or because you have descent Charisma of your own?" Russ wonders out loud before taking a bite of his lunch while Frost pretends not to have heard that statement.

Ah racial history at play. Shi muses as he focuses on finishing off his lunch. As they all managed to finish, the warning bell goes off, meaning they have ten minutes to get to their lockers to exchange their stuff before getting to their afternoon class. "Welp, good talking with you guys, but it looks like I have driving lessons to endure. Good luck in your computer programming class, Mei!"

"See ya" "Bye Russ and good luck with your math test later." "Gods damn it, I forgot about that!" "Fare well."

Sniffing around, Shi hears the tiger behind him snarl at the boar that's trying to come from his left, then again, Catherine's a bully and always did prefer to go for those smaller then her, which is why Frost is warning her away. Once Catherine's snorted and moved off to the left, walking stiffly away, he bounds backwards to where Frost is, giving the tiger's muzzle a quick lick to show his thanks before trotting along the scent trail he's been assigned to track down while Frost is to play bodyguard.

Really though, Catherine should have her own scent trail to go for along with her own bodyguard, which means she really shouldn't have time to come bother them, but then, Catherine's hated Shi when Frost seemed to prefer his company then Catherine's own. Some of the other students found it odd that a feline and a canine could get along so well, particularly a human canine and an orc feline. It's funny, Shi doesn't really know what he did to even get the other to regard him as a friend beyond respecting Frost's personal space and paying close attention to not just what he says but how he says it.

Urd also had been rather surprised, if he recalls, that her prickly son, had gotten along so well with anyone after just knowing them for a few hours. After all, he was invited over to their Yurt by the end of the second class. He accepted, of course, and, well, simple companionship grew into a fairly close friendship, after all, why else would Frost express an interest in going to school of all things? Most of those living at Trample Hill tend to be considered monstrous humanoids, thus they tend to pool their kids together and home school the lot of them at Trample Hill, with adults taking turns teaching them.

None of the others living there make much of a fuss, they all knew he was a werebeast, bitten by the same criminal that bit one of their own without his consent, so any human discrimination that might have been aimed at him never reared its head. After all, there's at least five other human werebeasts living on the Hill, he's not sure how many other werebeasts live at the Hill, then again, he didn't see the point in asking as it wasn't his business and he had his hands full with his own situation.

They get to the area the scent is the strongest and Shi does an air scent scan about the area before putting his nose to the ground. His nose bumps into the trunk of a large tree and he sniffs the trunk, placing his forepaws onto the trunk, his nose pointing straight up. They found the source and his tail wags back and forth as he whines in excitement.

Frost gives a rumbling huff and circles the trunk, head pointing up at the branches. Shi wanted to assume the hybrid form but, well, they were suppose to do this strictly in animal form, which means Frost will be climbing up for the source. Frost must have spotted what they were after as he crouches into a spring position. Soon enough, Frost is using his claws to dig into the tree bark and climbing up.

As Shi plants his fore-paws onto the ground, something slams into his side. He lets out a pain filled sound and before he could recover, he's ribs are bursting with pain. It becomes harder to think rationally, he feels his control over his instincts go.

There's a rush of scents and sounds, the roar of a tiger and the righteous bellows of a boar turning into frightful, painful squeals. The smell of blood, his, the boar's, and lynx's. A warm tongue can be felt while warning snarls, his whines of pain. Slowly, his injuries heal, in his panic, he must have activated his racial.

Once able to, he curls up, whimpering softly as the damage done by Catherine mend fast. The smell and sounds of others rush in to see what's what. Frost keeps growling but, in the end, allows Mr Xan'thus, half elf wereleopard in hybrid form to check him over. He falls asleep as he's getting picked up.

Got to get away! Mamma! Please, oh please make them leave me be! Other such thoughts circle within Tsunayoshi's mind as he tries to escape his pursuers, tears welling up in his eyes, causing his vision to swim. All too soon, his lungs are burning.

Not really seeing where he's going, he just keeps running, not wanting the beating his pursuers plan to give him for all this effort. As his foot catches something, Tsuna falls forward and there's a flash. Once more able to see, the soon to be ten year old glances around in confusion, he had been in a park just seconds ago... It looks like he's on someone's lawn.

Sniffling, Tsuna moves to stand, glancing around in confusion. Looking back, he doesn't see anything out of the ordinary and he wipes his tears from his cheeks and eyes with the back of his hands. Sniffling some more, he feels something running from his nose, down to his lips. Using the hem of his t-shirt, he wipes his own nose. Confusion and uncertainty reign within the young brunette, he does see a path leading to a gate between some hedges.

As his lungs no longer burn and feeling his eyes dry out from his tears, he doesn't know where he is. Biting his lower lip, he turns his back at the gate and follows the path away from the hedges. Hopefully, he'll find his way home before nightfall.

Artic Team, Drek Mission, Frag Relics: N

I don't own Naruto and Shadowrun.

Blue with orange trim hoody vest enforced armor weave? Check! Goggles? Check! Armor weave cargo pants? Check! Combat knife? Check! Lucky necklace? Ah, nope.

Naruto pats his various pockets on his pants before checking the top of the dresser. "Frag damn slag!" The blond ork curses as he doesn't spy the necklace he won from his distant cousin during a sparring match when he was ten. Spending a good three minutes frantically moving about the room until he spies it on his bed. Letting out a sigh, he picks it up and after admiring the pendant, how it sparkles in the light of his room, he unties it and then moves it about his neck, retying it. He gives it a slight tug to check if the knot will hold, which it does.

Lucky necklace? Check! Next, he knows he has his throwing shuriken in two of his pant's pocket, his throw away comm in a different pocket, and various needful items ranging from a few standard credsticks and three Fake SINs of varying quality to some spare earbuds and two pairs of AR gloves. With that done, he walks over to his pack and checks the contains for the sixth time that hour, going through each pocket to be sure nothing is out of its place before snapping the snaps close and slinging the pack onto his back.

"Ok, good to go." Naruto breaths out with a nod, a glance at the alarm shows he's got about forty minutes to spare to get to the meeting point. Walking out of the room, he notices Gaara, his room-mate, meditating on the floor of the living room. "I'm off! Don't wait up!"

A grunt is the only acknowledgement he gets from the Troll and Naruto can't help but grin at the Shaman. Even now, he's not sure what Gaara does for a living, he's bugged the other metahuman for the information and has even done stake outs, trying to figure it out. Nothing ever came from it, even when he managed to contain himself enough to do a stake out for a month. To be honest, he knows what he's like, he's chased plenty of roomies away with his nosiness, the mess he sometimes leaves upon returning from a hard mission, and, of course, there's his shear overbearing passion for life that often has him badgering his roomies into doing things with him, from watching sports to going to clubs.

Gaara, though, he's been his roomie for half a year and, it's mind blowing that he's still here. Then again, Gaara's not shy about expressing himself with a slap on the back of his head to get him to shut up or just covering his face with his hand to get him to stand still. Before Gaara, the longest roomie had been Weiss, not her real name, who only really used the apartment for one night stands. That was until he hit it off with one of those one nighters, about four months into their sharing of the apartment, an elf named Shikamaru, not his real name, who turned out was a brilliant Decker and had recently been fired from his latest Corp job for his slothful attitude.

Needless to say, Weiss decided a new location was needed for said one night stands, so he was without a roomie for a good month, then again, Shikamaru spent a good month sticking around his apartment for, well, good reasons due to vengeful, drek filled dicks being, well, slag screwing dicks. He did get some new shit out of that, but, well, he still misses that couch, it served him well since he moved in. It really didn't deserve to go out like that, but, that's life for ya.

He brings down his goggles from his forehead as he gets to his motorbike, Gaz-Niki Titan, he's had it for three years now. The paint job is silver and navy blue trim, he's got a wicked, crimson nine-tailed fox painted on the gas tank with a full, white moon behind it. With a snort, he climbs onto the seat and within seconds, he's on his way to the meeting point.

"Naruto." Sai greets him as he enters the room. "Sai." He greets the human, who looks like he's aggravated Leaf, short for Leaf+T=Cup. She glances at him before snorting and looking away, brushing a few strands of pink hair behind her ear, she's a Magician and he's known her for five months but only started working with her concerning this particular job. Not sure what caused her to dive into the shadows, what little Shikamaru was able to gather about her past, it might have to do with her cursing, quite literally, a overly handsy, very drek for brains manager who got what was coming to him.

Meanwhile, Sai is an Adept also a human. He's known of him for two years and worked on and off with him during that time. Naruto's fairly sure that whatever Sai did before becoming a Shadowrunner, it's likely being a Shadowrunner was a step up, not that he's ever asked Sai about his past, more because he's fairly sure Sai will tell him, in a very blunt, matter of fact, and emotionless manner. Yea, he... gets the feeling that its best not to know.

Spying Shikamaru, it's unsurprising that the Decker is on his back, seemingly napping. Next to Shikamaru is Spindle, an old friend of Shikamaru's, a former Corp security guard. He's a dwarf, decent driver and sword welder. He wonders about the spiral tattoos on the cheeks, then again, he's kind of curious as to what happened to Spindle's eye, cause it's a Bioware eye instead of a Chrome eye. There's no scar, just, just a new eye that is clearly not the one he's born with. Known them both for ten months now and worked with them concerning the issue of Shikamaru's 'firing'.

Spindle is leaning on the wall near Shikamaru, he nods a greeting and he sends Spindle a grin, returning the nod. He looks around for the final member, their Rigger. "Where's Iron?" Naruto inquires, not seeing an obvious drone that shows she's here, full Shadowrun name is IrOnMiNuSoReEqUaLsOrK, yea, a mouthful so he shortens it mostly to Iron or, in heat of battle, Ree. Which is her usual MoP, mode of operation, out of all of them, Sai is the one who knows her best. He wonders if the two were dating or something, he knows they've met in person, given the kind of conversations they have.

"Stuck in traffic." Sai answers while going through his comm with his typical bored expression. "What, really? Seriously? Isn't there anything she can jack into around us?" Naruto asks, glancing around the room.

"Rigger, not a decker." Spindle points out and he snorts, yea, he's heard that so frag line for to the nth time in his life. "So how long til she gets to her secure spot?" He asks after pacing for a bit and running a hand through his, surprisingly enough, naturally bright yellow hair. His other hand gently rolling his pendant between index and thumb as he comes to a stop, looking at Sai.

"We could proceed with the first steps, we only need the drones for checking our progress into the site." Leaf says confidently, then again, she's the rookie member of the group so, well, her suggestion gets ignored the moment she said we could. Plus, she's a wizard, likely thinking magic's all they need, never mind that the location is swarming with Devil Rats along with other magical critter inhabiting the drek filled sewer. He would rather the drones take point then a metahuman. He doesn't want to take unnecessary risks, chrome's cheaper to replace then lives, in his mind at any rate.

An odd way to think these days, but hey, he might have grown up in the barrens, that doesn't mean his parents didn't do their very best to install a sense of morality into him and his siblings. Yea, the world is a chappy drek covered place to live, and yea, metahumans are dicks to each other, screwing each other over because they were screwed over and on and on. According to his dad, for change to happen, it has to start with your attitude and the way you treat others, sure, you might not have good things happen to you, in the end, but maybe that good you inject into the world will get passed around.

And that's why mom loves him, even if she thinks he's a naive pretty boy. Naruto muses as he rubs his chin in a way that he hopes the others, almost mostly Leaf, believes that he's considering what she said, even though that's not the case. He wonders what his parents, siblings, and his mom's 'tribe' are doing right now... What's today's date again? Huh, let's see, it should be November and the last stake out of the entrance was on the eleventh, which was two days ago... so, it's November fourteenth? Or is it the thirteenth? So... ah, yea, it would be uncle Sid and aunt Lan's wedding anniversary. Ok, so... What should I send as a late gift?

Naruto mentally muses over just sending them a full credstick and a nice, hemp paper card or maybe a few clips of pistol ammo instead of the cred? At the soft grunt and movement from Shikamaru, he comes out of his thoughts and regard the Decker of the group. "Good news, no drones were guarding the entrance. Bad news, GrassSlash's group merged with Kiba's Gang. Great news, they're thinning the population of Devil Rats and are taking injuries. Hellish news, Kiba's got his favorite hound with him, yea the hellhound, and GrassSlash's brought three Riggers." Shikamaru reports from his position on the ground, likely drained from his dip in the Matrix.

"Kiba's gang could call in about forty at worst, fifty on a good day. GrassSlash's group... huh, let's see, twelve before these three riggers, so, frag knows how many drones between those three... Fucking, fragged flung drek." Naruto curses. Then he pauses and digs through his pockets for a pair of AR gloves before lowering his goggles. It takes him a few seconds to get to the file filled with information concerning previous teams who've been hired.

"Naruto?" Leaf asks before Sai shushes her, he could only guess the looks Shikamaru and Spindle sent her way. He re-read the various reports, this mission is rather odd in how it remained unfulfilled, you'd think after a year, some team would have been able to complete this run and yet, this has been an on going mission for nearly five years now. Corps have used their own teams, arc-ers have tried to evac the area, and, if his memory serves him, a wizworm had been on site to lead an attempt. There's been plenty of reasons why, slag fragging drek, magic and tech problems came up just as much as unknown critters and wards.

He skims through the latest report, the one that mentioned one of the Shadowrunners, a woman by the name of R&WeN, not just surviving getting knocked out but her team getting her out fairly unharmed.

'There was no way to describe it. I was me but, then, I wasn't at the same time? That woman though... human, which is how I knew I wasn't me, I mean, I'm a fucking Elf! Not some... some drek spawning Breeder! Takaya is so not my fucking name! I'm no fragging waitress either!'

"I know that drek eating grin. What's the plan, dickless wonder?" Sai asks as he moves out of his data store. Moving his goggles back to his forehead and slowly pulling off his AR gloves, he says, "We do as carrion eaters, we circle on the edges of their efforts, we wait for them to end up flat on their asses and then dart in for the prize. There's something about... anomaly that will create our opening for us. Hopefully, what defenses there are won't recharge fast enough to do anything concerning us."

"What? Why? What makes you so confident that they'll fail to begin with?" Leaf demands in both anger and in disbelief. "Because if a wizworm couldn't beat this puzzle after sticking with it for eight months with better cred to bring to bare, what are the odds that this merger between a gang and team?" He states in a calm manner, although he rather she not be shaking her fists about like that, making it seem as though she' just an inch away from assaulting him in her anger.

"Wait, what?" Leaf pales as her arms fall limply to her sides. "Yip, Shikamaru's dug up as much intel about this place, all five years worth of it, no matter how hard the Corps tried to hide it. Yes, this has been an area of interest for nearly five years with plenty of other teams having tried their skills and luck. Problems range from tech and magic to Awaken critters and alien wards."

"So, let others set off the traps and come in behind them, hoping those traps haven't reset." Sai muses and he nods. "Sounds about right. Right now, we aren't in a rush, as the sooner we get there, the more refreshed they'll be and will do their best to chases us off."

"The later we get there, the less incline they'll be to actively drive us off." Spindle finishes that thought. "Although... how can this possibly work? You said yourself that in eight months , not even a fucking Dragon could not crack this place." Leaf retorts, clearly trying not to chew on her lower lip.

"Don't rightly know, but, well, nothing ventured, nothing gained. Even if we don't, at least we should walk away from this in better condition then either Kiba's gang or GrassSlash's team." Naruto replies in an honest tone and it seems that she couldn't fault that logic.

"Where are you?" Gaara asks him, which is kind of odd, given he hadn't expected his roomie to sound so... worried? Naruto is fairly certain that there is a hint of concern in the troll's tone of voice.

"Ah, kind of on a stack out. Pretty much sticking to the shadows." He answers from his location on a run down building's roof. "What's up with you?"

"What's the job?" Gaara asks and he hums thoughtfully for a few seconds before answering, "Just a sneak in, grab it, and speed out kind of job."

"You are near a dimensional weak spot, you are near a very unstable, very weak, and very alien dimensional weak spot." Gaara states in a fairly chilly tone. "Whatever it is, just cut your losses and leave."

He blinks at the order, for it really does sound like an order, which, well, it's kind of touching and yet... "Ah, you really do care, don't you, roomie? Why else would you have spirits keep tabs on me?"

Gaara doesn't speak for a few seconds, Naruto could imagine the look on the shaman's face and he goes on, kind of curious what the Spirits have said of the place. "So... alien dimension... like, what, little grey men?" He kind of recalls old records concerning alien abductions.

"More as in operating under different universal laws." Gaara states after a minute of silence, clearly debating on answering his question. "That... that kind of explains why nobody's managed to get to the so called heart." He murmurs thoughtfully, running a hand through his hair, looking towards the circle of vans. There's a number of trained hounds plus drones patrolling the fringe. "Could explain what she experienced too..."

"But, well, I kind of promised the crew we'd give it a try. At this point, we're just doing a waiting game, so chill, roomie. If there's no break, I'll be home by noon. No point in sneaking anywhere during the daytime, you know?" He promises his roomie in a cheerful tone.

"You'll end your job by noon? You swear?" Gaara asks and Naruto rubs his neck, this worrying from Gaara is rather, out of character. "Yea, I promise." He says with a soft sigh after a minute of silence on his part.

The comm ends and the blond ork isn't sure what to make of the new intel. "Hey, Leaf, I need to talk with you." He says once he switches to the group linkage.

"What about?" She asks, clearly irritated by something, most likely source of said irritation being Sai. "What can you See? I mean, with your voodoo eyes?"

"Same old, same old." She says but he frowns. "Check, now. My roomie called, he sounded worried." "Gaara called you? Really?" Spindle asks in surprise and he just hums in a positive way.

"Fine, but everything should be arctic." Leaf states, clearly thinking that this was a worthless waste of time. "So, horny is check up on you? Must miss you're smooth backside." Sai comments while Iron snorts in clear amusement at the statement. "I hear red hairs are dynamite in the sack." Iron adds in a light tone and he rolls his eyes at the comment. Really, the two of them can come across as such perverts on the job, always happy to rile people up just for the hell of it by such innuendos.

He doesn't rise to the bait, although Spindle wonders how much booze it would take for that to ever happen, for the both of them, which he is kind of thankful for. Minutes tick by and the conversation moves onto what positions would be the most comfortable for trog and tusker to get it on. As he's listening, he's gently rolling his pendant about between two fingers, his face rather impassive. Tension seems to spike and the hounds suddenly whimper and cringe or toss back their heads to howl. The drones are not effected and the casual conversation that had been going on stops.

"How's Leaf?" He asks and Sai reports, "she's, ah, sweating and her face is... Oh drek!" A few seconds later, its Spindle that pipes in, "Things are fine, it looks like some force blast sent Sai flying through two walls. Luckily, he's an adept. And... Leaf's skin is now glowing green."

"Lovely spring green or hideous toxic green? Her dye job fade yet?" Iron asks and he rubs the bridge of his nose. "Great, well, Shikamaru, no diving for you. Be sure to grab a few of Spindle's spare weapons along with kits. Ree, no private driving a drone, just, you two, just keep out of the Matrix." Naruto states as he's moving to stand on the roof, already moving to the stairs. "Fine." "Ah, and I was so looking forward to taking personal control of my latest war hound."

"Leaf's skin isn't green any more, I think she's asleep." Spindle reports. He's heading for the room, there's chaos going on at among the merged groups. "Sai's mouth is moving but, well, nothings coming out of his mouth. So, good news?"

Soon enough, everyone save for Iron is in the room where Leaf is, there's two drones hovering behind Sai and over Leaf's chest. With a snarl and a slowly increasing hollow feeling, he moves to pick her up, as he stands, he states, "We're leaving. Now!"

None of the others seem interested in arguing with his decision. By the time they are exiting the building, Leaf's eyes open and suddenly, her skin seems to crackle with lightning and as her mouth opens, Naruto finds himself paralyzed. His vision swims as Leaf screams and Kiba's hounds howl. Then, his hearing goes and it feels like something is... probing him. He growls, his fright giving way to anger with a hint of despair.

Pain, a pain he couldn't even begin to describe arcs through his system for a bit and he struggles to remain awake. Then pain happens again but he tries to ignore it, fighting to get to his feet, when did he fall over? When did everything start gaining rainbow sparkles? Why does his back hurt so much? What's whimpering? The smell, oh dreking god, it's... greed with a hint of disease death and after flavor of toxins cocktail.

Sai, he notices Sai is hovering in the air, with glowing, silvery blue spikes seemingly poking from his bones or was it through them? It's almost like, those spikes were the only things keeping Sai alive. He thinks he shouts Sai's name, trying to move towards but his balance is off. He shakes his head, trying collect himself.

Then, he spies a bright gold and brown stag engulfing Shikamaru's body. Before his eyes, he watches the scars, or were they injuries? It matters not as the stag seems to be intent on fixing Shikamaru's body? Or was that his soul? Maybe it doesn't matter as it is all Shikamaru.

The next person he spies and gazes at is, unsurprisingly, Leaf+T=Cup. Her skin is once more green and yet, veins of crimson red pulse under or over, the skin? Huh, I wouldn't have thought her pink hair was natural, who knew? He couldn't help but note. His emotions seem to have dimmed and he is growing tired, oh so tired, but once more, pushes on, his reward is pain, icy and yet burning pain.

No, I won't give in. As he tries to look around for Spindle, it feels like he's moving slow compared to the rest of the world. Where did that Troll come from? Wait... is that, really? That's Spindle? What's the deal with his horns? Was his skin always purple like that? Oh look, he's got four arms, all fleshly. That blue does go with the purple doesn't it?

"No, need to focus." A very gravely voice, his voice, states. He moves his hand, only, only it's not his hand. Even as he goes into shock at the sight of the limb, growls rumble from somewhere. He flares his wings and lashes his tail back and forth. Wait, since when does he have a tail? Or wings?

He looks at his back and finds that, yip, he's got wings, wings that look like scaly bat wings only, they have two thumbs along with only two wing fingers for the webbing to stretch between then, as he flexes, he notices the third wing finger by the elbow. The color seems to be white as the base with bright yellow as the trim. So yea, he's now snow white with bright yellow trim. Is... is this fur? That kind of looks like fur... And he tries to touch his wing, as his new talon finger moves lightly over the wing, that texture moves like fur does. Which means, he's a fuzzy dragon or is he a fuzzy drake?

His thoughts scatter and he let's out a painful bellow as something slams into his left side, he had been looking to the right. Rage eclipses his pain and he reacts without thought, taking a deep breath and spits out a ball of frost. The sphere moves fast and slams into the van sporting a gun turret. Ice encases the whole van and he lets out a bewildering bellow before leaping into the air, wings flaring. Within seconds, he's starting to land again on the ground but he refuses to stay on the ground, not with the incoming company.

Then, from his right, rather alarming metal beasts are charging towards the incoming hostiles. Then hot balls of energy zig-zag the air before transforming into metal pillars. Naruto glances about the area and then recalls his team, he circles back and taking a deep breath, he lets loose another sphere of frost at the nearest moving gun turret van. Upon getting encased in ice, it continues moving, only, not straight forward.

He does his best to defend his still knocked out team, the adrenaline keeping him awake and the pain just means he's alive. His vision becomes tunnel like, his only goal, is protecting them. Then a large honk echos, startling him and waking him from his mental rut. He's about to attack the truck only, something stops him and he starts falling to the ground as, well, he's unable to hover. The troll driver, he's familiar and as the truck begins to slow, it swings around, the back of the trunk opens and a furry blond barks orders at him.

He doesn't really hear what she said, only what she wants. Naruto finds it hard to pick the others up, in the end, he's pretty much dragging them up to the ramp. One at a time, the first being Shikamaru, Sai is the second, with Leaf as the third, and finally, Spindle. Trusting they were safe, Naruto couldn't find the energy to stay awake.

"Well, at least he shifted back before falling asleep." Ree murmurs as she picks up the ork and leader of the team. Although, she's more then grateful for the new drake pushing himself so far on behalf of the team. They were Shadowrunners, Naruto could have easily just left once in the air.

Yea, she would have, in time, hunt him down and stuffed him full of lead, but she would have understood the reason, you know? Oh, sure, both Sai and her knew that Naruto prefers to put his team's health ahead of the mission but that could easily be more in not wanting to make enemies out of former team members. Now though, well, it looks like Naruto's just wired that way and she couldn't be more relieved for a very selfish reason, after all, Sai, Sai is her everything after everything she's gone through.

She punches the button and the ramp and door pull up and closes. Ree then gently puts down the, surprisingly natural blond ork and still sporting his cloths plus goggles, and the engine roars to life once more. It's been a good three hours since everything went weird and it's Gaara, Naruto's roomie, who's currently driving her truck. He showed up as she was still freaking out at the changes she's undergone. He pretty much got her to calm down and to demand she helps him get Naruto and the others out of there.

Not trusting that her technomancer powers at this point, she helped modify the seats and find the keys of the truck, something she, well, never needed to use before. She moves to sit by Sai's still body, the only signs of life being his chest moving up and done. She gently runs her fingers through his ebony locks while studying the silvery blue lines that seem to gently glow upon his skin, the design not unlike wires or old computer chip mental impressions.

For right now, she won't worry about what's to come, only wanting to hold onto what's right before her. They'll deal with the changes, she knows they will, she highly doubts that they could be reversed, and the fact that, something touched them. Something altered them, that it wanted to change them. She's gone through the same data the elf had and what happened this night, it was very out of character of the mystical whatever of the location.

Which means, GrassSlash's group triggered something as she doubts that Kiba or his gang could be the cause. "Thank you for staying, Naruto. Thank you for protecting them... him." She whispers, glancing towards the ork before glancing at the others, it's a shock that Spindle went from being a dwarf to a troll, oh, sure, her own changes or even Naruto's were fairly startling but something that's been documented to happen in any stage of life, but not an adult metahuman not just randomly transforming into another metahuman type, then again, into such a uniquely designed troll subtype? Purple skin with blue plates and horns? That the horns were more like crooked antler like spines with none of them growing pass a foot long? There's like, four pairs of antlers type spines.

Taking a deep breath, she slowly releases it as she closes her eyes, doing her best to relax. She focus back on Sai and prays that they can get through this. That Sai... well, that Sai is Sai.

Striding for Success: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

Welcome to the Capital Region!

Welcome to Ark'Tic!

The words, they couldn't be English yet, he understood them anyway. The sign is to the right while there's an emblem to the left, one that's very stylized cloud with a purple, four sided gem at the heart of the cloud. Between the two, a wide open gate complete with a pair of booths on either side of the road.

Guards are stationed at the booths, their uniforms seem to be gray leather with white metal plates. The helmets though, look to be one solid, white piece of metal, there is a snarling boar on the helmets. On their belts are not just pouches but actual, ancient weapons, like short swords and single handed battle axes. It's kind of intimating, not seeing their faces, the only differences between the six guards are their heights and what weapons they have hanging on their respective belts.

As walks pass the gate into the city, one of the guards gestures to the right booth and he walks over, trying to keep his eyes on where he's going but, well, it's hard! Once pass the walls, he gets his first sight of the buildings off in the distance, all skylines along with oval vehicles without wheels of any kind. They seem to fly about two feet from the paved road, going about the speed of cars usually go back home. He manages to see three of these, two leaving and one arriving.

He comes to a stop by the booth and finds an opening not unlike a cashier's counter. A man is standing behind the counter, trying to look alert and interested while blinking rapidly. "Name?" The man asks, ending with a yawn.

"Evans, Evans Note." Yea, not the best fake name but, well, his mind kind of went blank at the fact that, never mind. "Evans Note? Sign here please." The man writes something down on a paper before reaching under the counter to grab something. What is handed over is a document, the man taps the bottom of the first page where there's two lines waiting for signatures plus a space for date of submission, once more he can tell that the language isn't English and yet, he understands it. "Ah, what's this?"

"Just registering for citizenship of Ark'Tic, you are moving here, aren't you? If you are visiting family, then please present your visitation paperwork." The man explains and he can't help it, "It can't be that easy."

The man smiles in bemusement, the wrinkles become more noticeable. "The process has been updated just last week. It took them three months to create that registry paperwork. Don't worry, it'll only take twenty or so minutes for your tuned into the system." The man explains and not knowing what else to do, he focuses on reading the seven page document.

His brows furrowed and he steps to the side, leaning on the wall as he skims over what's written. A frown slowly grows as his eyes narrow. Humming, he glances around before rereading in a much slower manner. It takes him some time, in which the people arrive at the other booth, no sound seems to travel from that side and when he pauses in filling out the document personally, he notes the angry gestures from those trying to leave.

Letting out a sigh, he shakes his head at that. There's a crowd and the man behind the counter just sighs, "Not again..."

"Yea, it's like they haven't read something that they signed." He says in an oozing tone, yea, he didn't like most of what he's been reading but, well, personal touch an all that. The man coughs slightly, but otherwise, doesn't say anything more. Soon enough, the gate guards break up the almost riot and the crowd seemingly sulks back down the road, towards the city proper.

He gets back to his filling out the document, being sure to he reviews his answers and the boxes he's ticked. Flipping back to the first page, he signs the document with his birth name and then the name he's registering under, Evans Pendragon Note. "The date is?" He asks and the man tells him, he jots it down and then moves to stand before the counter.

"Here." He says, handing the registry document over to the, maybe, thirty something year old. The man blinks, clearly not expecting that he'd still register for citizenship after reading what he's agreeing too, but, well, he figures it'll be harder for various parties to reclaim him this way then trying for the rural parts of Capital.

The man recovers and he watches as the man begins the process of adding the filled out document, which is fairly interesting for him to watch. A crystal of some sort is taken from a collection in a cabinet. This white crystal the size of an index finger is then placed upon the document and the whiteness of the crystal seemingly shatters and the flakes fuse with the pages before they glow pink. The papers start folding upwards and shrinking until it's once more a crystal, only sporting a red glow.

"Just hold this for a few seconds. Then go on and step in the stone ring, it'll begin attuning you to the system." The man tells him after picking up the crystal, handing it to him. That red glow soon turns a pink within seconds of it resting upon his palm of his right hand. The man plucks the now solid, rosy pink crystal from his palm.

He then moves on beyond the booth to find the stone rings, there's about half a dozen of them and it's clear they get used given the trail upon the floor. Evans steps into one of the rings and the ring rises up from the floor with a glow of red. It stops three or five centimeters above his head, the glow turns pink and it then gets this, well, shimmering purple skin within the ring itself. As he looks up, the purple color changes to a blue as it comes into contact with his hair. It's a slow process, the ring very slowly moving to the ground. The energy's touch is chilly, not ice cold but, well, it's noticeable.

He tries not to move much, letting himself just stare in awe at the skyline that's off in the distance. It's fairly easy, after all, it looks so futuristic and clean. He does catch sight of a oval vehicle begin flashing lights along its surface in warning. Then, it turns completely purple and shoots into the sky, moving faster up and forward. Why purple? Then again, why pink? Do the colors mean something different here?

There's a chirping sound and it grows louder, it's then that he realizes that he's done. The chirping ends once he's stepped out of the circle. "There's a stop for the taxi that you can get a map of the city. Welcome to Ark'Tic." The nearest guard informs him, only, the guard is, like eight feet away.

"Ah, thanks." He says and he can't tell if the guard heard him or not. Looking down the road, he begins walking down it. The beginning of a new life.

"Evans, hey, Evans! You got your rent yet?" Dart asks as he's entering the building. "Here." He drops eight Gus coins onto the palm of his building manger.

Dart checks each, pulsing a bit of magic into the brass coin, causing the emerald to glow which confirms that it's hasn't been tampered with or fake. Neat little trick, but then, magic isn't rare on the continent of Ki'Tus. "Later." Evans says as he continues on into the building and Dart just grunts before heading off to his office.

Once he's in the stairwell, he apparition to the door of his apartment. Touching his left bracelet to the door knob, the door unlock and he enters, the light coming on. He walks towards his dresser to grab his mokeskin pouch from the drawer. Evans pulls out the trunk that's nearly as tiny as a matchbox and then his wand.

Placing the mokeskin pouch upon the top of the dresser, the seventeen year old taps the trunk and it is restored to it's original size. Opening the trunk, he digs around for his current idea plotting note book. Putting his wand into the trunk, he walks over to the desk and chair as he flips to a random page, rereading an entry while collapsing in the chair.

With a sigh, he goes through the note book for a bit, reviewing various ideas, chuckling at the reason for failure of that plan until he gets to the last page. Transportation? With a grin, moving his index finger around it, a bit of mental focus and a green circle gets drawn. Reaching for his wand and with barely a flicker, the note book levitates and a pencil is conjured.

"Ok, spoke with Fortune Glorious about various thoughts concerning cheaper public transportation. Monopoly on golem pulled carriages is a big fat nope. Between the money needed to 'feed' the golems magic, there's also the issue of breaking into them to get the coins for the single rides, auto pilots and the whole replacing them. Can't forget the licenses and the need for the special posts for the golems to ride between." He trails off.

"On the other hand... there's no licensees needed for creating geas enforced payment contracts between a driver and client, same goes enforced for employment contracts. The question is, how can I pay for both a driver and what they drive? Also, securing the money from being stolen or the drivers from being robbed..." He continues as he looks up at the ceiling, his former emerald eyes not really seeing the ceiling.

"I also don't want to do a weekly payment plan either, never know if they'd find a way out of said contracts." Evans runs a hand through his now amber yellow colored hair, he's let it grow out or should he say, it just grew out on its own? "I'd use mokeskin pouches for the money but, yea, don't see how that's viable given there's no similar creatures with the same properties on this continent. Security wards slash charms can be broken by simply raw magic getting channeled by a Chan..."

"But what if there wasn't a pouch to grab?" He muses after a few seconds. "Something can't be snatch, even when the driver is on their way to a location... Or held up to be forked over? How though? Can't use a two way box, that can get hacked..."

"Then there's the question of how to carry the passengers around the city? I also need to be sure that the drivers and myself make a profit, I won't settle for just breaking even." Evans eyes flash a blue before returning to their alexandrite like purple coloring. "So, decent equipment from the start, people who know their way about the city, need Hedgers decent in divination for the practical spells it offers, and, of course, how to deliver passengers to said destination."

"Hmm, can't conjure animals nor transfigured items into animals... Animating items pretty much equal golems and I can't afford the licenses or insurance for old, out of fashion flying carpets or floating platforms. Teleportation platforms are illegal and so is side along apparition, still the grosses pictures I've seen of magic gone wrong." Closing his eyes to ward off the images of those accidents.

He's silent for a bit, the conjured pencil not moving as there's nothing to record. "Still, transfiguration... That... there's something..." He sighs and with a flick of his wand, the pencil fades out and the note book closes before gently falling onto the desk top. Leaning back, Evans moves his wand up and down, he's kind of bore but at least, well, he could also talk with Fortune Glorious about the subject of transfiguration concerning laws.

Finally, he gets up from his chair and picks up the note book. Walking over, he drops the note book into the trunk along with his wand. He stretches a bit and then starts taking stuff out of his pockets and taking off his belt. Once done, he heads for the bathroom and then, once he cleans up, he'll go to bed. He's got money to buy something for breakfast from a bakery near Fortune Glorious' store.

As he looks at the tube, Evans watches as the water fills. The wood of the tube had been treated with a potion to make it take on the properties of porcelain, namely the lack of worry concerning slivers along with the rough text wood typically have. "Still, I'm sure it'll come to me and I'll feel like an idiot for not seeing it from the beginning."

"So, are you hiring?" Evans blinks and glances at the trio, they all look kind of nervous with a hint of despair. "Hiring?" He parrots back in a bewildered tone.

"You know, looking for more people to be... ah mounts?" The early twenty year old explains. The other two just nod while clearly being nervous, not that he really blames them, after all, there's plenty of horror stories concerning vengeful spell casters poly-morphing their targets into something harmless or useful animals, into the opposite gender, ah, oh yea, of combining the two like, turning men into mares, for example or shades of that one like switching sexual genitalia for the opposite or for an animals...

He's a teenager, so curiosity into creating defenses against such instances... That's his defense into researching more into the topic, yip, that's his only reason for his continual reading of said stories... I'm such a pervert.

"Are you sure? I mean, this is, kind of... It's turning into a gender-less horse, the size of which is to comfortably carry the client." Evans says, adjusting the necklace, it's got wooden beads with a carved horse tooth acting as the main feature.

Some of the tension seems to evaporate and the one to the left asks, "Really? So, it's just getting them to sign that bill, turn into a horse, and just... carry them to their destination? No... alleyway pit-stops?"

"Well, yea... At the moment, I'm just keeping to Track Current. Testing it out, this is my fifth day." He admits. "Business has been picking up, got a few repeats these last two days."

"Do we pay for the uniform out of our own pocket? What kind of percentage are you wanting from..." The first speaker asks. "Not sure what to call the runners, Striders? Drafts? It's clearly a work in progress when it comes to the title of those willing to poly-morph to carry the clients."

"So you are hiring more then just carriers?" The final member of the trio asks and he nods, "Yea, looking for those decent with Divination, though that's for when I get around to advertising."

"And when you have more people working the circuit." Once more, he nods. "Look, my break is almost over, you know Copper Crystal?" They nod, "I'm renting the currently ruined storage closet as an office, I'll be there by five pm, swing by and we can talk more, ok?"

"Oh, yea, name's Evans, Evans Note." The trio nod and they seem hopeful for said meeting along with relief that they were going to continue in a private space.

"Ah, Note? Someone's trying to... Oh, never mind, the city's wards barred the attempt." Cur'Tor shakes their head and they return to the illusionary map of Ark'Tic, their current assignment being keeping track of their Striders on their circuit within Twice Leaf Dancing district. Far Hearing, Far Sight, and Far Speak are very helpful keeping their active Striders updated to any changes concerning surprise road blocks or alerting them to any local client wanting a Strider.

"Any idea of the origin of this, what, eighth attempt, to divine my location?" He asks Cur'Tor but they just look up at him, their green and orange eyes sporting a thoughtful look. "I'd say... based off of my starting where Talia's trace left off, it's not from any region of Ki'Tus. Couldn't get pass the continent's ancient wards to trace beyond them."

With a sigh, he nods, saying, "Thanks for checking for me." Cur'Tor's attention returns to the map and Evans walks to the next table, the map monitor is chatting with one of the Striders, it sounds like the pair are trying to keep a family entertained while waiting for more Striders to show to carry more of the family members as one of his rules has one client riding a single Strider, it's to keep the Strider from getting stiffed when it comes to getting paid.

Huh, three years, so... is it Harry reaching out or... He then shakes his head, thinking, Doesn't matter, I got a life here, a business to manage, and a girlfriend to propose too. I left the name Caspian Lupine Potter at the gates of Ark'Tic.

A glance at the clock shows he's lunch is approaching. He'll be trading up with Zane, with one of his first employees that he hired, knowing he'll be fine managing the office while he's doing a circuit in Twelve Reaching Pines, a park district that's having a minor festival. Turning back, he leans against the door frame, taking in the sight of twenty-one tables, each one sporting an illusion district map of one of the sixty-three districts of Ark'Tic city.

He never thought he'd end up employing so many people, then again, his clientele are made up of the lower to mid earning workers. It's cheaper to pay a pair of Striders to get them from one district to another then to take the 'public' Rafts, let alone hiring a private Raft. Yea, they'd need to switch Striders at the edge of the districts but due to lack of needing to spend major coin on repairing or even maintenance when it comes to the Hooves of the Swift, yea, his benefactor and former employer, one Fortune Glorious, named the necklaces that, he would have went with Beads of Equus but, well, one of her conditions for helping him design the uniforms and working on the proto-type necklaces was naming the resulting magical item and her name getting added to being co-creator, which he would have done anyway, the naming her co-creator not the naming of the necklaces.

Either way, it looks like who ever is trying for me, can't get pass the city's wards. So, my gamble paid off then. With that thought, he continues on to his office to read up on the legal laws concerning what qualifies as a Charity by Ki'Tus standards, he's looking to start up a charity concerning homeless and jobless Mutts, he's been speaking with Nu'Kina, a caring woman from one of the Founding Bloodlines, about funding efforts to deal with their health problems.

Games We Play: Naruto

I don't own anything!

Feeling the current trying to sweep him from his path towards the sunken lost quest item. As an Ryou'ng, he's capable of breathing underwater along with having a natural, pretty much magical sense to find treasure, which the quest item is. In fighting the current, a notice pops up about his Swim Skill gaining a level as it goes from four to five, Naruto's pretty sure that he'll be gaining more levels by the time he's done for the day.

The former human gamer ignores the announcement to press on, trusting this sixth sense that he's getting closer to it. Naruto continues to fight the current, it presses him back time after time, yet, he continues. Once his swim skill reaches level ten, the dull orange scaled Ryou'ng swims up to and claims the bracelet. It vanishes into his inventory and Naruto checks his map before following his treasure sense to the next closest item, keeping to the bottom of the water ways, looking for any underground paths connecting the local water bodies together.

Soon enough, he encounters enemies and Naruto defends himself viva unarmed attacks along with using the fact the fight is underwater to dodge under or over the lunging attacks coming from the Young Vicious Mutant Pikes, he loots them getting Pike meat of varying quality, fish bones, and fish scales. His Observe Skill says their level being 6, if he had a kunai to stab or slice to cause Bleeding, they wouldn't be so focus on him but, well, none of ones he can buy were durable enough to be of any use in more then three fights before breaking. His Unarmed Skill goes up from its previous five level to twelve as he finds an underground water tunnel viva Observation the currents of the lake's bottom, then just flowing the current into it.

Before exiting, Naruto goes through his collection of pop ups. Most of them circle around Skills leveling up along with the creation of a sub-type skill for Observation called Reading the Current plus its leveling up. A check on his experience bar shows he's close to going up a level, his current level being 10. Hard to believe I've gone up four levels in only a week.

Then again, he did sacrifice half his starting levels to change his Race from Human to Ryou'ng. He had been about to start the Academy at level 12, not the highest level among his classmates, Shikamaru, Clan Heir of the Nara Clan, had been at level 14, then again, most of those belonging to ninja Clans started level 10 while those sporting the title Clan Heir starting at level 13. Those civilian raised started at level 10 from what he gathered.

Shaking his head, he refocuses on checking on his health bar, the one below it has yet to be unlocked as he hasn't had a class concerning using Chakra, which unlocks that bar. His health is regenerating at its usual rate and with that, he runs a scaly hand over his head, he touches the golden horns and tiny spines that now grow on his head instead of hair. Naruto checks his body, checking on the cuts and bites he received from the Mutant Pikes he's encountered so far.

The cloth armor he's wearing are starting to look like he'll need to switch out this set for one that's in his inventory. The cloths being the only type of armor available for those of the Shinobi profession, which the Academy trains its students to become around ages twelve and thirteen years of age. He's seven at the moment, once October tenth arrives, he'll be eight and he's not the only seven year old among the student body either.

Invoking his Observe skill on his cloths, he sighs and makes the switch. Naruto bought the lot in bulk yesterday from money earned viva completing Academy quests and clearing out the basement of his building of a newly discovered colony of Mutant Rats. The cloths were of common quality and didn't offer any bonus effects like he's seen being offered, then again, they were better quality then the orange jumpsuit that this one store owner tried to press in on him, it carried negatives in Stealth, restrictive to his movements, a negative to preforming certain attacks, and the price of it, yea, for that much, he rather get something that just provides armor then a bunch of negatives. Sure, the color is his favorite but, then, he doesn't need to look for cloths with orange as a color any more, it's his natural coloring for his scales.

Simple white shirt plus gray vest offer a pitiful armor of two, the black shorts offer a single point in armor, finger-less gloves offer one point together, and a pair of blue shinobi sandals a single point. So, total, he's got five for armor, he's pretty sure that once his chakra has been unlocked, he'll be able to learn skills or jutsus that will offer armor for as long as he's got chakra to feed into it. With a flick of his tail tip, he swims forward, into the next water area and he can see color now that sunlight is kind of filtering down through the surface of the water, then again, it's not vision that's important to him while he's underwater, it's that treasure sense that he gets from his race.

As he follows that sixth sense, Naruto soon encounters a swarm of Young Vemon Eels who, all together, are level 9. There's at least twelve individuals in the swarm, each having health points from twenty to a max of forty for the better fed ones. He gets subjected to being poisoned thrice, thankfully his regeneration seems to be decent when it comes to fighting the condition. His Unarmed Skill goes up once and his Endurance sees a rise in level as well, going from two to three. He loots Eel meat of varying quality and two Eel skins of fair quality, which are crafting materials, something he encountered from the rats concerning their pelts. The better quality the pelt, the easier it is to work into general leather, which he could sell for more then just the raw pelts themselves, if any of the human merchants would buy anything he brings to them.

He Observes that the skins aren't the typical leather crafting material he's use to working with, which means there's a particular recipe that uses Eel skins as is in making something. So, I should be able to sell them for a net profit, right? Naruto muses, he's still learning the ropes of this game system that's over taken the world, not that anyone else besides him seems to be aware of that fact. Plus, he's pretty sure that the other races didn't exist before it happened, he clearly remembers Hidden Leaf's design being very different then it is now along with there having been fewer training grounds and local rivers. There might have been a waterfall with a tiny lake once, but, well, he wasn't able to read or write as well back then as he can now.

He swims using the current as it takes him in the direction of the sixth sense and then against it to get to the quest item, which turns out to be a pair of silver rings on a gold chain. It's sent to his inventory once more and he gets attacked by an Adult Vicious Mutant Pike, level 12 and two feet longer then the Young Vicious Mutant Pike. Naruto does his best to redirect the snapping snout along with beating it to death with his fist, its got spines along the side mixed among its side scales they were causing the durability of his finger-less gloves to go down faster by the edges being fairly sharp.

Among his many pop ups is a notification that he's now level 11 but he doesn't go to his menu as time might slow when he's accessing it, which means he could get ambushed by another one, by a starving Giant Lungfish or by a Mutant Craw-Fish. He loots the body before heading for the surface and then for shore, fighting off another swarm of Young Venom Eels numbering a only half a dozen and looting them once they were dead.

He keeps his snout underwater as he swims towards the shore and then, once he's got his feet under him, he pushes his head above the water and begins to breath air. He grabs a kunai pouch from his inventory and equips it. Naruto glances around as he walks up to a tree, checking around for anything looking threatening. After a few minutes, he turns and leans his back onto the trunk of a large tree. He glances around once more before bringing up his menu and going straight for his character overview.

With ease, he notices which of his stats increased through shear use and notices that yip, his strength and constitution going up the most while his charisma didn't improve this time around. His wisdom went up by three, which is kind of confusing but then, wisdom is connected with intuition. And my Sense Treasure Perk is pretty much intuition based, isn't it? Naruto muses and he gets an increase to his intelligence for making the connection.

Still, his wisdom is currently the lowest of his stats as he's been investing in intelligence to speed up leveling up his skills along with increasing the speed of learning new ones. It's due to his observation of seeing Shikamaru Nara increasing his level with ease in two days that got him wondering if there's something to having a high intelligence that speeds up experience gaining that he got a pop up telling him that both his intelligence and wisdom increased by a point for that observation. Which meant that yes, yes there is and he then put five points into it the next time he leveled up, then worked on his throwing skills. Yea, he found it easier to see what he was doing wrong, received a pop up saying it went up a level, and then continued on with the practicing, which, saw that skill going up to another two times before the Academy's practice field closed for the day.

That happened when he had been level 8 and since, he's made sure to put at least one point into intelligence whenever he leveled up. Naruto increases his intelligence and puts two into dexterity to help with his chance at dodging incoming attacks. With two points, he takes the time think over what to do with his last two points, he could put them both into his charisma and hope it'll be enough for him to talk to the local merchants into buying from him, or he could divide the two points between them. "Well... if my Sense Treasure uses wisdom, then, if I increase it now, wouldn't that also increase my range?" A chime rings out, telling him he increased his intelligence and wisdom.

Dismissing the pop up, he puts the last two points into wisdom and sure enough, there's a faint pull on his mind. Saving the changes of his character stats, he time returns to flowing normally around him and Naruto switches out his current set of gloves for a fresh set before jogging towards the direction of the pull. He's fairly sure he'll encounter more monstrosities and that causes him to slow. A glance around, he focuses on using stealth to cut down on those kind of encounters, no matter how much he'd love to fight them for the experience, he just doesn't know what the local levels were in this area, so, there's no point in endless waves of weak monstrosities wearing on him until something stronger shows up, drawn by the noise and promise of an easy fight.

The first monstrosity he notices and manages to sneak pass is a Berserk Husher which sports a level of 17. Given it looks to be a herbivore, what with it looking most is a stag, only there's hints of boar in the warts plus the tusks that's jetting out of the lower jaw. It's the size of a single cow, although it's got the slender build of a deer. Knowing he can't trust looks alone to tell him if something is dangerous, Naruto does his best to keep downwind of the Husher.

The next two monstrosities were also Boxing Hushers sporting a level of 14, plus they seem to be female as they lack the antlers of the other Husher example. They also have, well, a wicked dew spike, it only looks, maybe five or seven centimeters long, at a spot behind their fore-hooves that looks barbed. Thankfully, neither notice him even when the wind had shifted, they seem more intent on sizing each other up.

The fourth monstrosity he encounters is an Adult Foaming Fox, level 10 and the size of an adult wolf. It notices him and he's already throwing a pair of kunai at its head. One digs into its skull while the other bounces off the muzzle doing no damage, also breaking given the sound of something shattering. Stupid, fucking trash knives! He's already reaching into the pouch for a pair while doing his best to dodge the body tackle. Maybe I should try stealing better if they won't sell me better! I shouldn't have to rely on getting honest deals from wandering merchants!

While he doesn't take the full tackle, he gets tripped up viva the back leg and he's gripping a kunai in both hands, rolling onto his belly to get his legs under him to get up. He manages to get into a crouch while the monster fox does its best to whip its fluffy tail at him, which he brings the pair of kunai to bare, countering the tail. He slices a few strands off and he's soon dealing with the snapping jaws along with one of its fore-paws trying to knock him onto his back.

With his left, he tries for an eye while his right tries to stab the paw, neither find their mark but they do slice into the pelt, causing the condition Bleed on the fox. He doubts it'll last for long and does try to put some distance between himself and the monster while it licks its muzzle and then the paw. He throws the two kunai, one after the other at the fox, making sure to reach into his pouch for more kunai. Both bounce and shatter upon hitting the fox and the fox snarls at him. This is a god fucking Shinobi village! They shouldn't be allowed to sell this kind of crap to Academy students of any sort!

Once more, it tries to ram him and he does his best to dodge. This time, he dodges the total of the charge and he throws the kunai in his right hand at the exposed back, thankfully, it gets lodged into the monster and he charges forward to stab with his left hand, which grazes the hip area. There's no evidence of it inflicting Bleed, so he's already doing his best to put some distance between the monstrosity and himself once more.

And so it goes, a deadly dance that only one of them will walk away from. Naruto doing his best to dodge and attack using kunai as the monstrous fox tries to brawl him over with a tackle or trip him up with a paw. Between them, only one of them has the ultimate advantage as the dance goes on and it isn't the mockery of a fox. Regeneration of health on Naruto's side means that as long as he can dodge incoming attacks, his previous injuries heal, meaning that as he manages to slash the neck of the fox, which cause Critical Bleed, he's pretty much as healthy as when the fight begun.

Naruto manages to keep out of the death frenzy of the Foaming Fox, glancing around to see if they attracted another monster's attention, which they did as there's a pair of Young Infested Crows, both level 8, circling. He does his best to aim, trying for wing shots, forcing them to the ground. He manages to only get the one, the other flees with a hissing caw. It takes him a minute to finish off the Crippled Crow. He loots two dozen poor quality feathers, a Larvae of a Copper Beetle, and Giant Crow Skull of good quality. The feathers and skull seem to be crafting items, he's not sure what to do with the Copper Beetle Larvae and upon him using Observe, he gets a Quest that involves a classmate of his, one Shino Aburame.

With a shrug, the dull orange Ryou'ng turns to the dead Adult Foamy Fox and loots it, receiving common quality, large fox pelt, poor quality meat pieces numbering half a dozen, unknown organ that he suspects to be another quest invoking item, and eight shards of shattered kunai. Then he deals with the various pop up alerts, a quick skim before dismissing them, pleased a bit at the increase of various skills but knowing he really should leave the site of battle.

Once more, he does his best to be stealthy as he takes a few seconds to feel the pull of his treasure sense. With an idea of where to go, he slowly heads in that direction, as he does so, he goes through his inventory to grab more kunai for his pouch, to replace the ones used up in battle, and something to snack on as he's getting kind of hungry after everything he's done so far this morning. Naruto manages to avoid detection of more Hushers of varying types and no aerial monstrosities show up to attack him either.

At the site, he glances around, there's nothing about the meadow. Taking a few minutes to notice the time, Naruto then closes his eyes and does his best to ignore everything save the pull. He walks a few steps forward and just gets this send of down, of being over it, of it still being out of reach.

With his nose pointing down, Naruto opens his eyes and hums thoughtfully as he considers what to do next. He checks around for a bit before bringing up his inventory. It takes him a few seconds to find the shovel that he bought some days ago. Equipping it, his kunai pouch entering into the inventory, he begins to dig into the spot. He creates the skill Digging and levels it up to three by the time the shovel hits something, he's dug about five feet into the ground.

Stabbing the ground near the edge of the hole with the shovel, he crouches down, wiping away the dirt to see what he found, his treasure sense humming in pleasure. Using Observe, he notices the weight plus condition, it's been in the ground for a good decade. He grabs the shovel, now knowing how big the chest is, he digs around it until he has the top of it uncovered. Picking up the chest, he heaves it out of the hole and then climbs out himself.

He switches the shovel out for a set of beginner lock pick tools. Naruto crouches down and begins testing the lock, he's only leveled up his lock picking three times using practice locks. Thankfully, the tools give him a bonus until the skill is level twenty, then he'll need to buy the next step up for lock pick tools to continue getting a bonus boost to lock picking. For this lock, he shouldn't have too much trouble picking it given that it's slightly rusty after being in the ground for a decade. The first thing he's doing is getting the dirt out of the lock, can't open what's jammed pack with grim and dried mud. Sure, he could bring the shovel out again and just slam it onto the lock to break it, but, well, he really wants to level up his lock picking, if he somehow manages to jam it up with broken picks, then he'll just go for the shovel to get into the chest, for now, he'll try to level up a skill he thinks every ninja knows, after all, why wouldn't a ninja know how to a pick lock?

So what if that profession guide didn't list it as a skill the Academy taught? They likely learn from their Jonin instructor out in the field right? Right! Not everyone who attends the Academy goes on to be Shinobi, so the essential skills a true Shinobi needs gets taught once one is a Genin.

After all, the Academy is there just to create a foundation, not the total structure, right? It's there to check their qualification for becoming a potential Shinobi, to test their dedication, and give them a taste of the profession.

His lock picking goes up a level from him cleaning the lock and then he pays close attention to the sounds the lock makes as he teases the mechanize. Being sure to Observe it every few seconds, when it looks like his tools were getting too stressed with the task, he pauses and withdraws them for a few seconds, the lock goes into a cool down and once it reaches zero, he begins again. His skill levels up to five before he unlocks the lock.

Opening the chest, he get the option of looting it, which he does. He receives an Uzumaki crafted Throwing Dagger of Returning and he couldn't keep from grinning at the description he gets from Observing it. "Worth it, so fucking worth it!" He crows happily at finally having a decent weapon to use. The next is a book that details his clan's private ways of how to practice chakra, he sighs at the title, it's something useful once he unlocks his chakra. The last of it is different inks plus sealed scrolls that he can't activate as he lacks chakra needed to open them, and the final item within is a starter kit for Seal crafting, which automatically causes him to learn the skill Seal Crafting. There's nothing else and the chest vanishes in a green light.

He wants to read the detail of Seal Crafting, but decides against it for now, he rather do that in a safe location, for now, he stands up. As he is about to reequip his kunai pouch, he wonders, "If I fill that hole, would my Digging Skill go up?" A pop up pretty much answers that as his wisdom goes up by a point. With a sigh, Naruto brings out his shovel and begins filling the hole he created, it's not long after that he gets a pop up informing him that this little side event awards him increases with his strength.

He then considers what to do next before he gets an idea, maybe it's a bit evil but, well, it's worth a try right? The pop up pretty much means that's a yip, go for it.

Naruto rubs his left wrist, he's been working on leveling up his Ambidextrous Skill, by working on his Writing Skill using his off hand. By working on his Writing Skill, it'll benefit his Seal Crafting in a round about way, then again, he's noticed how some skills seem to passively offer benefits to a relative skill that kind of shares the same properties. His attack skills seem to build slightly upon each other, very slightly but, well, given he gained points for his two mental stats just by meditating on wondering if those Skills that make use of the same stat could cause a slight buff to one another, yea, he got awarded for that kind of thinking and the more he thought about it and tried to think of how, well, more points which meant he was onto something, something that he could only use to his advantage if he's right.

The reason for doing his best to improve his skills with a brush has to do with Seal Crafting, he's already managed to make poor quality Flash Seals who's trigger is getting pierced, although they do need to sit around for two hours to draw in whatever free flowing chakra is in the environment in order to power itself. It took him some sneaking into the local library to read up on Seal Theory, which created a sub-skill within Seal Craft, that helps him pursue the creation of Seals. His Reading Skill's leveled up from all that late night reading, then again, reading in a library does offer a minor, passive buff in understanding what you are reading, then again, access to various dictionaries and glossaries within the same roof...

Which brought him to the fact that he has yet to be caught sneaking into and out of the library that late at night. Sure, it use to be a Quest worthy challenge, supplying him with money plus increases to his Observation, Detect Trap, Disarm Trap, Set Trap, Stealth, and Lock Picking but after he's done those Quests for three weeks straight, they don't help improve his Skills, now it's mostly Quests concerning reading a certain topic along with seeing if he could break into the mission archives in the basement of the library. He's pretty sure that one of these nights there won't be any kind of task worthy of a Quest concerning the security of the library.

Might try for the Academy's Library or its Student Records to test my Skills when that happens. Naruto muses as he glances out of the window, towards the row of heads sculpted upon the mountainside. All the Hokages had been human and his goal of becoming Hokage hasn't really changed with the exception of adding to that goal by to be the first Ryou'ng to become a Shinobi of Hidden Leaf before going onto becoming the first non-human Hokage.

From what he's gathered, there's at least eight non-humans among Hidden Leaf's Shinobi and with the exception of one, they were all of a certain race of humanoid possessing feline traits that this new world system calls Shimii'Meo. The solo exception among those eight being a V'Rana, a race of five foot tall raven/crow or magpie that possess the barest hint of human traits, the main one being having hands instead of wings. They sport beaks, not as big as the birds they look like, instead of mouths and their arms plus fingers lack feather, instead being scaly like their legs with their three fingers and thumb sporting tiny black claws.

From what he's been able to gather from ease-dropping, the V'Rana specializes in Genjutsu and traps, plus still possesses the rank of Genin. The Shimii'Meo are all joined the Hunter Division upon reaching Chunin. No names that anyone has given out as of yet, which is a bummer as he wanted to ask them for suggestions on dealing with being non-human in an environment meant to strictly teach humans how to be a Shinobi and tips they might be willing to share concerning how to deal with discrimination directed at him viva the teachers. After all, a simple Observation on his and the rest of his class' textbooks show that his was modified to be the most useless, worthless piece of trash they could get away with.

He's pick pockets with various classmates and read certain chapters of their books before returning them before they were missed so, yea, his were trash and the information missing the mark by a kilometer. Thankfully, he doesn't need any of the information concerning Chakra Control, once his Chakra was unlocked a month into his attending the Academy, he learnt the Uzumaki Chakra Control Skill, which likely should have been a sub-skill to Chakra Control but, well, none of the books he's read about normal Chakra Control practices ever worked for him. All of the methods detailed seems to be all about starting with very little Chakra and growing a Shinobi's reserves through practice and conditioning.

Then again, from his Observation Skill, nobody in the whole Academy, including the Chunin, has his reserves when it comes to Chakra. For everyone in his class, they were dealing with either an eyedropper worth of Chakra or a small watering can. With his reserves? A Geyser that sprays water a good mile up into the air on its worst days.

And it's not like I'm the only one that starts off with a larger reserve of Chakra, after all, it seems to be something of an Uzumaki trait to have more then the average beginner. Naruto muses, his eyes drifting towards the First Hokage's head. He married an Uzumaki and had some kids, so, the kids might have had a larger pool but their mom, being an Uzumaki, taught them personally. Did those kids have kids? And so on an so forth?

If that's true then... But... they could all be dead, too. Dead and since its something taught directly from one generation to the next, they could all be dead, so... That could be a dead end, but still, shouldn't Old Man Third be aware of Uzumaki having such large Chakra reserves? There was a whole village of Uzumaki and it should have been noticeable with how differently they were trained? His stomach growls, reminding him that he worked through lunch and his mouth is rather dry, meaning he's thirsty as well. He notices the pop ups and skim them before dismissing them, all they mean is that he's onto something and he'll consider his train of thought after he has eaten and rested, it's late afternoon and if he wants to go to the library again, he should try to nap for a few hours as he will likely lose track of time while reading up on whatever topic he wants to research about tonight.

"So... what do I want to do for the next three months?" Naruto wonders once the others have left the Academy grounds once they got their test scores from the board along with an envelop with a complete break down of what they were tested on just this last semester. Even despite the Chunin grading him far harsher then they had his fellow students, he still came out in the top ten, if not for him tipping the Old Man about unfair marking of tests, of favoritism being practiced, he likely would have received the same scored from previous semester and the first, he would have been rewarded with incomplete on all of his tests.

Yes, he made use of Sasuke's name along with Hinata's own, but, well, it kind of feels like a hollow victory, seeing his name where it belonged, near the top of the class instead of the bottom. Then again, he is level 32 now, a total of 26 levels he's gone through from the beginning of his attending of the Academy. For some reason, his fellow students of his 'grade' seemed to have stopped leveling at level 20, but then, he's noticed their Profession had changed once they reached that level while his... his remained blank for some reason. Their Profession is Shinobi Academy Student and from what he's been observing, something is going on with them, even those with the title Clan Heir, it's like... And then there's the fact that none of them seem overly concerned with their names hovering over their heads or that they could see each other's Health and Chakra Bars.

Then again, the same goes for the rest of the village, unless he uses Observation on a stranger, he wouldn't see their name just a symbol that looks like a question mark and their Health plus Chakra bar just looking full, unless it's obvious that they were hurt, then their health bar would have parts missing, same goes for if they used up a lot of Chakra and it visibly showed. Oh, there's been times where someone introduced themselves by one name but his Observation Skill lets him see their actual name plus level.

His Observation Skill's getting pretty high, then again, he's used it on everything within sight just to level it up from shear use and it works as he's starting to get a paragraph or two of information about people around him, if only about what they've recently done plus favorite foods, medical conditions, perks, flaws, and current emotional state or a mini bio of their life so far. If he concentrates, he's been able to actually look at people's Skills and what level they are, well, as long as they share the same Skill with him at least, otherwise it would just be a question mark level question mark.

And his list of Skills, well, they now include Blacksmithing, Tailoring, Weaving, Smelting, Leather Working, Herbalist, and Alchemy. He's rather bitter that he can't sell anything to the village merchants, which means that he's waiting once a month for one of the four wandering merchants to arrived to sell anything and given he's been slowly piling up raw materials for previous said crafts, it was just easier to learn to use the stuff himself given that his apartment isn't secure enough for him to store anything within it nor can he leave anything at the bank as his vault is always getting robbed, which lead him to just canceling his subscription to that particular bank itself.

Then there's the fact that he's been unable to complete the retrieval Quests as they refused to accept giving him the rewards. Which is why he even tried to store stuff in his apartment and renting a bank vault in the first place. Well, given I can't turn them in and couldn't sell them without finding a Fence, is it any wonder I scraped the whole lot for crafting materials? Yea, it's fairly hard to do but once his Smelting was high enough, he could melt down the metal Quest items, thus causing those Quests to become invalid and vanishing from his list of Active Quests, but they also don't show up under the failed Quest list either.

On his end, he hadn't failed to find and retrieve the item. Nope, the failure rests upon the fuckers not accepting the item from him. So, in vengeful fashion, he keeps scouring for those Quest items throughout Hidden Leaf and its various training feels and surrounding areas. He'll try turning them in but once rejected, into the smelter they go, well those made of metal! As for those Quest items that are not made of metal, well, he's pretty much storing them in a Giant Storage Scroll to save room in his inventory. He'll figure something out concerning them, whether its finding a Fence to sell it to or just using the lot as campfire fuel remains to be seen.

Still, I've found most of the hidden treasures out in the fields along with Quest items for the retrieval missions... I don't want to deal with the headache of trying to find Quest items in Hidden Leaf proper.

Just walking around just pings my treasure sense all over the place. Naruto muses as he remains standing before the board.

So, maybe a change of scenery would do him some good? Maybe look for other Ryou'ng to talk with? Or just visit the coast to see what it's like to swim in the ocean...

A Quest pops up entitled Big Wide World. Well, that's... that's a lot of experience plus, what's a Create ID and Escape ID? What does ID stand for? Not that tapping on the reward explains anything at all. There's bonus rewards in the form of question marks along with a question mark next to money, which means the amount of money he'll get could be a lot or none at all.

Not accepting doesn't nothing. Naruto snorts and tabs the accept, sure, he'll be venturing into the unknown, in a general sense but, well, the people outside of Hidden Leaf can't be more hostile then those living within it, well, hostile directed at him at any rate. He's got twelve hours to prepare for the Quest to begin, which it will at five am in the morning.

With a sense of purpose and a goal to aim for, Naruto heads for his apartment to begin planning for this trip outside of the village.

Going from asleep to wide awake, Naruto rolls onto his side and yawns as he rubs one of his eyes with the back of his left hand. Sitting up, it takes him a second to realize the time and moves to plant his feet upon the floor. Standing, Naruto looks out the window, noting that there's no moon lighting up the night, which is perfect for him as he'll be sneaking out of Hidden Leaf.

As he switches cloths, putting on his best set of stealth cloth armor. Just as he leaves, he pauses and going through the hand seals, he preforms a Transformation Jutsu. Thankfully, the smoke clears and he looks like his human self from before the world changed, complete with whisker marks on each cheek. Naruto runs a hand through his hair, checking for any spines or tiny horns but there's none this time. His eyes don't have the tell tale slits and the eyes were in a more of a sapphire blue then his now familiar sky blue, reptilian like eyes.

As he looks around, Naruto notices that his usual low light vision isn't working. With a frown, he brings up his character overview and as he is reading down, his eye skim pass something that catches his attention. Temporary Race: [Human] . It's below his race listing, which still reads Race: [Ryou'ng] .

Tapping the Temporary Race, a chime rings out congratulating him on learning the Alterself Jutsu. "At low level you can disguise yourself as another playable, sapient race, the closer in height the less Chakra needed to reshape yourself on a temporary bases into a member of said race. At higher levels you'll be able to retain your racial advantages while transformed into another race." He reads out loud.

"Huh, well, alright then, doesn't cost Chakra to maintain, or it doesn't now due to my control being high enough." Naruto mutters before shaking his head, his voice once more sounding like it once had as well. He continues out the door.

As he nears the gates leading out, worry tries to gnaw at his resolve only for his perk of Gamer Mind, to keep it from overwhelming him. The worrying thoughts circled about being identified as himself and getting hauled off to Old Man Third for a dressing down concerning his unauthorized attempt of sneaking out of the village. He reminds himself that nobody save for him remembers a time he was ever not a Ryou'ng plus, he's wearing cloths sporting very decent Stealth, Deceit, and Evade bonuses to his already impressive levels in Stealth and Evade, he hasn't had much chance to really be deceitful given everyone he's tried to talk with already regard him with hatred or smug superiority.

As he approaches, Naruto couldn't help but preform a Quick Scan, a sub-skill of Observe, that causes him to be rather puzzled by the pair of Chunin. Their respective levels... they seem to be... well, low? The Chunin Instructors at the Academy range from level 45 to 60. These guards though, their levels are 38 and 41. Using Observe, he gets a message saying that due to incoming Update Patch, he will not be able to read their information. The Patch details upon him tapping is for updating Professions, creating different leveling and value systems for certain Professions based upon combative or not, which means there's going to be a world update revamping the Shinobi Profession if he's understanding is right.

Dismissing the details, time returns to normal and he walks right through the gates without either of them stopping him. Then, once he's at the edge of the lands Hidden Leaf claims, he gets a pop up informing him that he's not allowed to visit any Hidden Villages for about three months and that encounters he'd have with any Hunter Nin, Bandits, Rogue Nin, and any similar types have been disabled do to the Patch that is about to be put to the test, then as bugs show up, fixed and repeat a few time before being installed, again, this is Patch Update is centered around Combat Professions.

He finds that for the time being, he is settled with a Temporary Profession, that of a Wandering Craftsman. Naruto notes that while there's nothing in the details concerning random encounters with Monstrosities, he can only conclude that he may find himself getting attacked by those but then, he recalls that Monstrosities spawn about Hidden Villages due to Shinobi experimenting with Chakra, trying to discover better ways to use it. The Monstrosities likely result in attempts to breed Nin animals but they proved too feral or something to be of much use and were either released thinking they'd get themselves killed or they escaped. Or maybe they are still created to give Genin something to practice fighting on?

He continues on his way once he reads what that Profession entails, more then a little pleased which the bonuses to all of his Crafting Skills from his current Profession plus minor buffs to his Mapping and Navigation Skills.

As the sun begins to rise, Naruto gets within sight of a settlement. It's a rather small place and upon entering it proper learns that it's called Petal Blossom and is primarily owned by the Akimichi Clan, that the surrounding area is are for farming orchards and vegetables. There's nobody really about at this hour and seeing as he has yet to eat breakfast, he approaches a small eatery to purchase said breakfast.

"What can I get for ya, cutie?" The young man dressed in woman's cloths asks him with a slight smile, clearly happy to see him. It brings Naruto to a halt for a few seconds as he tries to reconcile this reaction with the usual reactions, running a hand through his hair... wait, hair. Oh? Oh!

"I will have a traditional breakfast and a milk tea, please." He says with a slight smile of his own as he moves to sit down at the booth. "Right away, cutie!" Renji 'Nana' Senji chimes in and proceeds to make his order.

"So, what's a kid your age traveling about all on your lonesome?" Naruto blinks a moment before answering without really thinking about it, "Just wanted to wander around a bit, I got plenty of money saved up and not really needed back at the village. Orphan, you know?"

"Oh, honey, I'm so sorry, how recent?" Nana asks and Naruto just looks down at the counter, replying honestly, "I don't want to talk about it."

A pop up appears and it seems his Deceit Skill got a level, rising it from level one to two. The message pretty much congratulating him on using the truth in such a way that allows people to draw their own conclusion, causing misdirection without a hint of a lie. It takes him a few seconds before he dismissing it, mentally going over what statement. In the end, he concludes that given his appearance, his charisma, and cloths, it shouldn't surprise him that his Deceit went up and, if he decides to wander around, pretending to be human, it'll keep going up.

But, he doesn't really want to wander around pretty much lying to not just other people but, well, to himself as well. His current looks had only been to get pass the gate so... After all, wasn't that the point of why he switch races to begin with? To be someone special, to be special, to stand out from the crowd of kids by not looking like everyone else. He's kind of fuzzy about how he was treated from before the world changed, for all he knows he could be repressing or maybe the fundamental change to his person made it so that any personal memories from before about himself and his time as a human were muted?

He dismissed the pop up and listens as Nana chats away with another customer. He glances around to find that there's at least three more people ordering from this eatery. Naruto turns to look over his shoulder to find some of the business opening their doors along with people greeting one another. It's a small community so its not that surprising that everybody knew each other.

His breakfast is served along with his milk tea, he pretty much lets the chatter around him just go over his head, enjoying the friendly tones more then paying the words any mind. Naruto eats his breakfast, resolving that once he's made it further from Hidden Leaf that he'll release his Alterself Jutsu and only use it when he's returning to Hidden Leaf. After all, he's not ashamed of his choice to change his race and he won't hide it unless he feels he has no alternative.

Once done, he leaves money to pay for his order plus a generous tip before leaving. He's got a lot of distance to cover if he wants to release his Jutsu without alerting the Hidden Village of his unauthorized journey beyond its boundaries. Plus, a lot of places to visit, recipes to buy, things to kill, plants to pick, stuff to make, and to sell. He's got three months to go anywhere in the world and he might as well make the most of it.

"So... interested in renting a Bank Vault?" Naruto blinks and turns to look at the Lu'Pine woman and says, doing a Quick Scan, "Tried that once, it kept getting robbed."

Emi Saostone, Profession: [Banker] , level 28, and Race: [Lu'Pine] frowns upon hearing him say that. "Do you still have the Rental Contract?" He nods and with a click of her tongue, she stalks into the bank's front door and he falls in line behind her, walking at a slower pace.

Once she's behind one of the counters, he approaches having pulled the contract out of his inventory. Naruto hands the contract over and watches as her eyes narrow within seconds, she growls in a very canine like fashion. Emi isn't overly quick to control her growling and the look in her eyes pretty much says that she's imagining something gory happening to someone somewhere.

"Yea, they screwed you in classic fashion as in, the teller didn't sign the god damn contract, just stamped it. Always get a contract signed , kiddo, Signed ." Emi explains and he sighs, he thought the contract had been iron clad but it seems that such a minor detail was what allowed them to rob him in the first place. Ok, so, the old fucker is going to be losing his life savings along with possessions then.

Emi brings out a new Contract only the subject is for a fairly large trunk plus, "Owner ship?" He is fairly puzzled and she explains, "Vault are well and good... for humans. Racial discrimination is a thing, Naruto, as you should know by now. This trunk also comes with a Summoning Seal. Given you're a Student of Hidden Leaf's Shinobi Academy, a bit of blood and you can suddenly have more kunai or potions plus you can put stuff you find you don't need into it before dismissing it."

He nods, knowing that she's right, after all, that's why he loves his inventory. "The flat price?" Naruto asks and Emi tells him, he pulls out the amount. She gives him a questioning look while pulling the money towards her to begin counting it. "Kind of hard to get a good deal on stuff when they're dead set on selling crap at a premium price so I learnt to make do while waiting for a Wandering Merchant to visit Hidden Leaf."

Emi nods in understanding and he focuses on reading the contract before signing. Once Emi is done counting, he passes the contract back and watches as she signs, then a pop up congratulates him on his purchase of a Bank Trunk. The lack of pop up could have been a clue I hadn't actually rented that vault. Naruto reflects as he dismisses the pop up.

"Met me over there, please." Emi says upon handing the contract back to him, which he slips into his inventory as he pretended to pocket it. He walks over to the spot and she leads him down a hallway to a lock door. "We'll need you to cut yourself and place the palm of either your right or left hand within a circle on top of the trunk. The Summoning Seal will form on either arm or back of your hand." She explains as she opens the door.

Nodding, Naruto pulls out his Dagger of Returning once they are within the room and Emi pulls a lever, causing a trunk from one of the shelves to glow. Emi then presses a button and the trunk has been summoned in a box looking Seal. He Observes everything within the room and is very please with what he reads.

He walks up to the trunk and uses his left hand, he slices a shallow cut on the palm of his right hand. He quickly places his hand on the spot and there's a pair of pop ups. His character overview also opens and it takes him to an image of what he looks like right now. Naruto finds himself getting asked which arm he wants the Summoning Seal on along with location on said arm. He picks his right wrist and taps confirm, which causes the character overview to close and he just dismisses the previous pop ups.

He cleans the dagger with a cloth before sheathing it and then looking at his right wrist to find a simple box made with two lines. "Just dab some blood on the Seal to summon it?" He asks as he gently traces the outer black line of the box with the tip of his nail.

"Yip." He hears Emi push something and his trunk gets sent elsewhere. "Give it a try." She encourages, causing a Quest to be created, which he accepts despite it offering very little experience.

He hums as he thinks of how to cause himself to bleed. There's no blood on the palm of his right hand so, he'll need to injure himself. With a soft sigh, he focuses and channels his Chakra to empower the nails on his left hand. He cuts his right palm near his thumb, his Chakra sharpens his nails to do so and he lets the Chakra disperse as he use his left thumb to collect some blood. With his thumb now bloody and the cut already healing, he brushes the bloody thumb over the Seal, his Chakra pulses, and his trunk is Summoned.

Completing the Quest, he now has a Quest to dismiss it. Before he does so, he opens the trunk and finds the trunk has the same amount of space as his Inventory, which causes him to hum in appreciation. Ryou'ng can't whistle, then again, he's got more of a snout then a simple mouth. He transfers a number of personal books, eight stacks of blank rice papers, three stacks blank scrolls, twenty-three stacks of kunai, forty stacks of shuriken, and nine stacks of various dry foods into it. Closing the lid, he hand forms a single hand seal and focuses on dismissing the trunk, his Chakra pulses, and his trunk vanishes.

He completes the Quest for some minor amount of Experience and turns to Emi, "Thank you for your help. Can you recommend an restaurant? I just arrived in the village." Emi looks thoughtful before turning to walk out of the door, he follows.

"Well, I think you'd find the Sunken Sarawak to be of particular interest, the owner is Jolt Sunshi. If you're looking for work though, I suggest the Blazing Will, they're looking for a temporary cook, owner is Zane Mochi." Emi tells him once they were back in the main room of the bank. He blinks at the mention of the job, but, well, a Quest pops up and he accepts it.

"Nice meeting you Miss." He says, which she returns, before pausing to introduce herself as Emi Saostone. "Naruto Uzumaki." He says in return before leaving the building.

As he heads for Blazing Will, he is still amazed that Gargar Valley is an area of Fire Country that's been set aside for non-humans races to live about two centuries ago, their attempt to 'cleanse' Fire Country of the other races by giving them their own 'land'. The Daimyo Kyoya and his next two predecessors first offered the land for free to any willing to migrate there, which really just suckered immigrants from other Countries as they thought it was a good deal only to find that the 'Valley' being an dominate volcano island that had been located near two active underwater volcanoes. They tried to leave but there was a navy surrounding the island, keeping ships from leaving, leaving it to Ryou'ng to sneak pass the ring of ships.

About a decade before they would assume the Daimyo ship, Takeru who would become well known as the Bending Reed Samurai, took charge of the 'cleansing' of Fire Country and began a campaign of finding ways to arrest V'rana and Ryou'ng, namely due to how less human the two races looked. The V'rana being much more social then the Ryou'ng at that time, got the word out far and wide, causing them to emigrate to Wind Country, en-mass. Of course, being shipped to a land surrounded by water... yea, they just kept slipping out and carried word back about Gargar Valley's condition.

It would be a Lu'Pine named Kikyo of Moon's Slade who realized that given time and public opinion, the heir of the Daimyo of Fire Country, would be able to 'arrest' any non-human and ship them to Gargar Valley. So, the Moon's Slade gathered all those among the various races, looking for those trained in using Chakra to shape the island, tame those volcanoes, and make it into a place as a sanctuary for their respective races. After all, they were going to get shipped there anyway, so why not take it and make it into what they want it to be instead of just another prison?

It's funny, there's a minor list of both Citizen and Shinobi clans that got hired or donated to the cause but its the Uzuamki clan, his clan, that are the most well known and well thought of, particularly given their history with one of the V'rana Clans, the Crystal Shrine. They had aided the Crystal Shrines moving to the area of what would become known as Tea Country. They also approached the Mountain Singers instead of the group approaching them for help. The Ryou'ng's main role in the cause of the Mountain Singers had been in searching for shrunken treasure from the Ocean floor, which was used to fund the cause. The Uzumaki did receive payment for their aid, even if they didn't request much in the way of money. Another reason why Uzumaki clan is well remembered for has to do with their helping of setting up security seals, helping to shroud the massive island from view of the Daimyo's fleet of ships and, later, updating them to keep out non-approved humans from finding the island.

There's a minor branch of his clan that call Gargar Valley home, they live at the northern east point of the island. He wonders if they're descendants of orphans adopted into the clan or... well, he's not sure where babies come from and according to the game that is now the world, he's not allowed to know until he's at least eleven years old. It's kind of the same with most animals, even so, oh, he knows that birds, reptiles, and creepy crawls come from eggs, he just don't know where the eggs come from or why some eggs were fertile and others weren't. It's like he's got all the pieces before him only, something is blocking him from snapping them together.

Grunting, Naruto focuses on moving around the crowds, this settlement is named after Moon's Slade herself, called Moon's Grave. There's a monument to the Mountain Singers with a statue of Moon's Slade herself posing in a victorious stance. After a few minutes, he finds himself standing before the Blazing Will, he couldn't help but be rather bemused at the image of a flame making a fist.

Entering, he finds the restaurant fairly sparsely populated, there's a group of five at a corner table near a painting of a classic stylize dragon fighting a white tiger and scattered about three other tables are groups of four people. Near the bar though, there's a group of three and if he were to haze a guess without the use of Quick Scan, he'd bet they were workers of the restaurant, the big clue being that one of them is behind the liquor bar. He approaches the trio and the waitress, a Shimii'Meo woman greets him, "Hello, welcome to the Blazing Will, what can I do for you? I'm Sen by the way!"

"I spoke with Emi from the bank and she mentioned there's a temporary opening for a cook? I'm Naruto by the way, pleased to meet you!" Naruto tells them and the two men, one a Lu'Pine and the other a Shimii'Meo, look dubious about his inquiring for a job. He's about to be given a quick Quest to test his cooking Skills and as the green striped Shimii'Meo straighten, Naruto feels the pink eyes of the other go over his appearance with a considering look.

The 'field' coat color of the Shimii'Meo is a steel gray and he addresses Naruto, "Name's Daisuke Mochi, my cousin's the owner. This here's Ren Soatome and Jun Mochi." Then Daisuke gets to the part of giving him his Quest. "You look like of young to have the skills needed to work at a restaurant, but being the generous guy that I am, how about you cook the three of us something? A sample of you're kitchen skills?" The Quest pops up and unlike previous times, there's no listening of what Food Items he needs to make to complete the Quest.

Accepting, Naruto nods his heads in agreement, asking, "What kind of foods do you guys like?" And Daisuke just grins, his reply is, "Surprise us."

"I'll lead you on back." Ren says and the Lu'Pine heads for a door, he follows after. He'll see what they have stocked, he doubts he'd be able to read any of their Recipes unless he gets the temp job as a cook. Ah, the perks of being a Wandering Craftsman.

Once within the kitchen, he takes in the sight, using every Observation Skill he has on the kitchen once he thanks Ren for showing him back here. The other leaves and he brings up his Character Overview, going to his Learn Recipes tab to take a look at what he can cook viva the ingredients. He rubs his scaly lower jaw as he notices how certain spices weren't in the kitchen, which could be a problem.

After a few seconds, he decides to improvise by seeing if he couldn't substituent spices and maybe how the dishes are prepared to get them to taste just right? After all, there was a time when the world wasn't one big game and thus Recipes were subject to changes viva alterations, maybe that's what he needs to do to create his own Recipes and Designs? To not let the auto system for Crafting take control of his actions? No pop ups but that hardly matters and he favorites the dishes he wants to attempt to do.

And so, he gives it his best shot, making use of Observation throughout the cooking process along with sampling. His Cooking Skill does go up as he manually goes through the steps instead of just entering into the auto system that the world now allows him to enter into. He started on eight and only ruined five of them as they either got burnt or he handled the inclusion of the spices wrong. He altered the Meat and the amount of Spices used on the Curry he tried to make.

To his tastes, it wasn't that bad but then, he used Eel Meat instead of the more traditional types he knows most use like Beef and Pork. He didn't know what to make concerning the Shrimp as he's never come across the ingredient before now. It kind of reminds me of a Craw Fish... Naruto muses as he places the plates onto a tray before using both hands to carry it out.

"Ginger Eel Curry!" He chirps cheerfully as he brings it up to the bar and the three adults look in his direction. "Enjoy!"

The three share a look as he moves to set a plate before each of them. He hears Jun mutter softly, "You first, Dai, you first." While Ren reaches under the bar to bring out chop sticks for them to use.

He's not insulted, after all, he knows its not the best dish given the quality of the Ginger Eel Curry being simply Good compared to what he's been able to make viva the auto system while following a favorite Recipe. It's been a while since he's gotten anything below Great Quality using the auto system but, well, he couldn't do the auto system for this Quest and, well, he's got something to experiment with now.

After about a minute, Daisuke finally tries some rice covered in the sauce. Naruto merely waits calmly as the man savors the bite. "It's not terrible." Which is true but he can tell that Daisuke liked what he tasted as he's already picking out some of the cooked meat to try.

It seems that's enough for both Jun and Ren to give it a try. Jun hums in pleasure while Ren's moving the plate closer to his face to begin shoveling it into his mouth. Naruto didn't bother to keep the wide grin from his face, very pleased that the three liked the dishes he made. The Quest is completed and once it's dismissed, Daisuke turns to him, his plate pretty much cleaned of the Curry. "Well, I'll give you points for making something passable. You got the job, kitchen's yours until we close, which is at eight tonight. Be here by nine, although we do open at eleven, you'll need to go buy inventory for the kitchen. I'm sure you'll notice we're missing some key ingredients. Plus, you should check out our Restaurant's Recipes for the menus."

He nods, having expected that. "Mind if I ask how long I'll be working for?" Jun is the one to answer his question, "Just for the next four days, Mimi's due back from her vacation by then. She's been gone for ten days already and we've never been able to cook as well as her, so, most of our usual crowds been eating else where until she gets back." With a nod, he begins to head for the kitchen once more, but Jun adds in a teasing tone plus in a fake stage whisper, "Also, don't mind Dai, he's always been a picky eater! The Curry was very good! Never had Eel taste that good before, but that's just me!"

Ren chuckles while Daisuke growls in a mock angry way. Before he enters the door, he moves to collect the dishes and the tray he brought them out on. Once within the kitchen, a number of pop ups spring up, which kind of confuses him as they've never waited before to make an appearance, so, why now? Pushing that thought aside for now, he skims through them and yea, his intelligence and wisdom do go up from how well thought out his manual tries for cooking had gone. Plus, he did create a Recipe and it's under a new listening under his Recipe Tab, it's called Naruto's Personal Recipes.

Once he's dismissed the pop ups, he checks around for the Restaurant's Recipe Book. He not only learns more dishes and desserts but also learns a few Tea Recipes, creating a new section under his Cooking Recipes called Teas. The Recipes for Liquor Drinks is unavailable for him to learn until he reaches either fifteen years of age or is Legally an Adult, which means whatever age he graduates from the Shinobi Academy as a Genin. Given his personal Goal, he has no plans of either dropping out of or failing to graduate from the Academy, he'll use every underhanded skill to do so but at the same time, he really wants to do so because he's considered capable of being a Shinobi. It's a paradox in that he wants to graduate because they graded him fairly yet, will use every tactic to make them grade him fairly?

It's a minor headache that he dismisses from his mind and begins to clean up the kitchen area. After all, he's got those ruined dishes to toss out along with washing the various plates and other cooking equipment. Then he does the counters, humming a simple tune.

Once done, he decides to give his new Recipe a try but doesn't want to do it manually so he uses the auto system. It's of Good Quality again but there's nothing wrong with that, he is hungry after all.

It's the last day of his working at the Blazing Will and it's about two hours until they close when in walks a woman sporting bright pink hair with three braids sporting star shaped beads into the kitchen viva the employee's entrance. The next thing Naruto notices is her eyes being a light brown and she looks to be in her thirties, maybe standing nearly five foot five inches. The woman seems to come to a stop and seems to be studying him in turn.

"Naruto Uzumaki, Temporary Cook of the Blazing Will." He introduces himself. "Mimi Mikoyan, the returning Cook of the Blazing Will." Mimi introduces herself, cocking her head slightly to the side, as if, not really knowing what to make of something.

"I was hired about four days ago, Daisuke had me make Ren, Jun, and himself something to eat. They seemed to like it so I got the job. Today my last day." He thinks to explain and Mimi just smiles softly, humming gently in acknowledgement.

"Well, the kitchen does look cleaner then it usually does when I get back from my two week vacation." Mimi muses as she begins to stroll around the kitchen, checking the various fridges, freezers, and storage rooms. "Well stocked, although the brands you bought aren't the ones I usually buy..." She muses as she studies the label on a spice packet. "I hope you didn't over spend the kitchen budget for any of this."

"I haggled where I could to get better prices for buying in bulk." Naruto defends, it had been very refreshing to be able to talk to merchants for a change instead of them just shutting him down to simply buy it or get out. He's not sure if he'll be able to put this Haggle Skill to good use back in Hidden Leaf given pretty much everyone there just plain hates him and won't give him more then a snobby sneer in the mind set that he's nothing but trash they won't want to step on.

He's used his Charisma a lot this past month and it's refreshing having people not being automatically hostile to him for either his race or hearing his name. "Huh, Uzumaki... Any relation with those living in the north?" Mimi asks, it's a question he's been asked at lot since he arrived four days ago.

"I think so? I was born in Hidden Leaf, although I was made an orphan at a young age so, nobody around to share the Clan's history or Shinobi teachings." He explains, yet again. "Hidden Leaf, eh? Huh, I thought they turned away all of the Uzumaki refugees that showed up at their gates back when Hidden Whirlpool was destroyed."

And that's new information, something that shocks him, to be honest. From his reading of the public Library's older section, Hidden Whirlpool had been in an alliance with Hidden Leaf. They never mentioned any refugees settling in Hidden Leaf. He just assumed that... well, it was just history for him to learn for any future tests. It just... hadn't seem to be real to him... just something that happened before he was born, that didn't really affect him now beyond that it could be tested on.

"I wouldn't know, they... they don't mention Hidden Whirlpool in our first year at the Shinobi Academy." He feels his emotions rising and something moving to even them out, which he's kind of thankful for. Mimi's gaze softens before frowning.

"You plan on being a Shinobi?" Naruto nods, remarking, "I want to be Hokage, I want to show them what I'm capable of, for them to acknowledge that a Ryou'ng is just as capable of leading the Shinobi as any human."

Mimi sighs as she places the spice pack down, moving so he has a side view of her. "Well, your young yet. Now then, mind helping me make something special for Daisuke?" There's an impish grin on her face and he doesn't do more then glance at the Quest that pops up as he accepts it, replying with a cheerful, "Sure!"

Mimi leaves to go purchase a few items, leaving him to face the suspicion that seems to creep into the other workers as they began to check in on him in the kitchen every ten minutes its either Jun, Ren, another waiter named Shibuya, or Daisuke. The same searching look on each of their faces as they seem to know that something is going on yet, there's no evidence. Yea, there's orders that come in from Jun and Shibuya from customers, there's an increase in business this late in the day, which may mean that it's not usual for Mimi to show up to work upon returning from her vacation before she returns to her position.

It's like everyone is waiting for something to happen and the timer counts down to Mimi's return. She returns thirty minutes before they close for the day and she takes over the preparation that's he's made progress on even with the others popping in to check on the kitchen. Mimi hides whenever the others pop in, now every five minutes instead of every ten. They succeed in finishing their surprise and he's the one to carry the surprise out while Mimi sneaks out of the kitchen.

The other employees seem to have an air of disappointment. "Special order is up!" He cheerfully says as he places the tray with plates piled high and arranged as Mimi wanted. Quest completed!

"Huh, what?" "Who..." "Who else..." "So where..."

"Hey grumpy cat! I'm back!" Mimi declares, having managed to come up behind Daisuke and placing the dessert upon the counter. "Mimi!" They all chime in and soon they are all chatting as one while each getting up to give her a hug while he places the plates about the various seats.

Mimi moves to sit next to Daisuke, answering the flurry of questions along with asking her own. It's clear that they were good friends along with co-workers. Personally, he just enjoys the atmosphere and chimes in when they recall to include him. As they close up the restaurant, Daisuke takes him aside and gives him his pay for the work he's done, completing the arc of Quests for the Blazing Will.

"Well, if you find yourself in Moon's Grave around this time next year, well, I think we may be looking to hire you again." The cousin of the owner says before they part ways. "I'll remember that, not sure if I'll be able to leave next year but, well, it's something to think about."

He'll be coming back to Moon's Grave before leaving Gargar Valley for the main land but for now, he's heading north, to visit the Uzumaki Clan in hopes of connecting... reconnecting, maybe, with people who share his Clan. He's set out first thing tomorrow, for now, he'll enjoy what the night life of Moon's Grave has to offer and when he comes back this way, he'll be sure to check out the Sunken Sarawak along with other attractions.

Staring up at the wooden gate's door frame, spirals have been carved upon it. Raging Winds is the name of this port and it was founded by members of his clan, though, he's a bit confused as to how, given that he assumed that the Uzumaki Clan had been strictly human, yet, what little's he's learned taking his time coming north this pass week suggests that either this branch is strictly Uzumaki by blood Uzumaki adopting orphans, giving them the Clan's name or that it's a Clan who abandoned their previous name when they married a number of Uzumaki in the past.

After all, Gargar Valley is a island where it's humans who are in the minority. Mimi had been the first human he's seen since he arrived at Moon's Grave so, well, it's hard to imagine that the Uzumaki's living here in Raging Winds were human. Then again, how did the world explain his most likely human parents giving birth to a Ryou'ng? With a slight shake of his head, he walks through the gate, entering Raging Wind's proper.

A Quest pops up entitled Ties that Bind and the Quest is pretty much to learn more about the history of his Clan along with learning in what way he's related to this branch of the Clan. It's kind of looks like the beginnings of a series of Quests or an overarching one as there's bonus stuff for him to achieve from this visit.

There's a V'rana musician next to the Post Office and he approaches them, it's hard to tell with the V'rana, not only are they known for their short stature but also for their skills at mimicry when it comes to voices and sound, so just because they sound like a certain gender doesn't mean they are actually that gender. "Excuse me, mind answering a few questions?"

"Fire away, although, it doesn't mean I have to answer." The musician answers and he nods in acknowledgement, then after a moment of gathering his courage and, you know, resisting a Quick Scan. "I'm looking for the Uzumaki Clan Head of the Gargar Valley, do you know where I can find them? Can you tell me their name?"

The V'rana studies him for a seconds, then their eyes go towards his Uzumaki Throwing Dagger of Returning. Lowering the guitar, the V'rana nods towards the dagger, asking, "Mind letting me see that?"

After a moment, he doesn't see the harm and pulls the dagger from its sheathe and hands it over, handle first, although the musician doesn't take it, mostly staring intently at the handle then at him. They sit a bit straighter and then click their beak, gesturing to the dagger, saying, "Ok, you've shown to be of the Blood, ya can put it away, cuz."

"You're an Uzumaki too?" He asks, rather startled and the V'rana chuckles like an old man, while the replying in a voice that sounds quite egotistical while putting his guitar into its case, "Oh yes, I am Rou Uzumaki, Merchant of Sound, Master of the Wooing, and the Most Smooth Operator of Raging Winds."

"Ah, ok?" Naruto doesn't know what else to say to that while he sheathes his dagger, not really sure what to make of his newly introduced cousin. "You're what, eight? Of course you wouldn't know what I'm talking able." He feels Rou take a moment to study him and he nods, saying, "Yea, I'll be nine this October."

Rou finishes closing the case and stands, slinging the case onto his back. "Well, come along then, cuz, Old Man Gorou will want to meet with ya. A bit of blood and we'll known if any of our branch can take ya in, file the papers to take over guardianship with the mainland. Which country you from?" Rou asks, already leading him away from the gate.

"Fire Country, Hidden Leaf." Naruto admits which seems to cause Rou to spin around to regard him with a shocked expression, which also means a slightly open beak. It's then that he realizes that he's been rather rude, "Ah, yea, I haven't introduced myself, I'm Naruto, Naruto Uzumaki."

"What, hold up, Hidden Leaf? Are you super sure of that?" Rou asks and comes to stop walking, which causes him to stop walking.

Puzzled, he lets it show in not just his face but by rubbing the scales on the side of his right head. "Ah, yea? I mean, I am attending their Shinobi Academy... It's out for this semester so, I, ah..." With a slight rattle from his teeth, he closes his mouth with a bit of a snap. Not really wanting to admit that this whole vacation is unauthorized.

"Well, aren't you the most poor bastard this side of the ocean. You have my sympathy and I think you'll have all our sympathy, though, well, that's really for Old Man Gorou to decide... Then again, well, let's just get to Storm's Eye as quickly as possible, alright? Never know if those Shinobi bastards realized that yer gone or where ya are." Rou says and then, his cousin begins to form hand seals, invoking a Jutsu.

With a puff of smoke and a feeling of being slammed up to the sky before slammed onto the ground, only quick reflexes kept him from falling face first into the ground. The smoke clears and they're near an edge of a clearing with a simple stone path leading to what appears to be a giant mansion. "Welcome to Storm's Eye Compound, one of the last bastions for the Uzumaki in the world!" Rou chimes in, far too cheerfully in his opinion given what they just went through to get here.

"Well, come on, best hurry this up!" Rou says and then flat out runs towards the mansion and it takes him a few seconds to realize he best do the same, he makes sure to activate his Chakra Sprint, he manages to keep within two feet of Rou, yet the other manages to keep that much ahead of him, which causes him to wonder if something more is at work then just the both of them using Chakra.

A Quick Scan shows that Rou Uzumaki is level 72 and, of course, his Race being V'rana. He's tempted to do an Observation on Rou only, as the building gets closer, he decides to use it on Storm's Eye. The mansion is called Storm's Eye Compound, it's the main house to the Uzumaki Clan living on Gargar Valley, built twenty years after Gargar Valley finished being terraformed by the Mountain Singers by eighteen Uzumaki Clan members looking to settle down, and the current population of inhabiting the Compound is thirty-seven thousand, two hundred and fifteen.

"How many people live here?" He asks Rou. "A lot, these days, more Uzumaki showing up in recent years, all looking for a safe place. Of course, some of the Shinobi try to plant their spies among the returning Uzumaki, but, well, they just don't have the Blood nor were they Adopted." Then Rou adds, "I think you maybe the fourteenth to show this month, likely only the eighth to be of the Blood though."

"The Compound's undergone a lot of renovations since Hidden Whirlpool was destroyed. Plus, well, let's just say that Seals are pretty much an Uzumaki's Family Technique and we've pioneered into realms concerning Seals that most Chakra users would either sell their bodies for or wish that our Clan died with Hidden Whirlpool, never mind what the Hidden Villages wouldn't give or do to get even a hint of some examples of what we can do with Seals." Rou explains.

Rou touches the door before opening it, gesturing him forward. He enters and he gets his first peek of the interior. "As Gargar Valley was terraformed by Chakra Users, we've never forced those who learn into a single career like those on the on the mainland do, which lead to the Shinobi way of like and then to the Hidden Village system for the Shinobi that the Senji and Uchiha ended up creating by just trying to settle down and have a place to call their own." His cousin explains, leading him down a hallway, he can feel something affecting him. What he finds from a check on himself is that the Security Seals were keeping Rou and him isolated, he didn't know enough of Seals to know by what means just that they were.

"Huh, when you put it like that, it explains a great deal of what I've read from the Library. I never got why the Shinobi Clans began to settle in one spot or why they started to group together with Clans they haven't married with, it does sound risky given that by doing so, their enemies will know where they are and attack accordingly." He reflects. All the books made it sound like the two Clans just saw an advantage of bettering their lot in life by creating a settlement where people could visit to hire Shinobi, by making themselves more assailable, they could under cut the roaming Shinobi Clans.

"History is written by people and people do tend to have an agenda, it works in the Hidden Leaf's agenda to make it sound like the Senji and Uchiha became the best of buds, that their Blood Feud came to an end upon the founding of the village." Rou snorts. "Yea, right, like people will forgive and forget that easy, particularly given that on both sides, they still recall how so and so was killed by so and so's relative."

"A minority of Senji left with the Uzumaki to create Hidden Whirlpool, not feeling comfortable or safe living in the same area as the Uchiha or the other Shinobi Clans who joined in. The minority of Uzumaki who remained got huffy when they couldn't do anything concerning the Hyuuga Clan's Branch Seal, so they left for either Hidden Whirlpool, the area where the Crystal Shrines settled, or here, Raging Winds." He pretty much just accepted the Quest that popped up concerning him investigating the Hyuuga Clan's Branch Seal as Rou continues on, "Storm's Eye Compound isn't meant to teach Uzumaki how to fight, its more into research and up keeping the various Seals that protect Gargar Valley. Pursue of Chakra usage is more for improving the way of life then ending it."

"So, any who wanted to learn to fight went to Hidden Whirlpool while those seeking general knowledge of Chakra's application came here." He summarizes and Rou makes an approving sound. "How about those who went to Tea Country?"

"The pursue of religion." Rou replies and he doesn't know what to make of that, then again, nobody really saw fit to teach him much of anything when it came to useful skills like Cooking or Laundry, it had been trial and error, so, yea, there's likely a ton of stuff he's fairly ignorant about. What people take as commonly known, wasn't with him.

"You know, your the first Ryou'ng Uzumaki I've ever met and you know, it's kind of hard to think of why that is, given that Raging Winds is a port city." Rou muses as they come before a large door that seems to be one that is pushed up to open and pulled down to close. Rou's hand glows before he touches the door. "You'd think you won't be the first, then again, most Ryou'ng are kind of, stand offish. Then again, they do have their own towns and villages, if you want to call them that, bellow the water's surface. Few ever try to live their lives outside of the water."

Yea, he knows that, he read the information about each of the other four playable races when the world changed. He had read each, which, given his lack of reading skills back then, is rather surprising. Or maybe not, given that it might not have mattered if he were literate or not, after all, he could read the names hovering over people's heads just fine or when he used Observation for the first time. Even reading the numbers, so, maybe there's more going on concerning the mental effects then he expected or that he never thought to question before?

The door rises as Rou moves his hand from the door. "This here is an elevator. It'll take use straight to the business offices of the Clan. It's faster then stairs, plus, we won't do so much walking." His cousin cheerfully explains. "You first."

He enters and taking in the elevator, it kind of seems like a room only there's buttons with numbers. Rou enters and pulls down the door before pressing one of the higher number buttons. There's a bit of a whine before he feels himself rising up into the air or the room he's in rising up and taking him with it.

"So... why a Shinobi?" Rou asks after a few seconds. "Well, to be honest? I want the respect and admiration that being Hokage would get me. That's been my Goal since I was six or five?" Yea, it sounds rather selfish and childish, yet, well, he's a kid, right? Not that he feels like he's a kid, not like this classmates clearly were, they just don't seem to have the same worries as him, after all, even if he's recently orphaned, he doubts that Sasuke Uchiha has to worry about people invading his apartment, taking or destroying anything that is of value, wonder why it seems that everyone in the village glares at them or whispers about them being demon spawn...

"The Third, it's still the Third, right?" He nods and Rou continues, "So the Third, he's never mentioned anything about duties or arranged for any special training?"

"No, then again, he's kind of busy. When I use to visit, well, there's always papers on his desk." Naruto mentions as he rubs his throat. "I think he may have given me a lesson or three on how to read and write, mentioned that he'd find someone to teach me. Never happened and I never brought it up as I wanted lessons on how to cause explosions? Nobody really cared if I could read when I went to that citizen school, then again, I didn't like sitting around when I could be doing things , like climbing monkey bars or playing Shinobi."

If not for the world changing, Naruto's fairly sure he'd still feel that way and getting lectured about stuff just wasn't the learning experience he likes. The game system pretty much labels him a tactile learner, which he looked up in the Library to learn that he pretty much learns by doing it physically then by listen or by people demonstrating. Something about the world just seems to have a calming effect on him, giving him a chance to stop and think instead of this need to go and do, that he's going to burst at the seams if he just sits still for more then two minutes.

"Yea, we are born with a lot of Chakra and we're not handled right, we can find it hard to sit still for minutes at a time. As a result, we have trouble keeping our thoughts on any one subject." Rou states the elevator comes to a stop. "You might have had it worst then any of us, though. It's kind of surprising that you are as calm as you are, given it sounds like nobody gave you any special attention."

Rou opens the door and he tries to think of how to answer that. "Something just, helped me calm down the day the Academy begun. I can't explain it, its like my whole view of the world changed and then, I chose to change along with it." Naruto states as truthfully as he could, after all, he doubted Rou would believe him if he told the older, more experience person that the world has been re-written and he's not sure if Gargar Valley even existed before that re-write.

"Well, there's no way to know for sure, but, well, chances are, it could have been an Uzumaki Seal some clansman set to check to see if an Uzumaki is lacking the usual training. Could have set of a Seal that activated some kind of time alteration Genjutsu meant to teach the luckless kid ways to channel themselves." Rou muses sighing, adding, "Of course, we'll never know for sure, but it's fun to guess the cause or how one would set something like that up!"

Then Rou gestures with his free arm, "Well, go on, take a look. What do you think? Pretty awesome, right?"

He looks out of the door and realizes that yea, it's not just an amazing sight, but something that he can smell, now that he's been made aware of it. He grew up in Hidden Leaf, so, forests weren't that anything special yet, from scent alone, he knows there's more to it.

As he steps forward, Rou explains, "The First Hokage gifted Hidden Whirlpool some customized plants ranging from tea plants and spice herbs to fruit trees and modified sakura trees whom petals aren't just pink but a wide range of colors, depending on the season or what kind of elemental Chakra the tree was infused with for a year."

"Of course, when Hidden Whirlpool fell, clippings and seeds of the various plants arrived here. We created this green house floor about ten years ago." He hears the door close behind him.

"The office is this way." Rou finally says after letting him take in the sights and smells for a few minutes. Looking in his cousin's direction, he follows behind the V'rana, curious to see how they created this office in this particular setting.

"So, what Gorou Uzumaki like?" He asks as they approach a hedge wall, the leaves seem black in color and there's a fairly nice smell that's getting stronger the closer they get. "It is Gorou, right?"

"Yea, it is and, well, you'll see for yourself!" Rou says before adding, "I'm named after him, then again, so was my dad. It was a bet between my Great Granddad and Great Granduncle. The bet finished after Gramps was born, so, unlike dad and myself, he wasn't named after the Old Man."

They moved around the hedge and he notices that the leaves are more navy blue once you get a better look at them. There's an opening and Rou motions for him to stay here. He watches as Rou slings his case off his back and then takes the guitar out.

The look in Rou's eyes, its positively impish and Rou's beak parts just so. His cousin winks at him before he beings to play in a manner that he just knows is more then likely off key and as Rou rounds the corner into the opening, there's a loud, girlish voice ringing out, again, he's no expert on music and likely never will as long as he's a Ryou'ng as, well, there's something about the fact they have inner ears that make it hard for them to pick up the finer notes when it comes to singing or playing an instruments.

As he does his best to listen in but other then Rou's voice and playing, nothing really can be heard. He does notice something gets thrown as the hedge shakes then after a few seconds, there's an end to the guitar playing and to the girlish voice. Naruto bends down and picks up the case, closing it before slinging the strap upon his left shoulder, waiting.

Rou pokes his head out, it's kind of surprising how the hedge manages to muffle the sound coming from within the inner area of the hedge. "He's ready for ya!" Then Rou's head is gone.

He approaches the opening and finds a Shimii'Meo sitting behind the desk. Deep dark red leopard markings plus spots upon a tawny brown coat sporting hints of white and gray in the same red colored mane. Gray blue eyes met his for a second before the elder's eyes take in his face, spines and horns, and his dress, eyes likely lingering on his dagger.

The name above their head is Gorou Uzumaki and he walks closer to the desk, Rou introduces him, "Naruto Uzumaki of Hidden Leaf, Naruto this is our Head Gorou Uzumaki, his earned the title is The Great Leopard."

"Hidden Leaf, huh? Hmm, could have gone a full decade without hearing that name again." Gorou muses. "So, Kushina's boy then? How odd, then again, Mito's own kids almost... Well, no matter. Heh, it'll be good news to spread that there's still a member of the main line among the living and who may take the Lordship of the Clan."

Gorou gets up and goes to a filing cabinet, pulling out a scroll, Gorou returns to the desk. He offers the case to Rou while Gorou does this and his cousin takes it, all the while, he couldn't help but wonder how it is that the two were related. After all, Rou's a V'rana and Gorou's a Shimii'Meo.

"Puzzled how we're related, huh?" He couldn't help but nod. "Clan secret, it's been around far longer then Gargar Valley, but needless to say, you'll learn it once your skills in Seals along with Biology are high enough." That sounds like a promise so he nods in acceptance while Gorou sits back down.

The scroll gets unrolled and Gorou stretches out his hand with the palm up, he moves his right hand, Gorou humps at the sight of his Summoning Seal but gently holds his hand. Pushing the scroll right under, Gorou channels Chakra into his index claw of his other hand and slices into his palm of his right hand.

The slice is already healing but Gorou's one claw seems to be covered in blood. He with draws his hand once Gorou's grip is gone. He watches as the blood ripples off and then, once the claw is at the center of a plain circle, the blood, all of it, touches the paper. Within half a second, there's too much light and it takes him a few minutes for his vision to clear.

"Ah yes, I forgot how light sensitive Ryou'ng eyes can be." While true, it's not the whole story there, after all, Ryou'ng tend to feel the current when underwater or trusting their other senses to guide them when they are below the surface of the water. Shimii'Meo's eyes are the best when it comes to night vision, it's more of a difference that even in low light, a Ryou'ng never loses their ability to see in color that makes their eyes unique out of the three that have a slight advantage with vision at night with the V'rana seeing as good as human when it comes to low light vision.

Really, it's more of the fact that their was a number of bright colors that flashed before his eyes then the flash itself. Blue had been the easiest to pick out with red and green being equal in frequency with the final color being a plain, cloud white.

Once he's regained his vision, he can see a pair of names connected to his and then from one it then names another set of names and so on. His father's name is Minato Namikaze, which means his father had been the Fourth Hokage, the infamous Yellow Flash. His mother's name is confirmed to being Kushina Uzumaki.

"So... that confirms that,." Rou says although it takes his cousin a few seconds to read the mood. "Ah, something wrong?"

"My father..." He didn't know how to react as it seems that his mind is blanking as he tries to wrap his mind around the fact that, everything just went sideways so sudden that he's fairly sure he's trying to get back onto his feet. Everything he's gone through and all the little comments that people have made about him, his very treatment...

"Rou... go get Rin please. Our Young Lord needs something strong right now." Gorou says, somehow, already standing next to him, resting a comforting hands on his shoulders.

Something breaks and, well, what happens next for the rest of the day is all in a haze.

Naruto stares at the gates of Hidden Leaf, he's currently using the Alterself Jutsu, which turns out to be a Yang Chakra Jutsu. He feels so emotionally drained, he's gone through a lot. He broke in a way he hadn't thought he could and he's still on the mend, it's a slow process.

Yea, he spent the rest of his vacation struggling with his revelation concerning his father's position, his mother's having been the previous container for a certain Chakra Entity, about Mito's own position containing the same Entity, that he's in possession of only the Yang half of said Chakra Being, and, of course, learning strictly Chakra Theory and Clan History.

Over his heart is a special Seal that allows him to visit Storm's Eye Compound. He has a Seal to hide in a secure location, its tempting to set the Seal up at the bottom of a lake. There's no rush in planting the Seal, he's got at least three coming semesters to deal with before he's got a few months off from attending the Academy.

Trailing behind a group of people walking through the Gates of Hidden Leaf, he gets a Quest Completion, time slows as if he's accessing his Character Overview. His level increases from the 32 to 40, all the experience he's earned from various Quests didn't go to his experience bar but to this Quest and any rewards got added to this one as well.

There's a few pop ups about his two new skills, Create ID and Escape ID along with him getting updates to his Combat Skills and some of his Chakra Skills. They also change, the levels altering along with descriptions. A number of Shinobi Skills now sport stars next to them along with a gold coloring to them while the other Combat Skills that aren't in line with the Shinobi Profession are simply copper while the rest of his Skills continue to be a white.

His temporary Profession is gone and his new Profession is Student. Tapping it, it just says that he'll learn skills faster while in the presence of an Instructor or Mentor while getting double bonus on buffs while attending school or using school facilities.

For titles now, there's Hidden Leaf Academy Student, Yang Jinchuriki, Heir of Uzumaki Clan, and various Expert Craftsman titles for various Craft Skills. He also finds he can now equip up to three titles of his choice, the only one he can't switch out is Yang Jinchuriki as it's permanently active. He taps the Student title and it mostly gives him a free pass to various practice fields and the use of the Academy's facilities.

His level is now split it seems, he's now got a Combat Level and then General Level, his General Level is 40 while his Combat Level is now at 15. He taps to learn that due to his diversifying of skills, he's got two Level traces to keep an eye on. There's a huge amount of information for him to read about the new changes concerning Adventuring Skills versus Labour Skills, about Professions in general.

He makes a mental book mark to read that later tonight or tomorrow night, for now, he skims through the various pop ups, dismissing them until he gets back to the Quest page and reads what bonus side Quests he managed to complete. He got a good seventy percent of them, which is a fairly decent amount regardless. There's new options open to him, he's able to travel to and from Storm's Eye Compound without anyone the wiser once he sets up that Seal, which will enable him to take down former Hidden Whirlpool Shinobi for training.

Once he dismisses this, Naruto takes his time going through his new Character Overview sheet. He equips his Hidden Leaf Academy Student and then his Expert Herbalist with the third one being Expert Skinner. He's got something new to work on and then he takes his time with his stats, in the end, he invest them all into his Intelligence and Wisdom evenly.

He then goes to review the description of Creat ID means and finds that it allows him to Create Instant Dungeons. As he reads it, he wonders why the world would make such a broken skill. The Escape Instant Dungeon mostly gets him out of an Instant Dungeon, whether his own or someone else created in the World. Although, he does reread the previous skill and yea, according to it, it allows him to create an area for others to venture into at higher levels, otherwise all the Dungeons he creates are temporary. Plus any minions created in said Instant Dungeon are considered Chakra Constructs, which means any drops they leave are not permanent either, that once he Escapes from the ID, any Loot vanishes as well.

Ah, well, it'll be good practice regardless. His dreams of infinite resources dashed before he could formalize them. Plus, it looks like the ID he creates is one only he and those he invites into a Party could access so he doesn't have to worry about people crash his attempts at clearing out said ID.

He looks for the Party tab and finds it unavailable due to lack of Local Friends. "So, this is your way of telling me to make nice with others my age? Really, Game God? Have you not seen my attempts from before?! How the Hell am I going to manage that? When their parents are capable of influencing their opinions of me?!" He whispers angrily, just because time has slowed doesn't mean that others couldn't, maybe, pick up him talking to himself.

In the end, he does his best to calm down and just, dismiss the page. Time resumes its normal speed and he takes a moment to do a Quick Scan on the Chunin Gate Guards. Names and then Shinobi Level in gold being 49 and 52 respectively, there's a second Level shown in white and again their respective Levels are 16 and 11.

Time well spent. He muses but it does give him an idea of how much time one spent taking their Shinobi Skill seriously. Turning his gaze, he heads for his apartment, confident in the fact that according to his Quest Completion, nobody noticed that he was gone, then again,...

A new Quest pops up entitled Gossiping Geese, it pretty much has him investigating what happened in Hidden Leaf during his time outside of the village. He has until midnight tonight to complete it.

Humming thoughtfully, he changes direction to the market district to begin said investigation along with grabbing something for lunch, the clock is ticking and his curiosity has been aroused.

Shikamaru is suddenly wide awake. {Congratulations! You have been chosen to bear the title Gamer Shinobi! You are number 4 out of 8 Genin Chosen for this title!} As if sensing he's done reading it, it fades for another to pop up.

{Shikamaru Nara, Heir of the Nara Clan, Genin of Hidden Leaf, and Gamer Shinobi is now beginning the Gamer Tutorial Quest Line Begins! Quest: Character Overview Part 1!} "Character Overview?" He couldn't help but whisper that out loud in disbelief and something pops up along with another message. {Quest Completion! Quest: Character Overview Part 2 begins!}

Shikamaru just knows that this is going to be oh so troublesome .

To Readers: This little story outline had been saved in my DeviantART drafts for some months now. On August 28th, 2017, I came back to the idea as I had a new take on the Gamer story line. Plus, well, one could argue that the Naruto shown here is more a Proto-type Gamer, what with the massive amount of Yang Chakra within Naruto causing a minor glitch that allowed him to be aware of the re-write, like it's just how unbalance in terms of between Naruto's Yin and Kuruma's Yang that allowed the pair to slip the leash.

I gave up on trying to show the Gamer side of the story and decided to focus on the changes that could occur when a world is rewritten along with What If new Races had to be rewritten into that history? Yea, the various races introduced aren't new to the fantasy world, you got your feline people with both words Shimii and Meo meaning cat, canine people named in honour of a certain Werewolf, a re-skin of D&D Kenku with Vrana being a word for Raven or Crow, and then the Ryou'ng being hybrid of Skyrim's lizard people with hints of Dragon's natural attraction to Treasure woven in.

Then I had to explain how a pair of humans could give birth to a non-human and that lead to the Uzumaki Clan being able to use Seals to switch a person's Race. It's a one time use item for anyone save, of course, for those that are Gamers. We all know that Gamers are special snowflakes after all, and normal rules just don't apply.

If I do continue this, it'll be from Shikamaru's PoV, for at least a chapter.

Yea, this ended up being 32 pages long according to Micro Word, yea, this ended up so massive that DeviantART's submission could handle the amount I was writing. It kept cutting off at the part where Mimi and Naruto completed their surprise. So, this isn't going to be submitted to DeviantART, just to my account here on FanFiction.

Lives We Experience: Naruto

I don't own anything!

The journey to the Academy... it proved to be rather troublesome, the Tutorial Quests keep popping up, new Skills being created like Observation and Quick Scan, the latter being a sub-type of the first that got created once Observation reached level fifteen. Shikamaru does his best to keep a flat, bored look upon his face as his annoyance continues while doing his best to not do the Quests.

Which, are fairly difficult as it feels as though something is causing time to either reset or move very slowly. Upon waking, he had tried to dispel the pop ups, thinking them being caused by Genjutsu. All that did was add experience to his Dispel Genjutsu Skill.

So troublesome, it can't be right... Being lazy couldn't be that much work... Shikamaru pauses before a window of a shop that's a block from the Shinobi Academy to ponder the idea.

Yes, it's a drag getting pestered by his mom about his chores... Of thinking up ways to avoid her or just trying to tune her out or just doing them in the slowest manner he could think of in hopes she'll stop giving him said chores, which, never happens... And then there's the thinking up believable excuses... Shikamaru blinks as he calculates the amount of time he puts into avoiding or dragging his actions before getting around to his chores that, yea, being lazy was a lot of work. More work then just completing the chores as it would also get his mom to stop pestering him, giving him more time to nap up in his room.

{Do to your action, your Intelligence and Wisdom increased by one!} Then, he's congratulated for completing a Tutorial Quest entitled {Mental Review Part 3}. It's all about learning how to increase both of his Mental stats at the same time without spending stat points.

It seems that is the end of that Quest line as there's no new Quest generated. Then there's the timer that starts beeping and a glance shows he's got five minutes before he's late for the Genin Team Assignments. The failure of completing is... a lecture from Iruka during lunch with Choji eating his lunch.

"How troublesome." But he Channels Chakra into his legs and gets into a flat run. As he gets near the door, he finds a Ryou'ng standing near the door. Dull orange scales along with golden horns and spines.

His name is Naruto Uzumaki, full Health, and Chakra bar. The Ryou'ng's eyes flash in... well, his Empathy Skill is too low level to pick up the emotion, after all, Naruto's non-human so, how the other races express emotion is different then how humans do. He didn't have the time to invoke his Quick Scan or Observation.

His gaze goes to the door and he increases his Chakra, boosting his reactions to get him through the door before the timer gets to zero. He's three steps into the class room before he is congratulated for his success. Glancing behind him, his former Chunin Instructor, Iruka, is giving him a look before barking out orders for Sakura and Ino to stop their shouting, to sit down.

As he watches this exchange, there's a number pop ups concerning his breathless state along with Chakra usage. Once recovered from his run, he glances at the desks to find his best friend then walks up the stairs to take his seat next to Choji. As he's about to sit, it seems that Naruto's already at the back of the class room, not sitting at a desk, just leaning against one of the cabinets. Shikamaru invokes a Quick Scan. {Naruto Uzumaki, Shinobi Rank: [Genin] , Combat Level 74, General Level 112} Sitting down, he moves his back towards Naruto. He then looks towards Iruka-sensei, he invokes Quick Scan. {Iruka Umino, Shinobi Rank: [Chunin] , Combat Level 68, General Level 14}

while sporting the rank of Genin. Rewards are ?} The window disappears and Shikamaru turns to the front of the room, having realized that he was starting at the...

{Do to your actions , your Wisdom increased by one} Yea, he remembers Naruto now, rumours were that he dropped or flunked out during their second year of the Academy. It seems that he graduated early, before turning ten. Which doesn't explain why he's only a Genin though...

And now I have a Quest puzzling over that... How troublesome. Shikamaru thinks to himself, Iruka-sensei begins their Team Assignment by congratulating them for passing their finals. There's nothing new being spoken of, and so, he uses his Quick Scan on his classmates.

Annoyingly, it seems that he's the only one with a Combat Level 14, everyone else sports a 15 or 16. Sasuke Uchiha's Combat Level is 18, but then, his General Level is 9, which is the lowest as he himself sports a General Level of 11. The girls sport an average General Level of 13 or 14, Hinata Hyuuga's General Level is the highest at 16, then again, her Combat Level is 15.

The rest of the boys' own General Level seem to be 13. Kiba's another odd one, with his being 14, then again... A Quick Scan upon Akamaru only gives him Akamaru's name, no levels. {Akamaru. Level Locked! Observation of Chakra Animals will Unlock once Assigned a Jonin Instructor and in a Genin Practice Field}

Glancing out the window, he couldn't help but think of what a drag. It seems that there's still stuff that needs to be unlocked even though he's a Genin. Soon enough, Teams are being called. He can't help but note that Naruto Uzumaki is on Team Seven along with Sasuke Uchiha and Sakura Haruno, their Jonin Instructor is Kakashi Hatake.

It's clear that Sakura is confuse concerning their third team mate as she is looking around with a frown. "Who's their third?" Choji asks him in a whisper.

"The Ryou'ng behind us." He answers with a sigh after giving it a thought over whether he should answer it or not as he only pays the Team listing with half an ear. "There's a what behind us?"

He hears Choji turn his head, a soft oh before Choji returns to munching on his chips. "He seems..." His friend begins and he sighs.

"Early graduate." He states and Choji hums. "Wake me up for lunch." With that, he does his best to fall asleep with his head upon his arms. He heard his team assignment, now it's a matter of a short lecture followed by lunch.

After lunch, they'll be meeting their Jonin Instructor and likely the beginning of Team Bonding.

Shikamaru is doing something he normally would put off, something that would likely be the source of so much future pestering but, well, after some Observations to compare his stats during lunch, it seems that his physical conditioning is... well, the four Academy Students he decided to Observe prove that they not only have larger Chakra reserves but Dexterity, Strength, and Stamina. The only stat that he's tops in is Intelligence.

The rest of his stats, well, his Charisma is his second highest and it's only at sixteen. Just three points higher then his next highest stat, which is his Wisdom. His lowest stat? Stamina at ten points.

He... he finds himself very unsatisfied with the fact that through his laziness, he's that physically weak. That he's the weakest link of his new Team as even Ino's stamina is over fifteen point never mind her Dexterity or Strength. Her highest is Charisma followed by her Wisdom.

So... he's got a number of Daily Quests line up for the rest of the night that promise to increase his physical stats. Which, it turns out, come to him viva his chores, so yea, his mom's going to be very confused at his new attitude and likely assume that he's sick, yet, it's the easiest way to increase said stats along with getting money and experience, it's also likely that some of his Skills will be leveling up.

So, he's off to groom a number of his clan's Deer and then clean out the birthing stalls, something that hasn't been done since January of last year. There's bonus rewards for both Quests, Deer Fur as a Crafting Item and finding lost items that his fellow Nara left behind in the stable and thought it too troublesome to look for them.

"What are you doing here?" Riko Nara asks. "Didn't you get your Team Assignment today?"

"Ate supper with my Team. Didn't want to go home just yet so came out here." He states with a shrug and Riko's look of puzzlement then turns to understanding as she draws her own conclusions.

{Do to your actions, your Deceit leveled up!} It fades away as Riko waves him off, saying, "Just be sure to head home before midnight. Wouldn't want your mom worrying about you getting kidnapped."

He hums and Riko continues on her way to the storage house to return a shovel. He watches her for a few seconds before heading for the stables looking for a wire brush to use on the deer. He needs to groom at least five but he'll get more experience for every two above that number.

Suddenly, his completes a Tutorial Quest as his grabbing one of the wire brushes goes into his Inventory. Another Quest pops up concerning him learning to access his Inventory and taking out said brush. "So troublesome." He sighs and it takes him a second to bring up his Inventory.

He taps the brush and then exits out of the Inventory only to see that, nope, he hadn't taken the brush out. With a sigh, he opens his Inventory and tapping it twice, he Equips the brush. Thus completing the Quest and he heads out to the meadow to begin looking for some deer to groom.

Shikamaru couldn't help it, his left eyebrow is twitching. He's been at this for an hour and he's yet to get close to one of the Nara Deer. Yes, that is what they are called and yes, they count as Chakra Animals. So they have a Level but he can't see what it is, which would make this so much easier as he'd know what he's dealing with.

Although, his Dexterity and Stamina have gone up as he's used Chakra to improve his speed plus he only waited a minute before continuing with the pursue, which is how his Stamina increased. For his Skills, his Chakra Control, Running, and Sprinting have leveled up five times and from what he can see, they're about to level up for a sixth time this pass hour, although he may need to stop to recover his Chakra as his reserves are not regenerating as quickly as he would like.

"You know, you could just use your Clan's Shadow Bind Jutsu on them." Startled, he glances around until he spies a blond his age leaning against a fence post. "I mean, I've been here for the past fifteen minutes and, well, this is just sad."

"And you are?" He asks in annoyance, straightening his pose. There's no name floating above the blond's head. Health bar is full and he didn't see a Chakra bar, so, he may not have ever attended the Shinobi Academy.

The blond merely gives him a bemused look, which drew attention to the whisker marks upon the cheeks. "Been called plenty of names growing up. Some earned, some not."

"But, here." The blond takes out his passport and flings it at him, he catches it and opens it. The name in the passport is Akeno, no last name. He uses Observation to learn that yip, it's an official Passport that Hidden Leaf issued two years ago. Looking up at the blond, Akeno is now hovering above the blond's head but no name.

He uses Quick Scan. {Akeno, General Level 112} No Combat Level listed, which isn't that surprising as it seems that only Shinobi have those. "And why are you here?" He asks, walking over, which causes his aches to act up and blisters to remind him that they exist.

Akeno takes back his Passport, a strange little smirk on his face as he pockets it. "I'm here for my order of Deer Fur. Here's the ticket." The blond offers a slip of paper that he uses Observation on and yip, it's genuine. "Nara Deer shed some of the best quality Deer Fur, which I make use of for fur linings for sleeping bags and fur lined hooded vests."

After a few seconds, Shikamaru sighs and runs a hand over his face. He's tired and irritated, that's likely why he's feeling so paranoid right now. Then again...

"So, Tailor?" He asks and Akeno adds, "Blacksmith, Jeweller, Herbalist, Leather Worker, Skinner, Tanner, Alchemist, Weaver, Licensed Seal Crafter, Professional Chief... Well, the Title [Artisan Craftsman] pretty much works at this point to describe what I can do, like if someone wants to know if it can be made, I'm the guy they ask, for a minor fee of course."

That's... insane, to be honest and yet, a pop up saying his Detect Truth went up two levels which means that, Akeno's a very accomplished Craftsman and that he's not all bark. His General Level pretty much backs that up. From what he's seen just going through Hidden Leaf's Market along with browsing a few Shinobi Supply Stores, most Craftsmen's General Level is, on average, 30 with some of the older Craftsmen sporting a higher number, 50.

Then again, they all focused on a single Crafting Skill while Akeno here, it sounds like he hasn't stopped at learning a single Craft Skill. Wait a minute... "Licensed Seal Crafter?"

"Yea, it's been a few years since Hidden Leaf had one in residence. The last one was an Uzumaki, a Renji Uzumaki. Moved out of Hidden Leaf back when the Hidden Whirlpool refugees were driven off by Citizens of Hidden Leaf." This time, his Detect Truth increased by three levels, not that it's a comforting feeling, finding out there was a Hidden Whirlpool let alone that their refugees were driven off upon arrival to Hidden Leaf.

Or that there is an official Clan of Uzumaki. Wait a minute, wasn't the First's Wife of the Uzumaki clan? His Intelligence and Wisdom increase upon remembering that. "What do you do that an Official Supplier Seal Maker couldn't?"

"Anything I am want to create while charging what I please, able to legally own any books on Seal Theory, and am legally allowed to own whatever Seal Supplies I want." Akeno explains. "Want a tent that keeps the heat in while in Land of Snow? Sure, can do, what that same tent to be a touch cooler while traveling in Wind Country, can do, just adds a bit more to the amount, you know? Air Cleansing Seal on top of that, again, you have the money to match what I charge, I can do it."

"You don't seem to have your Chakra Unlocked." He points out and Akeno rolls his eyes. "Some of the first Seals I made charged themselves viva the free Chakra that's part of any environment." True, as, yet again, his Detect Truth goes up another level.

Just talking with this guy, how high is his Charisma? He wonders to himself, after all, why would his Detect Truth keep going up if Akeno's Deceit Skill wasn't stupidly high? His Wisdom increases by three points, which he does his best to keep his eyes from widening, after all, that's something he hasn't seen before, typically, he only increases one of his stats by one.

Akeno turns to look towards the stables, saying, "Well, I best get on to my business and leave you to yours. Perhaps you'll be looking to employ my services in the coming months, right? After all, you never know what the future has in store, eh?"

He watches Akeno head for the stables and it's only when his father steps into view does he realize that Akeno seemed to have noticed his father's approach. Yet again, his Wisdom increases and he finds himself wishing the night would just end, he's tired and it seems that his physical stats are so bad that he couldn't complete simple Daily Quests.

As he walks home, as he mentally chews on the conversation, he realizes that Akeno's right, the very first thing he said to him, it was so simple that, he's ashamed it didn't dawn on him in the first place. "Why didn't I think to use that on the deer?" Thinking back, yea, it would have saved him not just time but also Chakra to just use Shadow Bind Jutsu on the Nara Deer.

It's at this moment that he realizes that the title Wise Fool could very well apply to him. Calling up his Character Overview, he taps his Wisdom to get a description of what it does. It can be summarized as intuition, which governs the whole this feels wrong or I'm onto something feeling. Tapping Intelligence, it pretty much reads as learning skills quickly, as in able to learn new Skills quickly or learn from the past at a faster rate.

It seems that he'll be investing heavily in Wisdom along with Stamina. After all, Wisdom sounds like instinctively making use of known Skills in an unknowing fashion while Intelligence is all about picking up new Skills along with seeing the errors of the past to learn from it. Another pop up shows that he increased his two mental yet again.

Well, it looks like he's going to be leveling up his Meditate Skill a great deal in the future. Although, as he looks down at his flaws, he is rather surprise to note that there seems to be a count of a kind. It seems that if he can not give into this flaw for twenty-nine days, it'll downgrade from always to occasionally. Given it's marked as a character trait, it'll take a whole year to get rid of it in total, as in, it's one of his core traits and thus, it's as much a part of who he is as his love of strategy games.

He rubs his face, Tora's claws are rather sharp and the demon feline being a fierce foe when backed into a wall. While he managed to keep his hold, it had been Ino, who tried to calm the demon in the shape of a cat that ended up allowing Tora to resume the chase. While she did apologize, she did point out if he had been quick enough, he could have used Shadow Bind Jutsu on the fleeing cat as they were in an alley, filled with shadows.

His irritation is pretty much aimed at himself at the fact that, upon reflection, she's right. Yet again, he's reminded that just because he has the higher IQ doesn't mean he's without blind spots in his thinking. Once more, he's lazy nature being rubbed into his face and it's going to take time to overcome his flaw.

If he's got nothing to do, he finds himself either laying down to stare up at the clouds floating pass or falling asleep wherever he's sitting. It's such an engrained habit that his new awareness of the world doesn't alert him when he's been affected by said flaw. He's got a Quest concerning how he plans to counter his laziness.

Shikamaru pauses as he notices Team Seven painting someone's fence with white paint. The Uchiha Heir is pretty much glaring at his Ryou'ng team mate. Naruto seems to be rather bored while ignoring Sasuke's glare while Sakura seems to be doing her best to keep her attention on the fence and upon using her brush.

It takes him a few seconds to spy their Jonin Instructor, one Kakashi Hatake. Using Quick Scan, he learns that his Combat Level is 140 with a General Level of 14. He does a Quick Scan on Naruto to find that, his Combat Level and General have increased in level, 75 and 113.

Given it's only been a week, it means that Naruto was either very close to leaving up or something happened that gave him a ton of experience. His mind else where, he feels someone's eyes on him and blinks to find Kakashi and Naruto gazing at him. Given how covered the Jonin's face is, he finds himself very unsure of the look upon the older man's face.

Switching to Naruto's face, there's a sense of familiar yet something's just not lining up. There's emotion shining in the eyes and there's a slight something, it's subtle but there all the same. Still, he's fairly sure that, no matter how guarded, he'd feel more comfortable trying to read the Jonin's face for emotion then Naruto's simply due to the fact that, everyone he's knows, had known, or seeing throughout his life had been human.

It's what he's familiar with, comfortable with even. It's what makes the other races stand out to him whenever he's seen them in the market or in a crowd. They shine like unique points of abnormity among what's normal. Maybe if I grew up seeing more of them, I'd be more accustom to them? That they'd just be more like people?

He's rewarded with an increase to his Intelligence and Wisdom. Then he senses hostile intent and glances at the source, finding the Uchiha Heir scowling in his direction, it's easy for him to detect the other's negative intent. It seems his offense is managing to draw Naruto's attention while Sasuke couldn't draw said attention to himself.

How troublesome. "Hey, Shikamaru! Where's Ino-pig?" Sakura asks, addressing him while glancing around with a scowl. It clear the pink haired Genin suspects that Ino's here to visit the Uchiha Heir.

"What a drag, any of you seen a cat like this?" He holds up the photo of Tora and for the first time, Naruto speaks, his tone is clearly bemused, "Oh, you got the Demon Cat so soon? Well, want some advice?"

He blinks as he looks back at the Ryou'ng, trying to sense if he's being serious. "How troublesome. Well, if its free..." His Sense Motive goes up three levels, which is stupidly fast and yet, perhaps it might have something to do with Naruto's much higher level?

As Sasuke huffs in annoyance, he gets a pop up informing him that yet again, his Wisdom increased. "Its none of our concern, it's not our Quest to find that damn cat." Sasuke states in a flat tone and, it takes Shikamaru a second to realize the wording.

He uses Observation on Sasuke and this time, brings up his own Character Overview, which finally causes him to complete one of his three remaining Tutorial Quests. There, in the Titles is Shinobi Gamer and he one of his two last Tutorial Quests gets an update now that he's found one of the other eight Shinobi Gamers.

With a sigh, he moves down to Sasuke's Skills and yea, the same Shinobi marked Skills are there. It doesn't surprise him that Sasuke's Shinobi Skills are higher leveled then his own. There's a few other Combat Skills that, again, he shares with Sasuke and there are a few that are merely question marks. Then, General Skills, well, that's where things got interesting as it seems that Sasuke's list of General Skills is far shorter then his own but those that he has are decent enough.

Moving back to the stats, he compares their stats. Surprise, surprise, Sasuke's Charisma is his lowest stat with the second lowest being Intelligence, which is kind of odd. Then again, he checks to see what flaws the Uchiha has and it seems that the Uchiha is suffering from tunnel vision, survivor's guilt, and superiority complex.

He feels a bit of pity for his fellow Genin but mostly irritation at the fact that Sasuke must be aware of his failing yet, isn't putting any effort into overcoming them. It's then that he notices, looking around, that time seems to have slowed around him, it hasn't stopped. Which means that...

Dismissing the two, he notices time resuming. "Troublesome." He states as Sasuke turns his back towards him, focusing on the Quest that's also their mission.

"So, my advice? Learn a Medical Jutsu to heal those claw marks. Use it often enough and you'll be able to use it when you need it the most. Practice makes perfect after all." Naruto's advice. "Cause that mission? Variations of it have been around since the Second Hokage reigned, so it's not going away any time soon."

His Quest to find Tora received an update. "Fine, whatever. Thanks, I guess." With that, he continues on looking, not really acknowledging Sakura's farewell.

A while later, he swings by the Hospital and manages to find a Jutsu for healing cuts. There's an opinion of Learning the Jutsu vs Reading the Scroll to Learn the Jutsu. After a few seconds, he taps to learn that yes, with his high Intelligence he could learn the Jutsu viva reading it from the scroll.

He then taps the other option to learn that it destroys the scroll but he does learn the Jutsu. Seeing as he's just looking to learn the Jutsu without anyone being aware, he clicks the option of Reading the Scroll. He begins reading the Scroll, there's a lot to go through but, well, by the third read through, a pop up informing him that he has learnt the Jutsu shows up and it's at level five already.

It takes him a few seconds to realize that by choosing to read the scrolls instructions, he is consciously learning the Jutsu instead of it becoming intuitive. Which means that if he's got the Intelligence to read and understand what he's reading, he'll get the Skill or Jutsu and his time rewarded with it being at a higher level.

This awards him a pop up that vanishes after he light skim, he rolls up the scroll and puts it back where he found it. Only one person questions why he's in the hallway and accepts his lie of looking for Tora, it seems that the demon in cat shape is infamous for hiding in infrequently used places.

With this lead, he heads to grab Choji to check out the warehouse area once he made use of his new Jutsu, healing the claw scratches on his face plus hands and arms. Choji trusts his thought, pretty much trusting him. It takes him a moment to realize he relaxed a bit in the presence of his best friend.

He smiles a bit, despite himself. While it's a bit of a drag having Ino on the same team, it's nice that Choji and himself weren't split up when it came to Team Assignments. Though, reflecting, it's pretty clear that due to his dad's team, the Third Hokage thought they could function as well as their respective fathers' team. Maybe trying to catch the 'magic' of said older team, which, is kind of shallow reason, upon reflection.

After all, they were very different people compared to their fathers along with, you know, Ino being a young woman. Women think differently and have different body conditioning. He does read the pop ups as they appear once they arrive at the warehouse.

"So... what makes you think that Tora would be here?" Choji asks as they both scan different parts of the warehouse district. "I was at the Hospital and as I was leaving, someone mentioned that Tora prefers infrequently used areas. First thought to pop into my mind was the warehouse district."

As they are walking pass a warehouse, his final Tutorial Quest gets tripped. {Congratulations completing Quest: Team Work Part 1. Now that you have found a Natural Dungeon, Quest: Team Work Part 2 is now available! Do you wish to form a Party? Y/N}

Shikamaru's eyes widen and he turns to look at Choji only to find Choji still in color along with... his own pop up? Using Observation and comparing his friend's own with his, he once more activates that one Quest concerning finding another Gamer Shinobi. His best friend looks his way and there's a slight widening of the eyes, showing that Choji's surprised.

"Gamer, too, huh?" Choji asks and he sighs, thinking about this. "I wanted to tell you but, well, you've been distracted lately and, well, so have I, I guess." Choji mutters after a minute of silence between them.

"Sasuke Uchiha is also a Gamer. I encountered Team Seven and he used the term Quest instead of Mission. Did you know you can compare another's Character Overview with your own? It's how I discovered him being one." He informs his friend.

"Huh, well, did you check Sakura? Maybe we should check Ino too, after all, we did graduate at the same time." Choji muses and once more, he feels foolish. He could have also checked Naruto's own earlier but got side tracked with Sasuke and about the sound advice concerning learning a Medic Jutsu.

"Team Eight as well." He muses with a sigh. "What a drag this is..."

"Should we form a Party then?" Choji asks after a few seconds. Looking pass the window, which goes transparent, he uses Observation on the warehouse. It's suggested Combat Level is 20 and recommends at least three member Party.

He brings up his Quest List and checks to see if there's any changes to their Tora Quest. "We'll come back with Ino. I'll also work on leveling up my Mending Jutsu, its currently at level 5. I learnt it from reading a Jutsu Scroll at the Hospital."

A pop up appears as a thought comes to him concerning his Clan's medical knowledge. Yea, he's got Nara Herbal Knowledge and it got him to wonder if his Clan has any particular Medical Jutsu he could learn. He taps the N on the Quest and time returns to its usual pace.

"Let's continue on." Then says, "Also, tonight, take your time to prepare as we'll do the Dungeon tomorrow. We'll speak with Ino, if she's like us then she shouldn't be that hard to convince to join us."

| + + + + + : - - - - - : + + + + + |

"Maybe we should have tried harder to talk Sasuke into coming with us..." Ino mutters as they took a break from the wave of cat sized rodents that are called Teenage Black Snarling Rats, their respective Level 12 seems to be the average level with a few Runts being a slightly higher Level although smaller, these seems to have a silver tint to their respective black coats. Their pelts are all Uncommon Quality, which means they are worth more then the rest.

It also means that they've all learnt Butchering and Skinning Skills from looting the dead Chakra Mutant Rodents. The quality of meat they've been getting had been poor or diseased. They've tossed the various meat around, distracting some of the waves from attacking them. The pelts they've been getting have been poor, then again, the two skills are still low level which means that they may get better meat and pelts from them being leveling up the skills.

Sakura sighs, piping in, "Unless it involves Naruto, count him out." She adds, "Can't say I blame him, I mean, have you seen Naruto's Levels? How is he a Shinobi with a General Level over a hundred!"

"Wait, what? Isn't he twelve years old, too?" Ino asks and Sakura sighs, answering, "He graduated early, when he was nine. Don't you recall an orange scaled Ryou'ng back in first year? And second?"

"Wait, that's this Naruto? But... how? I mean, wouldn't he be bragging about graduating that early?" Ino wonders.

"Would anyone believe him if he had?" Choji wonders and the two girls glance towards Choji. "I mean, weren't the Instructors overly harsh with him? I kind of recall him getting chewed out once for using his tail in a spar once..."

The news of Sasuke's fixation upon Naruto wasn't that surprising, given the Uchiha Heir's flaws. There's no question, Ryou'ng or not, the Uzumaki is the powerhouse of their generation. Then again, with the racism he's facing from the village as a whole, perhaps it shouldn't be that surprising that Naruto had to be? That he had to be more then just good but shine so brightly that they couldn't dismiss him or his skills?

"There's an V'rana Genin, did you know that? I didn't. I didn't even know we had Shimii'Meo among our Hunter Division." Shikamaru muses. "The V'rana's been a Genin for decades, you know? None of the current Shimii'Meo will likely ever advance into Jonin."

"Naruto... he's the first Ryou'ng to become a Shinobi... at all. Not even Hidden Mist has ever had any among their ranks and they are said to specialize in Water Jutsu." He continues. "Hidden Cloud has maybe a dozen Lu'Pine among their Hunter Division while Hidden Stone pretty much has a Ban on non-humans from even using Chakra within their village, even in self-defence."

He spent the night asking his dad about non-humans as Shinobi simply to know if he'd be facing any in the future. Turns out, they are very much a minority, which kind of made him realize just how strange Naruto was. "What about Hidden Sand?" Sakura asks.

"A few V'rana puppet masters while, again, Shimii'Meo and Lu'Pine tend towards Hunters. If there's any Ryou'ng living in Wind Country, it'll be along the coat." Is his reply. Where the water is, well, that's obvious, given that Ryou'ng are known for their fondness of water, it likely has to due with their ability to hold their breaths for long periods of time, maybe even learning a Jutsu that allows for them to breath underwater.

"Well, looks like we've got incoming." Ino says with a sigh, they are getting to their feet. They ran out of Kunai and Shuriken in the first three waves, looted metal shards from said weapons. Now, now they simply have to grind their teeth and fight bare knuckled, their cloths weren't going to last much longer either.

They brought food and drinks but, again, they consumed all that within the first few waves. Sakura and himself, having the least Stamina and Chakra Reserves, well, they have leveled up their Chakra Control by at least seven levels and for all he knows, they might yet level it up an other seven by the time they are done.

Wave six, he uses a Quick Scan and it seems that their enemies were no longer Teenagers but Adult Black Snarling Rats, their Level is 17. They look like they have more meat on their respective bones although, it looks like they have quills on their heads, giving them a Mohawk look. He's not the only one tossing rat meat into the incoming swarm, which is fewer in number.

Thankfully, they've all leveled up at least once since they started, with him leveling his Combat Level faster simply due to having been the lowest level. He's spent most on his Stamina with one out of the usual five going to his Wisdom, given he's in a fight for his life, he's confident there will be time in the future to spent points on his Wisdom in a safer location and when his life isn't on the line.

"Only two dozen." Choji muses while back handing a leaping enemy. "We all have leveled up, it's natural that we'd fight more powerful opponents." Sakura points out.

"Agreed, we much be close to fighting the colony leader." Ino muses while he does his best to snap the neck of an incoming Adult Black Snarling Rat while kicking one as it goes for his left leg. "Next time we do this, we need to go shopping for better armour and either better weapons or a shit ton of Kunai in our inventory."

"Might want a few extras for the cloth armour, it's not the most durable around." Choji points out. "Doesn't your Clan use samurai type armour in the past?" Ino asks while a meaty slap can be heard from that direction.

"I'm not well verse in my Clan's fighting style to unlock that option just yet. Just cloth or padded cloth armour, same as any other Shinobi." Choji admits while a chop of his left hand manages to break the back of a leaping enemy and then stomping on its back once it's on the ground, being sure to avoid the Mohawk Quill.

As his sixth dies it's not long before the others finish theirs off. He's quick to go through the various pop ups, most are just Skills leveling up plus he leveled his Combat Level once more. They loot their kills and they all got a new item, Rat Quills, which is a Crafting Item, plus they did get more meat from the Adults then from the Teenagers but again, it was poor, then again, their pelts remain poor as well.

They all rest, waiting for their Chakra to go up. Being the Medic for the Party means that it's his job to heal the others before they see what the seventh wave has in store. More time to waste, just waiting for it to go up, only this time, he accesses his Inventory and pulls out a Biology text book that he borrowed from the Library.

As he's beginning to read it, a stomach growl from Choji causes not just him to look at his friend but the two girls with them. "Sorry but I'm starving! Plus, well, I regenerate Chakra faster when I've eaten something." His friend's lost a few pounds of weight and it has effected Choji's Chakra reserves as the max number has gone done.

"Well, break a box and make a campfire to cook that rat meat." He suggest once a pop up comes and then vanishes. They all stare at him, disgust on the girls' faces while Choji just looks betrayed. "Look, we know it's clean and you need to eat something to regain your Chakra reserves. It's all we have right now and we all need to be in as good a shape as we can to complete this."

Choji sighs and looks at his own Chakra bar. "Your right, I mean, the max number... I've lost so much weight! Look at how thin I am?!" The girls do study Choji, their respective eyes upon how slow Choji's Chakra bar is not just filling up but how the max number is slowly, decreasing.

In the end, Ino and Sakura are giving Choji looks of sympathy and pity. Yes, Choji's Clan is very much related to his body's weight. What once had just need dismissed as excuses is now being proven as fact, that the fat of an Akimichi does have a direct relation to their Chakra reserves. It's more of a Clan Trait then a Bloodline Limit.

In the end, Ino helps Choji gather up broken crates while Sakura clears an area to use as a fire pit. Once the fire has started, he gets up and does a very basic Elemental Chakra Control Technique to light the wood. It takes two minutes for it to light properly, all the while Ino and Sakura have given Choji all of the Meat they Butchered from looting the rats. He does the same before returning to his spot to pick up where he left off within his book.

After a few minutes, the sounds of Choji eating Roasted Meat with the fire crackling. "Huh, my General Level went up... but my Combat Level didn't?" Choji muses and it's enough for him to lower his book to look to see that Choji's right. His General Level did increase, which begs reminds him...

"So... when we level Skills not connected to Combat, it increased our General Level." Which means that Naruto's General Level... he's spent a lot of time learning and using Skills that are not core for their Profession. And yet, his Combat Level...

He sighs as he reads the latest pop up. So, Naruto's been denied serves so often that, he's taken to making his own equipment? He recalls seeing someone with the same General Level, hadn't he? Looking for an order, actually.

There's a pop up that congratulates him on his deduction. Calling up his Character Overview, he taps Gamer Shinobi and reads the description. Then he checks his Skills and sighs, it seems that this feature... is very narrowly channel. Meaning, they have a limit of non-combative Skills they can ever learn.

It seems that, whatever happened with Naruto, something has taken it upon themselves to keep a repeat of what Uzumaki had done. Meaning, they weren't the first to experience this Gamer feature.

Once more there are pop ups and the Quest updates itself. He dismisses his Overview and leans back a bit, not really following the flow of conversation going on between Ino and Sakura. "I suggest you check the Gamer Shinobi title before enacting any of your money profit ideas. It doesn't look like we'll be pulling any Uzumaki style Skill grinding. We're limited to the number of Skills we can learn that doesn't involve an Adventuring Professions."

They were very outraged a minute later, after reviewing their own Character Overviews along with the Title. Certain skills didn't count towards that limit but any Crafting Skills? They were fine with Knowledge Skills, as knowing subjects for pretending to be another Profession is covered. It's the Resource Gathering and Crafting Skills that are the hardest hit, only allowing four for both categories. Skinning and Butchering, well, all it does is increase the natural drop rate of pelts and meat, his Biology Skill adds a passive to that as well, surprisingly enough but then, it also grants him a passive when it comes to landing critical hits.

Two Gathering Skills slots to fill. Then there's the four Crafting slots... Which causes him to think over what Crafting Skills he should look into learning. He shakes his head, saying, "We'll worry about this once we've cleared the Dungeon."

Closing the book, he places it back into his Inventory and checks his Chakra bar. He takes a moment to notice who needs the most healing before starting with them. In minutes, he notices that due to his Chakra Control Skill having gone up, his Mending Jutsu takes one less point while increasing the healing rate by a point.

Shikamaru gets a few minutes to rest before they engage the seventh wave, once more, it's two dozen Adult Black Snarling Rats with a single Enraged Mother Snarling Rat at Level 19 leading the way. The special Rat goes straight for Choji, he does his best to aid Choji, but it seems that the female rat just won't have it and an Observation shows that since Choji ate the most Roasted Meat made from rat meat that she's got tunnel vision and is totally focus on Choji.

He also finds himself under attack by four at once, having drawn the attention of the swarm viva his efforts to help Choji fight mama rat. Once her health is half way down, he isn't happy but he does do his best to defend himself, again being careful of the Mohawk Quills, going for crushing their throats and going for breaking their backs before stomping on them with his foot.

As they finish this wave, he's sandals are gone as is his vest with only his fishnet covering his upper body. His Kunai and Shuriken pouches vanish from his shorts. "My dress!" Cries Ino while Sakura whimpers, he moves to have his back towards the two. He does a quick look at Choji to notice that yea, Choji's lost some of his cloths as well, namely his upper body cloths and sandals.

"Ok, I think we should just loot them now and leave. Yes, it will restart the dungeon but we need armour and weapons against the Boss." He reasons out loud. "What a drag, getting this far only to turn back..."

None of them argue and before they leave, Sakura uses a Genjutsu to cover herself in Illusion Cloths. Ino does the same and they leave the Dungeon, thankfully, their money and loot are pretty much with the Inventory so they don't lose anything with the destruction of this various pockets.

They spend the next two hours buying duplicate sets of cloths and a lot of Kunai along with Shuriken. They also take a look around to see what Jutsus people have on sale, namely looking ones that help with Chakra Control. There's none that weren't just a slightly advance version of what they learnt at the Academy and for the prices they wanted, they just decided to leave it, after all, most of them could easily ask their respective relatives for tips. They, in stead, spend what money they had in buy a few stacks of pre-made sandwiches and drinks.

Ready to face the Dungeon once more, they head back only to find that it's been cleared. They make use of their Investigate Skills to find evidence and clues to the identity of who cleared it. A puppy print and strands of white fur...

"Team Eight." Sakura says with a sigh. "At least they had to go through the whole Dungeon, so it's not like we did all the hard work."

Shikamaru sighs, "How troublesome." The others are quick to agree, although, they do Complete the Gamer Quest of locating all seven other Gamer Shinobi along with a bonus concerning their discovery of Naruto having experience with the Gamer System.

Speaking of Naruto... He turns and heads for the market, he's going to ask around to see if he can find 'Akeno' or his shop. After all, he might as well confront the Ryou'ng about this Gamer System and have someone actually answer his questions instead of him thinking up random ideas to see what pop ups when he hits on the correct idea.

"Back to the market, why?" Sakura asks and he says, "I want to find someone and get some answers."

"So we're looking for Naruto then?" Ino asks and he replies with a slight smirk, "Kind of."

| + + + + + : - - - - - : + + + + + |

"Hello 'Akeno'." He greets the blond teen and the owner of the store flicker his eyes towards him before taking a moment to study the others. "Perhaps you will answer some questions your underclassmen have concerning something?"

"Oh, underclassmen? Well, you can ask, can't say I'd answer any." "Akeno' replies with a bemuse look upon his face.

Before he continues, he uses Observation and then brings up his own Character Sheet. His eyes widen as he compares the stats along with, another stat that's all question mark with another question mark. Next he checks the name, and yea, Naruto Uzumaki is revealed along with Combat Level and General Level being the same as it was yesterday. Although under his name is Alias: Akeno.

Profession is Shinobi, Rank is Genin, but the Race portion that causes him to rise an eyebrow as while Ryou'ng is listed as his Race, there's a Temporary Race listed with Human next to it. Tapping the Temporary Race, he only gets that Naruto seems to know a Jutsu to alter his race in a temporary manner.

He compares titles and yea, there's a Title that is very different compared to any title he's seen so far. Yang Jinchuriki, that... causes a sense of dread in his stomach and a window pops up informing him that his Wisdom increased. The next three titles are Hidden Leaf Shinobi, Artisan Craftsmen, and Clan Head.

He glances at his list of titles and they haven't changed, they remain Heir of the Nara Clan, Genin of Hidden Leaf, and Gamer Shinobi. So what's the difference between Hidden Leaf Shinobi and Genin of Hidden Leaf? He couldn't help but wonder.

He taps Hidden Leaf Shinobi, the description mostly means he's allowed to access facilities tagged for Hidden Leaf Shinobi along with a slight bonus to increase whatever a Shinobi Reputation is, while wearing a Hidden Leaf Headband and on missions for Hidden Leaf. So, he has access to Training Fields beyond Genin Rank and maybe a Bingo Book entry?

Tapping his own Genin of Hidden Leaf, the description does restrict his access to certain Training Fields but he also gets bonus while training in Hidden Leaf Training Fields along with passive increase to Team base Skills. He rubs his neck, wondering if the reason for the difference has to do with time they spent as Shinobi of Hidden Leaf. And it also seems that while he is wearing his Hidden Leaf Headband, his Team Reputation increase by a slight bonus, it increased the Team Reputation when doing missions beyond Hidden Leaf proper.

Artisan Craftsmen, yea, Naruto pretty much explained that one already, so there's no point in reading it. Again, so does Clan Head, although, he's unsure if Naruto could be considered Clan Head when he's the only member of his Clan, but, what ever, this Gamer System is still new to him. Which leaves...

Shikamaru taps Yang Jinchuriki and gets a warning message informing him that this information is considered a S Rank Secret by the Third Hokage and then asks him if he wishes to proceed. He's at a loss, did he really want to know what a Yang Jinchuriki this badly?

Tapping No, it vanishes and he sighs, "How troublesome." He continues on down the page and is rather surprise that most of Naruto's Flaws... are on the most part Socially base and most are solely active within Hidden Leaf. Feared, Scapegoat, Heritage Denied, Clan Isolation Imposed, Clan Exiled, Clan Accomplishments Denied, Guardianship Deprived, Social Isolation Enforced, Alienation of Peers, Wanted Dead, and Rank Advancement Denied.

"What the fuck? How the hell... is he still sane? Or dead? Or even a Missing Nin?" He wonders as it seems that it's not just Naruto himself who's hated, but his Clan, too.

He taps Clan Exiled and gets a summary of the events of Hidden Leaf turning away refugees from their previously allied village Hidden Whirlpool. Tapping Clan Accomplishments Denied gives him how history books and events featuring the Uzumaki Clan have been edited out, including they founded a Shinobi village called Hidden Whirlpool.

It seems that Racism is the only Social flaw that is more or less universal, it's also one that comes across as the least harmful of the lot. Given Naruto's high Charisma, odds are that strangers from beyond the village will generally develop a more positive view of Naruto then people who live in the same village as him. That's just wrong, there's something seriously wrong with the Village, then again, the Uchiha Clan all getting killed in a single night?

Oh, sure, it looks like Naruto's got some perks and Waterbreathing is one of them along with... Sense Treasure? Tapping the Sense Treasure, he learns that as a Ryou'ng, Naruto can sense Items tagged with Treasured, Priceless, Quest, and Valued within a certain range determined by his Wisdom. He got this just by being a Ryou'ng ?

Yea, that's kind of hard to believe. He taps Waterbreathing and it seems that it's another perk of being a Ryou'ng. Which means that every Ryou'ng can breath underwater, which means that it's some Jutsu that they learn once they get old enough but an racial perk.

Naruto also has the Uzumaki Traits, it seems there's more then one Clan Trait, and Main House Heritage, which means something Important , with a capital I.

He tries tapping but is denied due to Clan Security Seals. That... given that Naruto's experience with this Gamer System, it's very possible that Naruto did figure out ways to secure that information from a Gamer's Observation. With a sigh, he moves on to a new section that gives a list of Seals upon Naruto's body.

A Trunk Summoning Seal, a Self Targeting Summoning Seal, and Clan Security Seals, it doesn't list a number nor does he get an idea of what kind of Security Seals as they are protected by said Security Seal. Well, he did say he can create whatever damn Seal he wants...

He did tap the Trunk Summon Seal and learns that it Summons a Bank Trunk. Now there's an interesting question, why would Naruto need a Bank Trunk when he could just Rent a Bank Vault... Then a few seconds later, he realizes the reason why and sighs, yea, it sucks to be Naruto Uzumaki while in within Hidden Leaf proper.

Then comes his Shinobi Skills and it really doesn't surprise him at their ranking. There's plenty of Skills that are simply question marks with another question mark after the word level. Uzumaki Chakra Control... well, that confirms that at least one of the Uzumaki Clan Traits relate to Chakra if they have special need to learn to control their Chakra and the basics just weren't cutting it.

Then comes more Combat Skills and there were many of them, again, most he couldn't read but he did notice the expansive list for Melee Weapons along with Missile Weapons and Unarmed Attacks. And then there's the Throwing Weapon Skill and that's just maxed out, the summary? "You know what? If it can be thrown, you can throw it and hit whatever it is you aim at."

Needless to say, he's not looking forward to ever fighting Naruto Uzumaki. After all, the current blond has Tooth Pick as a weapon, his skill level with a simple, wooden Tooth Pick is three but the fact that it's even listed is mind blowing. But it also gives Shikamaru a better understanding of what is considered Shinobi Skills and what aren't. Even in the Weapon lists, there's a Star along with the Weapon name being Silver.

Then comes the General Skills plus Craft Skills. He's pretty sure that the poorest quality of Items Naruto could ever make now, was Uncommon. With all the right ingredients or materials being of uncommon quality, Naruto could easily turn out a Master Work Quality.

Now I wish I hadn't spent all that money at he other stores... He thinks to himself. He knows who to buy from in the future concerning Shinobi supplies. It's not a question of whether Naruto would be willing to sell to them.

It's clear that Naruto knows the Gamer System well and yet, doesn't have it listed as a title. Going back, he finds Gamer Mind and Gamer Body, but that's the only references he could find. He notices tabs at the top, the Quest one looks like he can check out but it's the other one that he taps and it seems it's a list of Recipes that Naruto knows for all his Crafting Skills.

He only gets a name of the Recipe and given they have descriptive names, it's not like he needs a summary. There's even a list of Original Recipes, which shouldn't be surprising given there has to be a difference between being a Master of a Craft and being an Artisan in that same Craft.

Finally, he dismisses the two and time resumes, he finds Naruto still waiting rather patiently with a secretive grin on his face. "What the hell?! You mea.." "Secret, remember? Wouldn't want you to break the Third's Law, huh Sakura?"

He glances to find both girls staring wide eye and rather pale at the current blond human. "This is about that... Yang subject I take it? How troublesome." He mutters.

"You didn't?" Ino asks and he gives her a flat look, saying, "I'm a Genin and it's S-Rank, I didn't see the point in poking my nose into more then I had to."

"Above your pay grade even." Naruto muses and he nods. "As I expected from you, Shikamaru Nara."

He tsks but, that's it, it's too troublesome to do more then that. What seems a few seconds later, Choji rejoins them and is chewing slightly on his lower lip, but doesn't exclaims anything although it's clear that curiosity clearly overcame his best friend, so out of the four of them, he's the only one who doesn't know the S-Ranked Secret concerning the Yang Jinchuriki.

"What's a Jinchuriki?" He asks and Naruto says, "The library's got books on the subject, I will say this though, there's officially eight of them, the ninth's typically a secret. Also, don't both asking the Librarians, you're better off looking up the subject viva the Quest System."

"You make it seems like we can control Quests." Choji remarks after a few seconds of silence. He notices that the two girls seem to recover from whatever shock the secret gave them.

"You can, as long as you put forth the thought, have an end goal that's achievable, and a will to work towards it, it becomes a Quest. You plan to break into, say, the Academy Student Records tonight? To review, say, your Jonin Instructor's own Student Record? Yea, that's do able, heck, you'd likely find a reward that increases your Dexterity if you succeed in, oh, disarming or avoid triggering the various traps in the record room." The current blond explains and yea, he could see himself how someone could generate that kind of Quest.

"I generated my Quest concerning you, didn't I?" He realizes and Naruto hums in approval. "Did it back on the day of Team Assignments. Cute name, by the way. Hot Scales of Power!" The current blond chuckles.

"What do you know of Natural Dungeons?" Ino asks and Naruto hums thoughtfully, remarking, "Encountered one already? You'll be dealing with some lower level Dungeons from the mission office, given your fresh Genin, likely sticking with Levels five to ten. You'll find Rodents feature strongly in Urban Natural Dungeons, rats are mean and tend to be straight forward foes, you'll find squirrels are... tricky, as in using underhanded tactics like faking injury or just looking cute and harmless when they are anything but, and mice ones are geared towards traps plus using debuffs before closing in."

Well, from their experience, the rats they faced, did fit that to a T, didn't they? They tried to win by shear numbers and very ill tempered. "Are there any other kinds of Dungeon to be wary of?" Sakura asks.

"There's Prepared Dungeons, there's plenty of reasons why you'd find them out in the Training Grounds. Likely some bored Chunin or Jonin make them to relieve their boredom, there's usually triggers that alert them to someone in there and there may be some kind of betting pool going on. Your Quest will give you the details to help you get the maximum Reward. Don't expect to know the Level of those either, you won't die in one either, if you Chakra falls below an eighth of what you had, you'll be teleported back to the entrance." Naruto explains.

"Then there's Instant Dungeons, those are random, system generated ones." Naruto admits. "Time's different in those and you can only Escape without completing them with a Escape ID Skill once you are in one. Unlike a Natural or Prepared Dungeon, they have an unlimited reach, it's like it creates a world honestly. They'll always have a few Quests to complete before you can exit it, usually a Chain of Quests that are all links to facing an Dungeon Boss. Also, you'll only walk away with just experience from those, everything within is a Chakra Construct which means any food or loot will vanish once you have either had your encounter with said Dungeon Boss. Death isn't permanent in an ID though, which means that if you die facing a Dungeon Boss, you don't die, just fail the final Quest."

"What, are you saying that none of the food will be real? We'd starve?" Choji asks and Naruto shakes his head. "The food and loot is very real, inside of the ID and only that ID. The money isn't real either, only reason you'd get it is if there are vending machines, I know, it sounds odd but once you've seen one and used it, you'll get how a machine could be a vendor."

"If we die before the boss?" Ino asks and Naruto replies, "There's a player spawn point, typically a graveyard or a morgue, although you do suffer from Resurrection Sickness for an hour, so I suggest just resting after waking as if you die again, you get hit by Resurrection Sickness twice as hard and the duration increase to two hours."

"I take it that it increases with each death while suffering from Resurrection Sickness." He muses and Naruto hums in agreement. "Our equipment's durability goes down?"

"Ever twenty-four hours, it'll return to its durability when you arrived in but if destroyed, will re-spawn in your Inventory once you leave the ID. Shattered weapons re-spawn in your Inventory when you leave, same durability as when you enter. Food or drink consume doesn't though."

"So, Natural Dungeons are the only ones we need to worry about dying?" Sakura asks and Naruto rubs his chin, before replying, "Kind of? The PDs, they only monitor your Chakra reserves, not your Health. It's how those who don't have their Chakra Unlock have died as they can't use Chakra so there's nothing to be monitored. Same goes for typical animals."

"ID are just for experience grinding then?" He muses thoughtful and the current blond just grins. "What's the most common enemy type that ID uses?"

"Undead. Most of the time, it's skeletons and ghosts but some odd ones called Zombies show up. There's a lot of sub-types of Zombies, some slow and others normal speed, rarely any fast moving kind, thankfully. Also some of them cause Infection viva bite or scratch and others don't, then again, Viral verse Chakra Puppetry." Naruto rambles on.

"Liches are hard and are usually the Animating Force for the hordes of Undead." Naruto growls, "I mean, they are so fucked up! How was I suppose to know they somehow managed to have their soul in some kind of container? How the fuck can they use Chakra to Animate the dead without their Yin Chakra?! I don't care if the System says it works, it shouldn't!"

"I mean, why wouldn't I think that Priceless Artefact was the Soul Container? Who the fuck would use something as a sock to contain their Soul? I used Observation on every god damn thing in the room! I destroyed the various Seals protecting the Chamber! It shouldn't be able to protect that information! That's just fucked up and I swear, it only chooses after you are in the presence of the Lich!"

He takes a step back and share a look with the others. It seems this is a very sore point and yet... Something to learn from regardless.

"Why do I have to clear out valuable stuff just to make room for a bunch of Junk in my Inventory? Why won't the god damn stuff just get Sealed in a Storage Scroll?! How is that fair? It's why it's called a Storage Scroll in the first place! Why can't I put sacks filled with the Junk into my Inventory? It's a reasonable application to save room!"

Naruto finishes, "And I should be able to Deconstruct the Junk into Raw Material, I disabled those Security Seals far and square, that shit shouldn't be considered immortal objects, it's all a bunch of Junk in the end! Damn fucking Game God, just getting snippy with my out of box thinking and just wanting to fuck me over."

It sounds like facing Liches are made to be faced by Parties. Shikamaru privately observes as they wait for the blond to regain control over his emotions. "So..." Ino trails off and attracting Naruto's attention.

"Oh, ah, huh, well, fuck it. You'll understand my anger when it happens to you." The blond runs a hand through his hair.

"What else do you want?" Naruto asks and he asks, "Will you buy from us?

"Ah, so you did the smart thing, ran out of the Dungeon when you ran out of weapons and returned some hours later to find someone else completed it? So now that you don't need what you bought, you want to re-sell it and buy from me?"

"Yes." It's all he could ultimately say. "I'll exchange every two Kunai for one of mine. Although, here, this is what my Store has in Inventory."

Suddenly, a large window shimmers into existence and its price is in common Kunai. Upon clicking, he did see why Naruto would only accept two Kunai for a single one he made as Naruto's Kunai are of a better quality then what they have on them. His lowest tier Kunai are normally worth three common Kunai but Naruto's giving them a bit of a discount.

Bringing up his Inventory, he finds everything within now priced in common Kunai to be sold to Naruto. He sell what he bought in the two hours and then bought two stacks of Naruto's Kunai, three stacks of Naruto's Shuriken, and a Loot Dagger, which has passive buffs when it comes to looting Butchering, Skinning, and Harvesting foes. The Loot Dagger is a Naruto Special, which costs twelve common Kunai, it's a Great Quality and normally twenty-four common Kunai, again, they were getting it at a discount at half its usual price.

He leaves the weapons to check on the armour, yea, Naruto offers Leather armour but he can't use the kind so he goes for the padded cloth. A quick look through shows that Naruto creates Armour Sets, which means when wearing more then one piece of the Amour Set, the Armour Set buff or buffs activate. The most common buff is increasing the amount of armour points offered but also passives to Skills or Stats.

Each Armour Set have names concerning color, dominate material used, and passives buffs offered. Expensive, even with the discount Naruto's offering them. A lot of the Armour Sets were out of his price range right now but those that were in it now, were ones that offer wilderness survival, training, and stealth. He purchases Blue Cotton Cloths of Shinobi Training and then a set of Gray Silk Cloths of Shinobi Stealth, the Silk set offering better muffled sound passives then the Cotton.

With the remainder, he purchases more of Naruto's Kunai. With that, he closes his Inventory and waits for the others to finish their shopping. Once Ino finally sighs in defeat and closes her Inventory, the Store Inventory fades.

It's then he notices something... "No pop ups." He murmurs in surprise.

"Yea, that happens sometimes, it's like they don't want to spoil our interaction so they'll wait until you have likely leave the shop. I wouldn't be surprised if you guys leveled up a few times form this." Given the amount of things that increased just during that first night, he can believe it.

"So... see you guys in a few days? I know I'll be seeing Naruto tomorrow." Sakura pipes in after a few seconds of silence.

"Actually, how come nobody figured out your alias?" He asks and Naruto snorts, saying, "Shadow Clone Jutsu, you should be able to find info in your Clan's Library." The current blond says, looking at him.

"Wait, can you teach me how to Cook?" Choji asks and cocking his head to the side, Naruto asks, "Why not get a relative to teach you?

You've got plenty of successful Chiefs in your Clan, plus, they won't be charging you a Fee."

"I am willing to Sell Recipes, when you have the Skills to make them." Naruto continues after a moment. "I wouldn't be surprised if they already have a Cooking Set waiting on a shelf for you too, so you wouldn't have to worry about buying a common one."

That seems to perk Choji up, "You think so? I know we like to eat, I just... Well, yea, we kind of do own a Chain of Restaurants in Fire Country, don't we?" Choji then nods to himself, saying, "Yea, you are right, I'll just have to talk with dad about it."

"If I want to learn Weaving and Tailoring... You'll Sell Recipes?" Ino asks and Naruto hums in agreement. "Any advice about a gathering skill for the two?"

"Herbalist gives bonuses when it comes to Harvesting plants and there are a number of Dyes that use what can be Harvested from plants. Alchemy allows you to make those Dyes but it also allows for making Potions and Poisons." Naruto muses. "Not too many Gathering Skills get you more Cloth, but once your Tailoring and Weaving are high enough, you'll learn a sub-type skill that will allow you to Deconstruct anything tagged Cloth for Raw Material, it won't create much but its a way to made use of spare Cloths if you are not around a Merchant or Fence to sell it too."

Alchemy... yea, his Clan are known for their Medicines, it's why they even have a herd of deer in the first place. For their Antlers, which means he can find someone to teach him and it shouldn't be hard to pick up Herbalist if Ino doesn't go for it. Making his own Potions and other Medicines would save them money as the Raw Ingredients tend to be cheaper then the end product. Plus, chances are, he wouldn't have to play for a beginner set for Alchemy either.

After a minute of silence, they pretty much ended their Party and they exit the store. Upon exiting, yip, there's a series of pop ups swarm him along with him getting his Rewards for his Quest. He starts for home while skimming the pop ups, once they all say bye to each other.

It has been an interesting day, overly troublesome and yet, worth it given the number of Levels he increased for both Combat and General.

| + + + + + : - - - - - : + + + + + |

"It's a disgrace, I tell you. Why the hell should I be so heavily penalized for wanting to switch my Race?!" Kiba growls as the other Team stomp over towards their end of the Training Field.

It seems that Asuma invited Team Eight for joint training, again. It's been a bit over a month since the eight of them got Awarded with Gamer Shinobi title and he's laziness has down graded some days ago after a number of re-starts with the Quest concerning him fighting his back slide into old habits. Carrying books to alleviate boredom helped, particularly as reading books can help level up skills.

"He just figured out that if he clicks Race: Human twice, he can switch his Race at the cost of losing half of all his current levels." Hinata explains as he lowers his book to give Kiba a flat look. "Which, he doesn't want to do."

'There's got to be a better way! Why else would there be a question mark on the details?" Akamaru seems to sigh a very human sigh.

How troublesome, then again, Kiba's got his mind set on switching his Race to that of a Lu'Pine once he's read up the description of the natural perks they have despite the flaws like his range of shades of colors decreasing and hand dexterity getting a penalty given the way the hands are shaped. Then there's the natural feed back of having sharper hearing and a more sensitive nose, although natural low light vision explains some color vision loss.

A tip from Naruto and they learn how to use the System Guide that gives them a better idea of how aspects of the Gamer allows them to be aware of but it also gives them info on Races, a bit of History, and giving them details about Professions. They've all have read the Races articles to learn more about the non-humans which dispelled a lot of hear say and myths they were told as fact. Then again, there's likely a reason why none of the other races tried to set facts straight, after all, misinformation about their capabilities were to their benefit if they ever come into conflict with humans.

Of course, since reading the Lu'Pine entry... Kiba's private Goal had been switching his Race, creating a personal Quest even. Now it sounds like they could do so with ease, as long as they are willing to pay levels to do so.

He simply hums in acknowledgement while Kiba is pacing back and forth, sulking. As he's about to return to his book, Choji pipes in, "You know, Naruto's able to temporarily change his race viva a Jutsu. Maybe you can learn that Jutsu from him?"

"Or perhaps he knows a way to switch Races without the cost." Shino muses from his left, it seems that the Heir of the Aburame Clan has settled a few feet away from his spot. Sending both his best friend and Shino a minor glare, he puts his book away, knowing that he's not going to be allowed to continue reading it any time soon.

For some strange reason, Naruto seems to consider him a Friend, out of all the eight Gamer Shinobi, the Ryou'ng seems to be more fond of him then the others. Which makes is why he's bringing up his Character Overview and going to his Friend tab. Tapping on Naruto's name, he picks Create Map Marker before dismissing the page.

As he gets to his feet, he murmurs, "What a drag..." Brushing off his cloths, he glances towards where their respective Jonin Instructors were hanging about.

He can tell that they seem very interested in whatever they were discussing. "How troublesome." He sighs out as he uses his Tracking Skill to hunt down the Map Marker, it's an interesting how he can envision a map of Hidden Leaf and he doesn't automatically 'see' the Map Marker.

A Quest pop ups and it's mostly an investigation one concerning where Team Seven has gone, which means that... Accepting, he turns towards their respective Instructors. With a frown, he recalls seeing something earlier...

Bringing up his Character Overview and then his Friends, he taps Naruto's name to get the options, and there's that oddity that he's ignored. Yes, he gets rid of the Remove Map Marker and then taps his name once more, this time, tapping Send Message.

It brings up a new pop up and it sports a blinking line. Tapping the blinking line, it brings up a number of Kanji in boxes. Giving one a tap, he notices that it appears near the blinking line. It takes him a few experiments to figure out what the non-Kanji do before clearing the line and begin tapping the respective Kanji.

(Shikamaru): Your Team is outside of Hidden Leaf?

(Naruto): Oh, wow, so this is what Send Message does, huh... Ah yea, the brat throw a fit about doing more D rank missions and Old Man Third gave us a C rank mission yesterday. Left this morning, heading to Land of Waves, don't expect us to be back any time soon.

(Shikamaru): How troublesome... Kiba wants to know if you know a better way to switch Race that doesn't have him losing half of his respective levels.

(Naruto): If he wants it so badly, why not just pay the levels? With being a Gamer Shinobi, he'll earn them back quickly.

(Shikamaru): It's Kiba.

(Naruto): Well there should be a Wander Merchant named Thunderous showing up in Petal Blossom, they might have one in stock. It'll be expensive though and not just to your bank account. It's an Epic Item, if I recall correctly.

(Shikamaru): When should we expect Thunderous to visit?

(Naruto): Likely show up tomorrow around noon and will likely leave after four days. If not tomorrow then the next day.

(Shikamaru): Might?

(Naruto): It's a one time use Epic Seal Item, what do you expect? Particularly given what does. Just don't expect Kiba to be anything other then bed ridden for a few hours, maybe a few days...

(Shikamaru): Couldn't you make it?

(Naruto): I'm going to pretend I didn't read that, but... good instincts there. Got to go.

He waits a few more seconds before dismissing this window. Then dismissing that pop up concerning his completing the Quest along with the next one concerning his increase to his two mental stats. Naruto pretty much confirming that he knows how to create this Seal but doesn't want to advertise it.

"Team seven is outside the village, doing a C ranked mission due to Uchiha getting fed up with D rank ones." He tells others, "As for the Race switching, he mentioned a Wandering Merchant named Thunderous who's due to showing up in Petal Blossom either tomorrow or the next day."

"From the sounds of things, it's an Epic Item and it's use will cause the user to be bed ridden for either some hours or a few days." Kiba just grins in victory, likely just ignoring the effect of using this Epic Seal Item or the cost to his band vault. "I'm hearing Dungeon Raid, how about you guys?" Ino comments with a grin.

Within minutes, they have formed a Party and they were heading for a previously found PD that none of them have visited yet, although Hinata had used her Byakugan to study the PD once they found it, so they have a general list of what's in there for Chakra Mutants and rewards to be found within secret stashes.

Making very good use of their Gamer Shinobi titles, they were all much more advance then they likely should be. Then again, Gamer Body means that as long as they rest in their own beds or in a safe, secure location, they'll be back at full Health and Chakra well others, well, it could take them days to recover from what they can sleep off in a single night.

Quests generate money that goes straight to their Inventory, so that's of little concern in the long run with addition that what they have on their bodies isn't everything they have access to given, again, their Inventory being something only they could access, ensuring that they could never be disarmed or without useful supplies.

Out of the eight of them, the Heir of the Uchiha Clan refuses to Party up with them or even acknowledge that he could learn anything of use from them. There's a new flaw to Sasuke's list, Lone Wolf, and it's on its way of becoming a major one from the looks of things. It clearly frustrates the so called Rookie of the Year that he's now the one with the lowest Combat Level among the eight of them, there's no point in counting Naruto among their group as he doesn't have the title and has been doing this for years, since the very first day of the Academy in fact.

There's no point in comparing themselves to someone who's a pioneer of sorts when it comes to taking advantage to this Game System that the World operates under. All of their restrictions were clearly the result of Naruto managing to find something to exploit and that the so call Game God patching the exploit, even figuring out ways to polish it so that the exploit's effects weren't broken. And yet, Naruto likely also experienced glitches or logic flaws as well, according to Naruto, he remembers a time where there wasn't such a thing as Combat Level or General Level, it was all just Level.

It's hard to imagine seeing Citizens with high levels and expecting them to fight at that Level as well when they didn't even have the right Profession to back it up. Single Level feature are for Chakra Mutants and Traps, one having a life style that is pretty straight forward while the other is just an Item. Still, the experience from either fighting or stealing from such high Level foes...

His mind returns to the here and now, skimming the various pop ups to see if he missed anything before going to his Inventory to equip his Silk Cloth Armour Set while making sure he has his Loot Dagger on his belt, it's a fairly decent weapon outside of its buffs to looting the dead. Not that it keeps him from affixing his two Kunai pouches and Skuriken pouch upon his Armour Set so the dagger remains on his belt.

With that, he dismisses his Inventory as they stand before the entrance. It's not long before they are all ready and Choji, who's currently the Leader, approaches the Entrance to accept them entering it on the Party's behalf. It's eerie, how they suddenly find themselves in the room and they are quick to arm themselves with Kunai while Choji elects to also light a torch that he picks up.

Now it's a question of the lay out, what mobs they'll encounter in which order, and how quick they can Disarm Trap Skill is against the Trap's Triggering Timer. All for the entertainment of which ever Shinobi investigated time and money in creating this Dungeon. How troublesome.

| + + + + + : - - - - - : + + + + + |

Wandering Merchant Thunderous turned out to be a V'rana, which may have been why Naruto used a gender neutral term instead of assigning a gender noun. Yes, he could just use Observation to get the gender but, was there any real point? Thunderous didn't seem to mind being called a they, from what they've observed with their interactions with 'Nana', who's a man yet clearly uses female terms in regards to himself, herself?

Although, this is the first time I've been outside of Hidden Leaf. Huh, I didn't expect Choji's Clan to own land beyond Hidden Leaf itself. He reflects as they glance around at the buildings that line the road that leads into and out of Petal Blossom.

His Mental Mapping Skill has gone up from their trip beyond the Gates of Hidden Leaf and they all received experience for exploring Petal Blossom. It wasn't that large of a town but then, it's pretty much a few hours from Hidden Leaf, which is a major city even if they call it a village.

It's also clear where most of the Akimichi Clan get their fresh produce typically from as Petal Blossom is a farming and orchard community. There's greenhouses a little off in the distance, which suggests more foreign climate crops being grown here as well, saving on importing costs from such far distances. It's one of those places where everyone knows their neighbours well enough that it would be hard to infiltrate the town pretending to be a fellow local just because they'd note any odd behaviour.

Kiba's clearly impatient to speak with Thunderous while Hinata just seems to be curious about poking around the town in a proper manner. Shino seems to find something interesting concerning a poster that Ino's leaning her back against, seemingly staring off into space, he'd bet his Loot Dagger that she's using the Send Message discovery to chat with Sakura.

As for Choji, he's enjoying a sample platter from the restaurant that 'Nana' works at. It's clear that the residence recognized their Clan Heir as a few have come up to him just to chat and offer to show him around. His best friend is clearly unaccustomed to so much attention being paid directly to him, then again, they were Clan Members and they were just being helpful, more then happy to answer Choji's few question while also fishing for gossip about the happenings of their relatives living in Hidden Leaf. More then a few have asked that Choji pass along greetings or packages to various members back home.

It seems that Choji's stumbled upon a Clan Quest which may or may not be a series of Quests. Which is why he made a mental note to inquire if there are any Nara living beyond Hidden Leaf, not wanting to stumble upon a relative or more, living about Fire Country's many towns and cities or owning property beyond Hidden Leaf. After all, it shocked them all to some degree to learn of Choji's Clan's involvement with Petal Blossom.

Naruto knew but clearly didn't see the need to warn him, them, about it. Then again, they might not have received much experience if they were warned before hand. But, we could have asked around about Petal Blossom before coming...

How troublesome, he's arguing with himself over such a simple detail. He is tempted to pull out his latest Library book to read but reframes encase he's addressed again about any Clan business or shipment updates. Which have happened thrice so far.

There's a few who approach Ino as well, concerning shipments of fertilizer or seeds. Which has only happened twice, then again, since she's busy Messaging with Sakura, it could be that the System is waiting for her to finish before springing more on her. It's been made pretty clear now, that the relations between their three Clans run deeper then just their dads' being on the same Team.

"Finally!" Kiba exclaims and he turns to watch the Inuzuka stalk forward. Thunderous turns to regard Kiba, it's hard for him to pin point the emotions being shone from those fairly inhuman eyes, he's gotten better at reading Ryou'ng expressions and eyes along with picking up subtle gestures that have a certain meaning from spending time with Naruto in his true racial form.

It's likely that, given more exposure, he's able to pick up the ability to read V'rana own body language and how they express their emotions. Given that there's a V'rana among the Shinobi of Hidden Leaf, he may get the chance. Although, he already figures that V'rana smiling is a very different expression then those sporting lips of a certain kind.

"I see your in a hurry to speak with little old me, Genin! What can this old, spry bird assist you with?" Thunderous' voice is now that of an old man, which is off kilting, given that Thunderous had been using a woman's voice while trading gossip with 'Nana'. A clear example of their natural mimicry of sound and likely a reason why the safest term to use with a V'rana is gender neutral if you want to be polite.

This seems to throw Kiba off a bit, causing the feral Genin to likely sport a confused expression. "Eh?" Then Kiba recovers, by saying, "I'm looking for an Epic Item and I've been told you might be carrying it."

Thunderous does a very human gesture of stroking the bottom of his beak, like an old man would stroke their chin or beard. "An Epic classified Item you say? Well, that's an interesting accusation. Then again, I do end up with so many interesting Items in my travels, why, I was just in Gargar Valley's Moon's Grave just two weeks ago!"

"Ah yes, what a wonderful island, did you know how it was founded?" Thunderous asks and Kiba gives a negative and so, Thunderous launches into the History of the Founding of an island that had once been the dumping ground that three Fire Daimyo tried to force all the other races to live at.

There's plenty of people who gather just to listen in, after all, he didn't know there was such a large population of Chakra Users near Fire Country, let alone that people have tried to pin in the four other races. All this happening before the founding of the Shinobi Village era too. He could only wonder what parts Thunderous is keeping out or down playing in the history being told, as this does sound like something told to wet a child's interest in History.

Which might be one of the reasons why Thunderous is even telling it. In hopes of getting people to research the topic or, at least, give reasons why the Fire Daimyo's no longer have the program in place. "You mean some Shinobi Clans got paid to help with that?" Kiba asks, clearly enraptured by the history.

"Ryou'ng are very good at scavenging ship wrecks. Very large lungs, you know, plus a Jutsu taught to help extend their time under the surface." And right there, is a lie, a myth, and yet, a quick look around, it's one that the crowd bought. Misinformation being given while mixed with the truth.

There's no doubt that those Ryou'ng scavenged ship wrecks, after all, with their treasure sense, they wouldn't need to research what ships capsized on what routes. Once within a certain range, it would ping and then it was a matter of swimming in the direction. Easy money, honestly, which says something about the Race on the whole, it sounds like they could easily become nobles with that kind of wealth without ever working for it and yet, seemed to be the least populated of the four.

"You going to share names?" Choji asks curiously and Thunderous chuckles in a good natured way. "Oh, none of them were overly famous or infamous. Most were paid for their smuggling and information gathering then anything overly interesting like assassinations among Daimyo's courts or military forces at the time."

"Still, any of them being a Senji? Or an Inuzuka?" Kiba asks while he couldn't help but privately wonder, Or Uzumaki?

"There had been a few Senji, yes... You must keep in mind, I'm not a text book! I can't remember all the names of the Shinobi who got hired." Thunderous remarks, the last part sounding very pity worthy, to be honest, making him feels a bit sad even though it's clear that Thunderous is an expert at working the crowd, knowing how to get the reactions they want.

"Why become a Wandering Merchant? Why not just set up a shop in one of the towns or cities of Gargar Valley? Surely it's safer then wondering around where Bandits might rob and kill you?" Hinata asks.

"Ah, young Lady Hyuuga, what a question! There are many reason why one would take up a Wandering Profession, but for all, it's seeing new and interesting sights! It's meeting new people each and everyday! Of being able to pick up everything and just head off in a random direction!" Thunderous exclaims and without much encouragement, shares a tale of one of his earlier adventures when he first began.

A few among the crowd seem to sigh while they leave, it's clear they wanted to stick around to hear more, yet they had work to do or jobs to get back too. Thunderous continues to show how to keep a crowd. It makes him wonder if Naruto possesses the same ability, given that the Ryou'ng is also a Merchant and, thus, has a need for high Charisma.

Here before him, is one of the reasons why Charisma could be a subtle and deadly art. After all, Kiba's totally forgotten what business he has with Thunderous, becoming ensnared with the previous story and the current one. It's more then likely that Kiba will be rather furious when it's pointed out to him.

He calls up his Character Overview and goes to his Friends tab. Tapping Naruto's name, brings back up his... Message Exchange with the Ryou'ng. As it appears, there's a date of their first exchange.

Well, whatever. He thinks and begins tapping out a new message.

(Shikamaru): Any advice about approaching Thunderous about buying the Epic Seal Item? He's kind of distracted Kiba with first the History of Gargar Valley's Founding and seems intent on sharing early stories of his career as a Wandering Merchant.

(Naruto): He asked in the middle of a populated area, didn't he? Give it a few hours, Thunderous is trying to get people to you know, forget the mentioning of them able to get their hands on an Epic Item.

(Shikamaru): You make a good point, now that you pointed it out. He sure knows how to play the crowd.

(Naruto): Of course, he's a Wandering Merchant, Thunderous will likely see a lot of people suddenly wanting to browse his wares along with asking questions about where he's been recently. Attention is something all Wandering Merchants need, it's how they drum up business.

(Shikamaru): So, find a private spot and then ask about it.

(Naruto): Yip.

(Shikamaru): How's the mission?

(Naruto): Haven't spoken to Ino yet, have ya? We encountered Missing Nin and some greedy Merchant named Gato wants the client dead. Left them tied to a tree, not sure if they both swallowed their tongue.

(Shikamaru): And you didn't turn back when it upgraded to a B rank?

(Naruto): It happens... a lot... concerning me and, really, do you think someone would let it end there? Though Sakura seems confident that between Hatake and myself, we'll pull through.

(Shikamaru): Not really the point, if they manage to... how often is a lot?

(Naruto): Honestly? Every third mission that's beyond Hidden Leaf, every single one beyond Fire Country. You've read my flaws, is that really that surprising?

(Shikamaru): How? Just HOW is it you are still... Wouldn't being a Missing Nin be easier at this point?

(Naruto): That means they win and I won't stand for that. I love this village... it's just too bad about the people living there, you know? They want to feel superior in a moral fashion to justify every crappy thing they did, saying they were right for treating me like that while ignoring the fact that they were the driving force for such behaviour. It's human logic at its stupidest.

(Shikamaru): You've put a lot of time and effort into that plus, using it to justify your own stubbornness.

(Naruto): Doesn't make my observation any less valid though. We are flawed people living in a flawed world, nothings perfect nor will it ever be. Life is perfect chaos and death is perfect order.

(Shikamaru): So, did this turn into a Quest for you?

(Naruto): Not really, too high level in either for it I assume. Haven't bothered to check either of theirs but it's likely Quests for them. Uchiha's going to be a pain for Sakura, they'll need to work together to complete it or fail, not what kind of penalties there will for failing it though, given I'm here to make sure the bridge gets built along with keeping the builder and family alive.

(Naruto): He will be, he's not in top form and he's got a pair of green Genin to watch over. He's going to be down for a few days if not for the whole time the Quest takes place.

(Shikamaru): You make it sound like your observing a story going on before you.

(Naruto): It kind of is, in its own way. I've been told that all stories have some truth to them, which is why they are told and retold. Plus, Game System and the Gamer is usually the Hero of the Game, so, yea, there's a story going on, an Epic Saga if you will. Which brings out the usual Story Tropes.

(Shikamaru): It's depressing that I can't help but agree with that after thinking about it for a bit. What a drag my life is turning out to be.

(Naruto): Live and learn, Shika, live and learn. Think of it this way, at least knowing allows you a greater degree of influence then being ignore ever would. Yea, your view of the world's been shaken and turn on its head, but can you honestly say, looking back, that you are the same person with the same view of the world as you had been at six? Or Ten? Or even a week ago? Maybe even the day before?

(Shikamaru): How have you not driven yourself insane by now?

(Naruto): You say that as if I were ever sane to begin with. Besides, there's no universal sanity stat, just a common thought process that is taught to kids who grow up to teach it to their own kids. It's cultural teaching more then anything.

(Shikamaru): How troublesome.

(Naruto): Likely, anything else you want to discuss or are you good?

(Shikamaru): I better start paying attention again. Farewell.

(Naruto): Type at you later.

He stares at the conversation, still not sure what to make of Naruto once more. Anyone else would have either committed mass murder or suicide with that much understanding of how the mind works, and yet, Naruto just... It's mind boggling then again, even he admits that in some way, the Ryou'ng has a point, that just by being himself, he's pretty much rubbing salt into an open wound that the whole village seems to share concerning Naruto's existence, that he doesn't play the monster they expect him to be...

It makes Hidden Leaf come off as the bullies, as the bad guys, while Naruto could come across as a Saint, the good guy, and far more moral a person then anyone in Hidden Leaf. In the story of Naruto Uzumaki, he's a hero despite his treatment, someone to admire due to his not giving in to the darker side of his inner nature. Naruto shines so brightly because of every crappy thing that happens to him.

And if this was a story, he's the one who's dreams will become a reality. He would be the one people would strive to follow the foot steps of. He reflects. Shaking his head slightly, he dismissing the Message and time returns to its normal flow.

There's a few pop ups they fade once he skims them. Just informing him of certain knowledge skills increasing, which makes sense given the conversation he had with Naruto. He takes a moment to glance around, it seems Ino has joined near the fringes of the crowd, also listening in to Thunderous with Shino a few feet from where she's standing.

He waits and resumes listening to what's being told. After all, it's something to fill the time with as they wait for Thunderous to feel secure enough to end the tale-spinning session.

| + + + + + : - - - - - : + + + + + |

"Would it help if I say we got this tip from Naruto Uzumaki about this Seal Item?" He asks after following Thunderous to one of the restrooms. The V'rana pauses before one of the stalls.

"Ah, that... explains things a great deal more. Although, why not just ask to learn his Alterself Jutsu instead of this particular Seal?" Thunderous asks curiously.

"Inuzuka." He states simply and Thunderous snorts. "Ah yes, it's usually all or nothing with that Clan. Plus, learning you are still learning the in and outs of Chakra as it. Doubt your Academy even mentioned Yin Chakra or Yang Chakra Releases."

He, makes a note to research the two releases as he does recall Naruto's that one title with Yang before it. "He mentioned it'll cause the user to be bedridden for a time." Hoping that Thunderous will explain why.

"You think it's just a matter of a change in body, huh? Oh, Yang is used to cause the changes the body undertakes but we also need to alter the mind too, otherwise, the user won't be able to use the body to its fullest. So, Yin is used to alter the thoughts, to put the user in a stat where they can retrain their reactions and instincts." Thunderous explains.

"So, rebuilding how one things is part of the job of the Seal then? Not just giving them the instincts but familiarizing them with these new instincts?" He muses.

"Along with how their new body works, after all, having feathers or fur is very different then having scales or skin. Different ways to take care of each along with senses feed back and changes to one's own plus new limbs that alter how one sits down." Thunderous points out.

"So, you have one in stock or do we need to need to wait?" He asks and Thunderous hums for a bit before replying, "I have a few in stock. We can discus this at my room, tonight. There's a waver I need him to sign before I can sell it."

With a nod, Thunderous waves him off and he leaves, kind of embarrassed at walking into the woman's washroom but, well, it's private enough for that kind of conversation. He heads for where the others were outside, lounging about, discussing the various stories they listen to.

"I spoke with Thunderous, they said you need to sign a waver before they can sell it to you." He says to Kiba, who is slightly startled then puzzled and then embarrassed. "How troublesome is it that its not even my Quest to keep track of and yet, I helped you finish it. I expect a favour for this."

"Yea, sure, I owe you a favour." And a pop up confirms that he now as a Favour to use concerning Kiba. Kiba also looks surprise, it seems he's not the only one to get a pop up concerning this Favour feature.

It fades and Akamaru scratches at his leg for a scratch behind the ears, which he kneels down to provide. "So... shall we take a look around while we're here? I mean, we have more time to waste unless..."

"Tonight, their hotel room." He states and soon enough, they talk about where to begin with the sight seeing. He doesn't care, really, as he trails behind the others, just enjoying the change in scenery.

He knew things would be difference once he graduated from the Academy and joined the Shinobi ranks as a Genin. Its just, who ever thought it would end up being something of a game changer in a literal sense? Naruto's right though, something is going to happen, likely something big. He reflects.

But, it's too troublesome to worry about What Ifs right now. It's best to trust that, when the time comes, they'll have the Skills and Experience needed to survive, maybe even thrive, the coming 'plot' of this Game. That's just life, right?

To be continued?

To Readers: And here's the Game System Universe continued for Naruto. A longer chapter with 35 pages, 3 pages longer then Games We Play, then again, I did have a minor rant concerning Naruto's ID experiences with Liches, not sure where that came from only just wanted to show Naruto having a bit of pent up anger and a need to vent.

Yea, Naruto's keeping secrets and, as you can see, Shikamaru earned Friend points with Naruto viva not being nosy about a certain title. Then we also get a glimpse of Cannon treatment translating to flaws and adding to existing flaws with Sasuke's Lone Wolf attitude development coming from the three listed. To Quote Star Wars for one of Naruto's flaws: "Fear leads to anger, anger leads to hate, hate leads to suffering."

Not sure I'll continue this, it's pretty obvious that they'll be over powered characters and more then capable of surviving the Cannon plot. Both chapters have more to do with coming to grips with the fact that some things can't be easily changed no matter how much power one gains.

We see here that for however powerful Naruto became since we last saw him, he couldn't change the way the villagers saw him over the years, in fact, they might have gotten worst as he's still being pushed out to the fringes along with held down from achieving a higher rank then Genin, and he's grasping at reasons why not to leave the village or commit mass murder.

Yea, Naruto's got people that are semi aware of how the world works and it'll be more of a matter of him trying to decide if he can trust them and then with how much. He's got trust issues, very justifiable trust issues from the previous chapter and from his time as a Genin of Hidden Leaf.

Then in this, Shikamaru has learned far earlier that his laziness could get not just himself killed but his Team. He can see his failings clearly and can't really escape it or turn a blind eye to it. That being smart does mean he won't over look something critical. It doesn't matter how easily he learns something, it might not be enough to over come what he's facing. His choices he made went it came to his body's conditioning during his time at the Academy were mattering now, that the future he kept putting off, was happening now.

So, hope you enjoyed this and I wonder what crazy plot idea will germinate this coming weekend. Thanks for reading and hope I have something interesting to read by the 16th of September. Bye!

Another Set of Sacrifices: KHR!

I don't own Katekyo Hitman Reborn or flavors of Gamer!

Crimson flames flicker to life in his left hand while he keeps his grip to the cliff viva his right. He's fueling his muscles with his secondary flame, increasing his stamina. With his [Will] , his Storm flames cover his left hand and he holds his left hand where he wants the next hold to be created. Within seconds, the crimson flames consume the rock and dirt before he recalls them back within him and once gone, places his left hand there, beginning the process of pulling himself up the cliff once more.

He's got four feet to go to get to the nest. It's slow going, particular as he's three foot five inches [Goblin] , a common [Forest Goblin] actually. His skin is a evergreen color with crimson and purple body paint that typically is decorating his forearms, chest, legs, and forehead. His finger and toe nails are black and slightly more thicker then his normal nails, giving a percentage bonus to unarmed attacks, one percent plus his strength score. His hair is a navy blue, side cut on his left side with a slight pony tail at the back, by his neck, it stops by his shoulder blades. His eyes are the usual black, it was either black or navy blue, the same went for his hair, it was either navy blue or black.

Once he's able to pull himself up, he does so and quickly moves to put his back against the cliff wall. The nest is about four feet away, there's egg shells from the previous brood raised within its concrete like nest that sports not just branches poking out but huge bones and the odd rotten, giant feather. He's hoping that the pair have yet to return to the nest, he rather not see if he can fend off two, likely, prime pair of [Adult Crested Green Feathered Wyverns] . He's only Level 30, the [Name] hovering above his head is Ruby_Fire , named after his primary which is [Storm Flame] , his secondary flame is [Cloud Flame] , he either developed it or discovered that he had a secondary when he reached Level 10.

Feeling his [Will] replenish fully, he gets to his feet as he scans the skies as he slowly approaches the edge of the nest. The side of which is about five feet tall and he needs to climb up it. He uses the few bones and ex-gaps that likely had been filled by something that's long since rotten away. He makes sure to fuel his pointed ears with some Cloud flame to increase his range of hearing, making every small sound sound so much louder. Creative use of Storm flame to filter out the sound that wasn't the wing beats or cries of beasts.

It takes a lot of [Concentration] to keep both flames active as he drops down into the nest proper. It's filled with rotting leaves, pelts from mammals, and feathery down. Of course there's more then just that within the nest and he considers trying to use his Storm flames to filter the smell but decides that he can live with it, it's not like he's got a very sensitive sense of smell, plus, he already has a scarf about his neck and covering his nose already. It's cold at this height plus the wind isn't helping any, as he searches around, he's kind of distracted as he's regretting not stuffing the tips of his ears under his woolen cap as they are freezing.

He adjusts the goggles covering his eyes and moves his pack around to grab some mittens to put onto his hands. Shouldering his [Backpack] , he begins to collect the [Shell Bits] , putting them into a [Sack] he as hanging from his belt. He finds [Ancient Coins] along with slightly damaged [Green Backs] . There's savaged [Backpacks] and [Belt Pouches] , destroyed to get whatever was within them. It surprises him that there's no metal weapons or armor within the nest, then again, the hatch-lings could end up injured from such so the parents likely never brought it or dropped it from the nest when discovered.

He pockets the currency, both old and new, into his [Belt Pouch] as he slowly searches through every inch of the nest's bowl. There's a few [Rune Sticks] near the remains of some bodies that he collects, putting them into the [Sack] as well. He knows someone wanting to buy those even if they are useless to any [Sky Flame User] but save those with [Sun Flame] or [Mist Flame] . He's not too sure if any [Earth Flame User] could as he's never really had any reason to learn more about their flames beyond what they exist and what their flames are called.

He fills up the [Sack] and he's temped to pull out a [Mist Item] , considers using it to teleport to whatever its [Set Location] is. He's told it will take him to the nearest [Teleportation Gate] which should be [Joyful Springs Village] given this area is called [Province: Ginger Ridge Mountains] its condition is [Gaia Reclamation] . Meaning this area is what is considered [Frontier Land] thus there's not secure locations, not really, beyond that very small settlement. Putting the small clay tablet back into his [Belt Pouch] .

Heading for the edge of the nest, he begins to climb up the rim once more, there's the call of a [Adult Deer Eagle] and distant wing beats. It calms him down as it means that there isn't any wyverns about as there is still a breading pair of eagles near this nest. Tension eases from his shoulders and he proceeds to use Cloud flames to leap upwards and over the edge. He moves back to the wall and checks his [Messages] to see if there's an update concerning the province while he pulls his [Backpack] from his pack to grab something to eat.

His [Will] is regenerating as he finds no new updates for this province and then goes to his [Flame Skill Tree] to see if there's been an update to either his [Storm Flame] or [Cloud Flame] . There's no new skills offered and a glance to his [Will] shows that it's nearly full. Checking his [Stats] , they have improved from him climbing up the cliff and his [Flame Control] and [Concentration] went up as well. There's no experience to be gained from the climb but in the end, this trip is more for the money from selling the [Shell Bits] , finding those [Rune Sticks] and the currency were just bonus.

It fades and he finishes his second [Fried Mutton Filled Bun] then pulls off his mittens, there's no point in ruining them, however cheap a pair of them are. They don't even have any stats of any sort, just simple attire. Taking a deep breath, he moves his [Backpack] onto his back and stands up. He walks over to the edge and begins the task of climbing down, once more using Cloud flames to help his muscles from tiring out.

A good four hours, he makes it to the base of the mountain and as he moves to relax, to regain his [Will] , a [Juvenile Rock Geko] ambushes him and his Storm flames flare up about his fists while he uses his Cloud flames to boost the [Armor Rating] of his current [Mountain Leather Armor] , making it thrice to its current rating for the next three minutes. More then enough for him to kill the Level 20 lizard without a weapon, just bare fist and his Storm flames allowing him to not be affected by its spines along its back and head as he [Disintegrate] s the scales and spines with ease. It does try to use its minor trait of [Activation] to try to heal the damage, even trying to flee but he downs it.

Groaning, he allows both flames to fade and pulls out the [Skinner Knife] and begins the process of not just [Skinning] but [Butchering] the body. He manages to get the [Juvenile Sun Gland] without damaging it, it's looks kind of like the actual heart but, well, it's not. It's still got some Sun flames, he checks by fueling a bit of Cloud flames into it, causing it to glow yellow. He puts it on the scaly skin, he moves his [Backpack] and brings out the [Meat Cooler] to store the gland. He also adds the other valuable organs and tender meat. The skin is damaged from his Storm flame fueled punches do it's not overly valuable but, then again, it could be used to patch or repair armors made from [Rock Gekos] .

Using Storm flames to get rid of the fleshy muscle from the scaly skin, creating a [Poor Scaly Pelt] . He puts the pelt into his [Backpack] and then the [Meat Cooler] . Then slings it onto his back and uses Storm flames to clean his [Skinning Knife] of blood and gore. Pulling his [Reinforced Leather Water Skin] from his belt, he drinks from it, gulping mouthfuls before stopping and putting the cap back on before putting back on his belt. It's getting late, four hours of climbing, at least twenty minutes break, maybe an hour searching through the nest, another break for maybe forty minutes, and then four hours climbing down...

It's late afternoon, early evening and now he's kind of thinking of using that teleporting to the village instead of setting up [Camp] again. With a snort, he walks towards the nearest river, he'll set up [Camp] near it. It takes him almost two hours. Along the way, he encounters [Adult Mountain Speckled Owl] that, well, yea, it saw him as a quick meal, what with being under four feet in height. Same likely explains why that young geko thought it stood a chance of making a meal out of him. It being Level 40, he pretty much did everything he could to hide and not make a lot of noise, finding an old den had been lucky and, sadly, since he didn't kill it or fight it, no experience was generated from the encounter.

The owl didn't follow him into the den, not that it didn't try to lure him out, it tried to use its own flame, which may or may not be its primary flame, [Sky Flame] to draw him out. He managed to succeed in shaking it, it seems that it used a [Flame Tree Skill] that is called [Sky Flame: Siren's Call] , as he learns it is called viva looking at his [Flame Resistance] . After over fifteen minutes and spending a lot of [Will] , it finally departed, although he waited an extra some minutes, about ten, before continuing through the forest. Making sure to use [Cloud Flame: Sound Reduction] to move quietly towards the river.

Once he's found a decent spot, he brought out his [Camp Kit] from his [Backpack] . Thankfully, he's got plenty of prepared meals so he just needs to get his [Small TC&C Tent] , it's a tent that has two functions, namely keep the temperature within at a set temperature and camouflaged to blend in with its surroundings. It's size, small, is standard size for the three beginning races, of which he is of. So the cost was more for the [Mist Enchantments] then for the tent itself. He'll likely need to get it charged once he treks back to [Joyful Springs Village] , which a [Rune Stick] should cover the cost of.

He crawls into the tent, it's meant to fit two small people so there's enough room. Sitting in the middle of it with his [Backpack] near him, he is eating a [Grilled Boar Ribs Rack] , [Tempest's House Salad] , and for dessert is four individual [S&DT Ice Cream Mochi] . Given there's no domesticated cattle, he's not sure what species the milk came from, might as well have come from something like a goat or, even exotic mammal like, say, a seal. Not that it matters, it's good and he's more then happy not knowing the source of the milk used.

Digging around in his [Backpack] , he brings out an In World novel and reads it from where his bookmark was located, once he's prepared for bed, changing out of his current armor for simple linen pants and shirt. It's a weekend back on Earth so, there's no need for him to [Exit Strid] plus, while he, as Ruby_Flame , is eating, drinking, and going to the bathroom, such actions also keep his human body back on Earth from needing to do so. Any training he does concerning his respective flames also translates back to Earth as his Pledge of Sacrifice, is an ancient, family heirloom in the form of a bracelet, helps him weld them on Earth but also hides the fact that he's Flame Active. Yes, there's more to this Pledge of Sacrifice, there's pros and cons, but the main thing is does is allows him to Enter Strid as Ruby_Flame and keep him from being discovered as Flame Active by those who weren't fellow Sacrifices .

His family, they can trace their Linage back five thousand years, although it's only been in the last thousand years that it's only been Storm Flame Users were given the Pledge of Sacrifice . It might have something to do with the hot temper that Storm Users tend to have to a certain degree. Out of the eight kids his dad was encouraged to have with eight different women, he's the only one who possessed the crimson flames, all of his half siblings seem to be Latant Rains or Mists. The moment he, as a two year old, they had him touch the Pledge of Sacrifice , it flared red, meaning he had the same Flame as his recently dead father. There had been two distant cousins who displayed the hot temper of a Storm, so, if he hadn't possessed Storm flames, they would have check them with it and one of them would have stepped up to take up the Pledge of Sacrifice .

With a blink, he dismisses that kind of thoughts and focus on the novel, a rather large book given his size. After a few more tries, he realizes his thoughts just seem to be circling back to his tenth birthday, which happened four months ago. Realizing the signs, he puts the book mark back in it and then puts it back in his [Backpack] then pulls out his [Weiss Fur Lined Bed Roll] and [Linen Bird Down Filled Pillow] , laying it out, he gets between the flaps and pulls the pillow close, laying on his back, closing his eyes and evening out his breathing.

Morning saw him quickly heading out of the tent, it takes him seconds to find a nice spot to relieve himself. Once that business was done, he quickly heads for the river to wash his hands. It's chilly and mist rolling about, his ears twitch, he calls up his Cloud flames, channeling it all in his muscles and nerves, more then prepared to fight or run from any local beasts that think him a quick snack or easy meal.

[Elder Spotted Dhole] lunges at him from the mists and he manages to dodge the snapping jaws. It's slow, its age showing by the peppering of gray on the muzzle and one of its ears looking rather shredded. His current foe is Level 33, seeing this, he feels confident in his ability to kill it, although he doesn't like the fact that he might come away with injuries due to the lack of armor. Keeping his Cloud flames going, he calls up his Storm flames and does his best to attack the beast.

It takes a good number of blows and then finally going for the throat, using his Storm flames to eat away at the throat, which is hard given that it clearly lived to get to this age and thus lived through a lot of Flame based attacks, meaning it had a very decent [Flame Resistance] . His weight, light as it was, on the dhole's back all the while he's trying to either strangle or [Disintegrate] layers of the throat to get to either the wind pip or a major vein. He's using Cloud flames to make his grip stronger.

Something finally gives and it's not him, the dhole collapses and he yelps as kind of falls off. Breathing heavily, he feels his experience bar fill, he feels a great deal stronger for winning. As he waits for his [Will] to regenerate, he glances around the mist, not sure if this is the only one around. He's encountered dhole, the type had been [Desert Dhole] , before and they are pack animals, plus, there's a dead body and an exhausted [Goblin] , a free meal either way.

With a grunt, he checks his health bar and then uses [Propagation] to speed up his healing. It works and he stops once he's ninety percent full, he stops and begins to regain [Will] while he stays alert for a few minutes. Once he's over sixty percent filled up on [Will] , he begins consider what he wants more, try moving the dhole back to his camp or leave it here, continuing to the river to wash up so he can reapply his body paint. He cleaned it off yesterday as there wasn't a point of having it on given he was covering up most of his body. Plus, its not like he won't run into more on the trek back, it's clearly old, surprisingly healthy but still, old.

With that, he continues on for the river, making note to come back viva a different route as to not encounter whatever carrion eaters will be descending upon the body once he's gone. He cautiously approaches the river, taking a few minutes to scan the area, waiting for more light to shine down and drive away the mist. He's crouched down near some bushes for cover, his natural green skin helping to hide him. There's splashes from the river along with buzzes of insects. Bird song slowly begin to fill the morning and he relaxes a tad, it means that nothing overly dangerous could be in the area as one of those tend to cause the wild life around it to go silent.

Feeling better and far more awake, he moves as quietly from the cover and towards the river, keeping low to the ground as he does so. Once at the edge of the river, he picks up a stone and tosses it a few times up into the air, looking out at the river's surface. Then, with a flick of his wrist, he sends the stone flying, skipping thrice on the water's surface before something snaps at the stone. A minute later, an [Adult Red Belly Mahseer] leaps from the water, it's crimson scales on its belling flashing, it's Level 29 he notes as he watches as it slams its body back into the water, causing minor waves rippling about the surface, it's quite the big specimen as it is over two feet long and likely a predator from the look of its head and teeth.

After a few seconds of nothing else happening, he begins to clean himself, cupping his hands, he dumps the water onto his face and then begins on his hair. Given the size of that mahseer, he won't be going for a swim in the river. So, it takes him longer to wash up, doing his best to keep his ears perked for sounds of something sneaking around. With a deep breath, he stands up and stretches a bit, gingerly working his muscles to get the odd feeling out of them. Walking a bit along the bank, he hears soft splashing out on the river and with a grunt, he begins to walk away from the river, making sure to not back track on the same path as he recalls the dhole body he left.

A warning hiss causes crimson flames to erupt on his fists as he turns to fact the source, which is already lunging forward, the name of the species is [Elder Jet River Viper] and it's Level is 35. The serpent is seven feet long and given the color of the words, it's an [Special Spawn] . If he could kill it, the body will vanish but leave behind a Rare or Epic Item. He does his best to hit the incoming head, which succeeds if only because it's biting him on his right shoulder, it's top fangs piecing him in the back and he curses the fact that he didn't think to stop by his tent for his armor or think to grab a branch to use as a make shift club.

His Storm flames don't do any damage and he turns his Storm flames inward to [Disintegrate] the venom that's being pumped into his body. As the viper coils around him, he does his best to push the jaws apart, he's barely able to keep his Storm flames going, it's unlikely he'll be able to call upon his Cloud flames to enhance his strength. Grinding his pointed teeth, he continues his efforts to get it to let go. Of. HIM!

His [Will] surges and he feels himself burning up as both of his flames flare up in answer to his will to survive. The viper's eyes flare indigo and suddenly, he's dropped to the ground, not that it matters, he's not done yet. He is not done with it and ignoring everything, he begins flinging balls of Storm flame with hints of Cloud flame about the area. Blood drips down his skin and onto the grassy ground, causing slight hisses as his blood is infused with Storm flames, causing its nature of [Disintegrate] to eat into the ground.

A flash of black catches his attention and he leaping in that directly, soaring high into the sky and he's once more flinging balls of Storm flames at the newly revealed viper. Indigo flares up along its scales but he ignores the new threats as he comes to land on the serpent's head with a primal cry. He's scratching at the scales and slowly, his efforts begin to eat away the scales, it only enrages him to see the scales trying to regenerate.

At some point, he's falling to the ground while the scales take a white glaze. His eyes blink rapidly and his hearing a pounding. He's vision swims and his strength wanes. As he falls to the ground, something...

"Damn, what a way to discover [Hyper Will Mode] ." Too_Rage murmurs while her [Sun Flame: Body Mending] works on savaging Ruby_Flame 's life. The [Snow Ork] is examining the Epic Rapier, it's called [Tap the Ether] , clearly meant for someone with [Mist Flame] or [Desert Flame] given the two share come the closest to magic users here in Strid. The minimum Level to use it is 35, mimicking the Level of the [Special Spawn] .

"He's lucky to be alive, after all, he's a [Storm User] , he could have [Disintegrate] more then his skin and the odd muscle." Nix'sPond points out and given how often she's had to reactivate her [Sun Flame: Body Mending] , she should know as this is the fourth time she's activated it. Although, it seems that Ruby_Flame is finally stabilizing as the health bar is finally going back to being a healthy spring green instead of black of death while the [Will] finally stops seemingly on fire, going to its ruby red color that pretty much tells everyone what flame he is.

They had been tracking the [Elder Jet River Viper] for two days already, so, the [Forest Goblin] is lucky they were in the area. Given the lack of armor and weapon, it's clear that Ruby_Flame 's camp is near by, likely taking a bath in the river. It's also pretty clear that he's alone given that nobody else has shown up.

As her active times out, she doesn't reactivate it as Ruby_Flame is going to live. "He's stable, any sign of his camp?" She asks the [Naga Blooded Human] and Nix'sPond nods her head, nodding off in the likely direction.

She gently as she can, picks up the now Level 32 Sacrifice , it's surprisingly easy, given she's seven plus foot tall to the [Goblin] 's three foot something. She's a [Plains Minotaur] and proud of it, Evolving from a [Hill Gnome] at Level 65, making sure that her favorite stats were higher then if she had Evolved at Level 50, given that she'd lose all her hard won Levels, starting all over at Level 1.

As Nix'sPond comes to a stop, it takes her a few seconds to see through the [Mist Enchantment] on the small tent, rather impressed that Ruby_Flame managed to purchase something at his current Level but it did explains the confidence as to why he's out here Soloing. They look at each other, after all, neither Too_Rage or herself could hope to crawl into the tent, Nix'sPond sighs and her friend crouches down and then crawls into the tent. She comes out with his belongings, Nix'sPond snorts, shaking her head a bit. "He spent a lot of [Green Backs] on the tent, it's got two enchantments instead of just the one."

"What, really? Where'd he get the currency?" Too_Rage wonders and she muses out loud, "Likely savaging requests from fellow Sacrifices ."

"So... what was he savaging around here?" Nix'sPond wonders and she shrugs, it doesn't matter, they finished their hunt, it's now a question of should they be polite and let Ruby_Flame have the Epic Rapier or claim it for themselves, saying it's for coming to his rescue. It'll be how he reacts, I guess. She muses, although, there might be the predicable response that is stereotypical behavior of [Storm Flame] users are known for, which will see them taking it for themselves.

The [Goblin] groans and she's a bit surprise that he's waking already. She's quick to put Ruby_Flame onto the bed roll and they wait for him to fully wake. They each share a look, it seems someone has a secondary Flame, which means that he's response will be more unpredictable then the those sporting a single Flame like herself or Too_Rage .

Soft, rough groan and the [Goblin] sits up, eyes unfocused and then blinks a few time. "What? Huh?" Then the cursing began, not sure the focus of it though, it's pretty generic, honestly, "Oh fucking crap! Shit, damn fucking damn!"

Then as the [Goblin] and his expression goes to guarded confused to puzzle suspicions. "So... it's dead?" She stiffens at how young he sounds. "Yip, finished it with a single javelin to the head as it was trying to escape ya. Ya forced it to shed its skin, so it wasn't as armored as it would have been if it hadn't."

Ruby_Flame closes his eyes and covers his black eyes with a hand. "I... I did? I was in its mouth..." Again, she's struck by how young he sounds. "How long have you been Pledged ?"

"A bit over four months... It's a family heirloom." Ruby_Flame admits as he takes a few minutes to study them each in turn. Oh, well, yea, he's green, oh so very green and yet, very skilled if he's managed to Level to 30 before that fight with the viper. "How old?" Too_Rage asks in a icy tone and the [Goblin] stiffens, suddenly becoming defensive as he sends a glare at Too_Rage , eyes flashing purple.

So, Cloud flames too? Twice the stubborn streak and twice the temper, oh boy, what a mixture. She mentally muses, butting in,

"Impressive, not many get as far in level grinding in four months. Most stick to the beginning province and research everything they can get their hands on. It's usually take fresh Pledges over half a year to become comfortable enough to venture beyond the safety of it as well."

She knows why Too_Rage is pissed, it had taken knowing each other for three years before he'd reveal his personal hatred towards the Sacrifice system. Ruby_Flame focuses on her, with bashful pride and Nix'sPond is quick to place a hand on Too_Rage 's shoulder, whispering something to him. Too_Rage grunts and shrugs off Nix'sPond 's hand off.

"Yea, well, I've been lucky. Been working on picking up Flame Skills that either down grade or reduce duration of status effects. Been recently investing in passive healing too." She nods, she knows a lot of older Storm Sacrifices wished they had the foresight to start investing a hell of a lot sooner then just being able to use [Disintegrate] to allow to them to actively become untouchable in regards to enemy effects, be they flame in nature or just natural toxin. Most were more eager to inflict maximum damage as quickly as possible when they begin, getting power trips from how seemingly quickly they can kill their foes.

"Ah, well, I'm Ruby_Flame , as you can see. Level 30 [Forest Goblin] ." She couldn't stop the slight mannerisms of bemusement from the fairly green Sacrifice . "Level 32, now." She corrects him and his head turns up to look at the Level floating above his head.

"Pleasure, name I use is Do_Right-Sun_Light , Level 43 [Plains Minotaur] . I will answer to Sunlight though." She says as way of introduction.

" Nix'sPond is the name, Level 39 [Naga Blooded Human] . I'll answer to Nix though." Nix'sPond says.

"Level 50 [Snow Orc] , Too_Rage ." And Ruby_Flame nods, still not overly friendly towards Too_Rage . Then again, Too_Rage 's anger concerning Ruby_Flame 's age isn't making him overly talkative. She can see that he's none too please, likely seeing parallels concerning what happened a few years ago concerning what his family tried to do with their Pledge of Sacrifice heirloom.

"So... ah, mind if I... ah... grab my stuff and get dress?" Ruby_Flame asks, his face turning a lighter green and this causes Nix'sPond to laugh while she snorts in amusement.

"Sure, we only brought it out as we were going to break camp for you, heading back to [Fort B-Ringer] . It's hovering over by [Frisky Tanuki Pass] right now." She explains and Ruby_Flame frowns, asking, "Who named ether of those?"

Giving him a shrug, the [Goblin] gets up and grabbing his [Backpack] , he enters the tent. "Can we keep him? Huh, can we? It's been too long since I've laughed like take." Nix'sPond asks and she points out, "He's not some stray animal that can be turn into a pet, Nix."

Nix'sPond huffs but they wait, so far, she's kind of liking the young Storm. Then again, it's likely due to the simple fact he's clearly a pre-teen instead of being a teenager, teenage Storms were fairly hard to deal with and tend to come across as jerks at minimum. They settle down once they're adults, after all, her second cousin is still apologetic about his behavior while using that Minor Sacrifice Token to visit Strid for a year.

Runs-Laughing couldn't shake his pursuers no matter the number of secret pathways he used or the use of various tricks he uses to try and lose them. He tried at least three major Umbra Realms and even passed through the Gauntlet into the physical world for a few hours before crossing back into the spiritual reflection of Gaia. He's mostly been traveling in the Near Umbra and the minor, safe enough Realms, even five of them that he knows Mages have claimed, yet, he is still hunted and he's trying, he's reaching his fucking limits and it's not a fun sensation, not at all.

He knew the time of the Apocalypse is happening now, that he's living it but he wasn't ready for it. None of the Fera were, he doubts that even the Garou, Gaia's oh so vaulted warriors were, despite all their harping and preaching on the Phoenix Prophecy. Oh, if only I had a large enough pie tin... And tar, plus tons of cream. Oh a tar pie would be so great right now. Maybe a bag of feathers ready to drop? Hmm, where would I find a large enough scale to use?

Runs-Laughing lets out a wistful sigh at the idea of said prank. His pace is a lope, trying to save energy as he's moving, he can hear the clicking mandibles of the tracker, there's the hunting cries of Banes, and, finally, the cheerful discussion of how best to torture him before taking the biggest bit of his dead body to the Battleground, to the Plain of the Apocalypse, riding on three likely special breed Bane, looking like rusty copper and tarnished brass beetles the size of elephants.

Rabbit Run, it's really the only way he's been able to stay ahead of them. As long as he's moving faster then a fast walk, his speed it doubled, yet, he's finding it hard to keep going. He prays to Ptah for energy to keep moving, although not a follower of said Totem Spirit, his personal Totem is Raven, Ptah is still one of Faces of Coyote and he is a child of Coyote, thus, nothing is wrong with beseeching help from a parent. As a Nuwisha, he has four other forms to take beyond the body of his birth, for this long ass chase, he assumed the one they call the Sendeh form. The extra reach and power, and thus giving him greater speed then in his Breed form.

"To the left, go left." His ears perk up for a few seconds and he moves his ears about. With a snort, he decides to listen.

He swings left and keep in that direction. He's got nothing to lose, his surviving kin scattered throughout the Umbra after what happened what may seem like days ago, likely a day, maybe two. They are likely dealing with their own pursuers or dead, like those who followed Loki, who did what they could to give them all time to escape once it became clear that the numbers were not going down and more and more were arriving.

More instructions followed and Runs-Laughing follows them without haste, trusting that voice. For the voice sounds oh so familiar, calling forth the memory of his father, from his voice and smell to the comfort and security he had offered. That the pack had offered back then, after all, he was born in Yellowstone National Park. Without wolves about, they could form packs instead of just living in pair bonds when wolves were present.

His reserves don't feel like they were dropping, but he also wasn't recovering from this flight. No new strength is flowing into him but its not like he's losing strength either. He passes through to another Realm, one filled with simple blackness and tiny lights. "Find the rainbow, follow the rainbow." The voice says to him. "Don't look back, no matter what. Stay the course, remember, you are my Child. Always..."

That's... bewildering and yet, heartening all the same. Well, at least he didn't add taste the rainbow. He feels something run through his fur and something seems to tie something to his fur. There's weight on his back now but there's no point in looking, after all, how many stories talk about how you shouldn't look back when exiting out of the Underworld? He's being entrusted with something, a gift of some kind, one to take with him to the end of a rainbow. With the slight weight, bellows of rage and cries of dying canine suddenly begin to echo behind him.

And now he has a sudden urge to look behind him. Great. He closes his eyes for a few seconds before focusing on looking before him for color.

The sounds behind him, it sounds so close, that whatever it is, it's close to the tip of his tail. Which makes him move his tail, yet it continues to feel as though something could just reach forward and grab it. Again, there's this urge to turn, to see what's there, to snap at it before it grabs his tail. He feels the fur along his back and neck rise up, yet, he fights the urge with a snarl on display and a growl ringing from his throat, it doesn't drown out the sounds or the feeling of something about to grab and pull on his tail but, well, he makes him feel a bit better for a few seconds at least.

The catches himself before he does follow through with his canine instincts and spin and bite at whatever it is behind him. Which is why he stops with both the snarling and the growling. Then, he catches a glimpse of... indigo? It's to his right and so he adjusts his body to head in a rightish way. Soon, there's more indigo bleeding the area around him. Then, blue and purple begin to bleed in with the indigo coloring the surroundings and as he touches a splotch of indigo, his paws seem to alight in indigo flame for a second.

Touching the purple causes minor spark to flare while blue just seems to splash up like water. Tail wagging, he moves between the three colors, soon enough, his surrounding are beginning to add green. Touching the green causes his fur to puff and he barks in amusement as he gives it a quick lick to his left fore-paw. The taste of electricity as his tongue touches the puffy fur is noticable. His paws seem to be permanently alight now, taking the colors as he touches them, mostly indigo though.

Red and yellow begin to join the colors around him. Touching red causes a sound of a crackling lightning and rolling thunder to sound out while the yellow just seems to cause him to feel as though there's a sun at his back. Seeing a mix mash of three colors coming up, he lowers his head and once he judges himself near enough, leaps, touching each color. The purple sparks and as it touches the splash of the blue while the red rings out, seemingly setting the other two off again.

That's what it sounds like, any way, as he keeps moving forward. He's sure to follow the direction where the most color can be found. Soon enough, it's only indigo that's the color he's traveling upon while the others just seem to light his way. He's not sure when orange gets added, yet, he notices it now, it's often between two colors, like buffering them. Then, orange dominates his surroundings and the colors seem to be... nestled in it.

Then, suddenly, there's this room . . .

A throne . . .

And humans . . .

Grunting, Ike rolls onto his left side, only to find his younger brother being there. "Tsuna..." He groans softly.

"Onii-chan..." His younger brother whimpers, pulling himself closer to his body. He sighs as he studies his half-brother, a light blanket covering him. Ruffling the brown spikes of his little brother, he moves his comforter so it covers the younger boy.

Shivering slightly, he rolls out of bed viva to his right. Fighting a yawn, the soon to be nine year old heads for the bathroom, stretching some as he walks. The dream, it's one he's had since December, just before Christmas actually. Turning on the light, he pulls over the stool to stand before the mirror.

The face looking back...

He stares and the semi-familiar face winks an eye, gives a wave with a cheeky grin before the mirror ripples like water's surface before it's calm once more and showing his familiar face. Glancing around with him biting his lower lip, he pulls himself up a bit and tabs the mirror, it ripples and then, a fuzzy hand reaches through and...

Ike looks around, not sure if he's awake or asleep. The place though, it's a meadow and early morning. "Ah..."

"Impressive, given that there wasn't a uniform spiritual reflection when we arrived." A voice states and he finds an elderly man with a strange staff. The staff is blue and yellow while the elder seems...

"...we?" He parrots, he kind of recalls that there was something on his back... On Runs-Laughing's back, actually.

"I gambled on you, Runs-Laughing, or should I call you Ike for now?" The elder muses. "You weren't even a follower of myself in this disguise." The elderly man gestures at himself. A blue bald cap covering his hair, strange woven bread that seems almost glued on the chin, and what he's wearing. "You were Raven's to care for and to guide, yet, at the end there, it wasn't Raven you beseech, was it? Oh no, it was myself as Ptah."

"Asking for the energy to keep running." Ptah states. "Just that, no begging or bargaining for out right saving or aid. Just a humble request, a prayer, really, that you could continue running from your pursuers."

"There was little I could spare, stretched in so many directions... All of my followers seeking my personal intervention on their behalf..." There's great sorrow in those eyes and Ptah suddenly seems oh so very old, so very filled with grief. "So very little I could do."

Ike rubs his left upper arm, unsure he could do anything, should do anything. "But... you helped..." He states, feeling awkward. That, that seems to break the elder... God... Entity, out of his... their... mopping.

"Yes... I did, didn't I?" There's a grandfatherly, maybe it's actually a... fatherly, smile aimed at him. "And look at the result... A whole new world... Yet, it's one that is nearing its own Apocalypse if certain events happen."

Yet Ptah smiles, there's a hint of mischief in those eyes. "A bargained reached between certain parties and you, Runs-Laughing, were reborn. Positioned in such a way as to influence the Heir." There's a slight tingle that moves down his spine.

"Ah, why approach me now?" He asks.

"Because you are of the agreed upon age for contact." Ptah states. "You were nearly nine years old when you traveled here and so, it's time for you regain what you brought with you." From somewhere, Ptah now has a coyote pelt. "It's yours to do with as you please. Although, sadly, given this new world doesn't support Gifts like the ones you earned but, well, you are one of Mine."

The pelt is being offered and Ike is slow to approach, but, well, his eyes haven't really left the coyote pelt once he spotted it. His hands itch to stroke the fur, he wonders at its texture. As he touches the pelt, indigo with hints of blue leap from the pelt. It's surprisingly comforting, watching the flame seems to cover his whole body as he fully taking the pelt, he doesn't really feel the weight of it...

"Onii-chan... Breakfast." Tsuna is shaking him awake.

Ike grunts and sighs, opening his eyes. Turning to look left, he finds Tsuna standing there. "'m awake, go ge' ready for schoooooohl." He tells the younger boy, yawning by the time he gets around to saying school.

"Oh, yea... right..." His little brother murmurs and not thrilled to be reminded that its a school day. He breaths in through his nose and lets out a sigh, watching his younger brother shuffle off out of the room.

With a grunt, he gets out of his bed and glances towards his pillow to find a stuff coyote resting upon it. One that hadn't been there last night. He reaches for the stuff toy and studies it, it's warmth is like the flames from his dream. Runs-Laughing... Ptah... "Dream within a dream..." He murmurs as he recalls bits of the two dreams, familiar scene of racing within a rainbow consisting of indigo, blue, purple, green, red, yellow, and orange. On all fours, viewing the world in a very different way, keen hearing and nose, the feel of paw pads upon 'ground', and the feeling of something gently moving through a fur coat...

Smelling his mom's cooking snaps him out of his musings over the twin dreams he kind of recalls. Placing the stuff coyote back on the bed, he heads for the bathroom before coming back to get ready for school. He puts the issue of the stuff toy and the dreams out of his mind.

Once dressed in his school uniform, Ike checks around his desk for any homework or school text books, stuffing what's found into his school bag and heading down the stairs. Tsuna is sitting at the table, already eating while his own breakfast is waiting for him. "Morning Kaasan. Otouto!"

As he walks pass, he ruffles his little brother's spiky hair, putting his school bag by the front door. His little brother just huffs at him as he takes his seat, he finds it hard to believe his little brother is seven years old as he's on the short side. Yea, Tsunayoshi, for some reason seems to be some kind of bully magnet. He's not sure why but, it's gotten to the point he could tell which bully he encountered viva what how the brunet walks and what parts of the body he's trying to protect.

Oh, he's done his best to beat up the punks... it's just that, between a certain Skylark and his club activities, he's had trouble catching the little snots in red handed. He doesn't like to think he's powerless when it comes to making his little brother safe, yet Ike feels just like that. Taking a calming breath, he focus on eating his breakfast.

"So... your Birthday is coming up, Ike-kun. Have you decided on what you want?" Their mom asks him as she returns from placing their lunches by the front door.

As he sets the clop sticks down, he moves his bangs from his forehead. Glancing towards Tsuna before turning to speak with their mom. "Oh, you know, faster connection time to the internet and an unlimited credit card to buy any game that catches my fancy, Kaasan."

She giggles and ruffles his darker brown locks before shooing them from the table, she's already beginning to collect their dishes. His gaze lingers on her for a few seconds, a very slight downward turning of his lips. Familiar disappointment bubbling within, wishing that their mom would just file for divorce so she can find someone better or just get out of the house, taking an hour or two to just pamper herself. There's just something wrong with her behavior . . .

"Oni-chan? You coming?" Turning, he gives Tsuna a slight smile. "Yea. Bye Kaasan! Thank you for our Bentos!"

"Oh, yea, thanks!" His little brother sends him a confused look and he's a bit surprised himself. "Your my sons, why wouldn't I make you Bentos?" Is her reply after a few minutes of awkward silence in which he was tying his runners.

"Just letting you know... you know, that we appreciate it? Not everyone's partners make their lunch Bentos for them, you know?" He calls out and Tsuna nods, adding, "Yea!"

Soon enough, they both have their jackets on and they are sure to grab their respective school bags. As they open the door, their mom resumes her chores within the kitchen. Once they are out, he closes the door behind them and Tsuna asks in confusion, "What was that about?"

"I... had that dream again only... I had another one right after it." He admits as they walk towards the street. "It... it was weird and... I... I just felt like thanking her, for the effort she puts into them." He adds, "We... we kind of take it for granted. Everything she does for us, you know? I just thought that, well, would it hurt to thank her for her efforts every now and then?"

Tsuna's face screws up as his half brother mentally chews on that. "I guess... I mean, it's not like Tou... Tousan is around to let her know how good of a wife she is..." He admits and he nods, feeling that the awkwardness has departed.

"You know, you can wait for me at the club room once school is over. Just, bring a manga to read while waiting for us to end or, you know, join?" He says and his little brother hunches in on himself, speeding up a bit, gripping the straps of his school bag.

He breaths in through his nose and lets out a sigh a few seconds after. They continue on in silence.

He scowls at the plushy that's on his bed, he's got a split lip and a few bruises on his knuckles. It could have been worst... It should have been worst, expect... expect indigo with hints of blue flames somehow, created a buckle shield strapped to his left forearm when that pipe was coming down.

It vanished and he felt drained, so much so that the younger of the pair managed to land the blow that split his lip before he got knocked on his ass from the off hand of the teen pushing him in the chest. If not for a certain battle maniac's arrival, he would have been hit by that pipe that the teen was using. And so, he managed to come away with just simple bruises and the slip lip, not that it was from his personal effort, particularly as he had been lured away concerning the mentioning of his younger brother.

The glares, of course, do not have any kind of effect on the simple stuff canine nor was it making him feel any better. He moves to the edge of the bed after a few more seconds with a soft groan and staring at his fore left arm. Ike's thoughts circling around the incident once more, this time, it's trying to recall how he felt when that flame came out. Which, it rather hard given that some very strong feelings were involved and, he's not sure he wants to try and re-experience those emotions as strongly as he had earlier.

Yet, he wants to see if he can't call up that flame. In his mind, he can see the indigo with a touch of blue threading in it. Envisioning the way it moved while the little tingle of his arm's fine hair as the flame flowed into the form of a buckle shield. It's hard to keep that experience in mind, yet...

It's like it's happening all over again and there's that draining feeling. There's a weight on his left arm and opening his left eye, he finds that buckle shield there, glowing indigo with blue. Then, it winks out as he opens both eyes and moving his right index finger to touch the shield.

While he feels tired, it's not the same kind of exhaustion from before. Then, he looks in the direction of the plushy and there's something about its eyes... He picks it up and finally notices what's different, what's odd.

The eyes of the stuff coyote, they had been a simple off yellow, feral yellow, actually. Now though, the color of the eye beads are blue. Before his eyes, seconds tick by and the blue gives way to the feral yellow. "I didn't imagine that, right?"

Nothing answers him and Ike turns the stuff animal over, checking for any hidden compartment or zipper. Nothing to find, though he can't help but notice the feel of the fur. It's not fake, it wasn't created in a factory, no, this was fur, actual fur that came from some kind of animal, maybe a canine.

Feeling a bit self concuss, he sniffs it and... there's a hint of weather to it. There's faint scent that reminds him of rain falling but also, the smell of early morning fog, chilly mist, late winter kind at that. He feels rather foolish about his action, his face flushing, yet, instead of dropping the stuff toy, he moves it and tries to stare into its eyes while the tip of his nose is almost touching the stitched black nose, well, to be fair, as he focuses on the nose, it looks too real to be stitched or a plastic one.

Leaving the issue of the nose aside for now, he stares into the eyes. He doesn't blink, trying to... he honestly doesn't know what he's looking for, the eyes clearly had to be plastic and the feral yellow seems to be painted on. As he loses focus, his vision starting to go double, he just wanting something to happen, suddenly, it's like he's looking into hazel eyes with whites and loses himself in the reflection of feral yellow eyes looking into hazel eyes, again and again. He's not sure when but he finally gets around to blinking, only when he returns to himself, he's not on the bed any more.

He's on the floor and he can clearly hear the sounds of his mother working on supper in the kitchen. Flickering an ear in the direction of his little brother's room, he can hear Tsuna chewing on something crunchy. Getting to his feet, he finds everything so much... smaller then it should and then catches sight of himself in the mirror.

The reflection staring back, it could only be described as a hybrid of man and a coyote. Ears flicker backwards and he feels something flatten against his skull. Seeing a tail, he wills it to flicker to the right and not only does he see it move to the right, but feels something moving behind him. Ears perk up from their previous position and he takes a step towards the mirror and then again, reaching out with his right hand, he sees his right arm and the strange mixture of hand and paw touching the mirrors surface, half expecting the mirror to give way.

It doesn't and he can kind of feel the mirror's surface, it seems his current form's hand isn't as sensitive as a human's own. He releases the breath he had been holding and then, dips his head, his gaze moving towards the floor, cocking his head to the side as he studies the legs and feet slash paws. "Crazy..." The voice that comes out is rough and a touch deeper then it should be.

Breathing deeply through his nose, Ike closes his eyes as he turns his head towards the door. He slowly moves towards the door, the smells grow stronger. Standing by the door, he tries to make sense of what it is he's smelling, it's slow going and some guess work, the smells belonging to chemicals were easy, the fake scent of flowers his mom uses for her shampoo and body wash. There's a sharp hint of tears clinging to her natural scent and... car exhaust fog, which almost causes him to snarl at, the scent just seems to stir up something within him for it's the smell of wrongness. Toxic, really, man made, really.

Nothing a Rite of Cleansing couldn't fix. He pauses and wonders where that came from. Rite of Cleansing, he should know what that was, yet, the information isn't there.

With a snort and shake of his head, he stares at the door for a few seconds before closing and doing his best to filter out the other smells, doing his best to memorize Tsuna's scent, which takes a number of minutes and then, wonders how he could miss that Scent. Sadly, the smell of blood and fear clings to his younger brother's scent, yet, like their mother, there's a scent that's he can't help but find to be artificial in nature, yet seems to be seamlessly mixed with the baseline human gender smell, only this one was worst, so much so that he swears his stomach wants to empty out. The smell, it's so foul and wrong, after all, it's the smell of stale water sitting in a toxic tainted metal barrel that seems to be slowly dripping with acid.

He wrinkles his nose and fights to keep from gagging. He begins to breath through his mouth and out through his nose, every so often, he swallows forcefully. Tsuna, his little brother smells like he's been poisoned... like he's suffering from a diseased he contracted from outside of himself. Without thinking, he's opening the door and heads for his brother's room, pausing at the door as his rather large pawish hand reaches to the door knob. Ike becomes uncertain, just what was he thinking? Wondering the house while looking like a monster from a classic folklore, maybe even from a horror film.

Then, the door opens and there's a ooze wall, then it flows out of the room, a foul, toxic orange bubbles even as it pours out of the room, engulfing him as it eats away at his fur and skin.

Ike wakes, bolting right up in bed and his stomach turns. He tries to rush out of the room but, well, he doesn't make it and out comes his stomach's contents. It's not long before his mom arrives, trying to comfort him as he's on his knees as he's trying to keep from dry heaving.

As he comes to control his reaction, Ike takes a look up and pales in horror at the sight before him. Ike tries to move away only he finds himself on his butt and begins to shiver, after all, the being that he thought was his mom, it's seems to be a human only mummified with pale indigo bandages and pit black eyes staring at him. "What's wrong honey?" His mom's voice comes from the mummy as it takes a step towards him.

"Are you feverish?" This time, the voice kind of becomes static mid way in the word feverish. "Mommy will make it better." The voice is a pale imitation of his mom's voice, there's a hollow quality to it and the pit black eyes turn toxic green and the bandages slowly unwrap, moving towards him. He's quick to back away some more, not wanting the horror to come closer.

Finding his voice, he screams, "No! Help! Somebody! Anybody! Help!" Bringing up his hands to fend off the mummy.

With a crack of a whip, the bandages dart at him, his right gets entangled and the indigo color of the cloth glows. "Help! Get off of me!" He tries to tear the bandage from his right arm, a numbness is trying to seep into his being.

"Mommy will make it better." Static seems to be the underlining tone of the pale, female voice. As he closes his eyes and tries to pull away, he's suddenly falling and there's suddenly nothing on his right arm.

Opening his eyes, stares up at the sky and suddenly, he's wet as he splashes through the surface of water. Ike tries to swim up only to find something blocking him, glass, perhaps? All he knows is he can't break through and as he pounds, he keeps trying to hold his breath yet, when his body rebels, he can breath.

He's bewildered and as stares around, his quick movements cause the usual sounds that he knows as his body moves through the water. Iki looks up at the sky and finds a raven circling the orange sky and purple clouds. Yellow remains the color of the sun.

Somehow, he hears the craw of the raven and the raven breaks from flying in a circle. Unthinkingly, Ike swims after, following the raven's shadow that's cast by the sun on the raven. His legs kick up and down as his pushes through the water with his arms. The block keeps gently pushing him down but it doesn't slow him down.

As he swims, he spies a shark swimming lazily after a fat tuna that's already got a few bite marks. There's some blood coloring the water but the raven leads him around the encounter and the tiger shark doesn't seem to spar him a glance. He glances over his left shoulder, watching as the shark rushes forward and bites down on injured fish, tearing more from the tail while the tuna wiggles about in pain, more blood is added to the water.

Looking away, he tries to speed up, putting some distance between himself and the site of slow pace feeding, it's clear that the tuna fish is in pain yet the shark just doesn't grant it the mercy of a quick death, just a slow and pain-filled one. Thankfully, after some time, he begins to hear the song of whales and then the clicks of dolphins. As it grows louder, he can hear the sound of splashing.

Suddenly he's being pushed up, up into the sky and it's a Killer Whale. Ike is launched out of the water with the whale. He's quick to grab the large fin on the back and though he tries, he finds himself unable to breath. Then, arcing back into the water, the whale pulls him along through the water. He glances around to find that more Killer Whales were around him, some are leaping out of the water while others were just breaking the surface to breath.

He travels with the pod for unknown amount of time, even managing to grab a fish from the school that the pod seems to be herding through the water. Day turned to night and then night to day. Red seems to be the color of the storm clouds and it seems that green lightning dancing through the clouds with blue rain falling down, thunder can be heard heart beats after the dance of green lightning. Some of the clouds do remain purple and the sky's orange is rather dark shade of orange. There had been may such storms that he experienced with the pod.

At some point, he spies a familiar shadow and pushing himself off the Killer Whale, he swims after the raven's shadow once more. No backwards glance nor was there any song of sorrow from the pod at his departure. In time, the song of whales become grows dim until there's nothing. As dusk begins, he finds himself in a kelp forest and encounters salmon darting about the kelp.

As he goes to grab one, he notices something brown diving from the surface and he follows after, curious as to what the brown beast was. As he comes to the bottom, he finds a sea otter swimming about, nosing for clams or mussels. The otter spies him and swims up to him, circles him and with a hard splash of its mighty tail, returns to its hunt for a meal among the kelp and the rocks littering the floor.

The cry of a raven reminds him of why he's here and he swims up near the surface. A few miles later and he's pulling himself out of the water, onto a beach. Able to breath the air, he glances around for shelter as the sun is almost gone from the sky. The black of night cloaking the orange of the day sky.

He spies a carved pole and heads towards it, then he spies the lodge that's a few feet from the very tall carved pole sporting stylistic images of animals with that of a raven being at the top of the pole. The paint used on the carvings is red and black. While he does cast glancing at the wooden lodge, his interest is on the carved animals. The pole is very familiar to him, like he's seen it before...

Shivering, he is reminded that he's not just damp but naked, his pajamas had slowly washed away during his time with the Killer Whale pod. Ike glances at the raven at the top before turning to regard the lodge. At the entrance he pauses and bites his lower lip for a few seconds before gathering up his courage.

"Hello? Anyone home?" Ike calls out. "It's getting kind of dark." He adds after a few minutes of silence.

The door opens and a man takes a moment to look him over. "Took your time, didn't you?" The man muses and he rubs the back of his neck, answering, "Well, I guess?"

"Come on in then. I have something of yours, Ike." The man says and opens the door wide while moving to allow him to enter.

Stepping through, his being ripples and he's on all fours as he finishes walking through the door. Glancing at his host, he finds Raven in his feathery glory. He feels guilt flare within and his tail comes to be tucked between his legs.

"I'm not angry with you, Raven Runs-Laughing." Raven states and Runs-Laughing sighs, his tail moving from its previous position. "Come by the fire. Make yourself comfortable."

He pauses to glance at the door, after all, it feels odd to leave who he is now at the door, it's strange, being Raven Runs-Laughing more fully since he had been reborn. First Ptah and now Raven... He muses as he walks over towards the fire. It takes him a few seconds to get comfortable, curled up by the fire.

"How have you found life as a human?" Raven asks him after a few minutes of silence beyond the crackling of the fire. "It's... different, so much more worrying... Overthinking, not enough enjoying life as is." Runs-Laughing admits after reflecting on Ike's life. "More focus on either the past or thoughts of what can be. Then... then... something is wrong at the house, with new mother and litter-mate..."

Raven chuckles as only a raven could and he stuffs his muzzle in his bushy tail, waiting for Raven to speak. For now, he's just enjoying the warmth of not just the fire but of his fur coat. The company of his Totem is unexpected but very welcome.

"Yes, they do, don't they?" Raven muses and moves within view. Settling down, Raven's feathers puff up a bit. "Your litter-mate sports a Spiritual Seal, it's trying to deny him his Spirit and thus the Body is suffering." Raven suddenly explains after some time. "Your new mother, she's... if it weren't for you, she would be far worst. The man she married, his Spiritual Gift has provoked a reaction from her own, inactive, Spiritual Gift, thus creating her... fascination and attraction with him."

"Her power wants, seeks, to intertwine with that one's power. If not for your birth, it's likely the pining would have continued until either that man died or she dregs up the Will needed to say enough is enough." Raven admits after some more time of silence.

He's not impatient by the pace of this conversation, he already suspects that if he were more Ike then Runs-Laughing, he would be. Humans, so occupied with the concept of Time. Counting it, saving it, even spending it. Always rushing toward something, some goal or task. Then again, he suspects that no real time is really passing. Come morning, Ike will wake and celebrate the day of his Birth, but for now, he's once more the Nuwisha Raven Runs-Laughing.

"The arrangement of your reincarnation, it pretty much ensured that she knew that man will never, fully, care for her." Raven states and he asks, "He didn't want her to keep me as Ike?"

Raven causes a slight dip of his beak. So, he created a crack in the marriage, one that, perhaps, could lead to her recovering from this supernatural attraction. "Dawn comes." Raven states and he lets out a soft groan at the reminder.

Raven's feathers sleek back down and his Patron moves by the door. He gets up from his spot and follows behind a pace behind the Spirit. Raven pulls out a box and once he's near enough, he is given the box. "Your nature in the toy and now you have your knowledge of yourself."

Taking the box in his jaws, the door opens and as he walks through it, Raven says gently, "You are mine, Ike Runs-Laughing, always. You are my Son and I, your Father."

"Happy Birthday!" Ike groans from under his younger brother, who seems to think now is a good time to have jumped onto his bed. "Onii-chan, come on, it's almost noon!"

He sighs in defeat and stares up at the ceiling for a few seconds before doing his best to sit up to look at the younger boy. A glance at the alarm clock shows that it'll be noon in about two hours, not that it matters to his sibling. "Fine, I'm up, I'm up." Ike tells his half sibling and Tsuna turns to study his face for a few seconds.

"Alright then." Tsuna states and then moves to get off the bed. He pushes the covers off and then moves into a sitting position.

"Hey, Tsuna... Are you still cold?" He asks his brother, the question causes the younger to screw up his face in a cute manner. "Ah, well, kind of? It is Winter, still..."

"I mean, like... even in the hottest day, its heat... it doesn't reach every part of you." And this does seem to cause Tsuna's face to feature a look crossed between hope and despair. "I... I know I can help with that."

Tsuna looks like he has his doubts but Ike isn't offended. After all, with Mist Flames, he shouldn't have any trouble figuring out ways to recreate his old Gifts and Rituals. Or hunting through the Umbra to find the knowledge needed about this Flame Seal. His younger brother doesn't know about Flames yet nor about the changes to this world's Spiritual Reflection.

Yea, he needs to learn to call them up and to shape them, but well, its not like he doesn't know what it feels like, to cause a supernatural effect to occur in the physical world. The blue prints of the Gifts or perhaps, the patterns of how he once used Gnosis to cause things to happen, something might still be left within his Spiritual self. Or, perhaps, it's a matter of just relearning using a different kind of fuel?

Tsuna recovers and is heading out of his room. Ike pushes himself up off the bed and follows after, he pauses by the door and glances at the bed. The stuff toy is gone, or perhaps, it's merely returned to the state it was meant to be. Looking at his left arm, he focuses and his fingers shimmer as they transform for a few seconds before he wills them back to normal human fingers.

Ike Runs-Laughing walks out of the room, he's nine now, and he's complete. There's a bright future in this new world, Old Man Coyote is watching over him and what essence of Gaia he carried to this world, it's taken root.

Yea, it won't be the same Gaia that birth his kind and his cousins, but her daughter, so, who knows, maybe she'll create her own changing children out of the Dying Will Users. Wyld knows, they need some kind of task or end goal. Being criminals, what a way to waste their Gifts, so much potential and all focus on making money or being top dog in the seedy underbelly of human corruption, no Wyrm whispering sweet promises of rewards for certain kinds of behavior or Weaver trying to create a certain kind of order.

He greets his mom once he's at the bottom of the stairs before continuing on to the kitchen. As he sits down, he puts aside his thoughts and just basks in what's going on in the kitchen, in the presence of his family. Content with the fact they were near by.

For today, it's enough. His family, as small as it is, is more then enough to bring him happiness, for the sense of belonging.

Ending it here.

To Readers: Here's a some game information for those of you who haven't played Werewolf: the Apocalypse. Currently playing a W20 (20th Anniversary edition) game.

Gifts are spiritual powers that are usually internalized and are easier to learn from a Spirit then from a fellow Shape-shifter as the Spirit may either unlock the power or install it. Some Gifts are easier to learn then others, generally, Rank is the limit when it comes to what Gifts can be learnt. The higher the Rank, the more powerful the Gifts can be learnt.

Rabbit Run is a Nuwisha Gift, it's effects are the same as the Silent Striders' Gift, Speed of Thought . It simply doubles the running speed of the user for the scene at the cost of a single Gnosis.

Rituals are expressions of Spiritual Compacts between shape-shifters and Spirits that typically require a Ritual Master to lead others through. Effects vary and require time to prepare plus special items.

Rite of Cleansing is a Ritual involving the Ritual Master drawing a circle and then placing the person, an object to be cleanse at the center of it, on a side note, it can even be used to cleanse a place. The Ritual Master will typically walk counter clockwise while holding a smothering branch or torch over the person or object. The preferred time to use this Rite is at dawn but can done at any time.

Wyrm used to be the force of destruction in the setting until it got caught in the Weaver's web. This drove it mad as it couldn't escape and it became a corrupting force of the setting.

Weaver is all about creating things and at some point, it grew resentful of the Wyrm's actions of destroying its creations so it plotted to capture the Wyrm to keep its creations safe.

Wyld is the raw forces of the setting, it's untapped potential that the Weaver would then shape into things and the Wyrm would destroy said things, allowing the remains to return to the Wyld. Due to the Weaver's trapping and the Wyrm's corruption, it's not as unlimited as it once was, after all, two forces are taking from it and nothing is returning to it.

Umbra is the spiritual world and divided into near and far. Near was more like the physical world while the Far Realm tended to be more abstract. The gauntlet has varying levels of thickness with it being the harder to cross in urban areas due to the Weaver's influence being strongest to rural area, stronger in Wyld, having the thinnest levels. Umbra is the usual home of Spirits and Banes, the oldest of places or items are more likely to have reflections in the Umbra.

Gnosis is the Spiritual pool used to activate Gifts, used in some Rituals, or to slip through the Gauntlet instantly. Some of the shape-shifting races can regain Gnosis viva meditation typically at the beginning of a new day by reflecting on the inner spirit that is within the shape-changer. The difficulty goes up if used day after day. Spirits could be bargain with to regain Gnosis as well.

Fera is the general name for all shape-shifting breeds.

Nuwisha, werecoyote, don't form packs among themselves, so it's not unusual for them to have personal Totems. There's usually 100 individuals in the physical world at any one time, the rest tend to live in the various Umbra Realms. In the setting, there's werecoyotes born from human stock and then there are those born from coyote stock, Runs-Laughing was born to a pair of coyotes, thus called a Latrani and those werecoyotes born from human parents are called Homid. Beyond the form of their birth, werecoyotes have four other forms and their own terms. Sendeh is the name of the form that could be termed near-coyote, it's size is smaller then a grey wolf but bigger then your typical coyote. It's not unusual for them to hide themselves among the Garou as New Moons.

Garou, werewolf, do form packs and typically have collective Totems, Pack Totems. Like the werecoyotes, they also call those werewolves born from human stock Homids while those from wolf stock are called Lupus. Unlike the werecoyotes, they have been known to get together and the resulting child is usually called Metis and usually suffers from some kind of medical condition, one could be born hairless while another with brittle bones. Metis are sterile and thus, can't continue the werewolf race. They also sub-divide themselves into Tribes with each Tribe having a Patron Spirit, for example Silent Striders' Patron is Owl. Then, socially, the Moon you were born under is your typical role in Garou society, those best suited to be Warriors are those born under the Full Moon while those born under the New Moon are considered to be Tricksters. Garou have strained relations with their fellow shape-shifters and have caused the extinction of the werebats, wereboar, and wereaurochs, then the extinction of one of their own Tribal siblings, the Bunyip, who were native to Australia.

Halloween Episode, My Style Part 9

I don't own anything!

August 1st Afternoon

Willow browses through some old table top RPGs while Xander is busy looking through the offerings of old comics the Used Bookstore has. The red head continues to watch her friend and crush out of the corner of her eye every few minutes. Majority of the titles of the books she's looking through are for Advance Dungeons and Dragons with a few source books for other, less known RPGs like Cyberpunk and Paranoia. At least in this stack from books.

As she finishes with that row, she moves onto the next and after the first six, she comes across Shadowrun. She's kind of heard of the game, it's one where Dwarves and Elves begin to get born, magic resurging in that world, and mega corporations pretty much took over the world, being the global powerhouses instead of countries. It's related to Cyberpunk only, it's popular enough that people made electronic games of it.

She picks up the mostly purple book, Virtual Realities 2.0 and flips it over to read the back of it.

"There I was, standing next to Joe on the corner, when outta nowhere comes this overgrown troll riding the hugest Harley Scorpion I've ever seen, blastin' away from all three firmpoints. What really scared teh bejeezus outta me were his arms - coupla big chainsaws, buzzin' away like a hundred million wasps. He rode right up and sliced through Joe like a hot knife though butter! Joe flickered a bit, his face contorting into a pirmal scream, and disappeared. I hotfooted it back to the squat with the words, "Buy Mitsuhama" running through my brain - don't ask me why, "Then Joe's brother unhooked us from the Matrix...

...AND THE REAL NIGHTMARE BEGAN."

She flicks to the front once more before putting it back. Willow continues to go through this stack, finding a number of barely worn game books, a lot of them seem rather new releases as well. She even finds a few GM screens along with campaign books and pads of character sheets.

When she came upon a Call of Cthulhu RPG and couldn't help but stare as she recalls what kind of stories that author had written and compare them to what she knows now. With a slight shake of her head, she continues on, coming upon the odd RuneQuest and Traveller source book plus more Dungeons and Dragon books.

There's a lot of Dungeons and Dragon books in this particular store, or at least, that's what she thinks. Then again, it's been around the longest. Also the first of its kind. Willow reminds herself before glancing in Xander's direction, noticing that he seems to have found another comic to buy.

As she continues she finds a few Warhammer Fantasy Roleplay, a dozen Gamma World books, a copy of Ars Magica, a selection of Vampire the Masquerade clan books, two Champions corebooks, and an old edition of Tunnels and Trolls. By the fourth stack of RPGs, she is beginning to find Palladium books and Rolemaster as well some foreign games in their original languages and a few of the previously mentioned games written in french and german.

By the sixth, she pretty much came to the end of the RPGs and is now finding novels that were written in those fictional worlds of the RPGs. Most of it is for Dungeons and Dragons in their Greyhawk or Forgotten Realms setting. At the third stack, she finds something interesting. A trio of Shadowrun novels, the first is Never Deal with a Dragon, the second novel in the series is Choose Your Enemies Carefully, and the final one is Find Your Own Truth.

As she reaches for them, Willow turns to look around before pausing to see if she can't find something to stand on to reach them without straining herself. Soon enough, she has the three down from the stack and she flips the first one over to read the back.

As she opens the book and begins to read the first chapter, Willow jumps a little bit at Xander suddenly being behind her and having placed a hand upon her left shoulder.

"Hey, Wills, find anything good?" Xander asks with an easy grin, his own selection of comics, about three, where in his other hand.

"Ah, yea, I did. Ready to go already?" She asks and Xander nods, as he replies, "Well, if you're not ready, I could always come back with a search party by closing to dig you out of your pile of books."

"Oh, no, I'm ready. Just these three!" Willow tells him and Xander retracts his hand from her shoulder, leading the way to the counter to pay for the three comics.

She follows behind, her purchase is nearly sixteen dollars but the books were in surprisingly good condition.

September 13th

Noting that Willow had left three books, paper back novels, on the table of the library, Xander muses that they look familiar and leans over to pick up the top one, the title of which is Find Your Own Truth.

The title struck a cord within him as he looks at the picture on the front of the novel. A quick flip and he reads the back of it, then shifts his focus onto the other two novels. The other two were the first two installments of the trilogy.

He picks up the nearest one, Choose your Enemies Carefully and studies the front, again, the title causes something to resound with him. Then again, the two titles seem to be pretty simple statements about how to live one's life. The last, the one he couldn't easily reach was the first installment and its title is Never Deal with a Dragon.

The novels were set in the Shadowrun RPG universe and his eyes flicker towards a particular part of the library floor. Where a particular incident occurred at the end of the school year. At the memory, he scowls at the recent events that were connected with that particular event.

He gets up and as he reaches the door, pauses and then returns to grab the novels, deciding to return them to his childhood friend.

That night, even as he is laying in bed after an exhausting night, his considers the two titles and wonders, just what was his truth? Why was this his life? After all, Jess was avenged, the Master's dead, right?

My enemies, that's an easy one, right? Xander thinks as finds himself slowly drifting off to sleep.

October 20th

Xander is back at the Used Bookstore to browse through their collection of comics for those same ones he couldn't buy back in August. As he enters the store, he comes to a stop near where he had seen Willow engrossed with one of those novels that she had bought.

It's not that hard to find which stack of books she found those three at as he finds more novels set in that same universe along with more copies of those three books. Not that he's ever played Shadowrun before, he'd been more into playing Dungeons and Dragons along with Star Wars RPG when they wanted something different then fantasy.

Finding a different novel, Changeling, it's about a boy who ends up changing into a troll and how he survives as a Shadowrunner. He puts it back and continues to read the spines until he finds a novel that's different. "Catalyst Game Labs?" Xander mutters out loud and it takes some effort to get the novel out of the stack. As he looks at the cover, it's strikingly different, for one, there's not that horned skull that's the usual Shadowrun mark, this one looks like it came off a totem pole.

The Vladivostok Gauntlet. Xander reads the title and he then opens the book to find the date of publication. Upon finding it, he starts dumbly at the date that's there, in black and white. "Twenty-thirteen." He states with a hint of disbelief.

It takes time before he realizes that this was most definitely an example of Hell Mouthy weirdness. With that in mind, Xander glances around the shop, suddenly wondering what other novels and books could be found, whether due to coming from a different time or maybe from a different dimension.

Or maybe it's just the one? Xander thinks to himself and decides to search among the stack before him to reassure himself only, he just finds more and not just of the Shadowrun variety. There's a series of books based on the adventures of one Percy Jackson and some kid named Harry Potter. There's novels set in the Forgotten Realms and Dragonlance that are also out of place due to publication dates. He finds some unknown series called Animorphs where a race of alien brain slugs are invading Earth, a number of Warcraft novels based off of an old Blizzard title as well as novels in two settings, Diablo and Starcraft.

It's not long before he finds some very interesting, but also unsettling table top RPGs. Like a fourth edition D&D book called Open Grave or books for All Flesh Must be Eaten game line. Hell, he's found a strategy guide for a Xbox game called Far Cry Primal. He sure as hell has never heard of an Xbox, let alone that Playstation has plans for a PS4!

Xander looks with new eyes at the collection of comics and find a few graphic novels among them, including manga titles Naruto, One Piece, and Bleach. He sure has hell don't recall seeing any of this in August, so why is he seeing this now?

What changed between then and now? He wonders to himself as he doesn't know where to begin. Just where is he suppose to start buying any of it? Should it matter if he does buy any of it?

Nobody seems to be noticing anything, heck, he even picked up one of those manga, a Naruto volume 1-2-3 and inquired as if they had more like this one. The man behind the counter took a look, seemingly not noticing anything off, and told him that if they did, it would be among the comics. He even asked about where they got them, only to be told it was among some crates that they bid on from an estate sale.

After some time, he makes his selection of what to purchase, thankfully, a number of what he bought were under two bucks even though a number of the titles look to be in either new or great condition. Then, as he is about to leave, he pauses as he stares at the window. For a second he thought... With a shake of his head, Xander pushes the door and leaves, already having made up his mind to head to the Library to get G-Man's opinion on this latest bit of Sunnyhell weirdness.

Xander wipes his forehead, recently, his health seems to be more then a little off. At some point during the last few days, he seems to suddenly develop a fever that lasts for minimum of five minutes to, a recent record, of twenty minutes before vanishing and leaving behind a fierce set of aches that fade within an hour, though if the increase of him suffering from a fever is increasing, so might the time it takes before those aches fade.

Willow sends her friend and crush a look of concern, she would rather he was at home until they figure out what's the cause of his recent health issues. After all, he's been to the nurse's office for legitimate reasons so he could just skip the whole Tricker'Treater escort assignment and take it easy. She turns away to look at Buffy as the Slayer opens the door to Ethan's.

They enter while Buffy pretty much keeps the awkward silence at bay given that Xander had put an end to the conversation where they were trying to talk/order him home to get some bed rest. The topic? What kind of costume would attract Angel's attention, which Willow decides to focus on, to ignore her concerns for Xander.

Xander finally allows himself to roll his eyes now that his back is facing his two friends. He seriously doesn't see why Buffy wants to get it on with that demon possessed corpse, after all, that relationship clearly has an expiry date on it. For a moment, as he is staring down at the discount bin, a mental scene plays out as though it's something playing on a TV screen where Angel and Buffy make the beast with two backs.

It continues to show Angel running out of his shelter and after something happening to his eyes, feeding upon a concerned woman. The mental scene ends, causing him to shiver as he suddenly feels drained and cold. "What was that?"

It takes Xander a moment to realize he said that out loud. He closes his eyes and places a hand over his eyes as they throb a bit as he suddenly feels his head pounding. He suddenly wishes he could just sit down as his body seems to be still feeling a chill and it's not from the air conditioner that's keeping the usual heat of the Californian sun at bay. With his other, he does his best to support himself as he does his best to bring his breathing under control.

Then, there's a hand on his shoulder and he stiffens as he says, "I'm fine, Wills. I don't need..."

A distinctly male and British voice interrupts him in the middle of his argument, "Wowo, hold up there, mate. You just look like one good gust will cause you to crash. I rather not have a law suit, so why don't you follow me to the back and take a seat?"

Xander presses his lips but as his vision gets tinted with a particular color and realizes that while the man does have something planned, he isn't sure how but knows it's not aimed any him. Well, not aimed at anyone currently in the store and the man really didn't want him to cause a scene, so, his offer was above board. "Sure." He says and allows himself to be lead to a back room.

As Buffy becomes silent at her admiring of the white dress, Willow looks up in time to see Xander heading into the back, likely to try on a costume, which makes her wonder what changed his mind about his costume choice. A bit later, the man returns and noticing that she's looking at him, approaches with a friendly smile.

"What can I help you, lovely young ladies with?" The man asks, a British accent coloring his tone. Willow relaxes upon hearing it as it reminds her of Giles and Buffy inquires about the price of the dress.

Xander somehow, dozed off sitting in the back. He's surrounded by colors of the rainbow and as he looks down, he notices a city below with Japanese advertisements mixed in with English and French. It's morning and as he watches, the city seems to fast forward as within minutes, it's noon and some more, it's evening. As time seems to slow, he looks up and around the circling colors that seem to dance.

Then, they seem to grow in size, only as Xander looks down does he realizes it's not them growing, it's him sinking into the floor! He struggles and as he's about to fully sink into the ground, someone grabs him and as he looks up, all he can tell is that the man is bright orange and warm. Then the orange tries to transfer onto him and he lets go of the man in panic. He's following...

Xander gasps and his eyes open as he jerks himself up off the chair. For a few moments, his left fist is alight with flames before they vanish, leaving him to wonder just what the hell did he just see. As he stares at his left fist and recalls what he saw, he doesn't hear anyone entering into the room.

"Awake, sleeping beauty?" A male British voice inquires and as he turns, it's the man from the store, or rather, the owner of the store.

"Your the owner?" He asks in a startled tone and the man blinks, for a second, a surprise and a few other emotions and thoughts flash withing this man's eyes.

"You know, cause you didn't need to go talk with anyone before leading me back here, you know? So I just kind of figured you were." Xander blabs and it feels as though the man believes him. "I mean, if you weren't then someone would have kicked me out of here sooner."

"Quite the young detective? And yes, I am. Ethan's the name." Chaos' the game. Xander mentally adds as Ethan introduces himself. "Looking for a Sherlock perhaps?"

"Ah, no. Maybe some purple face paint and, well, you ever heard of Shadowrun? Something to act as a fake Data Jack." Xander asks the man without knowing why but not about to tell the man to forget about it.

"Shadowrun?" Then the man's eyes light up after a minute and asks, "As in some title of the cyberpunk rpg sort I take it?" To which he nods.

Ethan thinks about it before saying, "The face paint is easy. I might have to... well, come along, let's see if we can't find something for this 'Data Jack'."

He follows after, soon enough, he leaves the store with said purple face paint and a glue bit of cheap metal and plastic that he feels will serve as the purpose. Xander was kind of relieved that neither Buffy or Willow were still in the store to ask what he'd been doing in the back for the last two hours.

Halloween Eve

Xander takes one last look in the mirror, making sure that the fake Data Jack will stay where he kind of glued it without his fingers there to hold it at his right temple. Under his left eye, there's this purple mark that is a gentle arc with three large spikes pointing down to his jaw line. The rest of his costume is pretty much a suit he found in the attic, it didn't fit well and likely had been his father's wedding suit.

With a sigh, he turns from the mirror and heads out of his room. "I'm off!" He says in a chipper tone, not that either of his parents were home. They weren't even in Sunnyhell, having left three days ago to LA concerning, well, they never were clear on that point so he isn't sure why it had been important.

Locking the door, Xander heads to the Summer's Residence, hoping that his feverish afternoon was his last bout for the day.

Xander stares about him while sitting across from him is an albino man, only without bloody red eyes. The people around them, walking around, seem to blur along the edge but what he can see, it makes him glad to be sitting down. "Troll, ork, ork, ork, dwarf, dwarf, dwarf, human... Is that an elf?" He murmurs and follows the classy dress woman sporting rather long and pointed ears.

"Well, to be honest, I'm rather shocked myself. Big fan of Shadowrun I take it? I would have thought Dungeons and Dragons myself." The man muses and Xander turns his attention to the man.

"Not really, never played the game. Wills bought a trilogy of books back in August for it though. Then, well, I started Noticing some oddities." He admits. "G-man was rather shocked once he figured out how to pierce the rather strong illusions on these books."

"Oh, ho?" The man muses but before more could be said, a waiter approaches, human.

"Orders?" The man asks and his table mate orders for the both of them, "Green tea for the both of use and two slices of soy cheese cake, please."

Soy cheese cake? Xander couldn't help but think, it shown clearly on his face as the twenty something is clearly amused by his reaction.

"Well, it is on the menu. Really Alexander, you have a menu in your hands." And he stills, not sure how the man knows his first name.

"I'm Byakuran, by the way. Not that it means anything to you." Byakuran tells him. "And yes, I know who you are and what you've been up to. It's Halloween Eve, I take it. Looks like things will be diverting from... cannon."

Xander's eyes narrow as he become guarded, "What do you want? And leave Buff and Wills alone, if you have a beef with me, then let's keep it with me."

"You know you can't protect them from themselves, don't you? Also, you might want to take a look at your reflection, I think you'll find it enlightening."

"My reflection? What are you..." He stops talking as he looks at the glass of water seated before him, his eyes widening at the look at his features. His right hand moves to his right temple, the cheap metal band he shaped into a ring looking not so cheap or so mandible, even sporting a simple orange gemstone. His index finger gingerly touches a very real and very expensive Data Jack.

"My, my, been experiencing any health issues recently? It looks like someone's decided to give you a bit of a boost. No just wanting to gift you with Sky Flames but the natural charm and grace of a Shadowrun Elf at that."

His eyes flicker to his hair and notices that it's bleaching as he's watching. It's slow but it's there and he sits back as the waiter returns with a pot of hot water and cups that match. Rather gobsmacked, Xander doesn't do much other then meekly accept the tea cup and looks down at the tea within, waiting innocently for him to begin drinking.

"You see, Flames of the Dying Will come in a set of seven. Sky are orange, Storm are red, Rain are blue, Sun are yellow, Lightning are green, Cloud are purple, and Mist are Indigo." Byakuran explains, continuing on after taking a sip from his own cup. "Their properties are Harmony, Disintegration, Tranquility, Activation, Hardening, Propagation, and Construction. Skies have a tendency to draw the others to them, providing them with acceptance and a feeling of Home while they, in turn, become very protective of their Sky, taking the mantle of Guardian."

Then it seems that Byakuran is content to let silence hang between them, every so often, drinking his tea. Then, he asks, "Why? What's the point?" He looks up at the man, because there has to be a catch or over reaching purpose.

"Because a lone Sky is a very sad thing and they are so very rare." The way the other says that and the pitying look, it's clear that Byakuran feels sorry for him. "You won't have to worry about the Tri-ni-set, I doubt they'll be recreated in your universe. After all, you'll have your hands full concerning the plans of Demons, Humans, and Powers that Be looking to use you or be rid of you."

"Why me?" He asks and Byakuran gets a thoughtful look but the waiter arrives with their slices of soy based cheese cake. Curiosity gets the better of him and given that it seems his table mate is pretty much waiting for him to give it a try in stead of trying it himself. He uses his fork and cuts a small piece off of the dessert, Xander chews a bit and shrugs, replying, "It's no Hostess Twinkie."

With a wiry smile, Byakuran tries a bit and hums in agreement, "It's passable as most non-marshmallow desserts go."

"Ah, it looks like our time together, for now, has run out. I'm sure we'll meet up again, at some point." And Xander looks around, sure enough, white comes rushing at him and then...

With a groan, Xander opens his eyes and then closes them while bringing up a hand to block the light from his face. There's a soft beep and he feels something in his arm, he turns his head after a few minutes and notices that he's a hospital room and he's got an IV stuck in his arm. With a sigh, he rises himself up and looks around for something that could give him the date.

Noticing the washroom and since nobody has come to check on him, he figures out how to lower the gate and moves to stand. His legs ache but they hold his weight and taking hold of the IV, gingerly walks over to the washroom.

He reaches for the light switch only to realize, he didn't need it as the light from the room is more then enough for his vision. Moving to stand before the sink, he places both hands on it and then, looks at himself in the mirror.

There's no purple tattoo under his left eye but he does still possess that Data Jack. His hair is more off white then Byakuran's bright white and his eyes were emerald green instead of the light lavender of Byakuran's eyes. His hair is so much longer then it should be and with a slight push, he gets a good look at his right ear. Xander's index finger gently moves along the top of the ear until it comes to the point. He taps it lightly before pulling his hand away and letting his hair fall.

As he turns to look back into the room, he notices the ring from his meeting resting on an envelop. With a sigh, he finishes up in the washroom before walking over to the spot and he puts on the ring before opening the envelop.

To Alexander 'Xander' L. Harris

Greetings, I hope you enjoy my gifts to you, young Chaos Bringer. Now to get down to business, I expect that with the Sky Flames, you will find the edge you will need to protect your love ones, with the Data Jack I trust you will find ways in which to bring yourself profit as you do need to live for yourself every once in a while, and as for the racial shift, I believe you'll find others listening and considering your words far more then they once did.

I am sure that the man who you have come into contact with find ways in which to remain in contact with yourself, consider him a second cousin.

From Wepwawet

PS - You owe me J!

Xander makes a note of the name, he does wonder who J was but it seems that this Wep guy believes that the guy would read this letter. He also finds a cable for the Data Jack along with a device to read the chips that were also within the envelop. He figures magic is how it all fit in the envelop.

He puts the letter back into the envelop and moves to get back into the hospital bed. After a little bit, he fell asleep as his body clearly hasn't seen much use recently and he used up whatever energy he had. Although not before he hides the chip case, the reader, and cable under his pillow.

Xander woke in time to punch the thing next to his bed with his right fist. Orange flames sprout from his ring as he realizes that it's a vampire and he will kill this vampire with his Dying Will! The vampire recovers but with ease, he evades the counter and as his fist finds the vampire's jaw, the flames flash and the vampire is dust.

Breathing heavily, his mind is a whirl but the important part is, he needs to leave, as in now. Listening to that instinct, he changes his cloths into that cheap suit and pockets the envelop and his other belongings. Taking out the IV, Xander leaves and nobody seems to stop him on his way out the door.

The need fades and his vision is no longer tinted with orange once he has been walking for an hour. With a sigh, glances around to where he is and finds himself where Ethan's shop had been. He enters and while the floor is pretty much empty, he feels a pull to the basement and without a second thought, heads down.

Xander finds boxes filled with costumes, props, and some very interesting items that ping with him. He changes out of his dad's suit and into more causal cloths before he begins to take a closer look to the various Chaos Charged items. His only light comes from the street lights outside but in time, he has a mental inventory of what's going to fade by next week and what's going to last until destroyed.

Then he puts the dangerous items in their own pile, the harmless in another, and the useful in the last. With a soft sigh, he realizes that he's hungry and thirsty from the last hour's work. He picks up the wallet he's decided to claim and picks up the various fake credit cards.

With a quick look around, he heads up out of the basement and for the nearest fast food joint. Xander finds himself dusting another three vampires on the way, but then, they were positioned to ambush people heading for the place, just looking for easy meals. He is a bit surprised that one of his fake credit cards was accepted but then, they were in the useful pile for a reason, even if they'll fade soon enough.

While waiting, he finds a coffee newsletter and the date is November 23rd, thankfully, it's the same year as he recalls. As his mind slowly accepts this, his order is done and he heads to another table in order to eat it. Before he leaves, he makes use of the washroom before leaving.

Before he returns, he heads off to do some more late night shopping. While he's a bit unnerved to find that there's a real-estate office open twenty-four hours, seven days a week, upon meeting with them, Xander gets why as they were demons so, they didn't have to worry about vampires and they seem to assume he's one as well from their manner, which muses him.

By the time he leaves, he owns one of the ranches surrounding Sunnyhell along and has a number of a company that will build him a better house. Of course, he needs to know what kind of house he wants and has a bit of time constraint but he's sure that he'll know what to have built once he's spent some time in the library, not the High School one, just the public one.

He heads back to the building and to the basement, Xander then takes the time packing up the various piles into different cloth bags before heading to the second floor where he does find a bed. Closing his eyes, he calls his flames to see if this was a safe place.

Given that there's no nudging to push him out of the room, he assumes it's safe, for the rest of the night at least, and settles in to sleep as he's both mentally and physically exhausted.

Noon

He can't sleep any more so, he gets up and lets out a sigh. As he lays there, he considers everything that's happen so far and can't help but wonder how he knows how to use his Flames. It takes him a few minutes and letting his mind wander did the answer slowly came.

It seems that even though he was going through the SURGE event, his body had been possessed by a Flame using version of himself, one who was possessed Lightning Flames. That Xander, Lex as he came to be called by his Family, had Woken his Flames when he was eight and it wasn't long before he was pretty much absorbed into a Mafia family and trained until he knew how his Flame work on an instinctual level.

When Lex left the body, the instinctual level remained. Sure, the training had been for Lightning Flames but the basics were the same. As he does his best to recall what happened on Halloween, the events play out as though he was watching viva a third person view point. He winces, particularly as that Lex knocked the others out, including Angel, before sneaking away once Willow had left. Before the event ended, Lex had been in the process of breaking into a house viva the basement.

"Byakuran never mentioned the Mafia..." He says out loud but, well, at least he now has some idea of what he wants in a house, if only due to Lex being skilled at breaking and entering into various houses, apartments, and mansions.

Well, satisfied at knowing what happened on Halloween while he was visiting with Byakuran, he gets up and off the bed. He begins some stretches and then takes some time to begin working on mastering his Sky Flames.

As late afternoon arrives, he takes out the Data Jack cable and the chip reader. Inserting a chip and putting the end into his Data Jack, Xander does his best to access the knowledge of the chip without any experience with any of it. Thankfully, some of Lex's Flame training helps in this particular task and finds that this particular chip is information concerning the basics of how to be a Rigger.

He ends it and comes out of the computer interface and switches the chip out for a different one. Two chips later, he finds one that actually is useful concerning hardware engineering and software programing. The previous two had to do with biology of paranormal species and meta-types. Seeing that the sun was fairly low in the sky, get doesn't put in another chip and instead gets ready to leave.

Xander stops off to grab something to eat before heading off to buy himself a decent suit for tonight's meeting with the contractors. It takes three hours for the suit to be done and he paid with a different magical credit card. He head for the bus stop to store the bags filled with Chaos enchanted items away. With the keys, he takes a moment to feel as though he's missing something, it takes him a moment that what he's missing is a cell phone or some kind of com device.

He pushes that away and continues on toward the meeting point, stopping off to buy some hair gel and shades. A quick stop at a washroom and he's adjusted his hair into a suitable style, Lex had fashion drilling into him by his Family and if he wants to come across as serious in this upcoming meeting, he needs to dress the part. Feeling a little more like Lex, he heads off to the office, thirty minute early for the meeting.

He waits for ten minutes before he's led into the office, which is filled with demons. Relying on Lex's manners and his Intuition, he manages to not offend either of the trio of demons, although their gazes do linger a bit too long on his Data Jack they were also polite if a bit doubtful of him, given his age. They spent the last of the night and majority of the early morning going over various blue prints, materials to be used, and drinking a great deal of coffee.

He two third up front before he leaves the office and a time table of when they'll be done. Heading back to the bus station to retrieve his stuff, he reflects on why he hasn't tried to get into contact with Willow, Buffy, or even the G-Man. In the end, it comes down to the fact that he wants a safe house first and foremost and the other, they wouldn't take the changes he's undergone very well.

And if either learn about how I'm paying for this, they wouldn't be very happy. If only because it's me and magic anything. He reflects with a slight frown. Of course, if Buffy had found these cards, she wouldn't haste to use them, oh she'll feel bad but she'd justify it by claiming she's the Slayer and it's all going to a good cause as she says so many lives.

Realizing he is both tired and hungry were part of his current negative thoughts, he decides to rectify it. Having eaten his fill, he heads off to the nearest nice hotel to check in until his house is built. Once within, he undresses and heads to have a relaxing shower before closing the curtains and falling asleep in the king size bed.

Xander goes through his investments and when ever he feels a twitch from his flames, he makes a note on which investment was the cause along with whether to sell his shares or to buy more of them. From Lex, he knows to listen to his flame instincts when it makes itself known and despite logic or orders, to do as it tells him. It's what helped Lex survive, even thrive, in the Mafia world pretty much whole and come out of situations pretty much clean.

As he finishes, he gets up and puts away his breakfast dishes plus his glass. While tempting to drink coffee or even tea, he's keeps telling himself that he prefers his caffeine coming from soda pop along with the sugar rush it gives him. Although, he's been drinking more Brisk Ice Tea these pass four days then your usual name brand sodas, better for his teeth, well, he thinks it is, plus it's a decent enough compromise, at least in his mind it is.

With the dishes and glass in the sink, he walks back to his table and picks up the paper to see which new companies he should invest in based upon his intuition. As he gets half way through the list, making notes again on which to invest in, a knock occurs at his order. He pauses and within a second, summons his Sky Flames only to find his intuition seemingly purring happily.

Dismissing his flames, Xander gets up from his chair and walks over to answer his hotel suit's door. Unlocking it, he looks down to find two packages, one much larger then the other. His eyes flicker about the hallway before he crouches down to pick up the pair of parcels. He's sure to close the door behind him and once he puts the two down, he puts the lock back on.

Before heading back to his table, Xander picks up the smaller of the two. Once he sets it on the table, he pulls out his pocket knife and slices gently through the tape. Opening it, he finds a letter and he picks it up to read it. It's addressed to him and it's from Raven, oddly enough, and mostly about not letting a certain Egyptian God or Roman God being the only two to 'gift' him with something.

Curious, now, he picks up the item wrapped in simple brown paper. He opens it to find a mini totem sporting the image of a hyena done up in a particular First Nation style. "Oh, ha ha." He murmurs as he turns the wooden statue about before putting it down on the table top. He leaves the letter by the wooden statue that's about twenty cm long and twelve cm thick, moving the paper into the box before putting the box onto the floor.

He walks over and hefts the much larger box onto the table and uses the same pocket knife to cut the tape, again carefully. Another letter, only this time, it's from the Norse God Loki wishing him luck in his future battles and to remind him to never lose his sense of humor. With a slight smile, he puts the letter down and digs through the white foam packing peanuts to find note just a lap top with it's power cord and a wireless mouse but also a mini computer tower with its own power cord. There's a few other boxes within it, but he's more focus on the lap top.

He can't help but whistle at how clearly beyond the current level of tech the two where. Xander gets the lap top out of its plastic bag as well as the power cord. Within moments, the power cord is connected to the wall socket and the lap top.

Before he starts it up, he moves the mini computer tower back into the box along with the plastic ties and baggies, putting the box onto the floor in the living room part of the hotel room. With that done, he then quickly gathers up his papers and moves them onto one of the counter tops of the kitchen, clearing up the table so he can focus on setting his lap top without accidentally messing up his note book or his investment files.

As the lap top hums to life upon his pressing of the power button, he takes a moment to look at Raven's gift. His flames hum happily and he lights them up as he reaches for the totem statue. The moment his hand touches the statue, it changes until it's a hyena pup, only with dark orange spots and overly orange eyes. She yawns, and Xander just knows the pup is female before looking at him and starts to get up to walk over to him.

Xander quickly scoops her up and she snuggles into his chest, it doesn't take him long to realize that he now has a living, breathing baby hyena to take care of. "So... what should I do with you?" He asks the pup, not that he gets an answer as she fell asleep.

Slowly, he sets the pup on his lap before beginning to set up his lap top. Every so often, he pets the pup's head and scratch behind her ears. Mentally making a note to look up what kind of milk is best for a hyena pup while spending the rest of the morning going through the various programs for sometime before the pup wakes up hungry. Xander sighs and checks the time, realizing that it's almost noon and he still has other things to do, he shuts down his lap top to attend to the pup's needs and then getting onto the phone to manage his various investments.

By late afternoon, Xander heads out to buy a few things, namely for the pup.

Dec 4th

With Shenzi happily occupied within the little play pen, Xander closes the window and turns on the television. With the cord that connects the mini computer tower to the tv, he puts down the tv's remote before picking up the wireless remote for the tower. Within the tower are various movies, tv shows, and music.

He found a wireless internet router in the box along with various cords. Sadly, his Data Jack doesn't allow him to interact with either the tower or his lap top. Then again, he does have plans to build to make a converter to that would allow his Data Jack to interface with the two, he also just needs to write up a program for it as well.

Finding the season he left off at, Xander presses play and begins watching How I Met Your Mother, third season episode ten. Lilly kind of looks a bit like Willow, and he sighs but at the reminder. There's posters with his previous looks about the town, even Demons were looking for him, if only to get at Buffy through him.

It also seems that none of the nurses noticed his changing looks, but then, it could be supernatural influence of the town that helps people ignore the weirdness of the night life. Or it could be something somebody did to keep it a secret.

Whatever it was, whenever he thought about contacting Buffy, Ms Calendar, Giles, or Willow, his Intuition reacts in a negative fashion. It's frustrating, what's the point of staying in Sunnyhell if he can't be with his friends? It's not like he hasn't killed a few Demons since he's gotten out of the hospital, there's been more then a few that have tried to kill him, in various ways. It's only due to his Sky Intuition and application of Flames that he's been able to avoid death or capture.

Lex's memories are slowly fading, not quickly but they were dulling and he only just realized it was happening yesterday morning when he was out meeting with that construction company. The knowledge that Lex knew concerning certain details of the plans didn't jump to the forefront of his mind. Once the meeting was done, he quickly headed back to the hotel, not just because he left Shenzi alone and needed to get back but also to mediate to reconnect with Lex's memories.

Which bring him to the journal sitting in his lap and the pencil resting in his left hand. Xander sighs and quickly reaches the right state and opens himself to Lex's Remanent within him. Without looking opening his eyes, he begins to write out Lex's life from the moment he sparked his Flames. It'll take him at least three days to write it all out throughout various journals but it's something that he needs to do. He just knows it's important, then he'll reread them and create summaries and lesson plans.

With the various gifts now wrapped, Xander considers how he'll have them delivered. As he thinks about it, he scratches Shenzi behind the ears with one hand, which doesn't do much to distract her from wanting to nibble at his left hand's fingers. Shenzi's almost fully grown and doesn't look anything like a normal hyena. She kept her black coloring and the orange of her spots only grew brighter while her once neon orange eyes have become more a pale orange. She's also displayed an ability to alter her size, taking on her pup size to the size of a SUV with but a burst of Sky Flames.

That particular discovery occurred when a pair of rather tall Demons of a particularly reptilian look came charging at them while Xander had taken Shenzi out to a park. They proved rather good at nullifying his flames, upon examination he found a relic implanted near their hearts, the feel of the two relics remind him of a particular black flame that only certain people weld. He's thankful that it didn't provide any protection against Shenzi's much larger bite force.

He's been rather paranoid after that episode, it means that he can't always trust his Intuition to avoid traps or ambushes. Thankfully, Shenzi's senses weren't easily fooled and he's taken to bringing her everywhere with him.

It also made him wonder if the reason he even received those two packages, Xander checked and found they had been placed on delayed delivery on October thirty-first, hadn't been to keep him from going out during that first week of December. It could also mean that he could expect another parcel from a Trickster that would do something to aid him in avoiding a course of action or maybe something to help in future conflicts?

He makes a face, it's unlikely that it'll happen and he shouldn't expect such aid to begin with. Xander needs to step up more, to start actually looking for threats that could be coming his way, not just reacting to them.

Which means hacking, a lot of hacking and creating an information net work. The hacking was easy, so very easy even if he hadn't been able to create a decent Decker board. Any professional Decker would more then likely rolling their eyes at it and proclaiming their disgust at the board even being worth its parts. But, he's in a different universe and having access to a different set of tech then what the Shadowrun universe would have had at this point in their timeline.

What he's discovered from his various hacks and watching through various video cameras is, some pretty big players wanting him dead. Well, they wanted the Flame Cloaked, Wired Elf dead, funny how they all have the same Code name for him, Jack Frost. Given he's got a movie called Rise of the Guardians who's center character was a teenage spirit of Fun and Winter, he was kind of honored by the name. Not enough to make it his official name, nope, he's actually created his own ID for his new looks.

Edward, or Ed, as his first name, another name taken from a hyena from the Lion King and maybe from a certain Anime character, Alphonse as his middle name, taken from Ed's brother from Full Metal Alchemist, and lastly, Hammett for his last name, taken from the guitarist and songwriter for the heavy metal band Metallic, one Kirk Hammett. He figures it's a decent alias, Edward 'Ed' A. Hammett, age is the same only his birthday being September 13th instead of his actual one.

Fictional parents, fictional history, aka home schooled, and of course, the 'seed' fund he inherited when his parents had died when he was fourteen, nothing overt, particularly given they moved to Sunnydale when he was nine years old. He, of course, had to create a connection to some actual, although dead, people to be his grandparents.

He moves his right hand to begin scratching her under her jaw. He bit later, leans a bit more forward to and resumes scratching Shenzi behind her right ear while he brings his left hand to take over scratching her under her jaw. Xander feels himself relax a little as he watches Shenzi's eye half close in pleasure, causing a slight smile to bloom.

He really didn't know why he had an animal companion, it's not something that most Flame users typically receive from what little of Lex's memories remain within his head. But, moment's like these, he couldn't bring himself to wonder about it too much, just enjoying the comfort and companionship the hyena offers.

"So, what do you think? Edward Alphonse Hammett, has a certain ring to it, right?" He murmurs softly to Shenzi, who yawns a bit before moving her head more into his right hand, demanding more scratches. He increases his scratching speed a tad.

After what feels like hours, Shenzi pulls away, stands, stretches, and moves to where her bowls are located. Xander hums softly before getting up himself, stretching a bit as he turns to gaze upon the gifts for Mrs Summers, Giles, Buffy, and Willow. Xander turns away from the gifts and heads for the bathroom.

He'll figure it out later, right now, he could use a nap.

Dream

"A field? Really? I was rather hoping for a graveyard or maybe even a club." He hears a familiar voice comment and Xander opens his eyes once he turns his head in the direction of the voice.

"What's wrong with a field? It's a wide open space, you can easily tell if anyone was sneaking up on you." He defends the field.

Byakuran smirks and then pops a few small, colorful marshmallows into his mouth with his left hand while his right holds the bag. The other looks down at him before offering his left hand to help him get up off the grass. Xander takes it and pushes himself up while his guest pulls.

The sun is slowly making its way up into the sky overhead, bring with it clouds and fog, or perhaps he should think of it as mist. Some of the clouds look stormy and he wouldn't be surprised for them to bring the other elements to display themselves over head. After all, what's a Sky without their Elements?

He feels a slight pain in his chest, a reminder that he is very much alone in not just what he is, has, and capable off. "So, what brings such a powerful Mafia Boss to visit little old me?" He asks Byakuran.

"You, old? I was under the impression as an Elf, you are still between the boundary of childhood and teenage hood." The other replies before popping a couple of marshmallows into his mouth.

"I live on a Dimensional Gate that leans itself to negative realms, like demonic or hellish." Xander remarks. "That ages a person such like myself rather quickly."

"Oh yes, you have worked with, working with, a Vampire Slayer I believe." Byakuran muses before giving him a foxy look as he adds, "Quiet the vixen I hear? A bottle blond if I'm not mistaken."

"Haven't seen her or the others since Halloween." He states calmly. "I get the feeling that my time with them has been cut short." Xander admits after a few seconds, kind of reluctant about acknowledging that fact but, well, it feels true.

Byakuran offers him some marshmallows and after a second of looking at the bag, reaches in and takes a handful. The bag's opening moves away from his reach as he pops two of the colorful marshmallows into his mouth while he feels Byakuran studying him, without opening his eyes at all, well, they might have tiny slits for the almost albino man to look at him. He merely slowly eats the marshmallows from his hand, more then patient enough to wait for Byakuran to break silence, after all, he hadn't answered his unspoken question of why they are meeting or the purpose of this meeting.

Although, I have to wonder how he even knows about Buffy? Or what a Vampire Slayer is. Xander privately wonders to himself.

"What do you know of the history of Dying Will Flames?" Byakuran asks him a little while after he finished his handful of colorful marshmallows. Looking off in the distance, to where the various elements are displaying their might.

"Lex knew nothing, but then, he was a Lightning and citizen born one at that." Xander admits. He knew that was a very important distinction given what kind of encounters and exchanges the Lightning version of him had with others of his Elements.

"Yes, I can see how fitting you being a Lightning would be." Byakuran muses, turning his head briefly. "I wouldn't be surprised if your secondary would have been Mist either, given how observant you can be when you want to be."

"How is this history relevant to me?" Xander asks after a minute of silence, although he gets this feeling that, well, it's going to be a long discussion, one that will fully disrupt what little attempts he has of holding onto his former life and friends.

Byakuran moves to sit, gesturing for him to join him. Once he's on the grass before the Mafia Boss, Byakuran begins his history lesson, "Well, let's see, it all began when seven special meteors impacted the Earth during the time when the Earth had another kind of dominate life form, they called themselves True Earthlings..."

Ending it here

To Readers: Been sitting on this since Apr 17, 2016. It's my first try to include KHR! along with Shadowrun in with Buffy. Posting this due to it being my 200th chapter along with it being my Birthday today and pretty much just felt like posting it. Not sure if there will be another chapter for this week though.

Chapter 1: Let the Games Begin! Digimon

I do not own Digimon!

One tap upon the Q button and his avatar launches at the rookie Spore Infected Digimon, the right claws ablaze as it slices through the color mute Patamon. Pressing W and his left claws follow up behind the right slash, he keeps pressing Q and W in a rhythm, slowly his avatar combo hits only grow until the Spore Infected Patamon's health bar fully empties and there's a cut scene begins to play out. His Agumon avatar's profile appears at the end, showing that his Agility has increased from the reaching twenty hits in a combo.

Then the loot window opens up on top of his profile window, he receives five Shattered Holy Relics, two Holy Relics, and one Spore Data Fragment. Takato accepts the loot and that window closes, once more, he focuses on his Agumon's profile. He's done his best to customize his Digimon Avatar with in game items like Body Paint and Tattoos as equip equipment doesn't show up on the avatar. His Agumon Avatar, who he's named Bio|Haz|Mate, currently sporting crimson flame tattoos on the top of the head, back, and on the shoulders. He's used Body Paint to paint a black triangle in a circle on the chest, he's still got a day before he needs to reapply the Body Paint.

He's just started playing this pass weekend even though the MMO for Digimon came out months ago. He had been so excited, just like his friends had been when it was announced only, well, he ran into trouble. His friends have been playing since release while he, well, he kind of needed to finish paying off the bill for cleaning the family computer concerning a virus that he kind of down loaded, so he needed to pay that off before start saving up his money to buy the game. Plus, there's the fact that he had to re-earn computer privileges by not only bringing up his grades but keeping them up there for the rest of the school year, which meant that he didn't have much time given he's been busy studying, helping out at the bakery, and hanging out with his friends, when they could tear themselves away from Digi-World Access to play the card game or just hang out.

Takato uses his mouse to press the close and the profile vanishes, leaving his screen showing the scene where he just fought the Infected Digimon. Using the mouse, he glances around the meadow before pressing and holding the forward movement key button. Directing Bio|Haz|Mate out of the meadow, heading towards the river to see if any new Infected Digimon spawned there, the Patamon he just fought had been the seventh Boss for the Core Story of the MMORPG. There's an eighth, a Gatomon, but he's got to leave Gate Island and travel to the Server Continent in order to find said Champion Digimon from his search viva the internet during lunch at school.

Finding a gang of Spore Infected Gizamon, their colors were switched instead of muted, trying to create another dam to block the river again. Starting off the fight with a Pepper Breath, he is quick to get into melee using Claw Attack and begin a slashing combo hit once more as it's the only way he could bring up his avatar's Agility. Thanks to him taking Switch Target from the General Skill Tree, he is able to keep using Claw Attack once the Gizamon he was attacking dies. The combo continues to climb as he's able to time it so he defeats the twelve Gizamon using Claw Attack and activating Switch Target to keep the count going.

The final Gizamon fades and Takato gets a message informing him that his Agility raised once more. He moves around, collecting what loot that dropped while the Dam begins to break apart and fade away, allowing the river to continue to flow. Most of the loot is vendor junk to be sold for Digi-Dollars with the odd common equipment dropping that he can sell to another player so they can scrap it for materials. Not wanting to return to the local settlement, he has his Agumon to range throughout the forest, looking for more Spore Infected Digimon to kill.

Reason for rising the Agility of Bio|Haz|Mate is due to him thinking of Digivolving his Agumon into a Meramon instead of the standard Greymon and, well, Centarumon didn't really appeal to him. Sure, there's the option of not Digivolving his avatar at all, but, well, he's mostly just using Bio|Haz|Mate as a test for what he wants to do with his next Digimon Avatar. Just trying to get a feel for the game, really. Takato started the game by picking to play as a Botamon and went from there. It wasn't until he Digivolved into his Rookie stage that he could even name the Digimon and it had taken an hour of play to achieve Digivoloution with Botamon and then another to reach Koromon.

Takato spent the rest for the hour hunting around for more Infected Digimon along with doing his best to keep going with his combo count to increase his Agility. Once he's leveled up a second time and all of his slots in his inventory filled, he directs Bio|Haz|Mate to the nearest settlement, Low Branch Hamlet, to sell the trash and to use the auction house to sell the Craft items and Uncommon equipment. Then, he browses through what's offered concerning better equipment then what he has now, not all of it he can afford but he puts down bids on two as he doesn't have the funds for the out right buy out.

Moving his Digimon near the entrance, he goes AFK to get something to drink and to stretch his body. Walking out of the living room, Takato heads for the small kitchen and opens the fridge, pulling out the carton of juice, he closes the door before setting the carton on the counter, and he grabs a glass. He catches sight of the time as he leans on the counter and drink his juice. He woke around six am and it's now eleven am, which, explains why he's beginning to feel hunger pangs.

His parents are down in the bakery, so, he'll have to make himself something simple for lunch or he could just settle for junk food, he's pretty sure he spotted an open bag of chips. Takato's mind gets made up after he goes through the fridge and freezer. "Chips it is."

He murmurs to himself and fills a bowl with said snack food before refilling his glass once more.

Once he's done drinking his juice once more, he places the empty glass in the sink. As he grabs the bowl, a soft giggle near his ear and he stiffens. Takato glances around the kitchen but finds nothing. "..."

Taking a slow, deep breath, he holds it and then slowly releases it, stifling a yawn, he walks back to the computer, he'll have to be sure to put the bowl away by even, it wouldn't do for his mom to scowl him about his choice of lunch. Sitting down at the computer again, Takato moves the mouse and his status of AFK vanishes, he heads about the settlement, looking for Quests to turn in, he kind of wants to finish up the Quests before he sails for Server Continent viva Whamon.

He received rewards of Experience, Digi-Dollars, and, at times, an item of some sort. He sells what he didn't see being of use, he seeks out the local Quests before heading out of the settlement, into the Wilds in pursuing of his Quests.

Stifling a yawn, Takato climbs out of bed and begins to dress. He's got to met Kazu and Kenta for the release of the latest Boosting Packs for Digimon the Card Game by ten am. It's currently seven thirty am, as his alarm went off.

Once clothed, he finds his wallet on the desk and his belt carrying pouch for his favorite deck next to it. Putting the pouch onto his belt, he pockets his wallet, and exits out of his room, heading for the kitchen for breakfast. "Morning!" His dad chirps at him and he replies in kind, "Morning!"

Slipping into the chair at the table, he watches as his dad finishes flipping the pancake while he uses a fork to put a few pancakes onto his plate. He digs into the pancakes after adding toppings before pouring syrup on top of all of that. He does his best to go slow but, well, he's excited about the coming release, after all, in a few weeks, it'll be the First Anniversary for Digimon Access, and that's what the booster packs are suppose to hold Game Codes that could be used during the Anniversary. Yea, the items the codes give were temporary for the duration of the Celebration Week but a rare few are to be for special, limited Digimon Avatars and for activating Quests.

Kazu, Kenta, and himself were pooling their saved funds together to buy as many un-open Booster Cases or, if they can't buy them in case format, Booster packs. They plan to have matches over any rare cards that they get along with the Game Codes. The two already had Digimon Avatars who have reached Mega while he, who's only been playing for two months, has only had two reach Ultimate. He's created five Digimon Avatars to date, he used his Agumon for his first week before moving on to create a new Avatar, he's yet to Digivolve his Agumon and though he hasn't logged in as Bio|Haz|Mate, he hasn't deleted the character either as that Agumon holds the special place in his heart as his very first Digimon Avatar.

His second Avatar is now a Tylomon named Ri\/er's Race and he mostly uses that one to explore the Digital Oceans. His third is now a GrapLeomon named ForUst/Paws, he's used Metal Paint to covert he metal in forest green along with adding feathers to the mane plus having one of his saber fangs have a craved tree on it. He's trying to figure out how to dye the dark gray leather body suit to some other color. Fourth is an Angemon named Keeper_of_the_Mou|ian, he waited until Patamon had Digivolve before naming the Avatar, and he's used Feather Dyes on the wings to add the same shade of blue of the cloth to the tips of the feathers along with using Hair Dye on the hair so it's a shiny silver instead of blond.

His most recent Digimon Avatar, his final Ultimate Digimon, Voice\Rage/Grapple, and is a ShadowWereGarurumon. He's dyed the white fur purple and used Nail Polish to make the claws navy blue. The previous stages had been Ogremon and Goblimon. He's been having fun with VRG viva the Arena Circuit where your Avatar can suffer permadeath in the PvP ring, where the Avatar gets deleted from your account instead of the Avatar starting over from Baby stage that happens upon an Avatar's death in the World, also meaning you lose everything including the name they had. The rewards tend to be money along with special Tattoo designs and, of course, gear. You don't earn much experience compared to going out and completing Quests, Dungeons, or Infected Digimon though.

His first experience with that feature had been during his first week. Takato's had varying degrees of success of avoiding death having gotten much quicker at keeping an eye on his health bar along with assigning the health items at the number nearest to the attack commands. He's taken the suggestion about having multiple health items seriously too, given that each type has its own cool down along with some causing regeneration over time instead of instantly. He's reviewed various guides during the months he'd been unable to play and in the excitement, forgot about due to the simple fact he was actually playing the game.

"See you later." He says as he gets up from his chair. He clears his place, putting it all in the sink. "Oh yes, going to that booster release is today, isn't it?" His dad muses and he hums positively as he is moving out of the kitchen, towards the stairs.

"Well, take the cell with you, we might need you pick up some items for supper." His dad says and he alters his path, grabbing the cell phone along with the credit card that's next to it, pulling out his own wallet, he adds the credit card into one of the slots while just pocketing the cell once he checks to see if it's on.

"Bye!" He repeats his farewell and so does his dad. Takato carefully walks down the stairs. "Bye mom, I got the cell and the credit card!" He says as he puts on his runners at the bottom of the stairs.

"Ok, well, be careful and have fun." She tells him and he gives his mom a bright smile as he walks pass, heading for the back door of the bakery. "I will!"

Once the door clicks shut behind him, Takato jogs around to the sidewalk and quick walks his way to where he needs to go to meet up with his friends.

Readers: Been reading The King's Avatar , currently on chapter 62, and watched the sub anime of the same name. The first arc would be mostly just the gaming scene of the game before having the Tamers find themselves elsewhere. Foreshadows aplenty in what's been written alone.

Also, to my fellow Canadians, Happy Thanks Giving!

Actions and Masks: Naruto

I don't own Naruto!

Usagi Mori, really? Naruto couldn't help but muse at the current honey blond fifteen year old sporting hazel green eyes. The cloths that the supposed older teen is wearing is civilian in nature then again, her manners are so different then he expects given he knows that 'Usagi' is his team mate Sakura-chan.

He's playing escort for his two disguised teammates, which is why he glances towards the other 'civilian', one Yoshi Seito, the supposed Usagi's boyfriend. 'Yoshi' sports dark brown hair that's in a pony tail and eyes appear to be light gray blue in color. 'Yoshi' feeling his gaze turns to give him a flat look and he sighs before looking away, turning his gaze up to the sky, wondering why he can't help but feel as if something is off.

They just left Hidden Leaf just two hours ago and they will be traveling for three days to reach the supposed 'Birthday Party' and neither of them seem incline to break character and the conversation between the two, it was strange in the way they seemed so friendly with one another, with 'Yoshi' being generally friendly and talkative, even smiling! The few physical gestures... It just causes him to feel like he's actually escorting an actual couple of strangers.

"Is everything ok, Uzuamki-san?" Usagi asks with a touch of concern and Naruto blinks as he turns his gaze upon her. "Err... everything's fine! It's just odd being on a mission without my team is all." He states and neither of them wince or anything at the mention of who they actually are.

"What are they like?" Usagi asks in a friendly manner and as he takes a few seconds to study their respective faces, he feels very creeped out. "Unless you don't want to talk about them." Yoshi adds.

"Err... Maybe later? I... I don't feel comfortable talking about them... right now..." Both accept this, although Yoshi does seem a touch suspicious.

Yip, I can't wait for this whole mission to be over. Seriously? Why are they sticking so closely to their current disguised when nobody buy us are around? The blond wonders.

= -) = Time = (- =

"Kakashi-Sensei, what are you doing here?" He exclaims, they were just a few hours away from the town. Finally, someone looking and acting like they should!

The silver haired ninja looks up from his orange book, then, closes the book, even putting it away! There's a slight intense look in Kakashi's eye as the Jonin studies him before turning to observe his disguised teammates. "Hello, I'm Kakashi Hakate, Jonin of Hidden Leaf. I hope my cute little student hasn't made a fool of himself these pass few days." The man says upon relaxing and sporting a humorous glint in his only visible eye.

"Greetings, Hakate-san, I am Yoshi Seito and this is my girlfriend, Usagi-chan Mori." The disguised Sasuke says, again, not breaking character. "As for Uzumaki-san... We don't have any complains, we are getting close to our destination. Should be there before evening, from what I can tell."

"Although, he seems rather twitchy throughout our time together." Usagi reflects and Kakashi just seems to smile while replying, "Oh, he's just not use to being on a solo mission. Most people hire teams as an escort."

He can't help but send Kakashi a look of betrayal only this causes the silver haired ninja to chuckle and stepping over to ruffle his hair before suggesting they continue on their way. Kakashi doesn't take out his book and it's not long before the disguised ninja start a conversation with their teacher. Naruto just groans, wondering why Kakashi hasn't given the code phrase to end the masquerade the two are under, it's not like they weren't pretty much there.

The blond just returns to staring up at the sky after a few minutes after giving Kakashi a frowning look. It shouldn't be long before things can go back to how things should be, right? It's just a fake escort mission, it's not like there's going to be an actual party, right?

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

As they walk to the inn, Kakashi can't help noticing the sulky look his blond student sends him every so often along with the guarded look the blond gives the disguised ninja who's in character as one Tsunayoshi Seito, who had been waiting for them at the gate. As they register at the counter, as the 'couple' kiss before parting to their respective rooms, the expression on Naruto's face is confusion along with a frown.

Once they are in their own room, which is on a different floor, Naruto asks, "What's going on?" The blond walks over to one of the beds, adding, "I mean, they kissed! They actually kissed! Their lips touched each other."

"Well, Usagi-chan and Yoshi-kun are dating." He remarks and the blond sits up to glare at him. "Oh come on! I've spent nearly three days with them! It... This... How? Neither of them... They never struck me as great actors."

I wonder if they know him that well... Or could it be something else?
"Is that really what's bothering you?" He asks the blond and Naruto frowns.

"Well, it's... I can't explain it, ok?" Naruto admits after a few false starts. "But it's so fucking strange regardless! I mean, yesterday when I decided to test them so, I pretty much lied about them, even altered their last names along with their traits."

"No reaction! Not even a flinch or stammer! Not even a clinched fist! It was like, they really were the strangers they were pretending to be." The blond admits with a defeated sigh while laying back down on the bed.

"They underwent a makeover of not just the body but the mind. Right now, Sakura and Sasuke are... dreaming." He figures the blond deserves to know a few bits of what his two teammates underwent. No need to tell him that the selection had been rigged either, that it would have been the two regardless due to certain concerns about their respective mental health. "They are dreaming that they of being their current identity. That this is just a dream, in the end."

"Ok, but, why are we... Aren't we done?" The blond asks.

"Our part is done, yes. But they will be sticking around here for a few months. They are not the only ones to have undergone the process and their might be a few others in the coming weeks." He states and Naruto hums.

"So... am I to undergo this process?" Naruto asks, still laying on the bed.

"No, you will be on missions with other ninja until Sakura and Sasuke's part in this little mission is over." He informs his blond student. "We'll be leaving tomorrow to return to Hidden Leaf."

No need to tell him that in three days, I'll be joining them. Kakashi muses. He, at least, had a hand in creating his new identity and that it's something he's looking forward too.

And wasn't that depressing? He reflects as he is staring down at his book, he's not sure when he pulled it out of his pouch but its in his hand and already open at the page he had it at when he met up with the three of them.

At least Danzo is dead, now it was just cleaning house. That's what this particular experiment slash mission is meant to do, after all, there's no telling what kind of triggers the old War Hawk left behind. The only reason why Naruto wasn't going to undergo this is due to the fact that his Yin Chakra is fairly weak compared to his Yang Chakra, meaning that there's a possibility that Naruto might just sublime himself fully into a new identity, maybe even preferring being that person then who he is now.

Which we can't have happen, not just for selfish reasons either. He muses as Naruto heads for the bathroom with his pack. "I'm going to have a shower." The blond says and he hums in acknowledgement.

He waits until he hears the water running before pulling out a scroll and begin writing about the meeting along with Naruto's emotional state plus a suspension concerning the reason why.

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

Naruto races after Kakashi viva the tree tops, enjoying the feel of wind rushing through his hair and over his skin. As the walls of Hidden Leaf come into view, they drop down onto the road. He can't keep the wide grin from his face as he adjusts his cloths and various pouches as they walk towards the gate.

As they sign in, he pauses to look at a group of three standing next to Lee Rock. He can't help but cock his head to the side with a puzzled look as he studies the three. It takes him a few seconds to realize that it's another group who underwent what his team mates. Kakashi had mentioned others undergoing it, although, he can't help but look between the three, wondering if it was done right with that group or not.

"Naruto-kun! Back from your mission?" Lee asks and he nods, his attention focusing on the green clad ninja, giving the other a grin.

"Yea and ta be honest, happy that it's over. It was just creepy, but, well, it went smoothly regardless." He tells Lee. He's tempted to ask Lee about his teammates but decided against it.

"You're cleared to go." The Chunin at the guard inform him as Lee asks him about the condition of the road. "Right, see ya later Lee!"

"Yosh, good day to you, Naruto-kun! We shall catch up when I return in a few days!" With that, they walk off in opposite directions.

They head for the Hokage Tower to report about their completion of the mission along with him getting his new team assignment for tomorrow.

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

"So, how is he? Really?" Lady Hokage, one Tsunade Senju, asks once Naruto has left the office.

"Lonely and left out." He states honestly. "He was at a lost as to the changes to their personality more then anything. He attempted to provoke familiar responses from them." Then he adds, "I think he may be a Sensor. That he knows who they really were and found it hard to wrap his head around their responses."

"He was even eyeing the three Lee were escorting with a puzzled expression." Kakashi reflects. "Anyone he knew?"

"Iruka Umino along with a colleague plus Cat." Tsunade informs him. "And we'll have to have him tested to see if that's the case. If so, then it'll be easy to keep him occupied with giving him the training he needs as a Sensor."

They then move onto confirming his decisions concerning his belongings along discussing medial concerns. Soon enough, their session ends and he departs to spend time before a certain stone, to tell those ghosts why he won't be visiting them in the coming future.

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

Naruto taps his foot as he waits for Sakura-chan and Sasuke to come out, fully returned to themselves. It's been six months since he escorted the two to the re-purposed ghost town for some mission he doesn't really get the reason behind. He can tell from the feel of their Chakra that their disguises have been removed, which means that now they just need to wake up.

Lee is next to him, more then happy to keep him company and to see Sakura-chan too. Given that Lee's own teammates had also undergone this process and won't be returning for at least a month's time, hopefully. Never know, the schedule about this mission seems kind of flex able, after all, they were suppose to return two months ago only, yet, it seems that they needed more time but now, now it seems that, they were to be returned.

He perks as he feels Sasuke wake and he stops tapping in his foot. Minutes tick pass and then, there's a scream, which causes Sakura-chan to wake. Lee jerks his head up and looks ready to rush into the back room, only he shakes his head, saying, "That wasn't Sakura-chan."

Then there's another loud voice, yelping and cursing. "That... kind of sounds like Sakura-chan." He admits and Lee surges to his feet but he shakes his head. "Let the professionals handle it." He tells Lee, resting a hand on Lee's shoulder and his friend looks torn about wanting to help and knowing he couldn't.

Lee sits back down and he does the same, although he does wonder where Kakashi was, after all, he was their Jonin instructor.

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

"How did this happen?" Tsunade asks Inoichi Yamanaka as she rubs her left temple. And how do we explain this to Naruto?

"They must have had an accident and grabbed the others' slip by mistake." Shikaku Nara, Inoichi's teammate, states. "Unlike the others, they were given them at the same time, so, the switch happened. It's now more about how to deal with this mishap then debate how it happened."

She wishes she had a bottle of sake, concluding that Shikaku is correct, at this point, there's no point in the events that led up to, only acknowledging something happened that cause it and now, to deal with the gender issue between Sakura and Sasuke, as in, they no longer identify with their respective birth genders. On the plus side, the mental problems the two had were no longer an issue, only now it's a issue of gender and trying to think of ways to fix it.

"Are we sure we can't use Genjutsu on them to correct the mental issue?" She asks and Inoichi shakes his head, reminding her of the fact that the pair are rather over sensitive to foreign Chakra messing with their senses.

They circle around the problem before Shikaku wonders, "Well, if we can't fix the mental cause, why not do something to the body? Could using Yang Chakra to alter their bodies to their definition of 'correct' gender help for the time being?"

"We might as well try. At the very least, it'll keep them from getting caught using Genjutsu to disguise their gender." She admits after considering it, after all, for the last six months, the pair had indeed been physically transformed into said respective genders. It should be possible to use Yang Chakra to shape their bodies into the perceived 'correct' gender.

+ = (- CoPoV -) = +

Sasuke sighs as she examines her body in the large mirror with her Sharingan to be sure it wasn't a Genjutsu. She smiles at her reflection, yes, there's memories of her being born a boy, yet, upon waking from her 'dream', she just couldn't relate to being male. Everything felt wrong, from her balance to having that... just there, between her legs...

It felt like a nightmare but now, now her body feels right . Yes, it's not as far along the road to woman hood as when she was Usagi but then, she's twelve going on thirteen. It'll come in time, at least her body should, as long as she thinks of herself as a young woman, then the Yang Seal will ensure that her body will remain that of a girl. Which sounds kind of ominous but, really, she didn't see why she'd change her mind about her gender, now that the body is the correct gender.

She puts on her cloths and exits out of the room to find Naruto waiting in the chair. Sasuke answers the unspoken question, "I feel much better."

Naruto just nods in acceptance, clearly still trying to warp his head around what happened with the two of them. Also, unsure how to treat the two of them given what happened concerning their undercover mission. Although, to be honest, she's finding it hard to resume the remembered annoyance she held concerning Naruto, back when she was a he. Then again, she had a serious case of tunnel vision as a boy, then again, according Lady Hokage, there had been a mental compulsion within her then mind that help structure the creation of that tunnel vision. On the plus side, the Curse Seal was gone as well, removing the temptation of power that it could grant.

"So... you think the pair of you will be good to go tonight?" Naruto asks as she walks back to the bed, sitting on it.

"Hopefully." She tells him as the blond fidgets a bit. It's rather bemusing but still...

"You somehow knew, didn't you?"

Naruto jerks his head up and blinks a bit at the accusation. "Knew? That you were Usagi? Not fully... I mean, the information said that Usagi Mori was Sakura."

"But..."

"But she didn't... seem to feel like Sakura." Naruto admits. "Usagi felt like Sasuke and Yoshi felt like Sakura."

"Didn't tell anyone."

"I didn't know what they did, Kakashi-Sensei just mentioned that you two were dreaming. Nobody told me the hows of it or even the whys. I didn't know you two where physically altered into those genders." Naruto defends and upon reflection, believes him, after all, Lady Tsunade had pretty much had mentioned that the whole process had been kept under-warps, more then happy to let others conclude Genjutsu and very convincing make up.

"Any word about our wayward Sensei?" Sasuke asks the blond and her teammate answers, "Yea, he underwent the same process a few days after you guys were dropped off and nobody told me, then again, it's likely that all the Jonin are going to undergo this and they didn't want the news to spread that they were lacking a few of Jonin in the village."

"So... ah... from a guy to a girl... I mean, you still know you are Sasuke Uchiha right? That you were a boy before this..."

She smirks likely and the blond blushes, from embarrassment or something more... "Yes, I know I was a boy and no, it doesn't feel strange to find myself a girl." She tries to find some kind of boundary in her memory that could be used to separate the him of the past to the her of the present. "There's no separation in my memories, where I stopped being a boy and became a girl. It just... happened, that I was a boy then and I am now a girl."

"So... what's happening between Sakura-c... Sakura and yourself? I mean, your masks had been dating so..." Naruto trails off and she sighs, that's... actually a more complicated question then the one concerning her change in gender.

After all, she remembers the feelings Usagi had for Yoshi, along with how they expressed that. Yet, does she feel that for Sakura? No, not really. To be honest, back when she was a he, he had been more fond of Naruto then Sakrua. Right now, there's a sense of empathy for the now boy, as they both woke up in bodies that had once been familiar and then alien. They now had to deal with the issue their new gender along with how people will respond to it.

"Not going to add kun there?" She asks and Naruto gives her a dry look, yea, she can't blame him for not adding it. After all, Sakura is a very girly name, it's likely that he'll change his name to something similar sounding yet most definitely male.

"There's no romantic relationship between us and we're kind of not ready for one. After all, who'd want to be the boyfriend to Sasuke Uchiha, the gender confused ninja right here, right now?" Naruto looks startled and glances towards the door before focusing on her once more.

"Your... not gender confused. I mean, yea, nobody expected you to go from boy to girl, but, well, you pretty much seem to know what your gender is, enough that even Granny figured a way for you to be a girl in body, you know, making your mind." Naruto rambles and she leans back a tad, rather touched that Naruto, on some level, has accepted Sasuke as a girl, that she wanted to be seen as a girl.

The question now is, could Naruto accept that his crush wants to be viewed and treated as a he. "So... what are your feeling on Sakura-kun ?" She empathize the kun and the blond lets out a huge sigh, leaning back in the chair. "Are you going to stop pursuing him now that he's a he?"

"I... I... she never... yet, well, I had hoped, you know? You didn't do anything to encourage her... him, but..." Naruto groans and she kind of did, then again, fan girls seem to be stupid in that their continue pursuit of the then him.

"You modeled your behavior off of them." She groans out as it dawns on her and Naruto looks rather dejected at the reference. "So, since they never took No to mean No, neither did you."

"Nobody stopped them! So that means it was appropriate ways to express your feelings!" The blond defends and she... couldn't argue with that as none of their parents or even the Chunin Instructors interfered with their declarations of 'love'.

"And that explains so much..." Sasuke groans as she rubs the bridge of her nose.

Silence takes over between them and she finds herself wondering something. "So... when will you undergo the mission?" She asks, looking back at the blond.

"Oh, ah, I'm not. Nor is Lee." Sasuke finds herself at a lost of words, while, she can understand Lee, after all, he's go a malformed Chakra System but...

"How's that fair?" Her voice frosty and Naruto flinches, looking to the ground. "Is it because your the Hokage's favorite?"

"I... asked and... It's... It's..." Naruto looks rather guilty along with...

She bites back her rant, after all, while she's pissed off at the moment, she can't help but hope there's a very good reason. Finally, Naruto looks up and stares into her eyes as he says, "I've got a huge imbalance between my Yin and Yang Chakra. Granny thinks that... That if I were to under go the process that... That I'd lose myself to the cover."

Yip, that's a good reason why he shouldn't. Sasuke reflects as it feels like ice water had been dumped on her. "You'd stop being Naruto..." And Naruto nods.

And here we are, his teammates and when we 'woke', we came out of it with a gender swapped. "And we aren't helping things." She reflects.

Once more silence hangs between them once more. "So... You're going to have to go shopping, right? I mean, you're wanting more... ah, gender correct cloths?" Naruto interjects and she's more then happy to change the subject.

"If they fit, I'll keep them." She admits. "It's not like I have the curves or cleavage that need to be on display. Or overly self conscious about my appearance." Sasuke muses.

"And you'd want another girl's opinion anyway." Naruto reasons and she muses over that thought, after all, just because she's a she, it doesn't mean she needs to be overly feminine, right? It's not like she really grew up knowing she's going to be a woman.

And now she's got something to chew on. After all, what really makes one a girl? Was it the body? Or behavior? Does she feel attracted to boys?

Sasuke looks over at Naruto and easily pictures him naked, after all, she's seen him naked back when she was a he. Then, tries to feel aroused at the mental image and, yea, there's a kind of... But it's not as strong as she recalls Usagi having when she was with Yoshi. Then again, was that really that surprising? She is only twelve and thus has the hormones of a twelve year. Maybe in a year or two...

"Well, ah, you got some training to catch up on. Did ya know I'm a Sensor? Granny tested me and I've spent months learning the ropes." Naruto says, clearly changing the subject, likely due to the silence that sprung up.

"You have a point, it's going to take a while to polish our skills after months spent as civilians." She admits.

"Mind if we join you?" She looks up to find Lee and Sakura by the door upon their knocking on the door frame.

"Sure, we were just going to talk about training... Sakura-kun." Naruto says, doing his best to give the former girl a carefree grin and Sakura seems to relax a tad at the way Naruto added the kun instead of the chan he once had.

Lee sits on one side of Naruto and Sakura on the other side. Sakura does look a tad nervous, sitting next to the boy, who has or had, a crush on him when he had been a girl. Then again, he had a crush on her, too. How was that never awkward? Sasuke wonders.

Ending it here . . .

Readers: Yea, was reading some of my earlier chapters and inspiration struck on the UnderCover Girl chapter. Had two false starts at until I typed this out within twelve hours, yea, I started this around 2 pm on Nov. 20, 2017 and finished by 2:10 am on Nov. 21, 2017.

Shocked myself finishing it so quickly.

A Lion's Pride: RWBY

I don't own Naruto and RWBY!

- x - O - T - O - x -

Naruto does his best to breath in through his nose and out through his mouth. The lion Faunus finds it hard to keep up a mask of calm as he's sitting next to a very motion sick Jaune Arc, he tries his best to help the other but, well, it's clear that Jaune isn't going to last until the bullhead lands and, well, neither of them had any kind of pills to help. Jaune groans and is quick to get to his feet and stumble off towards the part of the cabin that's got the least number of people and Naruto could only sigh as the other passengers let known their opinions concerning Jaune's motion sickness.

He runs a hand through his bright blond manish hair as his other pulls out his Scroll to check to see if his little sis sent him any more messages or mail. There's no new messages from either his baby sister or his dad, so he closes the Scroll and pockets it. Naruto ignores the sudden looks he once more is gathering, he doesn't pay it much mind, after all, he's a very unusual Faunus. Lucky to be alive, honestly.

Soon the hologram of Ms Goodwitch announces that the bullhead is beginning its landing. Naruto scans the cabin, trying to spy Jaune as the other had grown on him in the short time they've spend together, sitting next to each other. Allowing his thoughts to focus on Jaune's condition helps him ignore his nerves along with sense of surreal feelings that he's been allow to attend Beacon, allowing him to step out from his Dad's shadow and influence.

Once the landing ramps are deployed, everyone is surging to get out of the bullhead and he loses sight of Jaune. He stays sitting, waiting for everyone to get their things and depart before doing the same. Yea, people are likely going to come and collect the larger luggage.

Picking up his overnight bag along with his ammo case, he glances out from the cabin and feels...

Closing both eyes, Naruto breaths in through his nose and out through his mouth, opening his eyes as he firms up his resolve. Right foot forward and he walks down the ramp, people's chatter washing over him as he continues to walking as casually as he can, towards the main building, he's study the lay out of Beacon enough in hopes of helping him navigate the academy. Yea, he can feel people's eyes on him and if he wished, he could likely pick up various reactions as people discuss the fact that he's a Faunus along with how animistic he looks compared to others of his 'race'.

Naruto can't help but feel a bit under-attack yet, it's nothing new, really. His leonine features are very telling, particularly his legs and feet, but his hair is very manish, when left to its natural style. No lion ears featuring on his head though, then again, his eyes lacked the usual whites that pretty much all Faunus and every human have. No tail, thankfully, but then, he's still in needs to have his pants tailored just for him given his legs anatomy, thankfully he isn't required to wear shoes given that would just be torture as his claws would likely shred the insides of them within a month if not within a week.

As he arrives at the doors of the hall were they were to be addressed, Naruto pauses and looks backwards, looking for Jaune. Feeling a bit sheepish about forgetting about the other teen, yet, well, it's likely better for Jaune if he didn't walk with him. It's likely Jaune's nerves wouldn't be able to handle the kind of attention he gathers or even the comments his appearance garners.

Still, he kind of misses Jaune's company, even if Jaune had been suffering from motion sickness for the most part. Seeing a particularly tall and muscular teen marching up to him, he moves into the room and to the right, not that it matters as the other alters their path, he can feel the tension begin to gather as others realize someone's going to confront him. Naruto does his best to keep a calm look upon his face while he is just wanting this to be over already.

"Hey, who let you out of your cage?" Sneer plastered upon their face, the other snaps at him. A finger from the other is out and poking him in the chest, trying to force him to take a step back but Naruto doesn't.

"I can't believe you think you belong in civilized company! Look at you! It's like someone took a lion and taught it to walk around on its hind legs!" The chestnut hair teen exclaims with contempt aglow in his eyes.

The crowd murmurs to one another, not a single one moving to interfere. A few even chuckled at the comment about being taught to walk on two legs. Naruto's heard variations of that before and will always hear it, although, thankfully, he's got a surprisingly tough hide when it comes to these kind of comments. A few glance fearfully at him, expecting him to, what, attack the other in a rage? Start verbally defend himself?

"Not worth the breath." He murmurs softly as his eyes finish roaming about the other's frame and settles for gazing into the other's eyes in what he hopes is a bored expression within. The other flushes in anger and puffs up in, supposed, righteous fury while glaring into his own eyes. Silence settles within half a minute, people expecting a fight but, well, a minute into their staring contest, the other jerks his head ever so slightly, breaking eye contact.

"Go back to your cage so someone with talent can benefit from being at Beacon." The other snaps before walking away, his eyes not meeting his once more. Conversations resume and he looks back out into the hall, waiting to see Jaune's approach.

As it's about to begin, Jaune approaches in the company of a young girl wearing a red hood along with a touch of crimson in her black hair. "Jaune!" He calls out just a bit over the murmur once the girl leaves Jaune's side.

"Oh, hey, Naruto! Didn't see you there!" Jaune grins upon seeing him, walking over to stand next to him. Jaune does note the looks sent their way and it keeps the other blond from saying anything, but then, it begins and Jaune, along with everyone, focus on those standing on the stage before them.

Naruto glances at the other teens, listening with half an ear to what's said. He's fairly confident that he's able to handle what is going to happen tomorrow, it's who his future team mates were that is cause for concern, as he's not sure how they pick partners or even match up pairs to form a team of four.

o T - N = V = N - T o

Jaune glances around the room, yea, he's getting a few looks given his PJs then again, his friend, also seems to draw the eye of their fellow aspiring Hunters. Well, to be honest, he's pretty... He didn't complete that thought, after all, Naruto's been nothing but patient and sympathetic since they met in the bullhead.

Yea, Naruto is clearly a Lion Faunus, had to be given the manish style of the hair, but he's not hiding it. Well, it looks more like he couldn't hide it, what with likely natural black nails or the way he walks. Given the way Naruto's legs were... Yea, he could wear some kind of shades, maybe style the hair or even use nail polish to change his nails but, well, he couldn't think of a way for Naruto to hide the fact that his legs just weren't right as even with bulky pants, the way the fabric moves while he walks, it would have looked strange.

His fellow blond seems to be immune to the looks and whispers of the people around him, given he's on the fold out bed listening to music while reading a book. Jaune wants to get up and move around, he's got all this energy all of a sudden... Plus, he kind of wants to hide from the attention, to maybe find Ruby and meet Yang. Yet, he doesn't want to leave Naruto alone, surrounded on all sides with strangers and their comments concerning his appearance.

"So... who was the girl?" Naruto asks, jolting him out of his thoughts and him standing up from his 'bed'. One of his ears uncovered now and the book closed with a book mark between its pages.

"Huh? Girl?" He repeats dumbly before he realizes who Naruto means. "Ah, that's just Ruby. Meet her in a carter, we kind of lose track of time along with neither of us knowing where we needed to be."

"You want to go find her? We've got a few minutes yet and I need to go switch out for nightwear." The Faunus remarks and he flushes but had noticed that Naruto hadn't changed his cloths.

"You sure you'll be alright? I mean..." He glances at their, maybe, future classmates.

"Go, Jaune, I'm a big boy and can finish what others start on my own." Naruto says as he moves to stand up. "Shoo."

"But... we shouldn't start any trouble!" He comments and Naruto smiles slightly. "I never said I'd be the one to start it, just finish it."

Jaune can't really see the difference but Naruto is already walking off with his bag, leaving his case be under the bed. Glancing around and suddenly feeling self conscious, he walks off to check up on Ruby, the only other friendly face he knows of.

o T - N = V = N - T o

Naruto yawns widely and rubs the sleep out of his eyes. He feels around for his Scroll and checks the time. Pushing himself up a bit, he glances around to find most still asleep and a glance in Jaune's direction, the other blond is still asleep in his PJs. Yawning a bit more, he sits up and then moves to stand before checking his bag and then glancing at his ammo case, which is still locked.

He picks up his ammo case along with his bag, heading to change along with prepare for today's happenings. He's not sure what kind of test is going to happen but it's best to assume there's going to be combat of some kind. Naruto smiles in relief at finding nobody else in the changing room and is quick to get his pants off so he can begin on his left leg's prosthetic, touching his Scroll to the metal, a file is sent from the leg's monitoring system to his Scroll which is then E-Mailed to his 'Uncle'.

Next is opening a panel so he can insert Dust Shards, which he gets from his ammo case, unlocking it with both his Scroll and punching in a pin code. He picks out a Gravity Shard and puts it into one of the slots then he picks out two Lightning Shards, two Ice Shards, two Fire Shards, and then, mentally debates if he should add more Gravity Shards or more Lightning Shards. In the end, he picks one more Gravity Shard and one Lightning Shard. Once all nine are securely in their slots, he pushes closes the panel.

He then checks the plastic on his foot, it's still good so he doesn't replace it. Glancing towards the door, he closes the case and puts his pants to hide his prosthetic from view. As he walks over to attend to a different need, someone enters, clearly sleepy so they don't seem to notice him right away.

A few minutes later, he's washing his hands while the other is having a shower, which seems to be the reason the other finally makes note of his appearance. Once his hands are dry, he runs his fingers through his hair. With a sigh, he walks over to his bag and goes through it for a comb. Once found, he runs it under the water and tries to tame his blond locks, mostly getting whatever knots within it. A few more guys enter by the time he's done with the comb.

He puts the comb away and pulls out what shirt to wear under the leather jacket he is planning to wear today. Deciding that he didn't want to worry about blood stains, if they do end up happening, he goes with the black long sleeve shirt. Stuffing the others back, he heads for one of the cloth stalls to change his top. Once hidden, he takes off his shirt and checks his left shoulder then the rest of the arm, still a little amazed that his left arm is fully recovered from whatever it is that lost him his left leg and his left eye.

Yea, he, after two years, his eye regrown, and then, his healing factor began on his left arm, once the rest of his left side of his body had fully regenerated the muscles and cause the various scars had been slowly vanished, scars earned from deteriorating of body to the need to cut out rotten and infection that happened due to whatever happened to his left side of the body, after all, what could cause his muscles to be shredded beyond belief? Is it any wonder people thought his left arm, forearm, and hand had also been replaced? He typically wore armor to cover the state of said limb.

It's strange not having the familiar weight upon his left arm or seeing the skin of his left hand. Then again, most of the various scars that once marred his skin have faded away long before they realized he had regrown his left eye. Flexing his left wrist after making a fist, Naruto sighs and hurries up to change his cloths, after all, he's starving but knew he should only eat a light breakfast.

Before putting on his long sleeve shirt, he takes out a pair of simple daggers and a belt. Threading the belt carefully, the dagger sheaths are added with one on each side. With that done, he pulls on his long sleeve shirt and then his leather jacket. Finish dressing, he checks his Scroll before repacking his pack and is sure to grab his ammo case as he heads out of the changing rooms.

He swings by where Jaune is sleeping, giving the other blond a slight shake. "Jaune, I'm heading to get breakfast." He says once Jaune's eyes open before closing and the other bringing an arm to cover his eyes.

Jaune grunts acknowledgement and Naruto sighs but his Scroll vibrates. As he walks for the cafeteria, leaving Jaune to his own devices, it seems to be an E-Mail giving him his locker assignment along with a code for it. Making a note to store his pack and ammo case in said locker, he pockets the Scroll and speeds up to a fast walk as his stomach growls slightly as he smells what's waiting for him in the cafeteria.

Naruto sighs from his position among the stands, watching as those who successfully retrieved the relics are introduced. Yea, he's angry and rather bitter about how the day went, his 'partner' for the forest pretty much ignored him, even pretty much called him a 'pet'. Is it any wonder we attracted so many Grimm? She was hostile from the start and, yea, by the end there, I wasn't much better.

Not that it means he won't continue his course of becoming a Hunter, just means he won't be studying at an Academy. He received an E-Mail from the Headmaster, it seems the man wishes to discuss something with him, at least, that's the impression he got after reading it a second time, once he took the time to do his best to let go of his simmering anger, it's cooled but not fully gone. This day's events are far too fresh in his mind and thus, his emotions are far too raw for him to fully reign in, then again, being a being of flesh, it's not like there's an On and Off switch for his various emotions.

His gaze travels towards the vary familiar blond and can't help but smirk at Jaune's expression, it's clear that Jaune is very much overwhelmed with the fact that he's been named Team Leader of JNPR. So sue him, he finds himself enjoying the other's bewilderment. He wishes Jaune luck in dealing with the pair of red heads, names Nora Valkyrie and Pyrrha Nikos , as the two will likely be the source of interesting times in two very different ways while the young man, one Lie Ren, seems like he'll be the one to give Jaune the less amount of trouble.

Then again, appearances can be deceiving. Naruto reminds himself. Or maybe it'll be the men who causes the most serious trouble? Ah, well, it's not like I'll be around to witness that first hand.

The various people begin filing out and he follows suit. He is feeling rather drained from both an emotional stand point and from a physical one. A shower then bed, once I get to the hotel room.

The doors open and Naruto steps inside the office, "Headmaster Ozpin. You wish to speak with me?" He does his best to keep his gaze on the man standing by the window, staring out of it.

"Mr Ironwood, please, make yourself comfortable." The man turns and gestures at free chairs, which he glances at them while he hears the man take his seat upon the chair behind the desk. "I hope this morning finds you well?"

"Well enough, sir." He answers as he moves to the left chair, doing his best to get comfortable given the way his legs were shaped. Then again, back home, they've had to custom order chairs for his unique configuration. It's hard to sit comfortably on the more solid types that lack cushions.

Right now, he's reminded of the lessons his dad had given him concerning dealing with powerful people and wonders if now was the right time to put those into practice. After all, as the Headmaster of a Hunter Academy, the man before him has a great deal of political power and influence, then there's the fact that he's the adopted son of Councilman, Headmaster, and General James Ironwood, which means he could be used as leverage over his dad. There's many reason why he didn't want to attend Atlas' Hunter's Academy or look for an apprenticeship within Atlas, his dad wasn't really the top reason, the top reason has more to do with the current powder keg of the Faunus issue within said Kingdom.

"Your father taught you well." The Headmaster remarks after a time of silence, a slight smile. He inclines his head, returning the grin.

"Kind of had too." He remarks. "Given his posts."

"Indeed." Ozpin admits. "Indeed. Tell me, why Beacon? Why not Haven or Shade?"

"For one, my dad considers you a friend and for another, the weather." He gives the Headmaster a smile. The older man returns the smile.

They exchange small chat for a bit, nothing overly important about holiday celebrations, which lead to the fact that the Vytal Festival will be held here, in Vale, that Beacon Academy will be hosting foreign Hunters. Soon enough, the Vytal Festival is the center topic. So, when Headmaster Ozpin asks, "How would you like to help with the Festival?"

Caught off guard, Naruto's upper body jerks up at the offer, eyes widening while he tries to see just what kind of offer this actually was. He frowns in thought as he mentally reviews his options. "You haven't picked anyone among the students to award the honor?" He asks in turn with a questioning look.

"There haven't been any interest in the position itself." The Headmaster states and he gives the man a dry look. "Most like the idea of power and prestige of said title, not the responsibility it bears." The older Hunter admits after a few seconds of no response from him.

He snorts upon hearing that. How typical. Naruto muses as he glances out of the window.

"How'd you get my submission pass the Council? I don't see how they'd get pass the whole, not a student at Beacon Academy to accept your recommendation." The feline type Faunus points out and the Hunter just smiles.

"Well, that happened." Naruto remarks as he's sitting in the Staff Room with his lunch before him. So... apprenticeship to... Opzin, Headmaster of Beacon Academy. Wonder how my dad is going to react to that? He muses as he slowly picks apart his lunch, still trying to wrap his mind around the fact that not only is he in charge of planning the Vytal Festival but he's now an apprentice.

"Going to need to read up on what to expect." He murmurs as the Academy system had replaced the previous Master and Apprentice system. If only to know what his rights were as an Apprentice.

o T - N = V = N - T o

"You took him on as your Apprentice? Really, Ozpin? We could have just listed him as an Exchange Student." Professor Goodwitch states while he is doing his best to go through the latest updates concerning the latest robberies concerning Dust Shards.

"Have you thought about James' reaction? The man likely has a spot waiting for young Naruto at his own school." She brings up with a slightly raised arms.

"Young Mr Ironwood wishes to make things easier on his father by removing himself from the political scene. Many have always criticized James' adoption of a crippled Faunus and there was that abduction." Ozpin states as he reaches for his coffee mug.

"Does he even know what the title means? What his responsibilities could include? What your responsibilities are towards him?" Glynda asks and he replies, "I'm sure he'll do his research into the subject."

As he sips his coffee, he reflects on what he knows of the young, Neo-Faunus and of this opportunity to get out of the office once in a while.

A Lion's Dream: RWBY

I don't own Naruto and RWBY!

- x - O - T - O - x -

Waking to find himself on the floor, Naruto grunts and picks himself up from the floor. With sleep fleeing from his mind, the blond sits upon the edge of his bed and stares at the site where his leg is slowly regenerating. His cybernetic leg is resting next to his night stand where it's charging.

Controlling his breathing, the Faunus does his best to settle his emotions that came from his troubling sleep. Kind of surprising... "I thought I'd experience an episode last week." He murmurs softly to himself.

Swinging his body back so he can lay down, the young Hunter reaches for his Scroll and after a few seconds of staring at the screen, not sure why he reached for it, yet, he doesn't just put it back. His thoughts seem sluggish as he tries to decide on what he wants to do with the Scroll. "..."

With a soft sigh, he closes it and puts it back upon his night stand, content to just stare up at the ceiling. His mind circling the echos of his unsettling dream... or perhaps, what he dreamed should be called nightmares. They should be nightmares, they really should be given what little impressions of events that occur. Yet it is the emotions invoked are more along the lines of sorrow and self-hatred, of never bring good enough... Of loneliness and the acceptance of the pain that's happening... The hopeful peace that that pain promised once all was said and done.

Suicidal. The blond admits, his eyes lowering on their own accord as he moves onto his right side, curling in on himself. Moving the pillow, hugging it a bit as his gaze turns more inward, not really seeing the wall.

A huge metal box. Burning about his upper body before the burning became something more painful and... eating at him. Something was consuming who he had been along with his body. Yet, even as death of memories and dissolving of the body, that past version of himself hung onto his name. I am _ Naruto! I will remember my Name! I swear it!

He finds it hard to pull himself from the remaining images that remain from the haunting dreams, ones he hopes were nothing more then old fears then actual memories.

Closing his eyes, he buries his face in his pillow while bending down to grab his sheets, pulling them to cover his body. He's still got some hours to try and get some restful sleep, as long as he controls his breathing and blanks his mind. Slowly, sleep begins to chip away at the edge of his mind and as he's about to fall asleep once more, the blankness gives away to sleep.

His Scroll alarm goes off and the blond jerks awake along with turning his body before sitting up. Already, his hand reaches for the Scroll along with fingers curling around it. Within a few seconds, he turns off his alarm and then, letting the Scroll fall onto the blankets of his bed, he rubs the sleep from his eyes with both hands.

Feeling more awake and ready to face the day, Naruto moves to the edge of his bed and begins the process of attaching his cybernetic prosthetic back upon his leg. It takes some minutes to do so and as he heads for the private shower, he sets his Scroll to auto send the results from last night and this morning. He gets the shower going before he finishes emptying his bladder.

Soon enough, he's finished within the shower and he's getting dressed. His scheduling is different then the others of his age group, after all, he doesn't attend classes nor does he eat at the cafeteria with the Academy Students. Most of last week had been more about him settling into Beacon along with a lot of reading concerning what it use to mean to be an Apprentice Huntsman and what it means to be one now. Then there had been that conversation with his Dad, oh Dust was that a prickly talk, and then there had been the beginning frame work concerning the upcoming Festival, which he is now securely in charge of.

This coming week, starting today in fact, is when they are now going to start to test to see where he stands when it comes to book learning, his practical skills, and, of course, ability to defend himself. Given that last week had also been the first week for the First Year Students, it made sense that now that they were settled into the class routine of the Academy, few incidents should occur, which should free up his Master's time to spend outside of the office and away from Council Meetings. Which maybe be part of the reason why Headmaster Ozpin decided to be his Master in the first place instead of asking one of his teachers to take the position.

With his Dad being who he is, yea, he can understand the kind of responsibilities being Headmaster of Vale's Hunter's Academy are along with some idea of the politics of dealing with Council sessions. Then again, his Dad also holds a military position along with being his adopted parent. It makes him wonder just what kind of hours his Dad keeps to as there isn't enough hours in the usual day for everything.

"No wonder he's going gray." Naruto murmurs as he checks himself in the mirror, slipping his Scroll into his pants pocket. Taking a deep breath, he slowly releases it as he glances down at his one foot, wanting to see if he needs to change the plastic skin due to any large tears revealing the glint of metal.

It's slightly worn but fine, for now. With slight yawn, he turns from the mirror and heads out of his room, heading for the Staff Room for his breakfast. Once within sight of the Staff Room door, he feels fairly thirsty and he picks up his pace, moving a bit more quickly towards the promise of a hot chocolate and a filling, healthy breakfast.

Upon entering, he nods a greeting toward Professor Peach as she's clearly enjoying her mug of coffee, perhaps her second, as he walks over to fill a clean mug with hot chocolate from the machine. Naruto blows softly upon the surface of the steaming liquid before he drinks from the mug. With the warmth spreading through his body, he walks towards one of the tables, sets the mug down before picking up a plate and utensils, it the waffle machine about a minute to cook the batter so he only adds a few things to his plate, making sure that there's enough room for the waffle.

Once he's add the toppings he wants upon the waffle, he returns to the table where his mug is cooling. He sips his hot chocolate before starting onto his breakfast. His Scroll vibrates and he takes it out of the pocket. It's a message from his 'Uncle' inquiring about the comfort of his prosthetic along with a question if his little sis has messaged him recently.

Ah huh, ok, what kind of topic is she fixated on now? The blond wonders and sighs softly, as it seems that he'll be getting a video call from Penny today. After all, its not his younger sister's fault that she's an AI or that she's been uploaded in a body that appears to be far older then she actually is. It would have been better if they created a body that appeared to be between the age of five to eight for her to spend time in, it would reflect her fair better then that of a teenager. People tolerate awkward questions from someone from that age then they do teens.

He sends a reply along with a simple question about what their recent discussion had been about. Then closes the Scroll and returns to his breakfast once he sips from his mug. As he gets seconds on his hot chocolate and of breakfast, his Scroll vibrates and upon opening, it's from his Master, giving him the pass-code for one of the training rooms plus a time he's expected to show up at.

Once he's done with his dishes, he sets them in the collection tubs and then off to collect his weapons. There's a few people in the halls at this point, a few frown at his cloths as he's not in a Beacon uniform. The gossip grape vine will be occupied by the mystery of him for a while. He wonders at what kind of stories they'll dream up and at how close to the truth they'll skimmer across or near in their need for juicy rumors and flight of fantasy.

Once before the correct door, he enters the pass-code and straightens his pose before entering the room. "We'll begin once you've stretched." Ozpin informs him once he's upon the field.

"Yes Master." Naruto states and the Headmaster nods, he begins his warm ups, excitement and anticipation slowly taking over his thoughts.

There's just something about combat that just made him feel so alive, so... complete.

o T - N = V = N - T o

"So, according to some of the upper years, we've got a lion loose on campus." Yang tells not just her Team but his as well upon everyone sitting down for lunch. Jaune blinks owlishly while Nora does as predicted and began to wonder through ideas like Beacon now has a mascot to a trained attack lion to whether or not someone raided a mad scientist lab and it's a genetically engineered super lion.

Ruby joins Nora on discussing various theories while Yang adds a few of her usual puns. He glances towards Ren for... well, it just felt like it was the right thing to do. Ren seems unconcerned, which, well, is fairly typical behavior to expect from him and he then glances towards Blake to find she's more interested in her book. His partner, well, she seems to be acting in a polite manner that suggests she's listening and kind of interested yet, not really invested in adding her own two cents to the conversation.

His crush, Snow Angel, seems to be pointedly ignoring being pulls into said conversation. So she's pretty much focusing on her lunch, yet she's listening giving the sounds she gives at certain points of the topic. The blond takes note that Nora and Yang shared a quick look before they look at Weiss for a second, it's clear they plan to draw her into the conversation, one way or the other.

"How about you, Jaune? What do you think about this?" Pyrrha asks, drawing him from his observations and lunch.

"Ah, what?" He says in a startled manner, then seeing the others look at him, he says, "Oh come on, they wouldn't allow an actual lion to roam the school. Or even allow anyone to have one as a pet, combat trained or otherwise." I'm pretty sure they wouldn't... Well, if it were a Grimm lion for Professor Port... But it would be in a secure cage.

"Maybe its a robot lion?" Ruby pipes in after a few seconds of silence. "I mean, aren't Atlas doing some pretty awesome things with machines?"

And Weiss, his Snow Angel, joins the conversation by pointing out how ridiculous the very idea of robot combat animals were. He's more then happy to let them keep talking without any input from him as he the topic brings up his guilt concerning his placement in Beacon when a certain blond and friendly lion Faunus didn't make it in. It's been a hard first week after all, a lot of things to get use to and a routine to learn.

He finds himself less hungry while doing his best to mask his current overwhelming emotions. Last I saw of him was at breakfast. The blond reflects and glances at Pyrrha out of the corner of his eye, stomach turning as his guilt and the lie he's living weight on him.

As lunch ends, Pyrrha hangs back, clearly wanting to speak with him. "Jaune, are you ok? You seem kind of distracted." She asks him and he gives her a fake, confident smile as he tries to reassure her that everything is fine, reminding her that they don't want to be late for their next class.

While Pyrrha doesn't look convince, she leaves it and lets him pull her down the hallway, heading for their next class.

It's late at night now and once more, they were out pass curfew searching for the 'fabled' the Lion of the Beacon. The sightings of the so called Lion had continued through the month with most agreeing that the training rooms and courtyard being popular haunts during class hours. The sightings kept adding fuel to the 'fire' of the mystery within the gossip circles within Beacon's students and thus, keeping Nora's interest in the subject.

Jaune really could have done without the continued interest as it just... Yea, he tried looking up Naruto's number in Vale only to not find a listing. There actually wasn't a listing of a Naruto in Vale at all as either a Huntsman in Training or as a resident, so he's stewing over having not thought of exchanging Scroll numbers when he had the chance. Or asking for a last name.

He's done his best to focus on his school work in spite of his stewing in his own guilt and the lie that is his transcripts. So, as they walk back to their dorm, his gaze is on the courtyard while Nora is leaning heavily upon Ren with Pyrrha slightly ahead of the pair, acting as point while he's bringing up the rear. Lost in his feelings and thoughts that, well, it had to be a hallucination, right?

Something created from a guilt ridden mind, a projection, right? "Like why would Naruto be here in Beacon? And... well, that looks like weird, particularly..." He murmurs as he comes to a stop as he gazes upon a scene that has Naruto hovering above the tree line with a pair of daggers in his hands, looking rather tired along with annoyed.

Then a Grimm comes flying up out of the trees and the hovering lion Faunus seems to be flying forward to greet the incoming black with hints of white blur. The hallucination vanishes from sight and he jumps as he hears Nora squeal out, "That. Was. Awesome!"

"Wait, you guys saw that too?" He exclaims. "I thought that was all in my head." Jaune states.

"An unknown blond hovering in the air with a pair of daggers? Might be some kind of Semblance." Ren reflects and he looks pass the pair to see Pyrrha's reaction to find that she has an odd look upon her face.

"To the forest!" Nora exclaims and she's already working the window to open to do just that. He's kind of slow on saying anything as, well, he's not sure how to react.

Would help if I could get a night of restful sleep instead of a night filled with fitful sleep. He mentally admits as he's pretty much in the process of trying to catch up with the rest of his team as they are already out in the courtyard and vanishing from view.

o T - N = V = N - T o

The Beowulf is a fairly large specimen and just the second one he's been 'sparring' with tonight. His Master is off to the side with a mug of coffee in his hand while the other hand is resting across the stomach. There's little in the way of light, well, for human eyes there was, yet, he gets the feeling that Ozpin is very much aware of where he is hovering along with his 'sparring' partner.

Tonight's lesson plan is a study the adaptiveness of a Grimm in a fight. Which means, he's not to kill them outright but to harry them, to put pressure on them, to see if they'll alter their fighting over time. So far, the only difference he is finding has to do with his fighting condition instead of any real variation in the Beowulf's attack patterns.

It hadn't been hard, to lure this one to the courtyard, it had been a bit more difficult to get it here without it getting distracted by the buildings or the students out pass curfew. Then again, none of them expected a Grimm to wander close to the Academy or be drawn to the courtyard, so, there's no distracting emotions from would be passerby's to lure it from its pursuit of him. As it launches into the air, Naruto is already doing a controlled release of the Gravity Shard to drop from his 'perch' in the air.

As he manages to use the hilts of his daggers to stun the Beowulf, he couldn't help but feel... "Ah... Master? I think we're going to have company soon." He says once he's leaped over a lunging strike by the Beowulf once he realizes that what he felt.

"I see." Ozpin states and then takes a drink from the mug, which has him wanting to roll his eyes as he's moving to kick the Beowulf under its jaw, sending it into a tree. Keeping his gaze upon the Grimm, watching as it picks itself up and shake its body, sending some leaves and twigs flying with some dirt dropping off as it moves to 'stand'.

He's moving forward, aiming for the throat to keep it from its intended vocalization. The low pitch growls end as his dagger slices through where he assumes is the vocal cords, this being the sixth time he's sliced at this Grimm's throat in a shallow manner. The Beowulf swings at him with its hand like paws, he's not able to avoid both, but he is already spending Gravity so he lands on his feet. He can feel the Gravity Shard getting close to being depleted, not that it's the only one he's got equipped, but it's the third one he's been using tonight.

Those bright energies he feels are getting closer, the larger concentration of the bright energy feels like it'll be the last to appear. Not that he's can really put any real thought into who's coming, not with the Beowulf very intent on continuing to attack him. At most, he just figures that this was something Ozpin planned to happen, just not with anyone particular, just some students 'stumbling' upon the Headmaster training his Apprentice.

Still, he can't keep the slight smile from his face as he slashes the incoming pawish hands, spending a bit of Aura to extend the bite of his daggers. He actually slices off the upper 'hand' from the Beowulf and the Grimm pulls back, all the while favoring said 'hand'. Within seconds, a huge hammer slams into the Beowulf's head, killing it and he moves into a relaxed pose at the sight of one Nora Valkyrie doing a peace sign with her hammer resting upon her shoulder, she's facing off in the incoming direction of her team.

Lie Ren greets his Master. "Headmaster." Which causes Nora and the approaching Pyrrha to glance about for the Headmaster of Beacon.

Nora's eyes drift back to him once she knows where the Headmaster is standing and... He kind of didn't know what to make of the shear look of interest that's aimed at him, it's fairly different then the typical looks he gets. It's not long before wariness fills him as she gathers herself up, the way she looks ready to pounce at him, almost like she'd eat him alive in a literal manner.

"Naruto?" Jaune's voice causes him to look towards the slightly out of breath teen, who's looking right at him with a bewildered expression upon his face and slightly disbelieving eyes. "Jaune." He greets the other with a nod and slight smile.

"You two... know each other?" Pyrrha asks as she glances between Jaune and himself. He wonders at the tone that's coloring that question as he manages to take a few steps back from a certain red head, who seems to be trying to advance slowly towards him in a manner of how one would approach a stray animal.

"We met on the bullhead. He tried to help me with my motion sickness." Jaune explains and he nods in agreement while focusing on Nora, very much certain that whatever is happening, the Headmaster wasn't going to put an end to it, yet at least.

"We were sleeping neighbors that night." He adds. "I didn't pass the test."

"Oh." Is Pyrrha's reply while Nora decides to try a different tactic of getting close to him. "I see."

"Then, how is it you are still at Beacon?" Ren asks in a calm manner as Nora begins to try using the kicked puppy look on him. Too bad for her, her eyes give away her true intentions.

"A member of Beacon decided to take me on as an Apprentice." Naruto admits and Ozpin adds, "Indeed. We were just finishing up tonight's lesson on Grimm, perhaps now is a good time to end it."

"Yes sir." He says as he hears the Headmaster begin to move. "I hope you all will remember your respective schedules and get some well deserve sleep before the night is done." His Master remarks. "Good evening."

"Your the Lion of Beacon!" Nora exclaims once Ozpin has been gone for a few minutes and he blinks upon hearing that, not sure why he was overly surprise by such a title or was it nickname? "Where's your tail? Oh... you would look so cute with fuzzy ears! We should take him shopping! We could get ears and a tail for him!"

"Nora..." Ren sighs while she moves to hang off of her childhood friend and he can't help but relax now that he's the focus of her complete attention. "Even a collar with, maybe, a tiny bell!" She exclaims.

"You... aren't listed in Vale." Jaune states upon moving closer and he blinks as he gives Jaune a confused look. "Yea... I'm from Atlas." He admits.

Pyrrha's brow furls while Nora exclaims, "Oh! Your from Atlas too! So's Weiss! Do you know each other?"

Weiss... Weiss... Oh could she... "Weiss Schnee? No, never met her." He admits. "I've meet her older sister though. Winter Schnee, she works for..." Dad.

"For?" Jaune and Nora ask in unision while Pyrrha gets an Oh. Ren, well, he seems as calm as ever.

"General Ironwood." He answers simply while Pyrrha's eyes go towards his left side of his body, going from his left eye down to his foot. Yea, she knows, then again, the only time they met, he didn't look to healthy let alone scar free.

"You're... looking better." Pyrrha admits and he nods. "Have you two... met?" Now Jaune asks and he replies, "We didn't really get introduced and it was just the one time, years ago."

Pyrrha nods in agreement. "When?" Nora asks and he sends a questioning look at the crimson haired Champion Tournament Fighter, after all, did they know that about her? They both were in Vale for likely the sameish reason, well, that's what he got from the file Atlas has on her. Likely shouldn't have read that, then again, Dad really does need to follow his own rules about passwords and his work.

"About eight years ago, I was invited to attend a private function in Atlas. I saw Naruto there, with his father." Pyrrha explains.

"I wasn't at the best of health when I was younger." The Neo-Faunus admits. "I stuck like glue to Dad's side all night." He couldn't help but smile a little at the memory, even if it wasn't so much him being shy as the way the 'kindness' tended to fade away if he ever ventured far from his Dad's side.

"So you were a Daddy's boy when you were a kid, huh?" Nora coos at him and he blinks before recalling that she likely doesn't know about... Well, I guess that's a point in her favor? Although... not sure if I like the whole, let's give him ears and tail plan from earlier. I really don't like having anything in my hair and I've got enough trouble without adding a stuff tail into the mix when it comes to seating.

"So... Ah, you have your own room or do you share?" Jaune asks curiously and he replies, "I was given a room in the Staff Wing. I have been given leave to eat my meals in the Staff Room."

And that, seems, to cause Nora to stiffen up and get this spooky kind of smile on her face, one that looks very plastic and belongs on an actual mask of some kind. "So~ You have access to the Staff Room huh? Like, the coffee machine?"

"I think you need a code to have it make coffee of any blends." He states in a calm manner, already alerted to the fact that letting her know that, yes, he did have free reign of anything in the Staff Room was a Bad Idea. Besides, it's true, you do need a code, it's just that it so happens that there's a list of hot liquid codes near the machine and in the digital booklet given to those who has access to the Staff Only Areas that's sent to the Scroll to be downloaded.

This deflates her a bit, the mood shifts of one Nora Valkyrie make him feeling more cautious then confused or put down as her being childish. He's not sure how much of it was her exaggerating an emotion or her just faking a reaction because she's expected to react that way. And... how can I tell that about her if this is the first time I've met her? The blond wonders to himself. There's kind of a sense of... looking in a mirror.

"Your considered Staff?" Jaune asks and he shrugs, replying, "It's a mix of what I can't be considered plus flavors of the older system which lead to my current accommodations and privileges."

"I... don't get it." His fellow blond admits while it looks like even Pyrrha didn't get it either. Ren, well, he might have gotten it but, hard to tell or perhaps it's more, he wants confirmation of it.

"Let me put it like this, I didn't pass the Entrance Exam so I am not a Student of Beacon Academy. I am not a student of another Hunter's Academy, I can't be treated as an exchange student." He states and Ren slowly nods. "Then, under the old system, I'd considered a member of my Master's household."

Dawning realization spreads among the other teens and within seconds, Nora asks, "So... you can...? What? Assign detention? Oh, how about signing hall passes?"

Naruto does his best to remember if they ever covered what kind of... Then, well, "Well, if you guys want to help me organize the Vytal Festival, I could get you out of class for the purpose as I am in charge of planning it."

"Wait, what? The Vytal Festival?" Jaune questions. "It's happening in Vale?"

"Yea. I guess that isn't... common knowledge." He admits, then again, his Dad told him about it when they discussed which Kingdom was to host it.

"Shouldn't one of the upper years students given the honor?" Ren asks, eyes slightly narrowing. Or an actual student of Beacon.

Well, how to explain this? "Nepotism." He states with a shrug and Pyrrha covers her face to hide her bemuse smile. "With a large dose of Kingdom and Huntsman politics."

"So, your dad's an important figure then?" Jaune asks. "How important is he? Like, owns a company like Snow Angel's family?"

Snow Angel? He glances towards the other three and Ren clears it up by saying, "Weiss Schnee."

"My Dad's actually an important Hunter, has a lot of pull among Atlas' Military and with the Council of Atlas." He says honestly. After all, Hunters and the Military are currently go hand in hand in Atlas at this point in time.

"Ah, so... You came to Beacon?" Why? Ren asks, suspicion clearly the driving motivation.

"Politics, likely the same reason why Ms Schnee is here." To get away from them. He explains.

"It's getting late, perhaps we should each be returning to our respective rooms for the night." Pyrrha suggests and he's suddenly aware that, yea, the adrenaline that had been in his system throughout his engagements with the two Grimm, was leaving him, although something about Nora does keep that edge of alert up. So, he's getting tired and becoming aware that, well, he likely smells so he's got a date with a shower then bed.

"I think that's a sound plan." He admits and, well, they did end up parting, although they did end up exchanging Scroll numbers, as certain parties wish to speak with him about certain things at a later date. They part soon after, with him trying his best to stifle his urge to yawn.

o T - N = V = N - T o

"We met the Lion!" Nora's voice echoing from the hallway, she's likely standing before Team RWBY's door. The loud noise jerking him fully awake and it takes him seconds to recall that last night wasn't a dream.

Jaune checks his Scroll, checking his contacts to find Naruto's name there and he sighs, allowing himself to sink a bit into his bed. He feels so light, like some great burden was lifted from his shoulders. It's dizzying, although, as Nora returns from Team RWBY's dorm, she seems bewildered. "Ah... You know, Weiss wasn't happy to learn that Naruto's a Faunus from Atlas. She was, like, really super not fine with it."

"What? Really?" He asks, suddenly, there's an odd sense of foreboding about this turn of development.

"Yea, really, then Blake made a comment about how typical Weiss's reaction was for a Schnee and, well... They started arguing." Nora admits.

"I wasn't aware Blake knew Naruto." Ren remarks, he glances around to find that Pyrrha was likely in their bathroom. He sits up and begins to get ready for classes.

"I think it was more about Faunus in general then Naruto in particular." Nora admits, finger resting near her lip while her other hand rests across her stomach. "Come to think of it, I don't think I got pass mentioning how the Lion of Beacon was a lion Faunus who's staying at Beacon and isn't a student."

"Did you mention him being an Apprentice to one of the Staff?" Ren asks. "Or that he's been entrusted with organization the Vytal Festival?"

"Well, no, Weiss pretty much just kind of exploded, started on asking on whether Naruto's background was check and such." Nora adds with a frown. "She didn't even ask me about any of the details, like, how we watch him flying around the sky." "Hovering." Ren corrects. "Or about the fact that I saved his life by heroic bashing the Ursa's head in." "He was fine and it was a Beowulf." "Or even how Jaune and him were best buds before being cruelly separated by an evil plot arranged by dastardly sky pirates?" "They met on the bullhead and were just bunk neighbors. They didn't even think to exchange numbers along with the fact that there's no sky pirates operating over Beacon Academy."

"Are there such things as sky pirates?" The blond wonders as he tidies up his bed. Then he realizes, he likely shouldn't give Nora a line to feed into.

"Well, duh! The Captain's an old flame of Naruto's Dad who, feeling spurred, by him falling in love with Naruto's Mom!" Nora then goes on about a story of treachery as the Captain mutinied from the Sky Fleet of Atlas and began a campaign upon an ancient space station to get a recipe for some kind of super fuel.

By the time it's his turn to use the bathroom, Nora's forgotten the subplot of the Captain killing Naruto's mom, leaving a baby Naruto in the sole care of his Dad. Then again, she's pretty much slotted Ren as the head ninja from an ancient clan where pink eyes signify him inheriting some special, blood line power that's separate from his personal Semblance who's trying to stop said evil Sky Pirate Captain due to her unknowingly possessing the key to a dooms day weapon that was originally made to stop the Grimm, only it actually can empower them. Never mind how she slotted Pyrrha and him into secret agents for their respective birth Kingdoms, who just kept keeping important secrets from one another or herself into a rescued slave girl turned kick ass and super awesome fighter pilot of a craft that's actually an artificial alien organism scouting out their planet.

With the door clicking shut behind him, Jaune sighs and leans on the door for a few seconds, trying to sort through his thoughts to recall what he wanted to do before they leave for breakfast. Collecting himself, he starts with a shower once he hung up his uniform on the hooks on the door and begins the task of undressing along with starting the shower.

It's lunch and the cold war going on between Blake and his crush seems to have gotten frostier at some point between breakfast and now. It's clearly wearing on Ruby, which is setting Yang on edge as the fist fighter didn't know how to fix this situation between the two so that Ruby would feel better. Seeing how the younger leader is and feeling responsible given Nora's the one to bring this clash on, he decides to try something.

Which is why, he finally asks, "What's wrong with Naruto? I mean, he's a great guy."

Weiss become startled and then stiffens while turning to look at him with a pair of wide eyes. "Yea, he's a lion Faunus, but he's been nice to me. I mean, he did try and help with the motion sickness but, it's not his fault I couldn't keep it in."

"Wait, wait, wait... We're talking about... a blue eye with black? Odd bend to his legs?" Snow Angel asks and he nods, which seems to, well, there's an odd mix of emotions that seems to happen with Weiss.

"Oh, that's who the Lion is? Well, that's fine then." The white themed Huntress states, only, it's clear that Blake wasn't having any of it. "What?" Weiss asks upon noticing Blake's very hostile expression that's aimed at the Schnee Heiress.

"Just like that, huh? What, just going to take a human's word that this Faunus is who you think they are?" Blake seems to growl at Snow Angel and, well, he's kind of curious, too, about the sudden change in Weiss' tune about the Lion being fine in her books as long as it's Naruto.

"Well, why not? It's not like the poor boy could do any real harm." Weiss answers and he glances around the table at the others, not really sure what to make of that.

"Actually, Naruto appears to be in much better health then his last publication picture had him in." Pyrrha admits and Weiss gives his partner a look of disbelief. Pyrrha looks helpless when it's clear that the Heiress sports a pitying look along with a slight shake of her head.

"Just because he's grown older doesn't change his ability to function in a healthy manner." Weiss states. "Yes, it's likely he's gotten prosthetic and maybe some kind of brace, but, really? I don't see how they'd replace that with current technology."

"So, just because he's infirm, he can't possibly be a threat?" Blake demands while he's trying to figure out just what Weiss means by... that, after all, Naruto didn't look like he had armor beyond his leather jacket nor did it appear like he's got a fake limb. "Or is it because of his adopted parent?"

Naruto's adopted? The blond thinks, then again, it's not like they've known each other for very long or really gotten into sharing personal details. Although... How would Blake know? And... publication photo?

"Naruto? Infirm?" Nora giggles and both Huntresses in Training turn to give his team-mate a glare.

"I don't see any reason to laugh concerning a crippled and half blind Faunus boy. Everyone knows he couldn't possibly be fit to enter into the program and I highly doubt his adopted father would let him foster such a fantasy either." The Schnee Heiress states, which, does cause Ren to place a hand upon Nora's shoulder, calming her from her giggling.

He glances at Pyrrha, pleading look of, please explain. After all, Naruto wasn't wearing any glasses nor did it appear to him that Naruto couldn't hold his own in a fight. It's... this just seems... like they aren't even talking about the same person.

"How typical, he's seventeen himself, yet, you would still regard him as a boy? Or that the General wouldn't see about fitting his adopted son with cybernetic limbs and armor? It's been six years since Naruto's appeared in public, that's time enough for technology to advance enough to create a prototype cyber eye." And, he's now got... a lot of information yet, none of which fits with what he's seen of Naruto so far.

"So, you two are saying that Naruto's a cyborg?!" Nora explodes, her eyes out of focus as she begins spinning a yarn about what abilities he must have because of it. "That's. So. Amazing!" She squeals with Ruby just before lunch ends.

All the while Blake and Weiss sniping at each other over whether or not Naruto's able to train to be a Hunter, or, at least, he thought they were but, well, it seems that the argument has shifted into something more. He's pretty much at a loss at how to help calm them down, not that he was alone, given it looks like Yang is getting more worried over this change in her team mate and partner. His appetite kind of gone, he pretty much mentally prepares himself for calling Naruto tonight, like after class, hoping he'd be able to clear things up along with answer some of his questions.

o T - N = V = N - T o

"Hello?" Naruto answers his Scroll as he's finished reading the applications for food vendors for a spot at the 'market' area of the festival. He wonders if it's Winter informing him of the status of the information about Penny's... ah, progress in team bonding.

"Hey, Naruto! How's it going? Were you tired this morning?" Jaune asks cheerfully.

"Pretty good, just finished reading some applications for the festival." He informs the other blond. "And I slept fairly well." Likely due to the differences in our schedules.

"Great! So... We were talking with Weiss, you know, Weiss Schnee? Well, she kind of had problems with something but changed her tune upon hearing your name." Jaune begins and he blinks a bit, pretty sure that information fishing is suppose to be more... subtle then this.

"Then Blake, who's on the same team as Weiss, seem to take offense to some of what Weiss had to say about you and, well, other things." The other continues and he frowns. "Then, well, your a cyborg?"

"Well... if this is the Heiress of the Schnee Company, then, yea, she kind of has reason to be on guard concerning Faunus. Is Blake a Faunus?" He asks curiously. "It's also just likely that she could be offended concerning the company's history concerning hiring practices when it comes to Faunus along with their treatment."

"Weiss as bad history with Faunus? Or is it just her family? Also, ah, I don't know if Blake is a Faunus as I haven't notice anything noticeable about her." The teen admits. "And, how bad are we talking about?"

"Fairly bad, actually, but then, since the White Fang switched tactics... It's, sadly, understandable that she's paranoid about her safety." He admits. "It's likely colored her perception of Faunus, painting them all with the same brush as those who run with the White Fang."

"So... she ever got targeted personally by this group?" Jaune asks in alarm. "Is that how she got that scar?"

"More like indirectly targeted, like most of the family and not that I am aware of." The Faunus states. "And, about Blake, does she... No, never mind." I'll respect her choice to hide what she is. Although...

"Oh, so that's what's going on. So, basically, Blake is pro-Faunus and the Schnee Company is, ah..." Jaune stumbles verbally.

"The Schnee Company is unpopular due to business practices." He remarks. "I know my Dad disagrees with Weiss's father about certain things but, well, it's a privately owned business that's supplying what the Military needs, which, means nobody really wants to rock the boat."

"Man... that's tough. So, Weiss is a target just because of how her dad runs this company? Well, damn, poor Weiss." Jaune remarks and he can't help but get a wiry smile on his face, knowing that there's a flip side to that argument, yet, it's not really the point of this conversation.

"Yea, life's not fair." He recalls his most common nightmare, of the fact that in that dream, he had clearly been suicidal... Not sure what was the final push had been, just that, there must have been one. "Still, life goes on. Time marches on."

Silence hangs between them for a few minutes before Jaune breaks it, saying, "So... Ah, your... I mean, they both seem to..."

"Yes, Jaune, I own and need to wear a cybernetic leg to get around." He admits with a sigh. "It's just something I need to live with." If only for the rest of this year, after all, the activity at the end of it seems to be gearing up for something, likely a spurt of regeneration. He's got an appointment with Professors Oobleck and Peach this coming weekend to do a physical examination of the area.

"Oh, ok." Jaune acknowledges. "Ah, well, they also seem to... Your eye..."

"It... grew back." By the time I was about seven years of age. He admits. "So, yea, any pictures you'll find about me, they will have my left eye covered or I'd be wearing a special monocle." Make up was used to hide the fact that the scars are gone too.

"I... kind of hope you, along with your team will keep quite about that fact. We're studying what going on concerning my regeneration as it's, well, flat out strange as we can't tell if it's my Semblance or it's something unique to me." He admits. "The study of it has help heal a number of people over the years and, well, given time, we maybe know how to regrow new limbs, maybe even figure out how to apply that to organs."

"Wow... That's so cool! I mean, that's nice of you, helping with, err, wait, Semblances can heal people? Or just their owners?" Jaune asks and he shrugs his shoulders as he replies, "Well, it's a strange field of study, just because nobody's ever recorded to having a certain ability doesn't mean much, particularly given the very nature of Aura and how people can change over time, never know when a Semblance will pick up a new application or become easier to work with."

"Wow!" The blond on the other side of the Scroll says with awe. "Hey, is there, like, a machine that can tell you someone's Semblance? Cause, I have no clue what mine, ah, is."

"You came to Beacon without knowing what your Semblance does? Huh, not uncommon, some are just far more subtle then others, which make it harder to discern their abilities." He remarks.

o T - N = V = N - T o

Jaune relaxes a bit on hearing that from Naruto as, well, it means that there's nothing wrong with him not using his Aura super power. He's got answers to his previous questions, although, now, he's got some more questions to ask. Though, he guesses they can wait.

"Hey, when we spotted you, you were kind of perched on the air..." He trails off and Naruto chuckles. "It was pretty cool, seeing you kind of crouched up there, with your daggers ready."

"Yea, I'm very talented when it comes to Dust manipulation. That was a creative use of a Gravity Dust Shard, no records have mentioned anyone using it like that." The Apprentice Huntsman admits with a hint of pride and satisfaction. He can pretty much hear the wide smile.

"Is it something you can learn?" He asks and from there, Naruto talks about his own experiences along with a promise of sending him some digital scans of books on the topic plus seeing if he can't get a hold of some recordings for teaching the skill.

The calls ends with someone calling Naruto's name and they say their good byes. Holding his Scroll in his hand, he stares at it for a few seconds more before closing it and pocketing it. As he walks towards the cafeteria to grab dinner, he mentally reviews what he's learnt, what Naruto said (and didn't), and the fact that, he's got to talk with his team about keeping mum on the state of Naruto's health.

"Hey, Pyrrha, I need to talk with you." He says before adding, "Well, I need to talk with the whole team, actually."

"Oh? Is something wrong Jaune?" She asks him and he sighs a bit.

"Nothing's wrong with me, it's just that, well, I spoke to Naruto about this whole Weiss and Blake issue and it seems to boil down to the Schnee Company's business practices painting a target on her in concern of the White Fang and Blake's pro-Faunus." Glad that Naruto put it like that. "Which is why Weiss is so anti-Faunus, she's paranoid about getting targeted by the group."

"In a way, yes, that is true." The crimson haired Huntress admits. "But it seems that Blake's taking it far more personally."

"Ah, well, Naruto did... We'd tell if Blake was a Faunus... Won't we?" He asks his partner with concern coloring his tone and she kind of just presses her lips together in a slight frown while glancing off to the side.

"It's not really our place to speculate. If Blake wishes to not tell us, then we should respect that." Pyrrha states and he feels his stomach drop, then again, he does recall the looks and the whispers Naruto got during that camp out plus his own thoughts concerning Naruto not being able to hide the fact of his species either.

"I've never seen her without..." He muses and catches Pyrrha's eye before she sighs, "Me neither."

"Right, yea, ok. It's just, huh, you'd think she'd... I guess trust is... Then again... Your right, it's really is up to her." He does his best to gather up his thoughts. Not sure if he's feeling hurt on his behalf or on behalf of certain members of Team RWBY, after all, it's not like he's overly close to her. It's more of a my friend's friend kind of connection.

"And?" Pyrrha asks after a few seconds of silence between them.

"Oh, yea, I asked Naruto about being a cyborg and he admitted to having a mechanical leg, but, that's it. He kind of wants us to hush up on the whole, I have a left eye as it seems it regrew, they've been keeping a lid on it due to not wanting to draw the wrong kind of attention." The blond tells his partner. "They're doing a long term study of his healing and it sounds like, given time, his leg will be fixed."

Understanding blooms in Pyrrha's emerald eyes. Then nods sharply as resolve over takes the understanding. "Right, we'll have to meet somewhere to break the news to Nora and Ren." She says and as she begins to walk, he follows after, unthinking as he puzzles out why they'd need to go elsewhere to break the news.

Then they enter the room and find Nora talking rather loudly before noticing them entering. Oh yea, Pyrr is right, we need some place less populated if we want it to tell Nora. "Hey, Fearless Leader! Pyrrha!"

He smiles and returns the waving from their very energetic teammate. "Right, yea, that... sounds like the right idea." He admits with a bit of haste at not realizing that before now.

"So, why are we all the way out here?" Ren asks as they walk about near the edge of the Grimm filled forest. Nora's darting around the bushes along with chatting excitedly with his partner concerning how she'd kill any Grimm they encounter.

"Well, I spoke with Naruto and it seems that his being, you know, healthy, is something of a secret." Jaune admits and at the mention of him having contacted Naruto, Nora seems to come swinging over to his side, an arm is pulling him down into a headlock. "You phoned him and didn't tell us until now?! Oh, what did you two talk about?" Nora asks and he couldn't make out Ren's reaction.

"Was it about how he's a lab experiment?" Nora asks as she lets him. "Or is it because he's a secretly a super hero sent to save us all from some advance alien zombie plague?"

"Ah, well, they're studying his regeneration, so, he's kind of a lab experiment?" He finds himself admitting. "Also, he's got a cybernetic prosthetic leg and it sounds like his leg is regrowing so he'll be losing it? I think? I mean, why would he need one if he's leg is whole again?"

"Really?! I was right! Hey, hear that Ren! I was right!" Nora tugs on Ren as she celebrates that fact.

"Yes, Nora, it seems so." The pink eyed member of the team agrees. "So, he wishes for us to not mention this?"

"Yip, oh, and I asked if it was his Semblance only to find out they can't tell." The blond admits. "I also learnt that he's very good at using Dust, that's how he did that air perch, using Gravity Dust Shard."

"Dust? Really? Oh, that's so cool! I would love to do that!" Nora asks and he nods, replying, "Yea, he's pretty skilled at manipulating it and he's promised to send me book scans on the topic."

"That sounds nice of him, Jaune." Pyrrha says and he ducks his head, rubbing his neck. "Yea, well... It sounds pretty cool, some of the things he'd done with Dust and I guess I want to see if I could learn something similar, you know?"

"It's fine, Jaune." His partner reassures him while Nora grins at him. "Oh, so, what, looking for some private lessons? Eh, Pyrrha?" The lighter red head had walked over, nudging her fellow red head.

"I'm sure he has other things to do then that. After all, he's an Apprentice, he doesn't share the same scheduled." He says, not getting the odd look Pyrrha sent Nora upon the other nudging her.

"Well, Jaune, if you want, we could do some lessons together." Pyrrha admits and he shakes his head, "Nay, you guys have your own stuff to do during your free time then help me look this stuff up."

Ren seems to shake his head at him before asking, "Did you two talk about the festival?" It take him a few minutes to reply to that while Nora begins talking about what Naruto should arrange for it.

They begin walking back as Nora continues on the vein with little input from them. He struggles to recall what was mentioned but figured that it really wasn't something important as he's not required to remember those kind of details given he's not helping plan it.

o T - N = V = N - T o

"So, Blake ran off?" The blond Faunus asks as he's resting in his room, resting on a small couch he's been able to find in storage and brought to his room. He's using two Dust Shards at the moment, it's a mixture of boredom and stress relief as he keeps the two elements from touching as he creates images viva water and ice weaving over his left hand, his palm is up.

"Well, yea, she kind of did." Jaune admits and he waits, they had talked a bit about the festival, mostly with his fellow blond listening to his complaints concerning his budget and how some seem to have problems dealing with a seventeen year old in arranging things like bargaining over the cost of the materials he's ordering in bulk or knowing when he needs the order to show up, let alone hiring crews to build the various stalls. "She's back, though, so no worries!"

He rises an eyebrow at the tone, replying as casually as he can, "But you don't think she's going to let this White Fang event go." Yea, if Dad knew that an ex-terrorist easily joined Beacon, he'd be asking if the Headmaster is in need of a head examination.

"She's upset." Jaune admits with a sigh. Which means that team RWBY is concerned over her obsession. "It's not like she was a member of the group or anything! She's just a really big believer in their original cause."

Still going through with the back ground check and sending her parents a heads up about where their daughter is. He thinks to himself. It's more of a question of how he'll go about it though. They deserve to know and she's unlikely gotten around to sending word their way.

"A lot of Faunus aren't pleased with their new management." He agrees. "All this terrorist activity has only increased the negativity throughout the Kingdoms." Which draws in the Grimm.

"You know, I'd almost suggest as punishment for running, they get her to wear a bell for a week." He adds with a smirk. The ice takes the form of a bell with the water doing a bow, it holds for a few seconds as Jaune makes a few nervous noises.

"On please, no. I don't think that'll help." The blond on the other end remarks.

"It's about actions and consequences." He remarks as he causes the elements to shift into a fire works display. "Blake's actions have consequences and from the sounds of things, she's very prone to running from her problems at the drop of a hat. Having a bell, well, it might cause her to stop and think about the consequences of her current course of action."

"That still sounds like stereotyping." Jaune states. "I mean, sneaky cat needing a bell?"

"You know what they say about the shoe and it fitting..." He remarks dryly, which causes Jaune to sigh. Naruto can hear Jaune coming to a stop near a fountain.

Then, as he's about to ask about the trip to Forever Falls, he hears a young, feminine voice calling Jaune's name. "Oh, hey, Ruby!" He hears the leader of team JNPR return the greeting.

"Oh, sorry, I didn't know you were talking to someone." He hears Ruby says, clearly closer. Jaune chuckles in embarrassment, saying, "Ah, well, I was just talking with Naruto."

"Should we end the call here?" He asks curiously as he lets the Dust he's toying with disperse into nothingness. The chill feeling of the two elements slowly fade from within his being.

"Ah, well, it's not like I can't talk with Jaune at a different time..." The younger team leader remarks, clearly embarrassed. "Are you sure? I mean, we've been talking for a bit already." Jaune asks and he can pretty much guess that Jaune's got a concerned look on his face.

"Yea, it's not like Jaune and I can't talk more later, I kind of do have some work I should continue on with." He assures the far younger teenager. "I think I'm reading to return to it. So, I'll call you tomorrow, ok Jaune?"

"Yea, ok." Jaune says while Ruby pipes in, "If you're certain."

"Bye." He says and they echo him before he end the call. Naruto stares down at the Scroll before moving to get off the couch, heading for the desk that's become his work station, hopefully, he's got a fresh take on his current problem concerning what kind of games booths he's going to allow to be run before going through the effort of sorting through said booth operators, trying to figure out which of them were a bit more honest in running their games and seeing if they're interested in a spot to run said game booth for the upcoming festival.

Mist is around him, a male voice is speaking about organs and there's this sense of dread and fear, it's not a fear for himself, but, for those around him. He glances around but, the people standing next to and behind him, they are solid black, their cloths are the same shade as they look to be merged with the black skin and hair. There's no eyes or outstanding features of their faces. Then, there's someone among the group...

He's laying on his back and someone's shaking him awake. Once more, the other is solid black, in body and cloths. Words are exchanged, each word isn't one he can recall but the jest is about him sleeping out here and catching a cold. It's not long before he's helping the other with picking herbs for medicine. Then, he hears clearly as the other says, "When a person... has something important they want to protect… that's when they can become truly strong."

Now there's a collection of ice mirrors surrounding him. Thin shards of ice, phantom pain stabbing him about his dream body. Mist once more curling and obscuring the area beyond the mirrors. He has no control over what happens next, his body moving and reacting, there's this dull sense of difference with his dream body. Someone takes a hit meant for him, his voice shouts a question, one that he doesn't hear.

There's a reply that he doesn't understand, just the meaning. That this boy, did this unthinkingly and then, there's Rage...

It's a stone tunnel and before him, is someone very different. Crimson red hair, long with similar crimson eyes. "So... you're alive after all... Naruto." The seemingly human standing before him muses, he feels the hairs of the back of his neck rise up while the other slowly approaches, the feeling of Rage and Fear seem to flow from this being like water from a spring.

"Almost thirteen years since then..." Muses the being, coming to a stop just four or three feet from him, looking down upon him. "Ah yes, I do look different, don't I? But then, you've undergone a few of your own."

He flinches as the other's arm darts forward for his neck, jerking back his head while his right hand shoots up to deflect the hand. The being is overly amused by his reaction but doesn't pulling his arm back. "What interesting times that are coming... Be sure to survive, boy." The being remarks as red Aura begins to flare up, cloaking them. "Be sure to thrive what's coming..."

Red floods his vision and he's falling as everything shatters.

He wakes and stares blankly up at the ceiling. "May you live in interesting times." He quotes an old curse to the silence of his room.

Curling his toes, sits up and tosses the blankets aside, staring at his left leg. He reaches out and gently runs his claw like nails about the very pale skin. There's feeling from doing that, proving that it's not a dream. "It's too soon... It shouldn't have..." Naruto murmurs before glancing around for his Scroll.

"Yes, Mr Ironwood?" Master Ozpin asks upon answering the phone. "What can I help you with this late... early in the morning?"

"Sir? I think I'm going to need help getting to the med ward." The blond admits, his throat tight with emotion. He's having trouble pinning down just what he feels about this recent development. After all, there's a week before the break and it's rather busy time for everyone at the academy.

"Are you injured?" The Headmaster asks. "Well, it's more like... I am not sure... My leg sir, my left one, it's..." His emotions coloring his tone and he's finding it hard to just flat out say it.

"Whole." He manages to croak out after a good minute of silence. He's using his other hand to wipe the tears from his left cheek. "I'm coming."

The call ends and he lets his Scroll drop onto the bed, his mind overwhelmed with emotions along with the words that stranger spoke in his dream.

Ending it here

Hymns of Rebirth: High School DxD

I don't own High School DxD or Katekyo Hitman Reborn!

The black sky of the underworld hid little from the gaze of the youngest member of the House Oriax. The seventeen year old Devil feels the drain upon his own reserves yet, he refuses to let go of the cloak of magic over his form. The Civil War might be over yet, there's still terms of surrender that's being hammered over and thus, it's still an uneasy time for all Devils, not sure if the embers of the war won't flare up suddenly for one last hurrah before the terms could be worked out and signed upon.

It's coming up! There! Terrance Oriax thinks, currently silver eyes glinting in excitement. His flight path altering with his resolve strengthening. All of his attempts at divination had read the same for the pass year, a grove, a rainbow of flames, and a chorus of pleas for aid and safety for someone they care for. It has only been two days ago when the Devil got a sense of Time of when this was to happen.

Pulling up, he lands in a crouch as both his wings and the magic cloaking him fade away. Taking some time to take a breather, the youngest Oriax's right hand moves into his pocket to pull out the very small vial that possess a single drop of Phoenix Tears, pilfered from his... parent's private lab. He hadn't dared to take much, not sure what alarms the lab housed let alone wanting to find out if they check for weight. Terrance figured that taking a single drop wouldn't set anything off.

Feeling better and a tad safer, the Devil moves to stand, his hands adjusting his cloths. Being alert to any changes is how he notices how the wind alters and there's this... pressure. It takes minutes before it's like something is ramming the air before an old looking tree, not being a botanist or caring much for potions, he doesn't know what kind of tree it is. Keeping about ten feet between the shimmering air and himself, he's tempted to use a low power reveal spell.

It's only at the sight of color sparking at the spot that he decides not to chance it. Red and yellow, taking turns and then, it's like they latch onto something as they cause the air to burn in those colors. Next is green and indigo streaks in the red and yellow with sparks leaping about far more furiously then the previous colors. Then, the red and yellow fire grow, seemingly eating away at the air, green and indigo take over the center. As before, two new colors begin to express themselves, blue and purple. The blue seem to flow to the outer fires while the purple intertwine at the base of the others, which suddenly seem to fuel them and he jerks at how it's gone from almost a campfire to some kind of firestorm.

The fire spreads everywhere with blue leading the way for the others to follow. All around him, it's on fire and then, it's on him! Only, there's a new color now, orange, moving over his body and about cloths. The other colors move away from him and he lets out his breath, one he hadn't been aware that he's holding. He finds himself rather rather unsure of what this means for him as it's almost like there's now something dancing at the edge of his mind now, an odd emotion that's kind of out of place.

Then, the orange fire seem to move into his body and he flares his wings while doing his best to call upon his magic to defend him, only, it doesn't DO anything! So yea, he panics, taking to the air only it doesn't do anything! There's orange fire still humming under his skin, entering into his flesh, flowing in his blood, and settling in his bone! He tries to fly above the fire storm only, as he reaches the edge, he grows limbs grow heavy and his wings fail him, the blue and indigo gently catch him as he falls, lowering him upon the ground.

His limbs seem normal yet, he can't find it in himself to care as he's regretting ever following through with divination, for clearly, this has to be a trap! As despair fills him, that strange emotion seems to surge forward, again, he doesn't know what it is nor does he overly want to know. He's a Devil, only... there's...

Involuntary, he takes a sharp breath before rolling onto his stomach but as pain begins to pulse upon his wings. Terrance bites his lip and his hands dig into the ground as it feels like his whole being is being uprooted. His vision swims soon enough while he goes deaf along with loosing all of his other senses. As everything returns, old, suppressed memories of what has been done to him along with by whom cause him to curl up on himself, tears now flowing. How could they not?

His one wing curl up, it's now sporting glossy black feathers with ebony stripes, not unlike a Fallen Angel's own, only, there feathers... Touching one, he is reminded of an owl feather and recalls how an owl can fly silently, it seems that his wings take after an owl's own instead of a crow's. It shouldn't be that surprising as his body... it was designed by...

Never mind the torment he along with his... brothers went through in that world of illusion. All of them being taught, tested, and competing for the chance to Live. It's unlikely they had been the first batch or that this body was the first. A lab experiment was what he continues to be. He ponders if any of the previous ones lived as long has he had or if the House were aware of the experiments. Although, now he knows what that odd emotion is and it's odd how much... more he feels.

With a sigh, Terrance causes his changed wings to withdraw. The fires continue to rage yet, he remains without damage from them at all. It takes him a bit to realize that at some point he dropped the vial and can't help but note how the purple and yellow seem to burn happily upon it. It strikes him as fishy, that none have appear as of yet, after all, shouldn't this cause some kind of stir?

After all, he's unsure how much time has passed and even trying to make out the sky, these fires fill the air itself. "I can't go back." He murmurs after a while, he just can't. The matter isn't about if the House was aware or not, it's that he Knows and Refuses to allow himself be Used like that.

As he sits there, Terrance can't help but examine his options, yet, in the end, even if he succeeds in killing her, he wouldn't have his freedom, he's not a natural born Devil not even a half-Devil that she put through a serious of risky rituals that could eliminate the human half within a half breed's being. Her own egg yet, the 'father' was actually centered around covering the Fallen Angel's... something, to allow for some-kind of messing between the two?

Homunculus. He muses, it's not the prefect definition of what he is, yet it's the closest one he could think of. Both his body and his mind had been created by...

"Even if I manage to make it to... Then it'll be... I'd be just another Stray." He murmurs sourly.

He glances to the starting point and tilts his head to the side a bit, there's... It's kind of like a... Whirlpool of color. "Where does it lead?" Terrance wonders and then, with a sigh, he stands and walks over to where the vial is before crouching as he picks it up. The fires upon it seem to sink into it and he notes that the glass is indigo in color instead of the white crystal.

Pocketing the tiny vial, Terrance slowly circles the whirlpool of rainbow flames. No matter the angle he takes, it seems that he's always facing the flat surface. Terrance glances around him once more, noting that yes, the fires continue to burn without any material fuel. "What's there to lose at this point?" He mutters and he calls forth his wings before walking into the whirlpool.

Fucking Seal! Damn this fucking situation! Hayato glares about the room, anywhere but at his Boss.

Damn fucking shit eating ass holes! He can't help but glare out of the window at the thought of the shit storm of messes the Ninth's generation left behind for them to clean up. It's only when the Ninth collapsed out of the country did anyone actually ran tests for the usual elderly health problems between the hospital calling them and them actually arriving with Xanxus, after all, the Varia Boss is listed as the Ninth's son, so family.

Civilian doctors diagnosed what Mafia ones never thought to test for and they turned over the results to Xanxus while explaining it all. Somethings started making disturbing Sense in regards to the Ninth's behavior and it wasn't long before they began to dig up everything that happened within the kind of time frame the doctors suggested and then they went a bit further and, well, they brought in a few of their own Flame doctors to run a few checks over and, yea. The Ninth should have stepped down decades ago given that he'd been using his own Flames to migrate the brain conditions, even in the end, using his Flames to influence his own personal doctors into Missing the onset of such things, which if caught early, could have been halted before they became such an issue.

What's worst? There's a bit of evidence that suggests that Iemitsu Sawada instinctively Sensed what the Ninth wasn't Well. There's evidence that the CEDEF began to grow in influence within the Family, moving out of their usual role of Advisors to... well, that's less defined but it wouldn't be incorrect that the External Advisor had made use of the Ninth, influencing the choosing of the next Heir once the three sons were dead. After all, they had records of who married who, that the Vongola hadn't Needed to settle on Boss, only Iemitsu Wanted it to be the Tenth, as if it was some kind of forgone conclusion that Boss was the Only one for the job.

It's... hard for him to put the whole issue aside, that his Boss should never have been picked in the first place never mind the whole issue of the Ring Battles either, after all, Xanxus is ADOPTED son, possessing no blood connection to the Ninth. They'll likely need to run blood work again those known to possess the blood of the Second but, well, various people are now debating what this now means. Nobody can deny that the Tenth's Hour is now forever etched upon the Vongola Sky Ring, it's just that, it's his right to be the Don that's in question, which brings up the question if he's really the Tenth Don or just the place holder.

Reborn suddenly moves and marches out of the door, Hayato watches as the former tutor march off. The man's been in a temper for the pass two weeks, ever since that training incident. The stress had been trying to call forth the Boss's Flames from behind the Seal, more then the shattered hole allowed, and then, well, yea... There's still burns on the Tenth's body and the Seal, it Reacted Strongly, so Strongly it Slammed down Hard on the Boss. Trapping his conscious mind behind the now repaired Seal along with his Flames.

They've had various Skies come to help feed Sky Flames to the slowly Flame starving body along with trying to pick at the Seal, only, due to the use of the Vongola Ring having been on the Ninth's person... It's hard on all of them, Chrome and Mukuro have taken turns pretending to be Boss and they've done their best to keep some kind of scheduled so only one of them were here in the room with the Boss at a time. Everyone is dreading the idea of taking long term missions.

It's not fair... After everything we've been through... Maybe Pineapple-Head is right, we should just burn it all down. The nineteen year old Storm User muses.

[P $ - = o = - $ V]

It takes a few seconds for his wings to stabilize him and upon noticing where he is, Terrance flinches instinctively at the various icons only, there's no headache from looking or sudden pains from being in a place of worship. It's clearly a chapel with stain glass never mind the holy cross with that guy they can't talk about hanging on it. He turns about, taking in the whole furnishings plus the slow on set of nerves at the idea that he might have ended up in the human world.

Something clicks and he reacts quickly, something hits the stone that the chapel made out of. The half breed glares at the human in odd cloths, holding something made out of green metal. The sideburns being fairly noticeable and there's this look of annoyance in those black eyes. The weapon moves and there's that sound once more, he move out of the way. More noise and he's evading the incoming metal just fine, this being slightly familiar territory for him as well as a situation of being under-attack viva range.

"Chaos Shot!" The human snarls and he's already entering into a dive to get in close to attack the man, noting that the energy gathered looks familiar. As he dodges, he already lets loose a deflect spell to cloak himself in and as he manages to get the man by the throat while batting the green weapon away, rising into the air, the magic does its job.

"Where am I?" The dark green haired half breed asks as they rise fairly high up in the air. The human sneers at him and he notes the yellow energy does seem to spring into existence, it's not until it's appears moves in the way fire does he realize why the energy is so familiar. "Impressive, a magician then? Odd choice of a focus though." Not really caring as the human tries to break his hold, the yellow seems to argument the man's strength but, well, he's far stronger and durable then a human is plus there's the fact that if he needs to, he could argument himself, but then, he just adds a bit more magic to the deflect spell that's hanging from his body, so that the damage isn't as much as it could actually be.

A kick to his midsection does push them apart but he's already moving a bit away, waiting for the magician to call up a levitation spell only, the man doesn't and a ripple of green appear near the hand, it looks like a lizard only then it's that green weapon once more. "Surrender and it'll be a quick death or don't and it'll be a slow one." The magician states in a icy cold tone, which only causes him to tilt his head to the side as he regards the human.

Terrance snorts softly, not believing that the magician could kill him. He gives the human a look of disdain with a hint of 'I'd like to see you try'. He's mentally going through what kind of lightning spell to use to inflict pain, guessing that the magician likely knows enough fire protection spells or wearing something with that kind of enchantment.

That green weapon fires more metal and he finishes the spell by the sixth shot, the man dodges only for it to follow after. Closing his wings, he drops down as he watches as some plant vines snake at the location he'd been at. He's also dodging to the hard left as a laughing magician sporting a single red eye attacks with a trident. There's indigo fire cloaking this one and he's beginning to wonder just what kind of coven or cabal summoned him only to attack him, after all, he's pretty sure he hadn't done anything to warrant a bounty among the humans.

The eye is fairly odd, the half breed is pretty sure that even human eyes shouldn't look that shade of red or sport what's clearly some kind of magical glyph, why else would a magician bother sporting something like that if not to help argument their spell casting? "Nice Fallen Angel look. Very realistic, perhaps I'll make myself a cloak from them."

He can't help but glare as at the tip of his tongue was the denial of being mistaken for one, only he can't deny the fact that he's related to one. He couldn't find anything to say at this point but he does flare out his wings and easily snaps the trident's head. It's interesting to note how it breaks apart into indigo fire before returning to it's previous appearance while he's already moving to evade the incoming metal. The crimson eyed magician doing his odd laugh, he's heard far worst chuckling or laughter among his peer group.

He puts his training into practice, it's a basic maneuver and the pair fall for it. With easy the half breed flings the crimson eyed one into the green weapon one, confirming a growing suspension that neither was accustomed to fighting in an aerial setting. He's going through the sleep spell as fast as possible and even as the pair manage to dodge, they can't escape the black mist that's his sleep spell. It hangs there for a time yet the two don't automatically fall asleep, there's a few more shots fired along with attempts at roping him, but he evades using his superior speed and reaction time, making sure to do so in a taunting manner.

They bark at each other, each having ideas of how to clear his mist only, not that it matters that they did get rid of it, the spell just hangs about the ground, the mist had been to cloak the nature of the spell. Only, they didn't sense it and it's rather shocking to see how much Will they had in order to ignore the urge to sleep for so long. That was an over powered low level one, only did it due to the fact I was slipping it into that conjuration.

Things just seem to be... Odd only now there's a young human a few feet before him in the hallway, given the features, she seems to be mimicking the crimson eyed one, he wonders if they're preparing her to undergo something given the eye patch. Moving down to the ground, which she's hostile, he notes she's not attacking, her pose is defensive. "Where am I?"

"The chapel of the Iron Fort." The human replies and he waits for a bit, only she doesn't continue. "Ok, and that's located?"

Here, the young magician in training studies his expression and she must have found something that suited her as she kind of stood down. "Clam Family?" She asks and he just gives her a blank face.

"What do clams have to do with this location?" He finally asks, it's been a long night and frankly, he wouldn't mind something to eat and warm bed. With a sigh, he pulls in his wings and her eye widens as she watches them withdraw into his back. "How about this, I was in a grove that caught fire with a rainbow colors. There was a whirlpool of it and I entered it, it brought me here." He decides to explain after she just keeps staring at him in awe, after all, it's clear that something strange is going on.

At this point, pride would only get in his way of getting answers and if all the men he encounters react like those two did, then he'd take his chances with this young magician in training as she's at least giving him something to work with, even if it doesn't seem to be much. "What are you?" He felt something move over and then through him a few seconds before the young human asks.

"Half Devil, half Fallen Angel." He states simply as a reward for actually thinking to examine him in some kind of manner. "Terrance Oriax." He would have added of House Oriax but, well, he didn't see the point of adding formerly before that or invite questions of why that is. I'm keeping the last name, I'm Owed that. He tells himself firmly.

"Chrome, Chrome Skull." The young magician introduces herself, ducking her head. "And we're in the country of Italy." He feels like someone just punched him in the gut at the mention of the current country but does his best to keep it from showing while worry and a slight case of panic struggle within against his self control.

"You're not here for the Boss, are you?" Chrome asks after something seems to occur to her and she tenses up. "He's still alive! He's going to get better!"

There's something familiar about this. He admits as he does his best to wretch his thoughts from their current path. "You've been praying?" He asks softly, after all, he remembers the chorus of voices that his divination typically call up. He's very tempted to display his annoyance along with fending off a headache, after all, why? Why send this his way? Nothing seems to be adding up, honestly.

With a frown, Terrance pulls out the tiny vial and stares at it. The indigo remains and it seems thing hit it. Oh, he knows why he brought it, he'd heard the stories and, well, he thought he'd be meeting someone at that spot, someone who'd need to be healed, with a group. He recalled the offer he had planned and yet, that's not what happened, his world had been not just upside down but inside out. Things better left unknown or locked up and come to the surface due to those fires.

"It might help it." He admits with a sigh, gambling on the idea of one good turn deserves another. Looking over at the human, saying, "I have no idea if it'll be enough." Then asks, "What kind of injuries did he sustain?"

"It was a Seal, it... his mind is now trapped behind it." The young human admits, her eye staring at the vial with interest yet, at the mention of this Seal, she looks away and seem to age before his eyes. "If there's anything, please, help." Chrome begs and he does his best to look calm and collected in face of this weakness, one that he'd had preyed upon in a heart beat before that fire gave him insight into his own past and reminded him of what it's like to beg for aid only for it to lead from one 'master' to another until he managed to outwit the last of his brothers before killing them all while they had done a ceasefire. And was rewarded for it.

"What was this Seal for?" He held the vial over to her, startling her a bit before she cups her hand under. He lets it drop and does his best to ignore the temptation of reclaiming it, moving to walk pass her a bit, feeling helpless in a way that just makes him sick and how it grinds against everything he's become and been trained to use over others.

She overtakes him and begins leading him away from the chapel. "To Seal his Flames." Is all Chrome tells him.

"I... have no idea what you mean by flames, I deal with magic." Terrance states and Chrome pauses to look at him. Confusion in her eye. "The black mist?"

"Color conjuration meant to hide the sleep spell." He admits. "We can conjure it up in any color we want in regards to the elements; black fire has been so often that most don't even get insulted over it any more." Then observes. "I don't think that's what Flames mean for you though."

The young woman stares at him for a few seconds before she returns to leading him through the halls, he ignores the servants but does keep alert whenever they pass those wearing non-servant uniforms while listening as Chrome stumbles over herself, he asks for clarification at times, after all, he's pretty sure he's getting a direct translation of meaning instead of slang meaning.

[P $ - = o = - $ V]

Their guest, for lack of another word, is a puzzle. Her examination says the body is seventeen while the mind is nineteen along with Not Human. There's traces of Sky Flames soaked throughout Terrance, very recent and there's fresh changes of not just body but of the mind as well. Half Devil and Fallen Angel, black glossy wings with ebony stripes that sunk back into the back. No horns or cloven hooves, never mind a tail denoting the fiendish heritage. Dark green hair and the eyes... their normal color keeps slipping from her mind, yet she'd seen them go molten silver when he'd been staring at the tiny, almost bead like vial before holding it out for her to take.

He'd taken down both Mukuro and Reborn, yet, didn't go in for the kill, had been intent on leaving them alive. Asked her a simple question and clearly didn't seem to know anything about the Vongola Famiglia, asking what clams had to do with their location. Then the half breed asks for clarification of certain terms which means that there's something translating her words, that he doesn't naturally speak Italian and when she changes into Japanese, there's no notice from him only for her to keep understanding what he's saying, only for a while she wants to hear Japanese from him and so she does. Translates what he hears and then translates what he wants to say into the listener's expected language.

Chrome kind of wishes to ask him about that along if it works on written languages as well. There's many questions she wants to ask, none the least of which kind of had to do with the lack of horns and hooves to what Hell is like and the age difference between his mind and his body. Perhaps, the most important one, why is he offering to help without asking for anything in return?

Her right hand rubs the tiny vial with her thumb, curious as to what's in it that could heal the Boss, then again, he mentioned injuries which might mean that it might not work on the Seal. They're now on the floor where the Boss is, she's taking him on a bit of a tour of the mansion, giving the others time along with Mukuro and Reborn to wake up. Feeling his gaze upon her back, she slows to turn to look at him, it's hard not to be nervous, after all, he took out Reborn after all.

"We're on the right floor." Terrance states, it's not a question and it's a bit alarming that he can tell. "I grew up in a far larger mansion then this, I think the hunting lodge is about this size."

And now she's trying to picture how that's even possible. "Family's one of the seventy-two pillars, I think there's a book someone wrote about them. Don't know the title of it. It does list the titles of each of the Houses." The half breed recalls with a slight thoughtful look in his eyes. "Devils can live up to ten thousand years and are always competing among themselves and if it's not in combat or in politics then it's building it taller or wider, out of this material or that."

That sounds very overly familiar actually. She kind of admits to herself as she makes a note to search up devils and the number seventy-two. Chrome couldn't keep a slight smile from her face as she recalls some of the competition that the others get up too among themselves.

"What about Fallen Angels?" She asks and notices how blank his expression goes. "Ageless... They Sinned so their wings are black and they can't return to Heaven, never had time to give the other two factions much thought." Again, she files that away as it hints that he grew up among Devils.

"Wouldn't that make them immortal?" Chrome asks and he gets a bemused look that's common among those who grew up with money, given the previous information, it's likely he did. "Just means they can't die from old age, nothing keeping them from dying from any other method, same goes for Angels. Deal enough injuries and they'll bleed out without healing spells to stabilize them and begin adding in their recovery time."

Are you ageless too? The Mist wanted to ask but decides not to press the issue. Much of his casual manners spoke volumes about his up bringing, which only makes her wonder why he'd given up the vial in the first place. Then again, unlike many who grew up with wealth and privilege, he's far too alert and clearly been mentally mapping each floor, again, that told its own story. Polite, as long as you are polite back. Grew up privileged yet not really spoiled given how well aware he is over the concept that he's got enemies out to kill him given half a chance. Also recently underwent a massive amount of changes both physically and mentally, which brings to question if he's acting normally or not.

Honestly? Chrome wouldn't mind getting to know him better. It's more of a question of if that's possible right now as the future is up in the air and both Mukuro and Reborn are very prideful, neither likely will take their defeat well.

Knocking on the door, Hayato opens and glares pass her, towards Terrance. Were they spied upon as they walked through the mansion? Yes, yes they had been and it's clear that Hayato watched the feed. "Reborn? Mukuro-san?" She asks.

"Sleeping, in the med ward as nobody's been able to wake them." The Storm glares more furiously at the half breed. The Mist can only guess what kind of look is fixed upon Terrance's face.

The door opens and she walks through with the half breed following a few steps behind, the door slams shut with the three of them within the room with the sleeping Boss. Glancing at Terrance, the half Devil slowly walks over and slowly speaks words, they both watch as something slowly appears in the air before their guest's hand. It's slow and very deliberately said, each word possesses this slight ring to it. It's clear he's going at this speed for their benefit.

The last word rings out in a strange way and then that which was made sinks into the Boss's body. There's a glow and then an outline appears, it's got different shades of Sky Flames about the body, she couldn't help but gasp at the sight of the head though. Sick Sky Flames with touches of black cover the head and goes down the neck to the shoulders before stopping at the upper body.

Her heart goes out to the Boss at the sight. Everyone just assumed that it was just centered around the forehead yet, it looks like it's spread. Or perhaps it's that the Seal is reacting to their attempts at destroying it. "Huh." Terrance muses after a bit, she couldn't see his expression.

"Have you just tried killing the one who placed it in the first place?" Terrance asks and, well, Hayato verbally attacks the half breed while she kind of winces while tuning him out. Mostly waiting until Hayato's done before asking, "Why would you suggest that?"

She feels the Storm glaring at her while the half Devil explains his reasoning, "Curses and Seals tend to take a lot from those that set them, small portions here and there to keep their strength up." Continuing, "If they die by someone who's acting in the stead of said victim, it weakens them and that's why I bring up Curses in this regard because there's intent to harm mix in this. Seals are generated with the intent to protect and while this does have something of that, it's not geared towards protecting..."

"Tsunayoshi." She supplies. "Tsuna for short."

"Which is why I thought it a good opinion." Then Terrence moves a hand towards the head. "Did... did he get permission to put this one him?"

"Ah..." Neither of them knew how to answer that. "I think his dad wanted him to live a life away from this one." She admits slowly.

"And the mother is very submissive in regards to her husband's wishes." The half breed says with a sigh and Hayato, once more verbally lashes out about this slight against the Boss's mom, not that she didn't agree only, how could he tell that from just touching the Seal?

Terrance turns towards her, waiting for the Storm to finish up. "How supportive was she? Really?" Terrance asks and she shrugs. "She's always been like a mother to us."

"Is there anyone who knew the relationship between the two before any of you entered into his life?" The half breed asks and, well, it's confusing. She's at a lost on this.

"What are you implying?" Hayato growls. "She's his mother!"

"Bullied for most of his life, verbally and physically." The half breed reports simply and the Storm bristles but doesn't deny it. "I ask you, how could she Not Know of the bullying? A child shouldn't be able to Hide it that well that Young."

That's... Even Hayato seems to be wavering. "You can tell all that? From this." She asks, waving a hand.

"I'm getting more information just by touching it, it's a high level illusion spell meant for information gathering on unknown beings." Terrance explains. "I know your human but you're not like the humans I'm familiar with, you have enough in common yes, but there's differences too."

"The vial?" Chrome asks. "Would fix the history of physical abuse. The mental... Spiritual? That's..." He shrugs. "Phoenix Tears... I don't know. After all, it'll repair the brain which will likely lead to changes in behavior as the Seal did affect areas of the brain but get rid of that Seal? No, I don't think it will."

She stiffens as her hand clasps the tiny vial, the idea that the liquid instead came from the mythical fire-bird is rather shocking, let alone the admission that it's that powerful. That he parted with it? "How the fuck did you get that?"

"House Phenex are descended from the bird, they have a ritual to make them." The half breed replies while moving onto the bed, the hand moving towards the chest. "Expensive to buy but I stole a drop from the potion lab."

Then Terrance is leaning over the chest while they kind of absorb the idea that, yes, the half Devil clearly isn't from this world. Then, well, there's a shot to Terrance's head and, well, Reborn is at the widow only, that's when something bizarre happens. After all, the room erupts in Flames and she barely manages to cover her face as they rush over them.

[P $ - = o = - $ V]

For the first time in what feels like ages, he opens his eyes and finds someone on top of him. Then they groan and he's staring into eyes that are like molten silver. "Your bleeding!" Tsuna exclaims as he moving to try to stem the blood.

"Don't bother, as long as your alive, I'll live." The younger remarks and he glances at the stranger, confused. "Huh?"

"Well, I kind of slipped something into the spell I casted. The moment I touched your chest, it sealed the deal so, congratulations, our lives are intertwined and the only way we can die is if we kill one another." The other explains cheerfully.

"Why would you do that?!" He finds his voice and the other chuckles a bit. "Insurance, actually. They love you and from now on, we'll be feeling each other's pain if we're in a certain feet of one another, which means they'll hast to attack me if it causes you undue pain. Also, if one of us is starving, well, we'll share it. Same goes with thirst."

"Meaning we can't just lock you up and throw away the key." The Sky realizes and the other hums. "Oh don't look so glum, you're not going to be human from now on, you know."

"What?!" He cries, eyes wide as he watches as the other moves to stand and watches as glossy black wings with ebony stripes grow from the back. The other offers a hand and he takes it after a bit, then, well, he turns his head to watch as his own wings grow from his own back, they're glossy black only with burnt orange spots. "Half Fallen Angel. Well, think of it this way, your still half human."

"I didn't want to be half anything!" He snaps but the younger just looks bemused. "I was happy!"

"No you weren't." The other points out and he glares before rephrasing it, "I was happy being human."

"How do you know you won't be happy being half Fallen Angel?" The other asks curiously and Tsuna pulls his hand away, crossing his arms, his new wings moving to cover him like a cloak. "You didn't ask!"

"They never asked if you wanted to be Sealed. They didn't ask if you wanted to inherit a criminal empire. None of those friends of yours considered your opinion in a lot of things back then and kind of still don't to this day." The other remarks simply. "Plus, do you really want me to bring up your tutor?"

All true point but... "You... So, you just..." He didn't know what to say and the other sighs.

"Just... just watch, ok?" Then, the other takes a step to place the palm of his right over his heart while the left touches the other's own chest. Eyes close and nothing happens right away before, well, then it does. It's not just images but emotions and thought.

He is an observer, witnessing life through the other's eyes. It's hard to witness the events as they unfold yet, he can't turn away. It ends for a brief moment of time before it begins, only instead of there's an actual name, Terrance. A ritual, memories suppressed so that something new can be 'built' upon the foundation. Life with the back drop of a Civil War between two factions of Devil Society, expectations are semi celebrated, after all, Terrance not the Heir and he's barely the spare. Then he witnesses the events that led to Terrance's own shocking revelation about himself in a grove filled with Flames of the Dying Will.

The events of the chapel between Mukuro, Reborn, and Terrance. Of Chrome and the handing over of the vial before following her throughout the mansion, not really calling her up on the tour while learning and clarifying information. Of... oh kami... Then there's a sharp pain and that's the end of it, now he knows Terrance as well as the other had come to know him from that spell that, well, he didn't need to review to know where Terrance got his information about his life.

In some respects, Terrance is very much like Mukuro, only, instead of trying to possess him, the other linked them together. It's a mix bag of give and take, he knows that now. Having seen the state of his friends, yea, he'd offer anything in order to return to them. Terrance offered not just magic but a way for him to finally life his own life, for him to be free of the bindings other had placed on him. After all, there's no way he's going to stay the Don of Vongola once his friends have passed nor is he really as invested in Vongola like his father had been. He's only here because of his friendships. Give it a few decades and they'll be retiring in time, he it should be enough time to find an Heir cause there's no way in Hell is he going to allow the Vongola to claim any of HIS future kids.

As for Terrance, he gets a security of, you know, not dying or being tossed into the depths of some cavern once they learn they can't kill him. Cause, well, someone did just try to kill him, likely Reborn, given it was a gun shot. That's... kind of... well, reasonable, it's something he can understand really and, well, the other can't really be held to the standards of humans, after all, he's not one but he's also not the sort to go out of his way to kick someone who's down. Tsuna experienced the end of that fight in the chapel after all, having seen the kind of power Terrance could call upon, he went easy on the two, which is likely why the two weren't going to be happy about the lack of tossing the half Devil in some dank hole and forget about him.

They're both desperate in their own way, after all. They were both gaining from this arrangement, after all, there's nothing saying he has to fund Terrance or even provide him with anything really. Just awareness that if the other can't physically provide the basics for himself, well, Tsuna's going to be well aware but on the same vein, it means that if he's in such a state, Terrance will be aware of it too. And honestly? He can feel that Terrance would rather make his own way in this world, he needs something to focus on or else he'd brood over his situation, driving himself insane over the whole thing. Terrance grew up expecting to do something productive in regards to his House in some capacity.

The other is oh so very different from him or perhaps, he's different to who he had been, after all, what kind of changes to his behavior will there be now that he's part Fallen Angel along with every injury beginning fix? Also... "Well, that's one way to get rid of the Seal." He admits.

"Yea, the Tears couldn't do it but a death? After all, it would hold unto death, just didn't expect it would happen that fast." Terrance states with a sigh while the other withdraws his hand.

"Time to wake?" He asks and the other glances up. He follows that gaze to find that, yea, it's time.

} T + # = I = # + T {

"I can't believe you just let him go!" Hayato howls as they watch as Terry, it's a nickname that the half breed hadn't minded as it puts some distance between who he had been and who he is now, walk out of the gate. "Not even a Mist contract or even threaten him about what would happen if he indulges in his fiendish ways!"

Most of his friends were of that mentality, that he should keep the half breed imprisoned somewhere on the property or under a Mist contract. He didn't see the point in doing either, after all, he's still trying to get a handle on his magic and, well, Devil raised kind of said it all. He's fairly glad that nobody realizes that the other is also a Sky, most assume that the Sky Flames clinging to the half breed linger from the gate that brought him or from the life link between them. Then again, it's clear that the Sky Flames had become more in tune with Terry's Fallen Angel heritage then his Devil one, although that might have more to do with Devils living Underground then anything, that if a Devil might be more likely to pick up a Flame from the Earth set then the Sky set.

It's surprising to note that he kind of enjoys the frustration that the others are going through about this. Then again, not being human likely wasn't helping let alone the fact that the other is a cross breed of two spiritual beings that stories claim hate humans or see them as their play things. Like any of them have a leg to stand on, after all, I Know that beyond those... well, I guess brothers do work here, he's got fairly clean hands when it comes to having a body count. Tsuna reflects as he sips his tea.

"He's getting no aid from us so I don't see any reason put restrains on him just because of what he is. He's leaving here without anything to his name, he conjured those cloths along with that ID." He remarks. "How far that'll get him, well, I'm sure you'll be bring him up at least once a month." After all, there's a lot of interested parties, the betting pool is still small but it'll only grow as time goes on.

He's slipped Chrome his bet and amount, she merely smiled at him before going to put it in for him. Tsuna's kind of tempted to ask but decides it'll be more genuine an act if he didn't know every little thing about who bet on what concerning events or body count. It's been a month since everything happened and yea, there's still the mess concerning not just the Ninth but also going through the CEDEF's records concerning his father.

"So... is he, you know, your half brother now?" Lambo asks as the others head off to do their duties and he blinks, glancing at his little brother and Lightning Guardian, they are his Guardians even if they can't Bond properly. "That kind of makes him your brother too then." He replies after thinking about for a minute and Lambo looks startled.

"You are my little brother, same as Fuuta and if sharing half a heritage makes Terry my brother then he's also yours as well." He states firmly as he puts the tea cup down, giving his younger brother his full attention. It's not like Terry will care overly much about him arranging for younger siblings as long as he, you know, didn't have to ultimately are responsible for them. Which given the ages of the kids, pretty means that it's unlikely to ever happen, after all, Terry's use to having relatives that he's related to but didn't have any real close connection with. "He's not really capable of replacing you, Fuuta or Ipin. He's just... out there, he doesn't need me like you three did or still do."

Lambo studies his face a bit before slowly nodding and he moves down, pulling his little brother in for a hug, only for him to wiggle out after a few seconds, whining about not being a baby any more. He ruffles the teen's hair before Lambo stalks off, masking his emotions with a huffy and scowling mask. Before heading inside, he is sure to pick up his tea cup.

He's got work, yet, but between himself and his Mists, they're working on something in regards to his paper work. After all, he's got a time limit to enjoy the company of his friends and he'd much rather spend it with Them then with stacks and stacks of paper. He's got a long life ahead of him and in time, there's not going to anything keeping him tied to this empire of corpses, after all, try as he might, the corruption is pretty much the starting point for organize crime, never mind their Traditions and Code of Conduct. They could try to pretty it up but the fact remains, the Mafia doesn't want to change or perhaps it's more accurate to say that if it ever were to change, it wouldn't be the Mafia.

Taking Vongola back to its roots isn't going to do much, after all, who are they suppose to turn the captured Mafioso over to? The cops? Nor would it matter turning them over to the Vindice as it wouldn't have been the Mafioso who broke the laws but Vongola. Personally, he's just temped to take the Vongola Rings and see if Talbot can create those jars to take over the function of keeping the Time Line stable. That way, none of his kids and their kids need to worry about the stupid things.

Issues for another time. He reminds himself. Don't need to create any more work for myself then there is already.

Ending it here!

A King and his Lionhearts: KHR!

I don't own Katekyo Hitman Reborn!

= I - x + U + x - I =

Upon his left chest is his current level on display while the name Yo-Kun! floats over head in player black while the NPCs sport green or, if they have a Quest, yellow. This is his first time playing only the character is level ten, it's a character created and leveled for money. It's the most basic with basic equipment and typical skills. He... didn't have another name to replace the current one so, Tsuna left it be.

His father remembered his Birthday this year and bought not just the VR device but also a pre-leveled character for his Tuna-fishie to use. The character avatar's race is human and the looks appear late teens with light purple hair and crimson eyes. He'd have preferred to create a character from scratch, to learn the controls but, well, he can do that later. For now, the ten year old just wants to explore and at level ten, he could wander further afield then if he'd been at a lower level. The current weapon that Yo-Kun! possesses is a long dagger, it's common quality while the cloths being in colors that fit with the hair and eyes, again, just cloth armor, which won't lower his ability to run away.

"Hey! Want to come with us to do a dungeon?" He stiffens and whirls around to find a group of three lower level characters who asked. Their names appear to be Far-Tax being a fox person, Grimmaru being one of the human looking races, and R.U.=Chan being human with respective levels being two sevens and a single level eight. "Oh, yea, sorry, thought you were lower level then that." Grimmaru admits before the trio apologize, leaving him alone.

Relief flows through him at their departure while guilt also flares. Any words have been caught in his throat the moment he turned to face them. Once more, he found himself unable to use his voice, which has been happening a lot lately. Often times, the only sound to really pass out of him being that startled shout only, even that seems to be failing to come from him.

The wonder of the plaza and novelty of being some place else fades now. Sighing, Tsuna picks a direction at random and just starts walking, after all, that's why he's here, right? Why he used Yo-Kun! character instead of creating one from scratch. To just to do a tour of the game without going through the hassle of leveling it up himself, which, to be honest, would likely take him months given that he's useless boy.

I guess people will be expecting something from me. Quests, tips, or dungeons... He thinks sourly. Maybe I should just log out now.

Still, if this is only going to be his only chance to explore... Might as well make the most of it.

So... sad. Is the impression he's getting from his current player. That... that shouldn't be, it didn't seem right.

He'd much rather experience the player's previous wonder and awe then this. Not even his creator and those who'd leveled him had not felt like this player nor did their emotions reach him like this one's did. Then again, this player Feels much Younger then his previous players.

Feeling the weight shift wrongly, he automatically counters, taking over to prevent them from tripping. The player didn't seem to notice what he'd done so... he takes ensures they don't stumble or trip, and after the third time of colliding with someone or something, he gently ensures that they alter their speed just a bit so that the player notices and takes action.

It feels Wrong to influence the player's movements yet, as they reach the gate that will take them out of the city, his player's rather confused yet amazed. "I didn't trip or fall..." That startles him a great deal but... it's something and perhaps his course of actions were alright in the end?

"I'm not clumsy here?" The player wonders. He's that clumsy in that Other World? He couldn't help but wonder. After all, the player didn't Feel that Young to not know how to walk.

Then the player sighs and with a glance back, mutters softly, "Maybe it was just a one time thing..." The player directs their current body out into the wilderness while he wonders how quick the player's mood could drop so fast.

No, it's not a one time thing. Yo-Kun! decides and if he could, he would have frowned his face and narrow his eyes. I'll make sure it isn't.

After all, there's something Wrong and he can't help but feel Needed. It's a surreal experience as Before, it was him needing players to guide him, perhaps this time, it's his turn to be the guide? After all, unlike Before, his attempts at controlling their shared body worked nor did it feel like anything was resisting his corrections. Yes, he learned that when there's a player within him that he's more of a vessel of the player to experience this particular world.

There's another one he goes to when there's no player dwelling within him and, if he willing to endure the pain, that world where players live. As the player levels him up, he gains something from it and it's what allows him, experiencing pain in doing so, to visit the Other World where players live. He's only visited it twice and found himself weakly tethered to the last player, that if he's a certain distance, he returns to the waiting world, Home the other avatars insist on calling it. He's young enough not to regard that waiting world as his home just yet although the older avatars seem fairly certain that it'll be his Home in time.

They encounter some monsters in the form of enraged bears and he's already eager to see how this player will fight them. There's not excitement nor exasperation like he's experienced from previous players, no, there's this huge Fear being projected that seems to lock up their body. There's an urge to scream only... there's that disconnect from before, when those three characters had been present. As the nearest enemy gets close, the urge to move, to flee grips the player and, well, seeing as the player can't seem to do it for them, he does it for them.

Once he gets them moving, the player finally connects and steps back as the player continues to run away from the path, heading deeper into the forest. Confusion reigns within him, so much so that he doesn't stop them from tripping over a log and falling onto the ground. The player causes them to curl up and murmurs of self insults come from them, he's reeling from the emotions that seem deeply rooted in this player and it Hurts.

So, after a time, when the player decides to log out, he denies it. He's not letting this player leave. Yo-Kun! refuses to let this player leave him, for if he understand enough of what's said, this player will leave and won't come back. He Won't Let That Happen!

Tsuna tries again and again, yet, it keeps saying his request is denied. So, he just kind of sits there, back against a log wondering how this was his life that he can't even log out of this game properly. He's stuck in as Yo-Kun! and in a forest, a forest that likely has monsters of... well, he doesn't know nor does he know how to fight them as he's never played this game before nor did he go through any combat training.

He's got a long dagger and his cloth armor. That's it, there's nothing in his inventory nor did he have money to begin with to buy anything. Well, not true, I also have Skills. He admits as he chews a bit on his lower lip.

Loathing himself for screwing up something as simple as logging out, he finally just gets to his feet and glances around, wondering if he shouldn't just find something to kill him, maybe it'll log him out. After all, what's the point in fighting when he doesn't even know how to.

But, well, that just... "This is a game, it shouldn't be that hard to defend myself, right? That's part of the game, fighting monster to get loot."

Right now... He glances at his cloths and at the dagger that's sheathed upon his belt, ready to be used. Looking at his current arms, he clinches and then relaxes his hands. Theses hands aren't the ones he's familiar with and looking at the palms, it's strange, they're so different. This isn't the body of Dame-Tsuna, this is a digital body of a character named Yo-Kun!, who's not weak, after all, this character is level ten, powerful enough to travel beyond the starting city and area, to explore the continent.

Only, he didn't level this character up himself. "After all, I encounter some monsters and what did I do? I froze then turn tail, like usual." Tsuna murmurs. "I'm such a coward."

Wind moves and purple bangs move, covering his eyes for a few seconds before he brushes them off. Another reminder that this is just a game, that he's not really Here. That even Here, he's still the same old useless boy that his classmates know him to be. Yet, when those monsters had been charging at him, it Felt so Real, that his Life had been in actual danger. Freezing like that, it was just so ingrained in him when it came to approaching danger, typically his bullies, plus, typically if he did try to run, they always hit him harder for daring to make them work to beat him up.

Yet, he managed to run this time, something that he'd found himself unable to do... Just trying to recall the last time just causes a headache, then again, just trying to remember anything that's beyond a few weeks causes a headache too. Oh, somethings he can recall better then most, namely the faces of those that beat him up along with the looks of disappointment along with his mom saying that she loves him In-spite of him being Useless. She has to love me, I'm her only son. He reminds himself.

Time tics away as he just kind of sits there, stewing in self-loathing and despair. He jerks as he hears rustling and watches as a monster comes into sight, it appears to be a feral cow or bull, it's got shaggy hide and unlike real cows, it's got four horns that seem to glow a pale blue. Three eyes of green glance around until all three focus right on him. There's a blue text above its head but Tsuna doesn't care as he's very much aware that it just spotted him and it's horns are now sparking blue as they become a more rich shade of blue. It's going to attack! What do I Do?

He feels himself begin to stiffen and everything falls away, leaving just the monster in sharp focus. "Please... Help..." He whimpers, then again, who's around to do just that? He's going to die and he doesn't want to!

Yo-Kun! can't help but be thankful that there's something else to focus on then this player's emotions and how lost he is concerning how to even begin to try and help the player through his despair. By the time the player stopped trying to log out, he'd come to realize that, well, he really didn't know if he could even Help the player as he's having trouble grasping the player's thoughts and emotions, it's beyond his own experiences after all, so Alien in a way. All he's been able to pick up is that the player is 'bullied' by fellow players in that Other World and this player doesn't have anyone to lean on.

Then, the player pleads for help and, well, yea, the monster is level fifteen, meaning there's going to be at least five levels of suppression but, well, he recalls one of his previous players having him kill a much younger version by stabbing the central eye, it caused a massive bleed effect that caused that monster to bleed to death while that player just had them evade. Perhaps it'll work on this one?

With the player emotionally numb, Yo-Kun! takes over their body, rolling to the side as the, blue text means something, bull charges through the spot along with the log. As he moves into a crouch, he's drawn the long dagger and is charging at the head of the bull. Something... not him but not really the player prompts him to prepare to leap back, which he obeys and lightning of blue strikes the spot where he'd been about to move into. There's more and that something seems to predict where the lightning is going to be before it whispers to him to ready himself for the lunge at the head.

There's a cool down happening and he's able to stab the third eye, although he does get tossed away viva the horns, receiving damage. The dagger stuck in the head but it's bleeding freely, now he just needs to evade the enraged bull. He feels the player freaking out now yet the player doesn't try to take over and that something seems gone now, so he's on his own for judging how best to evade. It's a new experience and he takes a few more hits before he picks up the pattern. It also looks like the lightning is directionless as it just strikes down within five feet of the bull.

It takes minutes for the bleed effect to kill the bull and once it does, the monster shatters, leaving loot along with the long dagger. With the fight over, he steps back, that fight had been tiring oddly enough, and the player jerks his head around along with moving their hands, touching their face before looking them over. "What? Huh? I didn't! How?" The player is clearly worried and stunned while looking around, as if there's someone around that could explain what happened.

After a period of time, the player moves their body and retrieves the long dagger along with the loot, which is four [Mystical Horn], a minor stack of eight [Cattle Wool Raw], a stack of twenty [Meat Steak Raw], and a bracelet that's a trinket called [Bracelet of Minor Forest Stride]. It grants a movement boost while traveling in a forest, increasing it by five percent. It's then that he recalls what the blue text means, the bull was an uncommon spawn, which means that in about a week's time, it'll spawn again. Kind of a minor boss of this forest, which explains the trinket drop as most beast type monsters under the level of twenty typically just drop crafting materials with the odd trash range ammo.

The bracelet appears to be made out of copper with frail looking leaves with the more green of the metal seen more clearly with the leaves. Yo-Kun! is pretty sure it'll sell for a bit at the Auction House as it's a good quality trinket, well, as long as the player doesn't Bind it to their person that is, which would mean that they would only be able to sell it to a NPC. The player worries their lower lip, it's a strange gesture that he's beginning to link up to the player thinking something over in a deep manner while holding the bracelet in their left hand, the rest of the loot just vanish into the simple sack that all beginning avatars get upon reaching level one to store loot in.

The player then moves to put on the bracelet and when the option for Binding comes up, the player, wisely, decides not to and it's now on their left wrist. Then, their gaze moves from the trinket and he's aware that the player is unsure of what to do now. "Is... is anyone there?" The player asks in a louder voice then previous while looking around. "Thanks, I guess, for the help." The player admits after some time and if Yo-Kun! could, he would have smiled, for now, he's just pleased that the player approved of his actions in regards to the bull.

That's enough, although he worries if the player will now try to log out and he's not sure if he could stop the player from doing so as controlling their body seemed to tax him. The player glances around and then turns around, heading in the kind of direction they ran away from. He relaxes as they walk through the forest, the bracelet's effects helping them cover more ground the usual, allowing him to ponder the strangeness of the fight along with the ease of him being able to assume control of their body.

From what he's been told, it shouldn't be so easy to do so, yet he's still able to do it as they walk, intervening before they trip on something, which takes but seconds to correct before pulling back. It's not very hard for a subtle pattern to be felt by him concerning how the player keeps getting out of phase with them by just walking. It causes him to recall the awe the player felt about not tripping upon reaching the gates, perhaps this disconnect is one that the player has with his own body? That's why the player is so clumsy?

Is this disconnect the reason I can take control? Now that's a startling thought as they reach the path. The player glances back towards the city and there's that chewing of the lower lip for a bit before turning their back on that direction. The player has them take a deep, calming breath before beginning down the path once more, there's still uncertainty and worry within the player but there's also a resolve to Try to make it to where ever the path takes them.

The town he sees up ahead causes him to sigh in relief. For the last few hours, he's encountered more mobs of monsters and found himself a passenger in this character throughout those fights, the body moving to defend or attack as needed. The long dagger's duration is low now and he's got a sack filled with crafting materials from beast type monsters to sell so he can either get money to repair it or, perhaps, buy a better one.

He's leveled up twice, that bull monster had filled his experience with a good chuck of the bar before he reached level eleven. Even now, he's nearing level thirteen and he's still not sure just what's going on, only that it seems that either he's been hacked or that someone is following him, doing something to cause his body to act on its own when he's in a fight. He's been tempted to try logging out but, figured he'd at least get to the next settlement before trying again, at the very least, if it doesn't work, he'd be able to ask other players for help.

Jogging the rest of the way, he notices a pair of guard NPCs who nod as he jogs past. He slows to a fast walk as he heads for the market to sell what's in his sack, he's debating selling the bracelet too, after all, he's not going to logging back on with this character so what's the point of keeping it? Then again, what's the point of buying a new dagger? Or looking for better armor when he's decided that once he's logged off to never touch the game ever again?

Still, there's nothing wrong with selling the stuff or looking for something better, right? After all, he could likely sell this character to someone and maybe he'd get a bit more from having better equipment for that person in the asking price? What's the point of keeping this character if he's never going to play it again?

Yet, he's uneasy about the thought after all, this character had been part of his Birthday gift but it's not like he really cares about breaking his father's heart, it's not like the man's ever around or even remembered he was ten instead of eight years old. Just being in his father's presence, it's... like he's colder then usual never mind that when the man had pat him on the head, he found himself frozen, everything just locked up and his heart seeming to be thundering within his chest from just getting touched by the man. Only able to move once the man's attention wasn't on him any more and he'd fled to his room, even putting stuff before the door before crawling under his bed to hide.

He didn't even stay the week like he said he would. Tsuna reflects, feeling relieved that his father hadn't yet hating himself that his mom once more alone with just him for company in the house. It's hard to tell what his mom really thinks about having a husband, leaving them alone for almost a whole year before phoning the house or maybe sending a post card every few months never mind him actually showing up to the house. The neighbors gossip about it yet, it never seemed to phase his mom in the slightest.

Somehow, he finds himself standing before a stall that's manned by a player and he's a bit unsure how he got there as he'd been lost in thought plus, he hadn't tripped over anything to snap him out of it. It's still a surreal experience, walking without tripping on something or colliding with something. The player is a woman and appears to be a member of the cat people race, level appears to be twenty-two and name is RedYuki. Her emerald gaze settles upon him and he feels words just die in his throat at the look she's giving him upon noticing his level.

"Well?" RedYuki asks and someone he manages to croak out, somehow sounding sharp and to the point, "Selling."

With a gesture, she motions for him to show what he wants to sell and it's not long before he figures out how to open the trade option, almost as though something is guiding him through it. Given his experiences so far? It's believable. RedYuki pretty much gives him base cost for the meat, furs, and wool. He's not sure why he didn't add the horns but just accepts the offer before walking away.

As he slowly walks away, Tsuna takes note of the various stalls, most are NPC owned. There's a few weapons on display but he doesn't approach. It's likely for the best if he finds a smith player to buy from, only, may not? After all, he's not really sure how he even managed to speak under the gaze of RedYuki as he felt his throat tighten up. Even that simple word that he managed to say... it hadn't even sounded like him!

Wandering around the market a few times, he catches snips of conversation between NPCs and players, to one another and to each other. There's a few NPCs with yellow text that he could approach for quests yet, he's not sure if he wants to, not until he gets a new dagger at the very least to defend himself with and if he's got enough for another set of cloth armor in the same color all the better. It takes him on his third circulate about the market to notice that there are actual stores down the alleyways and he ventures down them, looking for a smith shop.

The shop Tsuna finds is simply called Black of the Smith and there's a NPC behind the counter. Feeling a bit more confident at the sight of the shop keeper, he enters and soft bells above the door ring out in a gentle musical melody. He walks up to the counter and the young fox person NPC greets him with a bit of an accent, "Good day, how might I be of service today?"

"Looking for a replacement long dagger. Please show me a listing." He requests politely to the shop keeper. A menu displaying daggers opens before him the moment the NPC says, "Of course sir."

None of the list are common quality, which means that the shop is player owned. After a few seconds, he sighs and alters the sorting to lowest price first. The more poorer selections now come to the top and he takes a moment to preview which design he'd like as he really doesn't know what qualities he's suppose to be looking for beyond damage and in good repair. He gets into the ones above the price tag of hundred, they do look better along with sporting more effects, but he's got a limited amount of money, currently just a bit under two hundred. The better the quality, the more it costs.

As he reaches the bottom of the list, he scrolls back up and picks out two daggers from the under a hundred price tag, deciding to grab a spare. Then asks once the two weapons vanish into his sack, "Please tell me, do you sell cloth armor?"

"I'm afraid not, sir. The only light armor we have is studded leather." The NPC informs him with a hint of apology. "I can suggest a friend of the owner though. Her name is FashionGem and her store is called Varia's Grace."

"Thank you." He says and as he walks out of the shop, he can't help but notice how he didn't stumble over his words nor did he stammer. It's just another thing to add to the growing list of strangeness that's he's been experiencing and the thing is? He's kind of starting to accept it, even enjoy it a tad, as if someone wants him to guide him in how to play this game.

It takes him a few tours of the alleyways before he finds the shop. The sign is clearly custom commissioned as it sports a sun with a pair of red and black guns crossed upon it. The guns in the game, if they could be really called that, were from an older style rifles if they weren't enchanted by... well, he hasn't really looked at Class or Professions someone can pick. At level ten, you can begin apprenticing into a Class or Profession but Yo-Kun! hasn't nor was he sure if he'd want to really. It's not something you really need but it's easier as you can then activate an automatically priority system plus any Class specialty weapons and skills level up quicker while with Professions, one gets more experience from crafting items of that profession along with a passive bonus to crafting drops.

He's heard other mention how you can have a Class and a Profession, the thing is, you can have only one active viva the Title system which unlocks the moment you begin your apprenticeship. There's more to Titles but he'd been rather busy failing at school and at life to care to find out more. After all, he didn't own a VR system nor did he really care much about it until he got it and this account as a Birthday gift. What was the point of reading up on a game he'd likely never get the chance to play?

"Won't you come in, darling~?" A woman's voice purrs near the door and he'd jump, only he doesn't. FashionGem hovers over the head of the winged humanoid who's at least a foot shorter then Yo-Kun! with level fifty-six upon the left of her chest.

He moves into the shop, the door opening wider as the spring green haired woman moves to allow him in with a pair of glasses hiding her gaze, not that it matters as he can feel the way she studies him in Yo-Kun!'s digital body. FashionGem follows a few feet behind him as he walks towards the counter, he's so embarrassed and flustered at the attention the player is giving him. "A bit old but you do look to be my type, Yo-Kun!"

He wishes to duck his head down and have the floor swallow him up. "So, darling~, what can I do for you?" FashionGem asks and a voice that's pretty much the same as when he'd spoken with RedYuki replies, "Looking for cloth armor, preferably in colors I'm currently wearing." The voice is calm and there's a bit of a sharpness to it.

"You do look good in those colors darling~!" The player agrees with a smile that's rather predatory. "Pity you likely don't have much in the way of money yet, just being level twelve."

"I have four [Mythical Horn] to help cover the cost." The other player glances at his left wrist, noting the bracelet. "Four you say? My, my, my, that's unusual, most of the time, they get damaged in the fight. Most are lucky if they get a single pristine horn from that one."

"Not your first rodeo I take it?" FashionGem asks and the voice responds, "Never left the starting city until today. Recalled a tip from a mentor on killing three eyed cattle, work back then and it worked with the bull."

"Oh ho! Well, it's always good to listen to your seniors when they grace you with some advise, darling~!" And now there's darling once again. Something about the gaze from those unseen eyes causes him to want to wail and curl up in on himself. "How about a deal, darling~? You model some outfits for me and discount the price of two decent sets of cloth armor?"

The head nods, stating, "Sound fair." And what follows is something he refuses to commit to memory and never speak about ever again, then again, FashionGem is taking screen shots. So clearly, the woman liked how Yo-Kun! looked in the various collection of cloths as it seems that over time, it just grows along with a number of accessories soon being added when he doesn't complain about it. Tsuna's not sure how he hasn't died from the embarrassment nor how whoever is in control could Stand this session of modeling.

The only reason it's over has to do with FashionGem's alarm going off and the woman sighing in a very regretful way. "Oh well, duty calls." And it's not long before he gets the two sets of cloth armor that costs him only three of the four horns. "Also, if you're willing to model for me in the future, I'm more then willing to continue giving your a discount, darling~!"

FashionGem logs out and it's not long before the store to close, it locks up the moment they're outside of it. It's then that he's in control once more and he blinks ahead for a few minutes, still trying to figure out if it wouldn't be better to just crawl into a hole and never climb back out. He's got plenty of money left and he's still got trash loot to sell, so, he heads off to find the nearest NPC stall and sells the trash loot before checking the time, he groans, he's been playing for hours now and it seems as though he's skipped dinner.

In the end, he decides to check into the nearest inn and see if he can't log out.

The player tried to log out and, once more, he denied it as the player hadn't changed his mind about returning to 'play' as him. He's grown fond of this player and the thought of being sold to another is not what he wants. After all, as much as the whole modeling session clearly brought out embarrassment in the player, he could tell that deep down, the fact that someone was paying attention and complimenting him, indirectly, had been pleasurable experience and it made him aware that the player hasn't had someone do that for a very long time. After all, he's fairly sure that if the player really wanted to end that session, the player could have taken over their body as he'd been growing a bit tired by the end of it, being the one in charge had been taxing but the lack to told its own story.

After a time of laying upon the bed, the player blacks out and he's now fully in control without wanting to be. For the next few minutes, he panics and instead of moving about trying to fix it in this room. Going through the menus doesn't help nor did looking at his skills, stats, or inventory. Although the fact that he could access his stats reminds him that the player hasn't used the points to increase them but puts it off for another time.

In the end, he decides to see if the player hadn't returned to that Other World. So, laying upon the bed, Yo-Kun! reaches within himself and moves towards the connection that should be there between the player and himself. It doesn't lead to that Other World though and as he reaches to touch the pale orange sphere, things change around him. Nothing is overly clear nor does it look overly stable. Thing shift in colors to angles, the colors are all pale and dull.

He walks around for a bit, at times its like he's going no where while at others, it's like he's step into some kind of teleportation gate as the surroundings are so different then before. Growing tired and rather irritated at the lack of progress, he once more calls upon the connection and then, as he touches it, he jumps locations once more, only this time, it's a dark, mocking replicate of the Other World and he stills at the sight before him. It's a group of players... he'd call it fighting only, the target isn't standing nor fighting back.

Soft whimpers and cruel laughter seem to echo along with the words, "Dame-Tsuna!" He's at a loss at what's he's seeing as he's always been told that players world, the Other World, wasn't as violent as the place called Home or the world where the players take an avatar over for a time. Reasons vary widely, after all, no avatar ever spoke with a player nor do the players seem aware that the avatars exist so it's just observations and theories.

Drawing his dagger, Yo-Kun! surges forth, a coldness descending on his emotions as he resolves that he won't stand for this... what ever this is. None of the muted players, likely fake, turn to acknowledge him, vanishing into wisps of shadow with a single stab. Then he's standing over the player who's far more real then the others, unsure what to do now. The enemies are gone yet, it seems that the pain remains.

Everything about this is confusing, the behaviors of the fake players to him even attacking them, yet it seemed the right thing to do. After a bit, he glances around before putting the dagger away and crouching down, he slowly moves to touch the player gently, which startles the player, brown eyes that seem to match the hair start at him with fright before confusion. They stare at one another, it's clear that the player doesn't know what to make of this any more then he, hand still resting on the shoulder.

This is my player, huh? Yo-Kun! muses as he withdraws the hand as his player moves into a sitting position. Questions shine in those eyes yet, it's clear that once more his player's voice fails him, even in this place.

"I'm not letting you log out until you promise you'll come back." He finally states and his player jerks his head back as if he's struck him. "I'm here and I will guide you, so please, promise to come back." He says in a far more gentle tone.

"But... but why? I'm useless! No Good!" His player exclaims and his reply is gentle yet firm. "Because I want you to."

Then the world shatters and he's in the bed with his player now in control. "What was that?" His player wonders out loud.

"Because I want you to." The words echo in his thoughts as he stares down at the plate of food that he ordered. He'd been unable to return to sleep since that dream and for once, he's not sure just what it is he should feel about it, about this whole not logging out thing. After all, by now, his mom should have noticed he wasn't up for school yet, he's still here, after all, even if... if Yo-Kun! wouldn't let him log off, it wouldn't stop him from being forced out if his VR headset was removed. Even though falling asleep should have done the same. A tiny part of him informs him.

He only ordered the food cause it's morning and he's kind of starting to feel a bit hungry. A few bites did help take the edge off but, well, it doesn't do anything for his actual body. Having skipped dinner and now breakfast, he'll be rather hungry when he's back in his actual body.

With a sigh, he deposits the rest of the food into his sack's inventory and walks out of the tavern, deciding he needs something to do then to brood on the impossibility of what that dream implied. But was it, was it really? Tsuna wonders a bit as he focuses on looking for a quest giving NPC. He's yet to trip or fall since he's been in this game from just walking around along with the fact that it's not him that really fought that bull or mobs of monsters, never mind what happened with FashionGem. He's also not collided with anyone or anything recently either.

Spotting one of the NPCs he's looking for, he approaches and, thankfully, his words don't get stuck. It's just a fetch Quest from a farm that's located east of this place, just needing to collect an order of grain for the NPC's baker wife. Checking his map and rechecking the location, he finds he can't add a marker as he hasn't explored the area or taken a look at a map for the area. With a slight sigh, he just heads out, it'll be cheaper to just explore it himself, before leaving the gate, he takes a look at his current equipment and notes that they'll likely shatter on this quest, but that's not such a hassle now as he's got spare weapons and armor.

Looking off east, he follows the minor road for a time before it snakes far more north then he needs to go. So, off the road he goes and entering a forest, which causes the bracelet to add speed to the journey. Surprise, surprise, he runs into monsters and he freezes up, this time he can tell when the character obeys an other's will. He's still in the body, experiencing the fight from first person point of view. The monsters being three levels higher pretty much cause Yo-Kun! to level up to thirteen and he's once more in control, with a soft sigh, he collects the loot, all of it going into the sack as none of it is equipment.

It'll be in the third fight that the long dagger shatters and in the fifth for the cloth armor, then again, whoever is in control over the fighting prefers to dodge attacks, waiting until the monsters are in cool down before attacking so the armor doesn't take as much duration loss as the previous long dagger. He's also beginning to realize that the one who takes over, they never really leave, it's more like, stepping aside for him to take over once more or stepping in when he freezes.

He's at a loss of how to deal with that, really. After all, if Yo-Kun! actually exists then why let anyone use him like this? Or why not just take over and have him ride as a passenger? Never mind the questions concerning if all the other characters were like Yo-Kun! either. It's just so confusing and beyond his ability to comprehend, plus, it's kind of looking like he might just stick to the whole, once I'm out, never coming back, no matter what stance Yo-Kun! has on the subject, after all, it's not like it could last for much longer, right?

"How is this my life now?" He can't help but murmur as he's sitting on the roof top of a building. According to the calendar, he's been logged in for pretty much eight days now, missing at least six days of school.

At least his previous sleeps had been dreamless, no nightmares of his bullies beating him up and calling him Dame-Tsuna, yet he hasn't dreamed of Yo-Kun! either. He's bought more long daggers as they hadn't been as good a quality as the cloth armor, then again, they saw more use and he's never seen the point in getting them repaired when he could just buy more from Black of the Smith, he's been by so often that Andrey Cleverskin the NPC seems to greet him and even know what he's looking for the moment he's in the shop.

Kind of wanting to know more, he'd spent a visit just asking Andrey questions about the Area, Classes, Profession, and asked for tips on what Quests lead to what rewards or just listening to whatever rumors the NPC wanted to gossip about. It wasn't until this last visit did he get an alert informing him that his Reputation with Andrey Cleverskin has graduated from neutral to friendly that he was even aware of that particular feature of the game. Perhaps it shouldn't be that surprising that he's found himself far more comfortable speaking with NPCs as they weren't human in the same way other players are.

Although, when dealing with other players, it's Yo-Kun! who is the one they're really talking to. Not that the players know that nor have he's ever managed to speak for himself. They've visited FashionGem's shop at least once more to purchase more sets of cloth armor, again, Tsuna refuses to acknowledge the reason for the discount on said armors, even if he's find it hard to ignore the effect the unwarranted praise has on him. It's not like he's Yo-Kun!'s creator after all. Yes, there had been more pictures taken but, again, he refuses to admit why they were taken in the first place.

Never mind the fact that FashionGem is now under his Friend's list. The woman was dealing with Yo-Kun! not with Tsuna in any real shape or form, but, well, he just couldn't deny the Invite on that, after all, given how patient Yo-Kun! is with FashionGem's demands, maybe the character views the woman as a friend? It's not like he'd know, after all, they've not spoken, not really. Then again, it's not like he's tried to communicate with Yo-Kun! either...

He'd avoid Yo-Kun! if he could but he can't as he's in the same digital body as him or was it that he's in Yo-Kun!'s body? How can you avoid someone like that? Who's there with you every step of the way? I'm such a coward, it's not going to just go away if I don't do anything. I can't escape this, he won't let me. He lets out a defeated sigh.

So, why not just promise it and then just not keep it? A part of him asks him and he glances down at the streets below. It's strange how this simple settlement has become something of a new home for him. He's even renting a room from one of the local NPCs, not living out of a room at the local inn. He's not a real person.

He chews his lower lip, not really liking that idea at all. Yo-Kun!'s been nothing but there, really, more then willing to carrying him through a fight or when it comes to interacting with other players. He's started to try and fight when its just a single monster, he's getting better, taking more hits before his instinctive freezing locks him up, causing Yo-Kun! to step in. He doesn't have that movement control that he's seen other players have, then again, he's noticed at times when he's walking, Yo-Kun! would do a minor shift in balance before releasing, it's usually just a few seconds yet, it still happens. The few times he tried focusing on just walking, well, it's frightening to find that he's worst at walking when he's focusing on it.

That's not Right, it should be the other way around. That not playing attention should mean he'd be more clumsy not less! It's the same when he tries to focus too much on something as well, Yo-Kun! keeps stepping up to steady him. There's something Wrong with him, he can't deny that now. He's been told countless times that he just needs to try harder only now, it seems to be that just by trying harder he'd mess up more! How's that fair?

I can't promise him that and not keep it. He's... he's the only one to bring this to my attention. He's trying to help the only way he can. He argues back.

Yet, he can't stay logged in, his body is likely thirsty and starving at this point. Why nobody noticed him missing out on school... Never mind that his mom hasn't come to check on him... He doesn't want to die and he's kind of got this feeling that his time is ticking away, that the clock is going to run out.

Closing his eyes he murmur softly, hoping that Yo-Kun! is willing to talk with him. "I can't stay logged in. My body... it's got needs, Yo-Kun! Please, I need to log out."

He ponders this, it's not that he hadn't known something was happening, there's been this emptiness that he's been keeping his player from feeling. He thought it would pass but it's only increased. In the end, it's likely the truth, that what he's been shielding his player from, likely was coming from his body.

"I can't help you if you leave." He replies softly, it's interesting, having his own voice instead of his player's. "You need help."

His player's relief is honest, that he was willing to talk but there's also that annoying need to retreat, to flee. It's part of why his player freezes when dealing with other players, it's why it's so easy for him to step in. It's not from that disconnect that his player experiences and that's frightening as it shouldn't happen when someone focuses their attention on doing a task, it's hard on him, wishing to Fix his player so he doesn't experience it but at a loss to know how.

"I have my mom." His player states and he's not sure what a mom is but, it doesn't seem to mean much in the way of anything. It's might as well be a Title or a nickname for all he cares.

"Where is your mom right now?" He asks and winces at the way his player withers under the weight of the question. "Your mom isn't helping." He states as gently as he can.

Eyes open and they're looking off at the horizon. "Your... right. She should have done something by now. Notice I haven't left my room or eaten anything." His player admits after a long period of silence and can't feel overly victorious over this admission.

"You flee too easily, scared to even speak with your fellow players." He tells his player with a sigh. "You do better with the NPCs and working on killing monsters."

"You... you remember that dream?" His player asks slowly and softly. "Dream?" He repeats curiously, he's had to grow use to periods where his player would just... not be able to control their body. Typically, the amount of time seem to be for about five to six hours that he'd have all to himself.

"You don't know what a dream is?" His player asks startled. "That place you talked with me, face to face. That was a dream."

"Is it related to your inability to control our body for a time?" He asks curiously. "You mean when I'm sleeping?" Then a few seconds later, his player answers, "Yea, I mean, I haven't dreamed since that first night but, usually when someone sleep, they can dream."

So sleep is important to players. He muses. They need it. That's a relief.

"You wanted to talk about that dream." He reminds his player after a short period of silence. "Yea, that's right. Well... I'm bullied at school. I get the worst grades and I'm clumsy, so, people don't... They just... Kids can be cruel and I'm told boys will be boys."

That doesn't explain anything, only now he has a word for what he Saw and angry that it sounds like such a scene has occurred far too often to his player. To the point where it's gotten to being the norm for his player. That his player is getting harmed for something concerning grades and for that strange disconnect that should not Exist, the source of the clumsiness his player has experienced in that Other World and would experience here if not for him.

He notices something, remarking simply, "Then don't go to school." If this happens at this school place then by not going, his player won't get bullied.

His player's emotions seem to just go still before whirling around as his player replies with a hint of panic, "I can't just not go to school! Hibari-san will bite me to death before dragging me there! I have classes! Homework! Kids my age go to school to get an education!"

Oddly enough, he actually catches an image from his player's mind, of a player who's got black hair with gray eyes with a very intense glare. It also causes him to wonder how could the dead be dragged anywhere, after all, most things in his experience shatter upon death, leaving loot and his player is still very much alive. As in, not shattered and not looted, or perhaps players have the same system set up in their world for when they die, that they'd be revived at a shrine or graveyard after an hour has past?

"Why would this player care if you go to school or not? Surely if he knew about this bullying, he'd let you skip it." He inquires curiously. His player's emotions still before his player murmurs softly, "I don't want to bother him about it. After all, I'm just a herbivore and I'd likely just crowd him, never mind what they'd do if they hear I tried reporting it."

It seems that even outside of this so called Game World, players find ways to be cruel to one another. Yet, even here, the players had to obey some kind of Code, so there should be something similar in that Other World too, right? Yet, didn't his player just admit that reporting it would only bring down these bullies wrath upon him? He as good as admitted that those in charge are turning a blind eye to this. And that doesn't sit will with him at all.

All the more reason to keep his player here, only, he can feel that sensation of emptiness, reminding him that if he does that, he'd be killing his player. Which decision is the right one? Allowing his player to leave and slowly be beaten for reasons beyond his control or keep him here and bear witness to his player's certain death? "If you leave, you're dying slowly, if you stay, it'll be quick." He finds himself clarifying.

"I... I guess your right." His player's voice wavering and filled with sadness. "Then, why not come back? Log out but come back?" He asks softly. "I'm here and I want to help."

"But I can't! Your alive!" His player snaps and he's taken back by that. "I'm an avatar, I'm suppose to be a vessel for a player to experience this world. I'm only here in this world because you are dwelling within me."

"Wait... your saying that... All avatars are?" His player's eyes dart about the street a touch of horror but also astonishment within him.

"We tend to take after our players, which generally are also our creators. I was created then passed through a number of players who leveled me so they can sell me. If I hadn't been bought, I likely would have been continued to be used by many players, leveling me even more, again, for sale or to be used for some other reason." He tells his player. "I'd known that not long after I was created and it's all I've known, it's what we've come to accept."

"But... that's... how can you?" His player trails off and he replies, "I can't level up on my own or come to this Game World on my own. Under the guidance of a player, we avatars grow in power, even able to follow the player to that Other World of yours. Though, none of you can see us, we can walk next to the player and watch but interact."

"So... you could follow me to the real world? Keep me company there too?" His player asks with a hint of hope. "Yes, though, you might not be able to see me when I do."

"But, I need to keep the connection with you which means coming back here." His player states after a bit of worrying of the lower lip. "That's why you want me to come back."

He doesn't see the point in replying now that his player Understands that he Cares and, perhaps, can Help. "I promise, I promise to come back, but, that might take a while as, as I'm not sure what kind of condition my body is in." His player says before adding, "And... I'm Tsunayoshi, please, call me Tsuna, Yo-Kun!"

"Alright Tsuna. I approve." He tells his player, Tsuna, and they log out of the Game World together.

It's the feeling of his stomach and thirst that's really what he plays attention to as he drags himself up before moving to stand. He wobbles as his vision swims yet, he forces himself to walk, bracing himself on anything he can touch. As he's about to fall, someone holds the back of his shirt and he glances to find Yo-Kun! looking very concerned and a little stunned at the same time, with crimson eyes staring at the hand holding his shirt. "Thanks." He croaks and it's not long before Yo-Kun!, who's still kind of see through yet physical to his touch helps him to the door.

With his avatar's help, he makes it down the stairs and then the ability to touch him gives way, causing him to chuckle weakly while Yo-Kun! glances around the kitchen every so often while he manages to grab a glass and pours himself some water. He drinks it slow but it helps him recover some energy, enough to note just how much of a teenager Yo-Kun! appears to be, he's forgotten how the avatar looks from an outside point of view, making it hard to believe that for the pass eight days, that's what people saw when they looked at him, at them really.

Stomach growling, he glances around for something quick. In the end, he grabs the last banana and eats it. Yet, as he looks around, he doesn't find any more fruit to eat and checks the fridge to find something to eat. He doesn't find much in the way of prepared dishes and searches the cupboards, there's mostly food that needs to actually be cooked over an element or oven, no instant noodles. He'd cook something only, he doesn't want to accidentally set fire to the house.

In the end, he sniffs at his shirt as he begins to notice a rather foul smell. It's then that he realizes that it's worst then he thought and pales at the idea of the likely state of his bed. As he almost falls five steps up, Yo-Kun! manages to help keep him from fall before looking a tad more faded then before. Which means that just by interacting with him, it's draining Yo-Kun!'s ability to stick around in the real world with him. Still, he feels filthy and smells to high heaven, so he tries to just walk up the stair, focusing on the state of his bed sheets and yea, the smell is ripe and sneaking a glance at Yo-Kun!, he heads for the bathroom, being sure to close the door once he says, "I need a shower, you should go save your energy right now. After all, doing all of that seemed to drain you."

"Yes, it did." Yo-Kun! admits with a sigh and a glance towards his room. So, he stripes and wonders just what kind of excuses to tell his mom about why he'd been cooped up in his room.

Hibari-san had taken one look at him once he recovered from eating too much too soon and escorted him to the nurse's office, clearly displeased while Yo-Kun! seems to be studying the teen with a thoughtful and appraising look. "Very intimidating." He hears Yo-Kun! muse thoughtfully. "I can see why you'd be cautious when dealing with him."

The nurse pales slightly at the sight of Hibari-san before looking at him with worried eyes. It's not long before she's checking him over and clicks her tongue at how pale he currently looks before getting him to strip and he feels the weighted looks from the teen who escorted him here and the avatar that only he could see, well, perhaps not as he'd caught a few glimpses of other avatars hanging around some kids, each had looked towards Yo-Kun!, nodding in acknowledgement before returning their attentions on their players or with the avatar they'd been speaking with.

There's no names hovering above their head nor did they have a level display like in the Game World, he had though it was just Yo-Kun! being the exception only now, it seems to be the rule that outside of the Game World, they'd look almost like normal people.

After all, not all of those avatars had been human in race. None of the avatars paid him any mind, clearly not realizing that he can actually See them and, maybe, hear them.

He stiffens at the way the air seems to tense up by the time he's out of his cloths. A shy look over his shoulder and Hibari-san looks down right murderous at the sight of him. "I take it something's wrong with you." He hears Yo-Kun! state in a rather bland tone, new interest in studying his back and then his upper body when he's asked to turn. He's thin, far thinner then he'd been when he'd received the VR never mind that he now has a rash from...

The nurse directs him to a bed while Hibari-san asks in a very sharp and fury filled tone, "Explain herbivore." He's not sure how to explain it, after all, his mother hadn't asked nor seemed to have been concerned that he'd been enjoying the VR system his father got him for his Birthday. She did scowled him for the state of his sheets and mattress though. But, there hadn't been any concern from her, not even when he got sick from eating too much after having been starved for eight days and yes, Yo-Kun! did follow his instructions on how to look up why he'd been sick after the second time it happened.

His avatar had looked so depressed on finding out what kind of issues came about from keeping him logged in for so long, it's a shock to learn that it could have been worst though. Yet, well, he's kind of beginning to think it was worth it as if he'd been released without that promise or that discussion, he'd likely would have followed through with never touching the VR system or Yo-Kun!'s character ever again. He's already missing visiting Andrey the NPC at the Black of the Smith and the way he could just climb onto a roof of a building with nobody caring.

"Glitch, there was this glitch and it took sometime to sort it out enough so that I could log out." He admits as it's as close to the truth as he can get without getting sent somewhere so they can put him through a series of mental examinations or therapy over the 'delusion' of Yo-Kun! being 'alive'. "Then, well, I didn't know not to eat so much so I was sick to my stomach twice since I logged out."

"Why didn't your mother disconnect you from the VR system?" The nurse asks and he shrugs weakly. "Not really sure, might have thought I just lost track of time playing it?" He suggests.

"And she didn't take you to the hospital to get checked over?" The nurse demands. "Or think it strange when you got sick after eating that second time?"

"I don't know how to answer those questions." He admits honestly, not meeting anyone's eyes. It's painful enough, knowing that his mother didn't Care enough to disconnect him from the VR system or think to suggest they go to a doctor or the hospital. It hurts enough as it is, that he can't call her mom like he'd use to, that she's kind of a stranger now. That she could be so Blind or Uncaring concerning his well being.

What am I really to her? Some kind of pet? He wonders not for the first time since he logged out.

At some point, he realizes he's pretty much alone with only Yo-Kun! keeping him company. "Your Hibari-san stalked off with intent to bodily harm someone and the nurse has gone to speak with someone about your absent along with seeing if they can't arranged for your admission to the hospital." His avatar explains softly and he sighs.

"He's not mine." Tsuna states but the avatar shrugs a bit, replying, "Either way, I think he's going to be keeping a sharper eye on you from now on."

"How can you be so sure?" He asks curiously, after all, he's checked the date of Yo-Kun!'s creation and the avatar is, like, maybe two months old, pretty much a baby, if he were human. "There's this... purple thread that's settled on me since the moment he set eyes on you and it's using my connection to you to reach you. It also seems that my own connection is a yellow one."

"But... he's not an avatar!" He exclaims and the avatar merely nods. "That... can't be right..."

"Right or not, he's decided to connect with you and yet, I don't think you really mind." Yo-Kun! remarks and he just sighs. "If it's not one thing, it's another."

"Well, at least somethings are going to be changing for the better in regards to this bully problem." Tsuna tries to give his avatar a blank look only, well, the look in those crimson eyes, perhaps it's true. Only time will tell, really.

[* - T) I (T - *]

"Sun Ring Battle tonight." Kyoya remarks from the couch as he's sitting behind the desk. Glances at his Cloud Guardian as he reaches up to finger the Sun Ring that's on the necklace, Kyoya retrieved it the moment he spotted Oniichan with it, knowing perfectly well that it doesn't belong to the boxer, then again, he hadn't been the one to hand out the half Rings, after all, two of the Rings had actually gone to two of his actual Guardians, his Cloud and Rain.

"How's Mite=Biter reacting to your upcoming fight?" Tsuna asks curiously. None of his Guardians or their respective friends like the fact that he's even going through with the ring battles. It's not helping matters that Yo-kun! will be allowed to fight as his Sun Guardian, he would have allowed Ryohei to stand in that post, after all, he's not really sure how the Sun Officer will react to seeing Yo-Kun! in person, but Kyoya didn't like that one bit seeing as his avatar and Sun is able fight said battle.

"Almost released another virus into the Vongola's CEDEF data banks." Kyoya admits with a slight sigh. "Thirteen attempt to date." He muses, one wouldn't have thought such an avatar that looks like a classical half orc brute could be so devious in the brain department. Nor would one think that Kyoya of all people would pick the Beast Tamer as a Profession and sticking to just playing the Profession. That's before they released an expansion that allowed people to try their hand at taming dragon type monsters along with allowing the training of flight capable mounts.

"Why are we humoring this again?" Kyoya wonders for the third time since they arrived in the other's office. "Distraction for Mukuro's operation." The office was sealed by Mukuro's avatar, a deceptively child looking character the Mist created that's of the fox person race and named young male avatar WaterDripping, Class being Wizard and Profession being Scribe. "Chrome's getting better under both Mukuro and Distant_Haze's guidance." Distant_Haze being a male avatar, race being one of the humanoid Fae and the Class being, of course, Illusionist.

Yo-Kun! is the one who recommended the avatar for Chrome with Mite=Biter being the one to track down just where the owner lived. A bit of actual money later and they retrieved Distant_Haze from the creator. Still, the avatar is adapting to the change in ownership along with having a player who they can actually interact with in a way and listened to their advice in both the Game World and in the real world.

Kyoya grunts and sighs as Mite=Biter arrives, the half orc looking rather disgruntled. "They installed a bunch of lamps and a boxing ring." The avatar states.

"Thank you for tell us and please send my regards to Distant_Haze for monitoring the set up for this ring battle." Tsuna says and the half orc displays a very familiar smirk, which is very similar to his creator's own, minus the lower tusks, before grunting and leaving them be.

"Supper?" He asks and Kyoya snorts softly, leading the way out of the office.

Yes, he knows that it's to be a boxing ring and yea, there's those lights up there too. He's standing to the right of Tsuna while Takashi's to the left with Catcher'sGUN standing behind the Rain. The rune engraved rifle slung upon the back as the wolf based avatar sports a slight sneer with crossed arms. At times, it's kind of hard to remember that Catcher'sGUN begged Tsuna and himself for help concerning Takashi when the rough and foul mouth avatar couldn't take the emotional baggage that Takashi had been carrying, that he'd taken note of the relationship between his player and himself. Of how at time Tsuna's gaze would sometimes drift to different avatars, even looking like he's listening.

They helped, of course, it had only been a year since they'd been together by then and, well, he recalled all too well his own feelings concerning his player's well being. After all, yes, Tsuna did have relapses when it came to everything, from the bullying and his mother's lack of any real caring to the whole Yo-Kun! being a living being and wasn't a puppet. Which was how Kyoya learnt about Yo-Kun! and how avatars are kind of alive, that they had their own world where they tend to live when not used to experience the Game World. It's also how Takashi came to begin reaching out to Cather'sGUN and how he talked to the other about contacting with the player through Takashi's dreams.

Among the Varia, he spies FashionGem standing next to the Sun Officer, Lussuria. The avatar keeps glancing between his player and Sky and himself, after all, FashionGem must find it amusing that for nearly five years, Luss and Tsuna have 'played' together, that Tsuna's done a lot of modeling for the physically male player. Even though it's always been Yo-Kun! who'd been the one in control during those sessions, after all, his player continues to deny that those modeling sessions ever happened despite the pictures taken and the way Tsuna always seems to soak in the positive compliments given so freely.

"You best be giving that ring back to Ryohei, Dame-Tsuna." The tiny Sun growls and he stiffens at the use of that nickname. "Well, I guess it need to go to my Sun." Tsuna muses after a few seconds and Ryohei lets out a cry of excitement while Tsuna pulls out the ring that's on a chain.

He Actualizes before taking the chain with a deafening silent descending upon his sudden appearance. The reactions vary but FashionGem and Luss look dumbfounded at the mere sight of him. "Keep our Sky safe, Takashi." He says as he puts the chain on before leaping easily over the side of the railing. "Coming down to play, Luss-chan?" He calls out to the player with a slight smile and within a second, the Sun Officer recovers her wits before confirming, "Why of course, my darling~ Yo-Kun!~"

FashionGem unseen by the player, following at Luss's heels, clearly staring disbelieving at him. Out of the Officers, Luss is the only one to play regularly with the same avatar which is why she's the only one to be hanging around the Varia. "So... Tsuna?" The question is asked. "My Sky, my player. And it's too bad you can't see FashionGem's expression right now, she's just so pouting right now."

He stares at the glaring FashionGem and Luss glances at the spot. "Am not!" The avatar snaps with arms crossed before glaring up at where Tsuna is while he focus on Luss once more. "VOI! What the fuck?! How do we know this isn't a fucking illusion?!"

It's fair easier for an avatar to call upon their Flame once they develop one that is. With ease, bright yellow Flames begin to pool at the back before a pair of sun bright wings sprout, there's a reason why he decided not to wear a shirt, the back of his current vest now has holes burnt into it for his wings. He doesn't try to rein in his Sun Flames one bit and they pulse slightly, there's a slight gasp as FashionGem Actualizes for a good minute, even Luss staring at the avatar with an odd expression while FashionGem does her best to look unshaken and untouched by the transition. "I think swim suits next session." Is FashionGem's statement before it ends and she looks rather drained while his Sun Flames shimmer to more manageable levels with the feathers of his wings now the same shade of purple as his hair.

That did seem to be enough evidence for Luss, who hums thoughtfully before turning back to looking at him once more. "I'll have to be sure to see if you can't do that in the Game, those wings look lovely, darling~!" Luss remarks and he gives a familiar smile, he can it just... it hurts so much in the Game World.

Soon enough, the rings are verified and they engage one another with him taking to the air with his current long dagger out. The battle begins and he pretty much tunes out everything save for what's happening on the field of battle.

Reborn is at a loss, it's not that he wasn't aware of the VR system or its first and still popular game, it's just that, it was just a game. People made some character to control in the game world, that the characters being just lines of code, as in, illusion in an illusionary world. He'd done his best to break Pipsqueak Dino of playing it every day, that he couldn't escape him with it and grudgingly, it'd had some success.

With Dame-Tsuna though? He couldn't break him of it, couldn't destroy it or hide it. And Hibari Kyoya wouldn't aide him in breaking the young Sky of the habit either. Looking at the supposed digital puppet that is Dame-Tsuna's character existing before him, fighting against the Varia's Sun Officer? A powerful Sun Flame emanating from him and claiming Dame-Tsuna as his Sky and player? This being was no Mist illusion nor without a Will of their own.

"Swim suits?" Takashi asks curiously and Tsuna stats in clear denial, "Not my problem."

"How?! That's impossible! It's just data!" Hayato Gokuderu exclaims while Takashi muses, "So, it's one of those times where it's Yo-Kun!'s moments then?"

"Yes, yes it is." The young Sawada states with a nod. "So... how long has it been his problem then? I mean, Luss must have taken screen shots..."

Tsuna's cheeks redden while looking downwards, clearly embarrassed and also confirming that there were screen shots of Yo-Kun! acting as Luss's own personally dress up doll. Even he's heard of the Sun Officer's hobby of using unlucky mooks as dress up dolls. "Are... are we just going to ignore the impossibility fighting on the Tenth's behalf?"

"How is that impossible? I mean, we create them and humans have Flames, why is it hard to believe that we spark the beginnings of life in avatars? Created because we want something or to be someone." Takashi states in a matter of fact way and that makes a disturbing amount of Sense.

"Only reason Yo-Kun! is fighting is that he's the only Guardian among the avatars capable to maintaining Actualization during combat." Kyoya replies as the Cloud drops down from some hiding place, startling those who hadn't noticed him up there.

"How many Guardians of his are avatars?" He asks with a threatening under tone. "Yo-Kun! is, of course, the Sun, my Catcher'sGUN is his Storm, and Irie's THEdepthS is his Lightning." Takashi informs them and that finally explains Irie's involvement in Tsuna's circle of friends, at first he'd thought the boy had been taken the slot of Sun but that hadn't been the case, to his relief as the young latent Sun just wasn't suited to combat.

The teens around react to the news while he's now wondering what that means about the Mist, who's now confirmed to being human, never mind the fact that each of those avatars had different Flames then their users. After all, logically the avatars should share their creator's Flame nature. "How does that even work?! How?" Gokuderu wonders.

It's yet to dawn on the bomber that he's just a place holder until the actual Storm manages to achieve the same results as Yo-Kun! and that might be for the best right now. "I don't understand the question, Gokuderu-kun." Takashi admits, glancing at the Italian Storm.

"How can they not share the same Flame? How can an avatar even have enough Willpower to even manifest a Flame?!" The teen snaps.

"Well, to be fair, Tsuna didn't create or previously level up Yo-Kun!, his father bought him from a studio and the VR system. Kind of turned out to be for the best given Yo-Kun! was Tsuna's shield for the longest time, stepping in when needed." Takashi admits with a slight brittle expression before it vanishes. "I created Cather'sGUN to, you know, screw around with something that wasn't baseball and to vent, really. You'd have to ask Irie's about why he created THEdepthS or the avatar himself."

"Distant_Haze." He muses and Tsuna replies, "Yo-Kun! found him and got the information needed to track down the previous player. The guy 'out grew' the game and didn't have a problem selling the avatar."

"He's been helping Chrome with her Illusions and just being there for her really." Takashi explains and that explains the progress the preteen has made in her Mist Flames. "It's funny, isn't it, how life works? Tsuna got Sealed back when he was five and had been Active at the time. If he hadn't been, Yo-Kun! wouldn't have had the opening to reach across the divide between avatars and players."

"Then again, if he hadn't been, he wouldn't need Yo-Kun! and maybe he'd have been forced to move to Italy too, so Kyoya and I wouldn't have bonded as his Guardians." Takashi continues to muse. "Then again, would he even be the same person who became our Sky?"

"What is, is." Kyoya states simply and Takashi nods with a slight smile. "Yea, your right."

Ok, so I might have read Eirenei's various The King's Avatar stories, still, you get two stories this week instead of one. So, yea?

A Lion's Health: RWBY

I don't own Naruto and RWBY!

"I made a friend, older brother Naruto! And I helped her bust a White Fang sealing Dust!" Penny tells him and all he could ask with a hint of disbelief, "You did what?"

They're in the med ward given his current condition concerning his newly grown leg. He's not sure when she arrived as he'd been trying to get some rest now that things have quieted down. Having sensed someone leaning over his body and kind of between sleep and waking, he jerked awake when his little sister decided it was ok to start poking his new leg, which had been fair more startling then painful.

"I made a friend." Penny tells him with a slight nervous smile. He takes a breath before expanding on what he actually meant. "I'm happy that you found a friend, I really am, sis, but it's the White Fang part that I'm more concerned about. Please tell me the events that led to your involvement with them."

Penny look of relief upon hearing he's happy she's made a friend that she gives him a rather lengthy report. It, sadly, wasn't surprising to hear that Blake tried to deny the depths the cell of White Fang have sunk to in Vale, working with a known criminal to steal Dust or how she fled from her team the moment things got a touch too personal, perhaps using the White Fang's involvement with Roman as an excuse to retreat from her growing closeness with team RWBY. Her parents hadn't been happy that he contacted them but they were relieved to hear actual news about what Blake's been up too, they pretty much firmly informed him that unless she's injured to not contact them again, given their history with said former protest group, perhaps its not that surprising.

"I see." The blond admits. "Have you spoken with Ruby? She must be worried about you." The teen states gently and Penny looks rather uncomfortable over the topic.

"Father wants me to lay low." His sis states with a hint of regret upon her features and in her voice. And of course you obey it now, never mind the worry it's causing your first friend or the guilt of breaking the previous order in the first place.

"It's a little late to do that, she's your friend, sis and right now, she's worried about you, likely expecting something has happened because of what happened." He tells her softly. "If you can't see her in person, then just text her, I'm pretty sure you already know her Scroll number." Penny is an AI after all, she likely got the information within seconds of Ruby agreeing to be his little sister's friend.

"You think I should?" She perks and he hums with a nod. "Yes, yes you should. Just explain that Dad's worried that the White Fang will be looking for you and that's why you won't be able to meet up with her."

There's relief and happiness in her face with a smile. "I'll do that... Ah..." He gives his little sister a smile as he replies, "Lunch, she'll be more awake and it'll between classes."

"Right!" Penny says and then, her gaze shifts to his left leg. There's a subtle change in her expression and he can't blame her, after all, it's a very recent addition to his body never mind the suddenness of having his leg back, never mind the being he dreamed of. His can only guess how this will effect his physical training, given he's going to have to get use to the change in balance or that he could get hurt from kicking something with his left foot.

"It didn't hurt, you know? It just... was there when I woke." He admits as he flexes his toes on the left foot, the claws coming out a tad before he relaxes and they return to their previous post. "It was more shocking then anything."

"Now you need a new way to carry Dust to use." Penny remarks and he chuckles slightly, nodding in agreement. It's something he does need to think about but, well, that's at the bottom of the list of his current priorities.

It's barely been five hours since Master Ozpin arrived at his room with Professor Peach, much to his embarrassment given that he'd only been wearing boxers and nothing more. The woman had rolled her eyes at his blushing while the Headmaster seemed rather bemused by his reaction. Thankfully, he hadn't been carried bridle style out of his room, just leaning on his Master as he did his best to walk, which is how he became rather aware of how sensitive his new foot pad was. After walking a third of the way, Professor Peach moved onto his other side and that made it easier for him to walk.

"So, were you staying with me or did Dad arranged lodging for you already?" Naruto asks curiously and Penny answers, "Oh, I have different lodging, in fact, I likely should have went there instead of coming here but I wanted to see you, big brother! It's been months, texts and calls just don't replace seeing you like this." Her gaze goes to the new limb before looking at his current medical gown.

"I missed you too, little sis. And I'm glad you visited. I really am, it's just..." He says a slightly strained smile, after all, it's been a rough morning.

"Ok, big brother." Penny says in a chirpier tone and asks curiously, "How's your friendship with that boy coming along?"

There's a good reason why he never told either his Dad or his little sister Jaune's name and, well, he's going to put off telling them for as long as he can. "He's doing well and I've been forwarding him scan notes concerning Dust manipulation. He's not confident enough to try it yet and he's likely going to be returning home to spend time with his parents and siblings this coming break." He explains and then moves onto the topic of the upcoming festival and about the upcoming dance that, thankfully, he doesn't have to organize as the job is in the hands of actual Beacon students.

Penny's expression is more of just happy to listen to him speaking then about the subject matter. He kind of wants to ask her opinion about her current team but decides that's really up to Penny to volunteer that information instead of telling him simply because he asked. It's why he hasn't asked her opinion on Ruby Rose, after all, if Penny wishes to talk about the younger Huntress then he'll be here to listen. It's likely going to be a bit before Penny broaches the subject of her friendship with Ruby but, well, he wants Penny to decide for herself if she wants to discuss it with him or not.

She's still growing, learning, adapting... I just wish people could give her time to figure out who she wants to be instead of what's she's suppose to be. Naruto thinks to himself. The what is always easy after all, one often just needs to look in a mirror.

In the end, Penny is politely but firmly asked to say her good byes so he can get some rest and his sis gives him a hug, which he returns, before she leaves him to rest once more.

"Wow... you really do look very lionish!" Ruby exclaims with sparkling eyes as Jaune and the leader of team RWBY approach, he'd been expecting only Jaune as the other wanted to say his farewells in person before leaving tomorrow. He's kind of regretting not thinking of bringing that eye patch right now simply because he's unsure if the crimson frosted teen won't mention every little detail over his appearance to her team.

With a half smile that's likely a bit strained, Naruto greets the girl once he moves to stand up. "It's nice to meet you, Ruby. I'm Naruto." He would have added his status as an Apprentice but then, it would likely devolve into explain what that means in their current modern day society, offering his hand, Ruby's eyes light up at the sight of his black nail before shaking it in quick succession before letting go.

"Ruby just wanted some air and, well, she wanted to meet you once she heard that I was coming to meet with you." Hope that's alright? Jaune gives him a slightly shy look.

"It's fine, Jaune, Ruby. I did come to Vale to try and find people my own age to befriend. It just so happens that I've got a lot on my plate right now in regards to my health and organizing the Vytal Festival." He feels Jaune's gaze sharpen slightly while Ruby looks rather concerned.

"What happened?/Should you be out here?" The pair of team leaders asks at almost the same time.

"It's just an adjustment concerning my left leg, I got a replacement from my previous prosthetic." All true, after a fashion. He reassures the pair. "My balance is off but, given time, it should return. So please, don't concern yourself over the issue."

Jaune nods in acceptance of the answer while Ruby still looks a tad concerned for a bit. "So, are you both leaving for the break?" The Faunus asks curiously after a few seconds of silence, this changes the mood and Ruby nods, beaming, "Yea, Yang, my older sister, and I are heading back to Patch to spend time with our Dad!"

"Yea, I'm heading back home too." Jaune admits with a less then enthusiastic tone. "Don't get me wrong, I love my family but, I have seven sisters. You don't know what that's like!" There's a slightly wild look in those blue eyes of the young Arc and Ruby pats Jaune's shoulder consolingly while he gives his fellow blond a sympathetic look.

"How about you, Naruto? You got any family related events coming up?" Ruby asks after a few minutes as Jaune collects himself.

"I'll be seeing my Dad soon enough after the break and as for my little sister, she's likely going to be sticking close to her team or lodging for the foreseeable." He admits. "I have a few final things to approve plus some physical exercises to go through concerning my leg for certain, the rest of the time..." The blond Faunus shrugs, it's more then likely that his Master will have something planned out for the two of them to do.

"Well, at least you'll be spending time with the two of them at some point." Jaune observes while Ruby nods in agreement with a positive hum. "So, what's your Dad and sister's names?"

"James for my Dad and Penny for my sister." He admits and Ruby's eyes flash upon hearing Penny's name. "Penny, as in kind of orange hair and bright green eyes?" Ruby asks and he nods, "Yes, she told me about what you did at the docks. I hope she got around to texting you like I suggested?"

"Yes she did! Are you sure she's ok?" The younger teenager asks, dark silver eyes shining with worry into his own.

"She's feeling a tad guilty about how it went down but last I saw of her, she appeared fine." He does his best to assure the younger teen. "But we kicked butt! How could she feel guilty about that?" Ruby wonders.

"Its more she wasn't to go off on her own or reporting the White Fang lead to someone authorized to deal with the situation." He explains. "After all, little sis is from Atlas and these robberies happened in Vale."

"Personally, if you want to do the right thing, it's best to just beg forgiveness after the fact then ask permission first." The blond explains, giving Ruby a wink which she slightly ducks her head under. "Not the best advice for a politician but it's likely meant for Huntsmen and Huntresses." Giving the pair a humorous smile and the leaders of team RWBY and JNPR shift slightly but give him slightly nervous smiles, with Jaune not really knowing what that's like while Ruby clearly does seem to get the underlining message there.

"So, what's your weapon?" Ruby asks a minute later before realizing something, speedy apologizing about asking given his situation. While, he's a bit confused by what she means, he manages to keep it from his face while Jaune just winces. He accepts the apology just fine, it's only when their respective Scrolls go off that Jaune and Ruby say good bye, with Jaune promising to keep in touch as best as he can viva their Scrolls.

As he's walking back to his room does it dawn on him why Ruby retracted the question and he snorts ever so slightly. Then again, it's likely for the best that she had or he would have actually replied that he's current weapons are a pair of Dust treated daggers. Which would be repeated to her team and then Weiss Schnee would likely start asking pointed questions about his health or how someone like him could possible pursue such a physically demanding lifestyle. His medical history before his adoption by his Dad made its rounds years ago and they've done their best to keep a lid upon his odd regeneration abilities that nobody can say for certain if it's his Semblance or something else.

The media have long since discarded the odd bit of information of him having arrived in medical care as a young human boy as some tall tale, that blood transfusions form humans did nothing but decay in his body, to the dismay of the surgeons attending to him. That it was the blood donated by Faunus that helped stabilize his condition he had but it also the reason he's a Faunus, his body's response to the racial difference was to transform him. It's likely the cause for how many lion traits he sports, over compensation. It's just a head scratch about why a lion Faunus when the first donor had been a deer Faunus and the following blood donors were not feline Faunus either.

Once through the door, he closes it and moves to lay on the couch. With that, he sits so he can massage his foot's pad, being careful when his claws come out before moving up his leg. It's something he's still getting use to, having a fleshy left leg and foot. The foot pad is slowly growing tougher and the muscles are slowly filling out as well as he's exercising the muscles. His issue is still how he expects the leg to be heavier along with not feeling the ground under that foot pad or the sensation of claws flexing out of it like he's grown use to with his right.

Sick of the silence of the room, he brings out his Scroll and within seconds, the speaker starts up with the song that's next on his music list. Leaning back, Naruto brings up a game on his Scroll and begins playing it, a bit of mindless fun really. A time out from thinking for a bit.

"How's Naruto?" Nora asks upon his return to their dorm room, moving her head phones off her ears, letting them settle behind her head. She's been king of down since the end of supper when it's clear that it'll just be Ren and herself sticking around Beacon.

"Doing well, there's an issue about his new leg though. Also Ruby ended up coming with and it turns out that girl Penny that helped at the docks? That's his younger sister." He says as Pyrrha looks up from her magazine while Ren is keeps reading his book. "He's sticking around Beacon too and it sounds like his Dad's coming for the Festival, so the three of them will likely spend sometime together at the Vytal Festival."

"That's great! Maybe we can met up with him for a spar or just hunt some Grimm?" Nora muses with a slow build of excitement.

"Might want to check with him before making any plans, Nora, it's the break for us but his Master might have lessons or something already planned now that there won't be many students around." The blond cautions, which does cause Nora to pout slightly. "You guys sure you two are going to be ok by yourselves?"

"Psst, we'll be fine, oh Fearless Leader." The lighter red head says with a dismissive wave of her hand before she's holding the magazine with both hands once more. "We're use to being alone together... I mean, not in that together together way but still together."

She then puts on her head phones in a bit of a hurry and he glances towards Ren, after a few seconds, the pink eyed teen looks up and says, "We'll be fine." Then the other teenage boy on the team returns to reading his book and Jaune just nods, accepting that the two were childhood friends and thus know how to keep one another company.

Grabbing his nightwear, he changes in the bathroom along with brushing his teeth. The blond then settles into his bed and brings out his Scroll. He's been reading some of the scans Naruto's sent and, well, it's interesting plus, it's something that might be able to make up for his lack of experience when it comes to using his sword. Yes, Pyrrha's been helping him since that incident with Cardin's blackmailing him but, well, with the Vytal Festival coming up, he's going to be dead weight for his team and he hates that idea.

It's going to take time for his training to become ingrain instinct, time that he doesn't have. And according to Pryyha, I've got a lot of Aura and you need that to use Dust or even Dust Shards like what's written here... I might be able to do more then just be a human meat shield. He muses to himself and he's thinking about asking Naruto to observe his first few attempts, once he's back from visiting his folks, after all, the blond Faunus wouldn't really be doing anything stressful nor would the first sessions take overly long either.

He should also have the funds to buy some Dust over the break, before he returns to Beacon. He wouldn't need much, likely Water Dust would be best given all that would happen if it goes wrong is him getting wet.

o T - N = V = N - T o

Resting easily upon a roof of the tallest building, he watches as the bandits wage 'battle' with the inhabitants of this settlement. It's rather amazing, really, just how the nature of humans just keeps sharing common threads, even if they are stitched together differently. Even in this world where causing misery and fueling hatred actually has some consequences for all involved, that they know it and have made a study of it, yet, evidence does little to persuade the inborn drive of destruction that seems to be at the very heart of human, and, perhaps, Faunus as well, souls.

The human race is standing on a blade's edge, one that's getting thinner and thinner the more their short sighted desires continue to grip them. It's clear that those in charge keep the rest ignorance of what's really going on, which feeds the cycle in their own way, by thinking that nothing is wrong with how they treat one another that they can continue doing so, maybe finding new ways to make their fellows more miserable. Kurama can already read the signs that the humans and their Faunus cousins either refuse to see or acknowledge and that their society needs to change their tunes and approach less their walls fall before the might of the Grimm, the created children of that odd entity that wishes to wipe the two sapiens races off of this world.

Never mind that those who aide her might as well dig their own graves before slicing their own throats, but then, that would be far to painless of a death for them. He'd love to be there, when their blinders fall away and they see the results of their collaboration truly costed them. Oh the despair that would surely fill their minds, perhaps shattering what grip of reality they had?

"But I won't be." The crimson haired being admits with a sigh. No, now that he's sure his former jailer is alive, his leaving this world is fair more certain. After all, how long until someone opens that box? Or try to summon the blond, thus himself?

Nor did he fancy killing the former human. No point, not when there isn't a Uzumaki Naruto anymore. Kurama muses to himself as the 'battle' ends and the looting begins. "Naruto Ironwood." He muses out loud softly with a bit of a smirk.

Most of the articles he's found concerning the former human. The medical history, even he'd been unsure just how the former Genin managed to hang onto life without him dwelling within the body. Then again, the brat always did have a strong will when it came to surviving despite the odds, perhaps the fact that he could start over gave him the strength? The entity shaped like a human muses.

With a stretch, Kurama falls back and fades from the roof, falling through the various floors, he is angling his body and when he allows reality to grip him once more, he's crouched upon the floor. Standing up gracefully and rubbing the dirt from his hands, the entity in human form walks in the opposite direction of where the bandits were. This world hasn't had anything new to teach him for the last few years, perhaps he should do a bit more digging into Naruto Ironwood's current situation?

He'd visit but didn't want what's keeping them here to degrade any faster then its current pace. After all, he kind of likes the freedom of wandering where he pleases, even if it's such a tiny shape, without humans calling forth armies to try and kill him for just being something far superior then them. His Semblance, as the locals call it, is something he wouldn't mind keeping, even if it means staying in this shape. No existence is perfect and being a sentient being made of chakra didn't deter the ninja from trying to kill him or harness him as some kind of weapon, perhaps having something as abnormal as a Semblance in a world of chakra using humans will grant him some peace and quiet, at least for a few years?

Ozpin studies the sketch of the entity, as his young Apprentice insists on calling the man, and concludes to, for now, treat this man as a Wild Card. There's a number of question concerning the connection this man has with Naruto. "May you live in interesting times indeed." He murmurs as he recalls the words Naruto claimed this crimson haired man spoke, of the Aura of red that carried fear and rage.

So many things to puzzle out before the Festival happens, it's a matter of figuring out which pieces should go together and now there's this new unknown to consider. It's clear that there's a connection between Naruto and this man, it's now a question of when this man will seek his Apprentice out as there's no doubt in his mind that the two will meet. He believes the teen that he doesn't know the man but feels that he should, then again, the injuries sustained at five years of age were clearly going to leave their traumatic marks upon the young child's mental state, that it's only come across as amnesia is more of a relief and a tad worrying as there should be triggers to subconscious reactions waiting like a minefield.

Then again, a human boy transforming into a Faunus isn't something he thought possible. Changes to young Naruto's brain could be the reason why nothing has triggered, that rewiring his brain to deal with a Faunus' more keen senses and night vision meant that nothing was firing in the same way as if young Naruto had remained human. Unlike most, he's fairly certain that the doctors had the right of it, that for some unknown reason, a five year old human boy began to transform into a Faunus upon introduction of blood sourced from the other sapient race, that the boy's body had rejected human blood, causing it to decay within minutes of being introduced.

That this same child would, in time, display some kind of regenerate abilities was likely just an off shoot from what caused his transformation in the first place. After all, sperm samples from the teen show up as perfectly human, although there's a bit of a puzzle concerning how the DNA was arranged at times. There's a lot of contradiction when it comes to the Neo-Faunus but perhaps they'll finally begin to unravel some of the mystery about him now that his leg has been regrown, that they can now see just what kind of potential Naruto can bring to bare.

Ending it here

The Dance Between Death and Life P1: DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

The sun is still slowly rising as Naruto leaps through the air, the solar rays casting a subtle glow throughout his feathers and coat, causing the golden shade to brighten. Wings drip down, causing his body move move before pushing up, this repeats as he rises higher into the air, leaving the cliff he rested the night behind. He's not yet hungry, having fed rather heavily two days ago, he'd been mostly sleeping it off but now, now he doesn't feel dozy nor is his thoughts circling over the topic of food. For now, he'll just enjoy the fact he has wings and can use them to fly, a novelty given his previous incarnation as a human and that he Remembers that life at all is something that's he's long since come to terms with.

Thoughts of the Past are rather quick to fade as the over powering sense of Now and Here help remind him that he's got something to enjoy, that Now and Here isn't the time for the Past or thoughts of the Future. The sunlight begins to heat the mountains below and it's not long before he allows his wings to lock into place, riding the thermals up and then soaring to the next one. If Naruto could, he would smile he passes the morning in the air, often times taking note of what he passes over making mental notes about seeing prey at which spots.

As the sun begins to drip west, it's then that he spies something he's never seen before in this life or his previous one. It's a rather large white scaled lizard sporting wings not unlike those of a bat, also scaled. As he drips down a bit, it's then that he realizes that no, it's not just large but huge, even compared to himself and he'd been among the largest griffins bred by some God, the name escapes him and really, it wasn't like he Cared given he'd just been nothing but part status symbol and part of a pet breeding project. Flexing his talons as his eyes narrow at the strange being below him, there's this feeling in the air that kind of familiar which likely explains why he feels his heart begin to race and anticipation stirs within.

White Scale shifts his head slightly, noticing Naruto before seemingly snorting before ignoring him. Another familiar feeling roars to life and he gives it Voice before entering into a nose dive, wings fold close to his body as his forearms move from their position, talons eager to pry some of those scales off to dig into the flesh below. As his talons don't leave a scratch upon the scales, Naruto flares his wings to re-balance himself so he continue attacking White Scale.

It's not often he lowers his greatness to the realms of mortal hood but then, he did not seek to bring attention to himself for the time being. Perhaps I should seek out Ddraig? Albion muses as he already feels the anticipation of a fight with the red Dragon.

Then he's not alone in the sky and notices a golden feathered and furred griffin above him. Weak. Is his thought at the sight of said creature. It'll flee.

Turning away, he continues on, only... There's this Roar from above and he's slow to react, the griffin is attacking him. The talons glance off but the Intent to Harm, he Feels it and finds himself slightly impressed, not that he'd going to go easy on it, just that, perhaps he found a toy to play with for a bit.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

How? HOW? Albion wonders at the sight of the broken, dying griffin. Blood oozes, one particular spot is on the right of his upper muzzle will likely leave a scar, if he wanted it to.

Yes, the beast is almost dead, yes, the out come ended as he knew it would, and yes, it proved entertainment. Only, it's now dusk, which means that more time had passed then he'd expected. "But you weren't just some lowly griffin, were you?" The dragon's form shifts and shrinks into a human shaped one before moving to stand before the beast's side.

"Some God breed your ancestors and have continued to influence the line." He continues as he moves to crouch near the griffin, moving a hand under the head. "Beautiful feathers and coat. Well form talons and claws. Deadly beak and keen of senses."

"Such a will to live." The dragon in human form muses as he still feels something struggling to hang onto life. Life's blood spilling out and he moves the head with ease, the neck's damaged.

Perhaps he should give it a quick end? Before snorting and reaching into his being, then pushes it into the beast, curious to see the result. He's fought Ddraig enough to under stand some of what the other does. The power should rip the beast apart, magical in nature or not only, only the form shimmers and shrinks into a human like form, fairly tanned skinned with a slight sheen of gold, bright golden hair, and the lack of injuries.

Now, now the transformed griffin is just sleeping. What remains of the power seems to settle into the body, becoming one with the now human shaped griffin. Albion studies the sleeping male, there's nothing covering the other, and nods thoughtfully. "Golden, I name you Golden." He states as he smirks, it seems he'll be entertained for some time yet.

Shivering, he wakes and everything is different, it's night and he's hungry plus thirsty. Never mind that he's cold plus it seems that, he's not alone. He groans softly while moving to sit up, it's then that he realizes why he's cold, he's naked and, looking at his limbs and legs, human, was he human? When did that happen?

"Wake I see." He hears the other say and he blinks as he tries to see them, only, it's night and there's not a lot of light for him to see by. Cocking his head to the side, he can't help but be puzzled, then again, everything is so different. It's kind of surreal, dream like really.

The other moves closer and he gets a better look at them, white hair with light blue eyes are the most notable features. He tries to say something only, well, it's more of a croak and cough, followed by him swallowing noticeably and a shiver from the chill from the wind moving about his back. "I guess you would need something to drink, after all, you did lose a lot of blood, Golden."

Golden? He gives the other a blank look, after all, he's always regarded himself as Naruto, it's the only name he considers belonging to himself. After all, he might not be considered an Uzumaki any more or even Namikaze as they are clan names, but Naruto, that's just a name and thus something that he can keep, an identity. The memories of that incarnation remain and thus the name does.

"Golden is now your name." The other states in such a matter of fact way that he snorts softly before smiling and silently chuckling a bit, before he's shivering once more and he's rubbing his hands upon his arms. "Ah good, I don't need to find you a teacher."

"Teacher?" He swallows a few times before croaking out. It's a confusing idea, after all, before that jutsu forced reincarnation upon his friends and himself, he'd been eighteen, would have been nineteen if it had occurred two weeks later.

"You were a mere beast less then a day ago." The other remarks and he blinks in understanding, snorting in bemusement. "Human... last time... Memories..." His voice is harsh and he's just so thirsty but the other's seems rather pleased.

"How interesting but that explains so much." Those blue eyes study him with great interest. "I very much approve of this turn of events."

And the former ninja just can't help but stare at the stranger, not really sure whether the arrogance flowing from this guy is justified or not. He watches as a cup seems to appear within the hand of the other that's now being offered. Then water fills the cup as Naruto, he'll consider Golden to be a nickname coming from the other, takes it and then drinks it. His thirst stated and he is still cold, the cup vanishes and he wonders just what kind of power exists in this world.

"Thanks." He murmurs softly and asks curiously, "So, the cup? That water? How'd you do that?"

"Why, magic of course!" Chirps the other in a slight mocking tone with a clear arrogance.

"Magic huh?" Naruto muses. So, this is truly a different world.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

"Scales..." He growls at the dragon in human shape, yes, he does know the other's name is Albion and that the other is one of the two Heavenly Dragons with a fairly long list of titles. Said dragon gives him a flat look but there's a slight shift of weight.

"Come now, this isn't that hard of a concept to grasp." Albion states simply.

"You want me to steal into Apollo's palace and grab a jug of milk that his divine cattle produces? Why not just bribe Hermes?" Again. He asks, they've known each other for almost twenty years now and their relationship's early years have been fairly rocky, never mind the leers directed at him by said dragon that... well, Naruto's never been subject to such a Look from any member of either of the sex.

"What's wrong with wanting to see you use such magical talents in a practical setting? You never know when you'll need to break into or out of a Deity's home." The other states and he just sighs but, well, there's no point trying to argue right now.

Running a hand through his bright golden hair, the former ninja feels the points upon his ears, the points upon the ears weren't overly noticeable as his hair tend to hide the tops of them. His human appearance is different then his incarnation as one Uzumaki Naruto, but again, he's current incarnation started out as a divinely breed griffin and its only the pass almost two decades that he's been gained a human like form, even being 'gifted' with some of Albion's magic once he'd unconsciously used it to not just heal but to alter his form. "Fine, I'll go."

Albion relaxes just a tad and he sighs, not really sure why the white dragon is trying to put so much effort into trying to keep him alive, after all, everything that's alive must die. Since his altering of his form, what kept him ageless broke and that age is catching up with him. Even now, if he were to return to that form, it won't be the same nor would it restore the divine enchantment. His existence as such came to an end the moment the dragon won that fight. There's times when he wonders if Albion and Ddraig even know that they were Friends as well as Rivals, but, well, how could they Not Know?

Reaching into himself and touching the firestorm within, he manipulates the current as it flows out of him. The words that flow are spoken in a tongue that Albion taught him, very musical yet possess a Ring to them. The spell settles over him, a cloaking spell of light and shadow before moving to stand upon the circle that the white dragon had crafted, an entrance into the Greek Deities realm. A single word and the circle activates.

"So, this is where you've been holding up." Ddraig grumbles once the other finally decides to step out of the forest in a human shape. Crimson long hair and green glinting eyes, the build is far sturdier then his current own. Simple studded leather armor covering up said frame.

"I'm not in a mood for a fight." He tells the other, given how long their bouts tend to last, he rather not engage in one, not when there's Golden to consider. The former human has proven to be fair company and fearless in stating his honest opinion, never mind the interesting reaction the reincarnated ninja has concerning his leers, after all, the former human's current body was fair from unattractive compared to those of mortals and more so then a few of the supernatural races.

"And what makes this mortal so special that you'd teach him that language?" The Red Dragon Emperor wonders after a time once the other studies him with narrow green eyes and a scowl. Arms crossed over the chest and standing rather tall.

"What business of it of yours what I teach a mortal?" The White Dragon Emperor counters as he draws himself up and places his hands upon the belt, titling his head ever so slightly. "Did you not teach the written half to that half breed? Did I not ask you the same then that you ask now?"

His fellow Emperor of Crimson's head jerks and noses flares in anger, snapping, "Don't speak of her!" By which he counters, "Then go and I will not."

They glare at one another, after all, that half breed girl child had been pretty much a daughter to the Red Dragon Emperor of Domination and the treachery of her death by her husband likely still hurts even though a thousand years have at the very least have pass since her death. "He's going to die." States the other simply and he gives a sharp nod in agreement, all of this was simply trying to squeeze a few more years before it happens, a way to know that they did everything they could to extend Golden's life.

"When he passes, I will at least be satisfied that I tried everything I could to delay it." He states simply and the other in human shape's eyes soften in understanding, nodding.

"Another time then." The White Dragon Emperor of Supremacy watches as a Dragon Gate is summoned and the other leaves. There's an odd mix of emotions whirling within but, there's foremost a feeling of fondness and graduated towards his rival for understanding and respecting his wishes. It's a nice feeling, one that's not unlike the feelings the former human have fostered within him.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Forty-nine years they've been together, a good over half of those years had been bought from Golden consuming various divine food belonging to Deities of the Sun using various methods ranging from buying and bartering to stealing and black mail. It is winter when Golden is dies and he finds himself rather numb for the first month, they've long since prepared a place of burial. It's hard for him to grasp that he's alone and that, that's rather unacceptable.

So, as that first month ends, he roars his grief, loss, and pain to the world before assuming his rightful form. Once more, the White Dragon Emperor flies through the sky, heading straight for the only one who could withstand his need to fight something, someone really. And so, the two Heavenly Dragons battle once more and all around them, the other races flee out of their moving battle, some of the more curious ones did so while wondering just what the Red Dragon did to rile the White Dragon so. All Albion cared about was that he wasn't alone right then nor did Ddraig seem to mind that he wasn't at the top form.

The alien soul now slumbers in the shell he crafted for it, only reason the Apocalypse Dragon even found this soul is due to Albion aiding in ripping the skin of divinity enchantment of agelessness from this male soul. It is rather amusing to learn that this one had been reincarnated among one of the non-sentient magic creatures, likely another cause of how this soul managed to escape his notice. The majority of other souls had been born among the mortal race of mankind and had trouble dealing with the aftermath of their forced reincarnation, thus dying as late teenagers or as adults.

Impressive, at how easily this one converted a small dose of the Vanishing Dragon's own power into his own being. The True Dragon muses to himself. There had been another soul who'd done something also different when it came to using alternate magical sources beyond his reserves, only the power never got cultivated within the being, it got absorbed, nestled within the body, and once spent, was gone from the soul's magical reserves.

How interesting... The Great Red muses as he studies the results of various magical scans. Like the other one, last life he carried some being made out of raw power and it's left its mark on this reincarnation. Also the younger brother of that pesky soul and, again, a much more solid list of previous incarnations.

"Wouldn't be hard to..." He murmurs under his breath. Be easy, actually and he's got the experience of being in a body plan similar to one.

Yet, it's more of a question of why should he try it then could it work. Snorting, the Great Red places the shell among the others, for now, the spells woven with do their best to stabilize the alien souls, repairing what damage they experienced from being forcefully ripped from their previous bodies and flung into the Dimensional Gap before landing into the more psychical world that allows the other races to flourish, ending up in bodies that had been barely able to house them, more then one of them hadn't been born the correct gender after all.

Why Ophis didn't just fling them back to their home dimension upon entry into the Dimensional Gap, he didn't know but then, he wouldn't have involved himself in collecting them if it hadn't been for the issue of a number of them trying to tear their way back into the Dimensional Gap in the first place, likely not believing whatever warnings they've been told about why it was a Bad Idea, let alone doing so in a Safe Manner. What fools. Dragon of Dragons muses to himself as he heads for his currently favorite resting spot.

He pauses as he senses the two Heavenly Dragons at it again in the world. For a moment, he wonders if he should intervene and pull the White Dragon aside, to inform the Vanishing Dragon of the fact that the alien soul is under his care before brushing that impulse off. The two hadn't even spent a century together and the pair must have said their farewells as the end drew near.

Wake. And Naruto's not sure if he wants to. "No."

The former ninja is already drifting off into slumber again, it's warm here and he feels so Safe. Wake. Again, that voice commands and he feels like he should Obey but, well, he really doesn't want to.

"Make me." He murmurs sleepily. The soul can't help but sense something akin to mostly annoyance and bemusement, yet command giver might also be slightly impressed with him.

I am beginning to see why you held Albion's attention for as long as you did. That voice remarks and it's the name Albion, its familiar and he finds himself feeling sad and regret connected with Albion. He misses you.

And a wave of guilt hits him as he finally recalls who and what Albion is. Much more awake and aware, the soul of Naruto, nicknamed Golden, tries to 'glance' around and 'blink' only, he's got no eyes really nor eyelids. Everything within his space, he's aware of it and that there's nothing fleshy about him. The experience is rather startling yet, it's not New, not really, it's just that before, it was just there and now, now he's awake and can recall experiencing the world in a different way.

"Why bring up Albion? And... where am I?" He wonders but can already tell, the speaker isn't in this space with him. That they are outside of it.

You woke up did you not? The voice remarks and Naruto would have frowned or pouted at the point the voice made. In a magical relic meant to stabilize and repair the damages you lot experienced upon your forced your souls out of your unprepared bodies and into the Dimensional Gap.

"Shit." He sums up, after all, he kind of recalls that location is off limits for its hostile nature and the current owner, some Dragon God who's name he can't recall. "Are my friends safe?"

I would not know as I have no idea who among the hundred alien souls you count among that number. States the voice. I will admit, you are far more resilient out of the souls, but then, unlike the others, you had been incarnated into a body that resided in a God's Home. Most Solar Deities are associated with healing or medicine so it is not that surprising that what problems your soul and that body had likely been attended too.

It's familiar knowledge, after all, that's what Albion explained to him back when they'd been trying to push off his death to a later date. The only new bit of information in that has to do with his soul and his being born as a griffin being cause for concern. He never gave much thought to his soul having any troubles with getting housed in a body before and now, now he's worried for his friends and any issues or problems they had. "How bad?" He asks with dread.

There was a number who had been born the wrong gender. The voice explains calmly. Then there were those who regarded magic as your dimension's power, chakra, and expected it to obey the same kind of laws, with a number of them needing to be killed before they ripped into the Dimensional Gap in such a way that it would not be repaired for a number of years if they had succeeded.

"Shit." He curses having decided to just keep his swearing to that one word, not wanting to offend the being who could mess with him in a way that he likely didn't fully grasp. "So... now what? You just going to toss us back to our home dimension's afterlife?" He could deal with that, after all, they were dead and likely occupying relics this voice created to capture them in.

I could do that with You but not with the others. States the voice and once more, Naruto would love to blink or have a way to display his puzzlement. My plan for them is to create bodies that could not just house their souls but also prepare said souls for that journey back to your dimension.

"Ok, that's nice? So, I'm leaving before the other then?" He's pretty sure he's missing something here. "You could have just sent me without waking me, right?"

Are you not interested in living once more? The voice inquires and if the former ninja had a face or body, it's clear what kind of emotions Naruto is experiencing. Would not your friends be looking for you? I believe they would.

"Yea, they would..." He admits softly. "But, wouldn't that be a waste of resources for you? You said I'm more then capable of surviving that journey." What's your price?

The voice laughs and it's then he realizes he's dealing with a Dragon as the way this guy laughs is very similar to Albion's own when the other assumed a draconic body, one that's not the White's true dragon form but something that's still formidable. "Which one are you? " He finally asks once the laughter comes to an end.

The Great Red, the Apocalypse Dragon, the Dragon of Dragons. The voice tells him and he can't help it, "The True Dragon?!"

Indeed. Naruto could only imagine the smirk the Apocalypse Dragon likely has. "Why even give me a choice in this?" He finally asks in a flat tone, after all, it's not like he's able to do anything right now, he's not even sure if he's even able to call upon any magic that might be clinging to him.

Boredom and this promises to be fairly entertaining, after all, unlike the others, you will be far more in the know and also ahead of their curve as you still recall that language the Vanishing Dragon taught you never mind the lingering draconic magic you converted into your own being. States the Apocalypse Dragon. If you decide upon human or even half breed human, I believe you will end up with a draconic Sacred Gear.

Like calls to like. Naruto recalls Albion mentioning it once. "How do I still have draconic magic? I don't have a body right now!" He remarks.

And you should not have been able to do anything but explode from that tiny drop of power Albion sent your way but, you did use it and then absorb the remainder of it. You did so instinctively I might add, which means you have had experience in taking in foreign energy and using it. Great Red states and he'd flush if he could.

"What are my options?" Naruto asks after a bit as he collects himself. "After all, some of those I might be familiar with are extinct by now."

Or in decline. Great Red agrees and that means a lot of things, really, after all, pantheons have been known to war among themselves or with one another. Never mind the kind of fights Dragons can cause, he's fairly certain Albion and Ddraig's matches are more akin to natural disasters that range where ever they will. There's a lot of people Naruto misses but, well, Albion is someone he spent the longest time with, nearly fifty years and his most recent friend, teacher, and traveling companion despite their not seeing eye to eye on a lot of things, some of the issues had been personal in nature while it about ethics and views of the world to the manner of how to live their lives and how best to treat others.

Actually... Naruto listens as the Apocalypse Dragon lists off not just species but also crossbreeds. He easily recalls some advice about walking in another person's shoes for a bit, and, well, it sounds like he could. But at the same time, should he? It wouldn't be a matter of days or a limited amount of time but for... Kami knows how long, after all, this was the Apocalypse Dragon and he's still got some draconic magic tied up in his soul it sounded like. What do I have to lose? Really?

Yet... his friends from before... they'd likely wind up human or at least human shaped. Then again, he knows Dragons can assume other appearances, yet still, they can live a hell of a long time unless something happens that kills them. He recalls the looks Albion in human shape received without trying, but then, that's not new really. Sasuke and Neji were able to turn their share of heads, well, admiring ones from the fairer sex.

"Just out of curiosity but, how's Albion?" He asks after a bit of silence once Great Red finishes. After all, it couldn't hurt to hear about what the Vanishing Dragon has been up to, right?

Sealed. Both Albion and Ddraig's souls are now in their own separate Scared Gears. And now he's kind of freaked out.

"You mentioned Sacred Gears before... What are they?" Cause he's got this feeling of deja vu.

Ah yes, you would not know. The Biblical Pantheon's God created these vessels to contain dangerous beings and weapons that pass to those with human blood in their veins. Set up a fairly decent system to govern how they pass from one heir to the next. It is not a perfect system as he died along with his rebellious son, Lucifer and three of his trusted underlings, before he worked out all the kinks out of it. The Apocalypse Dragon explains.

"So, how much human blood does one need to get one?" Naruto asks curious as it seems that yip, it's something he's kind of familiar with only a very different twist and take. Half and higher are best.

In the end, the former ninja finds himself between two choices, one where he'd be human again, to find his old comrades from his time as a ninja of Hidden Leaf and the other choice was to see what life might have been like for his most recent precious person. There's no point in trying for half and half either, it would just paint a more desirable target upon his back. "I choose ..."

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

The young boy sports white hair and a simple sniff reveals the presence of the child sporting Devil blood with undertones of Dragon. It's clear the half breed hadn't noticed his presence, which would be rather impressive given he's using that tongue to cast his current cloaking spell. Darkness and light bend to hide him from view of others.

He's standing at the middle of a ritual circle he drew to draw the current possessor of Albion's Scared Gear to his location. It had taken time to adapt to his new body and life style, hatched in the Dragon Lands of the Underworld, one of five eggs which hatched into whelps to a pair of Flame Dragons, although unlike his current siblings, his scales were polished gold in color upon hatching along with sapphire blue eyes. It wasn't that surprising, really, the Great Red had likely slipped him into the nest during the laying of the eggs with neither the wiser.

"Boy, do you possess the Divine Dividing within you?" Naruto asks in English and in a stern voice, allowing the cloak about his location go. The boy jerks and head snaps to his location, eyes widen at the sight of him.

He mentally sighs at the reaction, not that the former ninja could blame the reaction given he's about a century old and a fair bit larger then most Flame Dragons of his age. How pitiful, Vali, it's just a simple Dragon, you can take him. He hears Albion proclaim as wings flex out from the back. The boy regains confidence and readies himself.

"Scales." He smirks with a grin. "Been a while." The language is one of extincted magical races.

Vali blinks while looking confused, being half Devil meant that it's human languages that are auto translated so the boy tensing up in confusion and annoyance evident. What did you just call me?! Albion demands in fury and he gives the boy a fangy grin as he allows clear amusement glinting in his sapphire eyes. "Scales, you know, given my first thought upon seeing you then had been White Scales? Also, you can take issue with Great Red about him gathering my soul, it seems the others that cross with me got up to no good."

The boy does his best to keep a calm look but then, he can only guess what kind of emotions Albion is leaking from their connection but, the wings vanish. "Yea, then he gave me the choice to pick the race of the body for me to give life another go in this world." He explains lightly. "And I recall your arguments about how I couldn't understand your point of view fully simply due to, you know, having been a human or griffin and, yea, your right. So, I picked Dragon and got slipped into a Flame Dragon nest, not sure what species I am really, then again, Dragon of Dragons is the one to craft this body for me, so, I'm assuming I'm a unique breed."

Golden... Well, at least he got the coloring right. Albion grumbles after some minutes. Name?

"Known commonly for my eyes among the Dragon Lands, Sapphire, but the name I've given the Devils has been Golden ." He replies, using that magical language's word as a name, in honor of the nickname Albion gave him. He's done some work for Tannin after all, which means he's come into contact with Devils.

Vali is doing his best to look unaffected but all of this but, it's clear that the boy is out of his depths and a little unnerved about the fact that it seems they know one another. Moving from his sitting position, he walks over and says gently, "This won't hurt."

Placing his left hand above the youngling's head, he speaks a spell in that language and with the final note rung, his form shimmers and shrinks until he's the same size as the boy. His form is now that of a half Devil only with different coloring and slight tint to the skin. Glancing down at his form, he murmurs a simple enough chant and simple pair of pants and shirt, both white, now clad his form. "I'm Golden and an old traveling companion of Albion's who's been given a second chance at life."

Vali blinks dumbfound at him and that he's now addressing him. He tilts his head slightly to the side, waiting patiently for Vali to introduce himself and their eyes go out of focus for a second before the half Devil scowls, introducing himself, "Vali, Vali Lucifer and the current White Dragon Emperor."

Eyes narrow in challenge and he merely hums in acknowledgement, giving the other a slight smile. "I'm sorry for inserting myself into your company in this manner or any disruptions my presence will cause." He states simply and Vali grunts, crossing his arms about his chest. "But I'm more then willing to be your sparring partner. After all, I did manage to deal some superficial damage on Albion upon our first meeting. Even caused him to bleed in that altered state."

Pretty much killed you regardless. Albion remarks and Vali's eyes widen at the idea that he had fought against said Dragon and did cause some damage. "Perked your curiosity though, enough that you transferred a small drop of power my way."

Which you not just used to heal and alter your body but converted into your own reserves. The White Dragon agrees and Vali finally gives a sharp nod, saying, "Fine. But what name do you want me to use?"

"Uzumaki Naruto while I'm in this form and in public but in private, call me Golden ." He tells the half Devil.

With that, he follows after Vali as the boy turns around and marches off. He wonders about the future, after all, the world is a far different place then when he had traveled in Albion's company never mind the fact that his friends were out there, likely trying to make sense of the world and finding anyone who came from their home dimension, never mind if they find themselves born among non-humans.

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

Hyoudou Kazu, formerly known as Uchiha Sasuke, groans as once more, his 'older' brother, one Hyoudou Issei, bolts pass with his two 'friends'. He doesn't consider the pair to be actual friends given how flighty the two strike him to be and might just be joining Issei for the attention the other gets from people. Stepping more to the right and coming to a stop, the group of enraged girls continue in pursuit of the trio, the air rushing in their wake, ruffling his honey brown hair and his Middle-School Kuoh Academy Uniform. His hazel red eyes turn upwards in prayer to whatever powers that he's not needed to carrying his older twin home, they were only fraternal twins instead of identical, thank Kami as he wouldn't know what to do if he'd be always mistaken for Issei.

"Kazu! Over here!" Cries one Hibari Kenta, formerly known as Nara Shikamaru while Rokudo Goten, formerly known as Sai, waves at him. Gently shaking his head, he starts jogging towards the pair of boys his year.

The pair watch as he approaches, each with their cells out. "News?" He asks Kenta.

"Yes." Is his fellow reincarnated ninja's reply with Goten adding, "Dragon."

He stills at the mention of the race, after all, they've heard things concerning that race. "I know he was seen in the company of the latest White, but everything pointed to half Devil like the bearer." Kazu points out as calmly as he can, after all, Naruto seems to be the only one among them that still bears his previous name. They've yet to make contact with their former comrade due to the spotlight that's typically on one Lucifer Vali due to the young man's Scared Gear, Divine Dividing.

Goten hands over his cell once he starts the video and before his eyes, he watches as the current incarnation of Uzumaki Naruto fends off attacks from a group of Church Exorcists, about twelve of them. Then two of them begin to pray but the golden haired seemingly half Devil doesn't overly notice as the other ten keep up the pressure viva range using guns. Blue eyes glint a bit with power as an arm is raised up covering the lower part of the face.

The bullets don't get pass the cloths or skin if they do manage to hit. A wave of the arm, a shield of molten gold shimmers between them. Naruto gives the group a blank look before turning and walking away with nothing getting pass the shield in a confident walk. Then one Sellzen Freed comes flying down with a Holy Sword in hand and Naruto blocks with ease, only, you can see golden scales now on the bare arm.

"Fuck off." Naruto growls, someone did a subtitle as his former teammate said that in another language. Freed says something that nobody bothered to put subtitles while the Exorcist darts back and to the side.

The camera doesn't catch whatever expression is on Naruto's face but the head tilts and says in a mocking tone, "Well, if you're sure."

And Naruto's whole being shimmers and then, there's a fairly decent size Dragon sporting golden scales, perhaps the size of a two door car or bigger, it's hard to tell given there's not much to use to scale the size correctly. Within seconds of this transformation, the Church Exorcists are panicking and backing away, including the camera person. Freed's expression just goes manic and blood thirsty. Freed speaks with an underlining tone of thrill at the current challenge before him.

Naruto seems rather calm, watching the clearly insane Exorcist as the camera is fleeing, the video ends with Freed readying some attack and the Dragon that is Naruto just waiting.

"It's confirmed, Sellzen Freed is dead by beheading and the Holy Sword he had been using is missing." Kenta explains and he finds himself with a mix reaction over the news, that Naruto got away from that uninjured yet the fact he killed Freed, something he doubts Naruto would have done in his previous life. "The Factions are in a uproar over the fact that a Dragon has so openly aligned himself with the current White Emperor."

Naruto's been sticking close to Vali's side since the other had been eight years of age. He recalls as he hands the phone back to Goten. "Yet, it makes sense, as to why he could go by his previous name. Those in the know... they just assume it's an alias plus... what kind of names do Dragons give their kids?" Kazu wonders and Goten snorts in amusement over his question while the former Nara just sighs.

"At least we know he's capable of taking care of himself." Kenta admits after some minutes of silence and he nods. In a month's time, they'll be graduating from Middle-School division and begin attending the High School division as First Year Students.

"Heavens know the Baka could barely do just that back in Hidden Leaf." He agrees a tad gruffly. With that, they walk off to find a spot to eat their lunch, they don't have long before the classes begin once more.

"You know what's his name will want that." Vali states before adding, "I also believe he'd wanted Freed alive too." He's once more admiring the sword he took from the artificial human, watching as the light moves along the blade.

"You don't care enough to remember his name so why care about what Kokabiel wants?" He asks the half Devil as he finally sheaths the Holy sword, one of nine that the Church managed to create in the last five years before their prized weapon smith got 'kidnapped' by a group of Stray Devils. They used Dragon Gated to the Dragon Lands and have been walking towards their shared Lair for the pass three days, doing some hunting and he's visited his adopted parents and siblings.

It's not like they've been in much of a hurry to return to their Lair, few dare to step far into the Dragon Lands not just due to the race that inhabits the land but by the very fact that Tannin has been seen visiting a great deal in recent century, which has more to do with the former Dragon King visiting him and sounding him out concerning taking some jobs that weren't ones discussed in polite company. After all, he's proven himself to be good at subtly and possessing a flare for diplomacy, he's got a different disguise for when he's acting as Tannin's behalf, few could mistake Golden as anything other then someone with some dose of Dragon blood at least, fewer expecting a Dragon of his age to be capable of subtly or possessing the patience needed to deal with politics of 'lesser' races.

Typically, the only Faction they've really ever had to worry about had been Devils since Vali killed his grandfather and managed to maim his father by way of destroying the man's right eye along with almost gelding the Devil before the drug his grandfather tainted the dinner with began to take effect, having him to haul the half Devil out of there viva Albion's Dragon Gate. The ancient enemies of Devils, Angels and Fallen Angels, never really mattered to either of them nor factored into their plans, yes, there have been Church Exorcists looking to prove their skills by going after the half human descendant of the original Lucifer but that's hardly due to orders from on high, from Heaven, just humans trying to rise up the social ladder that is the Church. Most, like the Lucifers, had thought he'd been a fellow half Devil orphan that Vali found and decided to bring home out of loneliness, now though, now the world knows that the fellow half Devil in Vali's company was in fact, has always been, a Dragon sporting golden scales has been at the current White Emperor's side since the age of eight years old.

"Knowing an other's horde is valuable knowledge, isn't it?" Vali states in a slightly mocking tone and he snorts softly, pointing out, "Since when do Dragons acknowledge the ownership rights of other races?"

Never. Albion states from the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear. We are the pinnacle of species after all.

"Be that as it may..." He does his best to not roll his eyes. "Are you considering the Khaos Brigade's recruitment offer?" Naruto asks, after all, that's how they met Kokabiel in the first place.

"It's tempting." The other admits and he guesses it would be, after all, there's only been really three people Vali has interacted with on a regular basis these pass few years, all three of which either had been or are Dragons. After all, they had only been in Germany to enjoy themselves, neither of them had thought they'd encounter that Stray Devil that a member of the Khaos Brigade, one Kuroka, formerly a Nekoshou or the hunting party of Church Exorcists.

One stolen kiss and Vali was both flustered and vowing to wear her tail as a neck tie, leaving him to keep the Church members occupied, leading them to some empty building and, well, it ended with that insane artificial human thinking that this was some kind of plan to extract him from the Church's clutches once the twelve Exorcists fled the area. Oh the things he managed to get Freed to talk about and the disgust he felt as the dead Exorcist upon the detail he'd gone into about the killing of suspected Devil sympathizers or excommunicated members of the Church. Just a rabid dog in the end.

"I'd rather you take Azazel up on that offer from years ago then join the Khaos Brigade." He admits honestly. "We know more about him now and he seems a great deal more trustworthy then the hydra organization that is Khaos Brigade." Why is it that being a pervert when it comes to some being in a human shape seem to make that person more trustworthy opinion when it comes to my life? The former ninja wonders to himself.

As much as I hate the idea of joining a per-established organization, Azazel would be the best opinion and all he wants is to study my Sacred Gear. Albion admits with a sigh. Vali kicks at some rock a bit after hearing that, it's not like there's much any of them could do concerning the events that are weaving their way throughout the supernatural world, there's too many players with various end games never mind their underlings being more then able to become the torch bearers of any of the leaders they get around to killing.

If they could find a way to free Albion from the Scared Gear, perhaps that would throw more then a few of those schemers pause. Or not, given that they now know that the Heavenly Dragons can be dealt with, their reputation as untouchable isn't what it once was. He reflects as they get in sight of their Lair.

"Funny, isn't it? Everyone seems to expect me to be at the heart of what's coming yet, I don't give a fucking damn to their expectations nor their fucking damned power plays." Vali growls as his friend picks up the pace now. "I just don't give a shit about them but they just keep poking their over sized noses into my business." He sighs, very much incline to agree with that statement, after all, he knows what's going to happen to his soul when he dies once this life is over as does Albion, no, it's Vali who's got the most to lose, who's only got the one life to live.

"So, ice cream for meals for the next couple of days then." He muses lightly after a minute of silence and Vali snorts but doesn't disagree with the idea, which causes him to smile slightly. The entrance shimmers as the barrier allows them in before closing up with stones behind them, soft orbs of light flicker to life as they walk pass before going out once they've walked pass.

He adds the sword to the collection of blades hanging on the wall, many of them broken or shattered, it's one of the rare swords that arrived intact as he saw potential in adding more enchantments to it, after all, Albion has been giving them lessons concerning an old runic language that the Nobility of Fae help mankind create before their interests in this world faded and they migrated slowly away from this world. The sword is a very good candidate after all, the Church invested a great deal in being able to create Holy swords never mind welders to use those ancient ones they hold onto while Vali's been trying to hack into whatever system the Biblical God left behind. He hasn't really bugged Vali about results of said course of action nor asked Albion either, it's none of his business unless Vali wishes for his aid after all.

This front part of their Lair is more of a trophy storage, although Vali doesn't usually take trophies while he's only done so concerning weapons or interesting magical items, both tend to be brought here broke more often then not. He's got am intact Devil's King Piece on a shelf next to the shattered into three large parts is a granite plate that still sports silver and gold wiring that sports Divine Egyptian short hand. Pausing, he takes a few minutes to study the collection, nothing seems out of place nor active, although his eyes settle upon a visor made out of quartz and the helmet that's got a lot of body growth and illusion enchantments, it's some kind of training head gear that a particularly nasty Cabal, named after a bird and some word meaning shadow, used on a number of kids, trying to create powerful body guard slash attack dog, none of the kids lived for long once it had been on them and the Cabal couldn't cancel the training once it started, in time, they used it as a threat to keep their members in line, threatening to use it on their kids or their members of their family.

He keeps meaning to take the thing apart but there's always something going on and it's not like it's causing any harm, just sitting upon the table with a rather old, blank notebook. Naruto wonders if maybe he'll get around to doing it while Vali is sulking for the next little while. Then again, Tannin might contact him about what happened in Germany, concerning the 'fall out' of that incident. Bova must be amused by this turn of events. He muses as he turns his back on the collection and follows the hallway towards the common rooms. That I let some human get under my scales enough to cause me to transform.

Once stepping foot within the room, he allows some of his current shape alter, taking on more of his actual nature yet keeping the size and shape. His nails are much sharper looking and from the tips of his fingers to his elbow, his skin is now pretty much just golden scales. His shirt vanishes as does his runners and socks, wings sprout but fold onto his back while his feet pretty much match his hands, only the scales stopping at his knee. His eyes take on a more reptilian look while some scales highlight his forehead, it's likely that along his spine, he's got scales there as well.

He begins to stretch a bit while walking over to the kitchen area, keeping his wings folded as he doesn't want to knock any about stretching them. Yawning, his teeth are much more pointed then before, most noticeably his front ones. Given Naruto doesn't see Vali now, it's clear that the younger is likely off for a soak in his private bathroom. So, he takes stock of what they have and then glances towards the couch, finding that Tannin has indeed arrive and in a human like shape, the former Dragon King is sitting upon their couch and seems to be content to wait. "Rum or mead?"

"Mead." Tannin states simply and he heads for the closet like room they keep the liquor, finding a clay jug filled with it, he grabs it by the ring that serves as a handle. The door closes behind him and Naruto wonders if things were really that bad that the elder requested mead. "Just got in." It wasn't a question, more of an observation as he hands off the jug to the seemingly delicate looking elf that's maybe five foot two.

Once more, belaying the current looks, Tannin gulps a few mouthfuls of the honey-wine. Letting out a satisfied sigh, the elf gives him a rather predatory, tooth filled grin that again is at odds with the current looks. "Why a simply beheading?" The other asks curiously.

"Oxygen starvation." He states simply and Tannin snorts. "Kokabiel's been in contact with Freed, the idiot thought we were there to extract him, likely didn't tell him that it was going to be the former Nekoshou, just an infamous Devil." Naruto informs Tannin and now there's a frown, so he tells the former Dragon King about the conversation, leaving nothing out. After all, Tannin is a fairly neutral party even if he's now a Devil in regards to the Biblical Faction, only interested in seeing that Dragons still have places to call their own in this shrunken world that seems to have out grown such things as Dragons and the need for Deities.

"Now they know you can shape shift." Tannin muses and he sighs. "I was emotional." Overwhelmingly annoyed at not just dealing with someone from the Khaos Brigade but a mob of minions from the fucking Church. Tired of having to 'act' like those simple words have any effect on him and that they just keep hunting Vali and him like they was their Prey when in fact it were they who were lucking to leave his company alive. He missed the days when all his fists and feet could do was just bruise people, that they'd live once their fight was over.

Now, now the other races were so fucking fragile that it's best to never lash out at them in anger nor could he glare at them in a proper manner, not without causing them to freeze up while pissing and shitting themselves in fright or just fainting, or if they possessed a weak heart, outright kill them. Never mind just shouting at them. Yes, he's gotten a great deal of insight into why Albion had been so pleased at how quickly he could adjust to using magic to help strength his body let alone know how to roll just so that he could take less damage from the White Emperor. That he could factor in the kind of force the Dragon could sometimes unleash even in the shape of some being similar to a man, showing he's a quick study when it came to learning by doing.

That he never really altered his manner when it came to addressing the White Dragon, just continuing in his brash and rough manners. Happy to argue his points without crumbling under the unyielding, inhuman blue gaze or unafraid to try to put him into a headlock and give him a noogie. Or when the Vanishing Dragon would return the favor, never shying away from his touch outside of their spars.

So yes, he's beginning to realize just how much of an impact his death caused Albion and the kind of value the other had put on their time together. It's one of those times where he's not sure if picking Dragon was as worth but at the same time, he's also getting an understanding of, perhaps, what the Tailed Beasts also went through when it comes to being far too large for the world at it is. Although, unlike Dragons, the Tailed Beasts never could walk among humans as pretending to be one.

"I tend to forget you're so young." Tannin admits with a soft sigh and he looks off at some point at the kitchen. "It's a complement really. You act far older then your collection of decades."

"Not much of an excuse." Naruto admits as he lets his wings hang a bit behind him. "Then again... it's not like Orphis is wandering around in their truest form." They both shutter a bit, neither really wanting to discuss the fact that the Dragon God has assumed the form of a young girl, a Gothic Lolita is the name given to a young girl who dresses like that.

"Given your association with Albion, most will likely believe you learnt how to from him." Tannin states and he smiles ever so slightly, after all, the former Dragon King isn't wrong, after a fashion. "How's Vali?"

"He's tired of being harried and I wouldn't be surprised if he's lonely, not in the in need of a bed partner way either." Naruto states honestly. "I think... I think I'm going to teach him how to shape shift, including his age."

Tannin takes some sips from the jug while he stares off towards the sealed off area that is Vali's part of the Lair. "That is, if he doesn't approach Azazel about that old offer." He adds after a bit, he doesn't know which he'd prefer, honestly, both had their pros but there's also cons. Namely, Vali growing to resent the mask that the shape shifting would allow him to assume, that it's not really him or that it's keeping secrets from those friends but at the same time, it'll continue to allow Vali to be mostly free from the tangle of supernatural politics.

"Sacred Gears and their users." Tannin recalls and he nods. "Azazel isn't the bad sort, but he's clearly not keeping a better eye on his underlings or if they aren't in possession of divided loyalty."

Tannin gulps down the last of the mead once he stands and tosses the empty clay jug at him, he catches it. "I'll be sure to keep my youngest occupied so he doesn't show up to pledge himself to either of you." Tannin states.

"Might want to keep an eye on him even then. After all, you never know when the Red Dragon Emperor's going to be roaring onto the scene and with everything that's going on, he's going to be found within this decade." Naruto points out. "He just might slip away the moment word gets out and pledge himself like he thinks I did only to Ddraig and his bearer."

"He could find a worse role model then you." Tannin states simply and he shrugs his wings in acceptance as Tannin opens his Dragon Gate and walks through, body already assuming his true form. The Dragon Gate closes, leaving him alone in the common area.

"He didn't even try to make a bet about that." He mutters which means that the former Dragon King's own private thoughts and instincts concerning Ddraig's appearing soon is very much in alignment with his own assumption. Which is kind of worrying, after all, just what kind of person will we be dealing with in the future? He wonders.

"You alright there, Oniisan?" Kazu asks his 'elder' brother as they are at the table with their mom supervising them as they do their homework while she is waiting for a tray of brownies to finish baking, a bribe for a certain someone to finish their homework instead of sitting before their lap top computer watching questionable movies or looking at suggestive pictures.

"I'm fine! Perfectly healthy!" Issei says while he gives the other preteen a searching and slightly concerned look. Then again, the mob of teenagers did a real number on his twin and the other kind of huffs and pouts, which only highlights the bruise on the right side and the split lip.

"You call looking like that fine?" He remarks dryly, after all, there's no iryo ninjutsu to fix all that bruising or the few scraps. "Just why can't you, I don't know, not peep on the High School Division's girl's gym room lockers? Isn't it safer to do that on your computer? At least for the next few days?"

"I must agree with your brother, honestly, you're never going to get a girl friend at this rate never mind that you can be expelled." Their mom states with a sigh. Given the few tests he's done on Issei of a magical nature, his brother is in possession of a Sacred Gear and given that the Devils own the academy, it's highly unlikely for his brother to be expelled at all, after all, Issei is a prime candidate to join a young Devil's Peerage, even if the nature of the gear is unknown.

"But, but, but... Oppai!" Issei whines and he wonders if this was karma based on how he lived his life as Uchiha Sasuke, to be the younger brother of a breast pervert. Maybe Jiraiya's soul traveled with us? And ended up reincarnated as my older twin brother? Kazu wonders ideally. And having already been dead instead of ripped from his body, he won't get his memories back?

"Oppai does not justify anything. There's actual women who get paid to have their pictures taken in the nude and they should be far more developed then any of the High School girls. Or star in those porn movies you keep getting viruses from downloading off of questionable sites." He states flatly and earns himself a look from their mom, the one that clearly says they'll be having a chat about how'd he would know.

Issei just pouts with slightly teary eyes, doing a very good impression of a puppy actually. "But, it's not the same!" His twin whines and he snorts, remarking, "I'd almost point out that you wouldn't want anyone peeping on you while your changing only, I think you'd be flattered."

With that, he focus back on his homework, there's a great deal of information to be read or accessed using a computer. It's amazing at what you can read up on concerning any subject or how easy it is to share ideas with someone that's living on another continent and speaking a different language. Videos and music to be found at certain sites or watch a live feed of someone's camera.

The site they use, it's a faux gaming forum that's post by post and the 'game' is based off of their previous lives only there's certain changes to the terms or using alternate words when describing the 'setting'. It is an easy way to keep in touch with one another and a great excuse for meeting up in RL. A few of those born as Devils or among them, they typically don't know about the site until one of them gets directed to it as a means to get in touch with the others who were also reincarnated. Which begs the question, how old is Naruto? Kazu wonders to himself.

After all, Dragon whelps can be found in the familiar forest and, well, nobody keeps track of the age of said hatch-lings, never mind what effect being a Familiar could do to a Dragon's life cycle. To be that big, how many decades has he lived? He wonders. What type of Dragon was the former baka? Or is he a child of one of the Dragon Kings?

He'd wager on the being a child of a Dragon King then the former blond ninja coming from one of the so called common breeds or even one of the higher level types. Although it's been over seventy hours since that footage was taken, there hasn't been any official statements from any of the various pantheons, let alone from a Dragon King coming forward to say something about the incident, which isn't that surprising as the Dragons aren't organized in any real manner. It would be very surprising if one even did, then again, he recalls that there's a former Dragon King among the Devils, so good odds are that the Devils might be the first to put forth some kind of statement due to having someone like that among their ranks.

His attention returns to his homework as the timer goes off and he blinks while staring at what he wrote on his page. With a sigh, he flips the pencil around and erases the last few sentences, after all, nothing he wrote had to do with the literary homework he's working on. He can sense Issei's attention on the brownies while he is busy reading what he wrote before continuing on that tone.

Soon enough, he's done with it and closes it, putting his homework away and looks up to find Issei no longer sitting across from him. With a quick scan, he spies his brother hovering near their mother as she guards the tray, waiting for the brownies cooling. It's times like these that cause him feel guilt over the fact that it's like he's betraying the memory of his previous parents and elder brother by loving his current set of parents and a fondness for his twin, yet, he's not really Uchiha Sasuke any more, as Hyoudou Kazu, he's never been subjected to an older brother using illusions to show how their parents died nor does he have the weight of a legacy of a powerful clan and its Bloodline Limit demanding so much from a traumatic child who was thrust upon a pedestal and people willfully blinded and made themselves deaf to the fact he had just been a boy, creating a false identity of him as the Last Uchiha, of him being another Genius Uchiha, the Rookie of the Year, and a Loyal Genin of Hidden Leaf.

"I want the first piece!" Issei declares and he rolls his eyes, a fond smile making itself at home upon his face at the sight.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

It's vacation time and he's traveling out of Kuoh Town viva a bus, traveling to the next town over to use the Teleportation Circle to arrive at one of the five communal training grounds. Since he Woke at ten and been introduced to magic a few weeks later after using the internet to try and find others, he found that he's got a talent for Elemental Magic and Norse style of Magic, but he, like all of those that could learn to harness magic, make it a point to study Teleportation Magic if only to know how to activate one of the prepared Teleportation Circles they've set up for their use. He hasn't dared try and set up his own private spot to use for his own purposes.

Noticing that they are arriving to the other town, he's slow to gather his thoughts but once he does, he walks off the bus with his two bags, he's got cloths for the week and the excuse has to do with a LARP meet up. As he begins to get more into the town, Kazu can't help but feel that there's Something visiting. So, he begins to debate if he should get involved only, he spies a very familiar face exiting out of a business ran by one of the native supernatural races of Japan.

The age is off along with the business attire but it's someone he knows, someone they've all been waiting to get into contact with. Without a second thought, he follows after the seemingly thirty year old in business man, the hair is more yellow then gold and the features are more Japanese with the usual age marks for someone of that age, stress of office work might be what's giving the illusion. Kazu's mind is in a loop, after all, there's no signs that this man bought anything but then, supernatural races have far more talent and flexibility with magic then magicians do.

"So, why are you following me?" It's then that he realizes he'd been led far from the popular streets, a place that's got a lot of magic ensuring a private meeting. Blue eyes looking fairly blank and the face passive, so very different then the smiling blond from his memories or from the pictures of a young man standing next to the bearer of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear with a various smiles or smirks with glinting emotion.

"Baka." He manages to say and the seemingly adult man raises an eyebrow. "Dobe." Kazu can't help but wonder if he's misstep in this encounter given that there's no reaction from the other.

Then, a minute passes in silence before his eyes the form shimmers and it's not long before even the cloths take on the attire he's far more familiar with. "Teme." And there's fondness in the tone along with a fond smile.

Relief floods him as the pressure in the air retreats and the magic that had been pressing down lightens. "Dragon?" He can't help but ask and Naruto snorts softly, replying, "Well, like I told Albion, take it up with the Great Red."

He stiffens at the mere mention of the Apocalypse Dragon and his stomach drops. "What?" He couldn't help but whisper harshly, although he kind of wonders just what Naruto means by telling Albion the same. After all, the former ninja can't have a history with the original White Dragon Emperor, right?

"Our souls are alien to this world and he's the guy who went around collecting our souls when we died from our... well, invasion, yea, that works." The Dragon before him explains. "I guess I shouldn't be surprised you don't remember your previous body, then again, according to that guy, a number of us ended up the wrong gender never mind the damage the Dimensional Gap did to our souls as we passed through."

Kazu pales as he recalls reading about said Dimensional Gap and the implications that it affected their souls... "I ended up in the body of some God's Griffin breeding program, ended up getting a Divine Enchantment of Agelessness, never mind getting healed by said Deity or fellow Deity due to the body not meant to house a former human's soul." Naruto continues, rambling a bit. "Managed to get out of their Domain and ended up attacking what I thought was a white lizard someone added bat wings to, turned out to be Albion and, well, Dragon vs Griffin, it ended the way you'd think, only, I piped the Vanishing Dragon's interest."

Of course you did. He can't help but think as Naruto is silent for a bit, clearly remembering those memories. "He mimicked Ddraig's Transfer and sent a drop of his power into my dying body. Didn't just heal using the magic but altered my body into a more human looking one before converting the magic into my being for my private use. It broke the Divine Enchantment though, so, I grew old and died near fifty years after our encounter."

"Well, you know me and, well, we talked about things, argued about a lot of things. So, since I wasn't as damaged as you guys and cause the Great Red was bored, he decided to wake me up and give me the choice of what species my new body will be." Naruto continues and he suspects that the former human was mindful of his manners when dealing with somebody who could squish him with little to no effort, that it was likely because of the entertainment value the other could provide was the reason he's still exists. "And, well, I picked the opinion that would give me insight into Albion's arguments. It's been a mix blessing really." Naruto admits with a sigh and he blinks, after all, how could being a Kami damned DRAGON be a mix blessing?

Dragons are considered to be power incarnate, other races feared their wrath, and they're capable of drawing powerful people into their sphere, either as allies or enemies. The last part is most definitely a trait Naruto had long before now. Kazu admits to himself although some of his disbelief must show on his face.

Naruto rolls his eyes before explaining, "When someone is looking to make a name for themselves, what supernatural race do they tend to seek out and fight?" Then it clicks, after all, killing a Dragon of a particular level of fame does seem to be a good way of becoming famous, one way or another. It's more of a question if that being is still alive after tangling with said Dragon and upon the duration of said fight.

"Yea, been sticking close to Dragon Lands since the reveal." The former blond ninja admits with a careless shrug. "Rather not rile up interest with a pile of corpses, it just causes excitement among the hot heads. They'll grow bore and someone will do something, causing the hot heads to switch targets, I'll be old news and people murmuring how obvious it was in hindsight it was that I was a Dragon."

He couldn't help but nod in agreement, it sounds like Naruto's just trying to wait out this surge of interest. "And Vali?" He asks curious and Naruto's brows furl slightly. "I mean, you don't generally stray far from him." Kazu adds.

"Safe." Naruto states simply and he guesses that he had been a bit nosy. "And none of my business." He concludes and Naruto nods, some tension does seem to leave Naruto's eyes, making it clear that while Naruto doesn't mind talking about himself, he didn't want to discuss anything concerning the White Dragon Emperor, and for good reason more then likely.

"We have a web site." He tells the Dragon and it takes him seconds to pull out a business card, pulling out a pen, he writes the address on it along with the name he uses on the site. He walks over and offers the card over, Naruto flips it to see what's on the other side and a slight rise of an eyebrow causes him to ask, "What?"

"You do know Kuoh Town is co-owned by the younger sisters of the current Leviathan and Lucifer?" And he stiffens while swallowing the 'What?!' but it's clear that it's on his face. "Yea, they're going to be attending the Kuoh Academy when the school year begins. My sources says that Zeoticus Gremory himself has been the Administrator, not sure what House Sitri contributes to Kuoh Town." Naruto says with a frown before glancing at him.

"Well, it's your life." Naruto states simply after studying him with said frown, the frown fading away. "I'm sure you are aware of the stigma human reincarnated Devils face." The Dragon remarks in a light tone with a bit of a smirk and he nods, yea, they were. "Good."

With that, the former human nods and begins to turn, walking away. "I'm Hyoudou Kazu." He says and Naruto glances behind him, pace slow. "Sapphire among the Dragon Lands. Not sure if any of you are brave enough to approach the range but, if you are and you do encounter one of the inhabitants, just say your looking to speak with Sapphire about a Debt."

"Sapphire?" He can't help but repeat and the Dragon states, "For my eyes. Better then most names given out to young drakes, like, oh, I don't know, Breezy or Puff." And as Naruto's head turns forward, he hears the former human adds, "Give it a few more decades and I'll Earn my Right to choose my own Name."

Then, he gets his first sight of a fable Dragon Gate, its white meaning that it belongs to Albion. Naruto walks through without pause and it vanishes, leaving him alone. The magic ensuring privacy holds but likely not for long. There's a lot for him to review but it's safe to say that it seems that the Dragon of Dragons have some kind of interest in them and that Naruto clearly befriended one of the Heavenly Dragons, enough to access the Vanishing Dragon's own Dragon Gate.

Pulling out his phone, he pauses for a few seconds before doing a massive text with simple message. Meeting tonight at Sunrise Communal Grounds, by order of the Head of Uchiha Clan. With that sent and the phone pocketed, he heads for the Teleportation Circle to head to said training ground.

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"I can't believe he wants me to attend a school!" Vali growls from pacing in the kitchen and Naruto isn't overly surprised, after all, it's not like they've had cared much about bits of paper stating what level of 'official' education either of them possess. Not that he had been part of the discussions between three, after all, he's a 'subordinate' and 'pledged' to the current bearer of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear, although it's questionable about whether Azazel bought into that particular party line, then again, they've never interacted nor has the Fallen Angel seen how Vali and himself interact.

"It's only for the final year?" He hazards a guess upon hearing that, he just arrived from arranging a shipment of a special Sake as a Birthday gift to the eldest son of Tannin. Encountering the current reincarnation of the former Uchiha Sasuke, now Hyoudou Kazu, had been a rather welcome surprise along with a way to get into contact with the others.

"That's not the point!" Snaps the half Devil and glares at him, then blinks noticing his current appearance. The other frowns as it's clear two desires seem to be in conflict.

"Met one of the other souls and got a way to get in contact with them." He explains, deciding that it hardly matters and Vali frowns with a hint of worry. "What other terms did you agree too?" Changing the subject from him back to what happened with the young Lucifer.

There was the school issue but there's also a physical and psych tests. I managed to talk Azazel out of having Vali demonstrate his skills in combat and magic. Albion speaks up and he hums. Political cover and medical care, personal lessons in supernatural politics, and free access to the Sacred Gear research.

He nods as he begins to head for the kitchen, allowing his form to take on his Dragon traits, save for his wings, his back likely far more covered in golden scales then when he usually has his wings on display. "Well, at least this way, nobody will suspect that Tannin gave you those lessons on politics." He remarks and Vali groans.

Oh no, they'll just suspect that Tannin had his newest pet project give a general over view. Albion remarks dryly and he chuckles. "They wouldn't be wrong..." Vali remarks and he snorts, after all, it's kind of the truth. It's not like he's kept the two in the dark about his doing jobs for Tannin under a different disguise and using a different language that pretty much means Golden.

"I rather resemble that remark, Scales." He remarks as he grabs a two liter of milk that he's collected himself from Apollo's Divine herd of cattle, closing the fridge, he walks over to one of the chairs while Vali's got the look that shows that the two were having their own private conversation. The magical seal on the cap fades after exploding into a shower of sparkles, he's drinking from it before he sits down, letting out a soft sigh and licking his lips, feeling very mellow as he puts the cap back on.

He leans back and watches with half lid eyes as Vali finally seems to sigh. "So... I'm not going to be living here while I'm attending the school." Vali states and he can't help but feel a bit of tension in his muscles. "I'm going to be taking some potions to alter some of my appearance. Azazel's the only one who's going to know the name or appearance I'm going to be using. It's an experimental personal ward."

He forcefully swallows, doing his best to keep his anger at the thought of the two not being in his presence for a year from controlling how he's going to respond. Naruto does his best to not rip the cap off the plastic bottle and takes a gulp of the milk. The milk does help and he begins to control his breathing while his head pounds at the mere idea of Vali being kept from him.

It's clear that Albion and Vali seem to sense his mood and he refuses to express his anger viva shouting and overt displays of temper. It's hard but, finally, he feels like he's got a good enough hold on his reaction. "I see." He says softly and winces at the amount of cold rage is in the undertone of that statement.

Standing, he stares at the hallway that marks his part of the Lair. "Forgive me but I need some private time." Naruto states softly and stalks into his section of the Lair. "Just... let me collect myself." He adds before he stalks through the threshold and it seals the way upon sensing his mood. It continues to seal the passage way and then, once in his first room, his whole body shifts in a violent manner into his Dragon form and gives voice to his emotions, knowing that the sound shouldn't reach either Albion or Vali.

So, he vents.

Well, that could have been worse. His partner remarks and Vali would have love to glare at the Sacred Gear. "Well, we knew he wasn't going to take it well." He admits and sits down on the couch, the plastic two liter of milk resting on the floor now with the cap already on.

He really doesn't know where some of the food Golden often brings home, only that it's typically divine in nature. Having asked Albion about it, the trapped Dragon mentioned having taught the golden Dragon how to sneak into various Pantheons to steal from the Deities back when the other had been born a Griffin and used some of Albion's transferred magic to assume a more human like appearance. Oh, he's had eaten some of it, usually cooked up and served to him when he's sick or as a reward for things, like mastering a new spell or lasting a minute longer in a spar between them. It's rather tasty, he admits, but too much of a good thing can be harmful, especially if the food in question is from a divine source.

Leaning back in the couch and staring up at the ceiling, he feels rather guilty about that little detail of the agreement and knew that Azazel wasn't wrong that people knew how attach Golden and himself were, even if they're assumptions about their relationship misses the mark. After all, as far as he's concerned, Golden is more a protective, supportive, older brother then a subordinate and Golden is an old friend of Albion's, although he kind of wonders if the two had ever been more then just friends. It's going to be hard on him too, not coming to their Lair or being separated in both physical and having a communication blackout for the year of attending the high school.

"Are you sure you'll be ok?" He asks after a time of silence. Vali feels Albion stir before replying, As long as he's alive when we return, I can deal with this time apart.

Well, given how long they were apart, is that answer really that surprising? He muses as he finally gets up off the couch, moving over to pick up the milk, he returns it to the fridge before grabbing stuff to make a light meal. There's no point making anything heavy, not when Golden likely won't be coming out of his area any time soon for the rest of the day or, maybe, tomorrow.

"What's the point of this meeting?" Kevin Smith, the reincarnation of one Sarutobi Konoharmaru, asks now that those that could make it have arrived. Many of them murmur in agreement.

"I got into contact with Naruto." And that causes a few moments of silence before people who were close to the former blond explode in questions and demands. "Silence!" The voice belongs to one Iris Andrealphus, the reincarnation of Tenten, one of the few who reincarnated as a Pure-Blooded Devil. "Please continue Hyoudou-san."

"Thank you, Andrealphus-san." Kazu says with a slight smile as it had been overwhelming having so many people shouting at him. "He remembers and according to him, we have the Apocalypse Dragon to thank for our current reincarnations."

It takes some seconds for that to sink in, by now, everyone knows the who's who of Dragons. He glances towards Faust Dantalion, a half Devil reincarnation of the former Kazekage Gaara. "And your dreams, Dantalion-san? According to Naruto, when we invaded this world, we ended up in bodies that were ill suited to house us and our souls had been damaged from exposure to the Dimensional Gap."

"What do you mean by that?" Kevin asks and he replies, "Some of us weren't born the correct gender and it seem that the Apocalypse Dragon gathered up our souls upon our release from said bodies. That the Dragon of Dragons set about healing our souls before arranging our current incarnations."

"How would he know that when we don't even know it?" Julie Zeams asks with narrow eyes, she's the incarnation of one Tomoe who was a civilian who got swept up in the wake of that jutsu. "He ended up born in a God's Home in the body of a Griffin, likely to a solar Deity at least so it shouldn't be surprising that Naruto's soul likely did get mended to some extent by said God."

Yip, those among the crowd possessed a wide range of expression from disbelieving that little fact to exasperated acceptance. "Any more world shattering information you're going to spring on us?" Goten asks and he gives everyone an apologetic look, which causes a lot of groans and sighs.

"How mind blowing is this bit of information?" Iris asks, voicing the thoughts of the others. "He somehow befriended Albion, back before he was sealed in a Sacred Gear. After losing a fight with said Dragon."

"Of course he did, he's fucking Naruto Uzumaki." Kevin remarks with Faust sporting a slight smile, making him wonder if the half Devil just won a bet or bets. "He also was given a choice of picking his race for this incarnation and picked Dragon due to wanting an insight into Albion's point of view simply because the Apocalypse Dragon was bored." Kazu says with a sigh, which pretty much means that the Apocalypse Dragon is the reason for which race they found themselves being reincarnated as along with picking out their respective parents.

"So, the reason why he's sticking close to Vali is because of his old friendship with Albion?" Kenta muses and he shrugs while Kevin remarks, "Might be the reason why he sought the welder out but I doubt it's why he sticks around."

"Yea, this is Naruto we're talking about." Faust agrees and he decides not to share the bit about how Dragons in the Dragon Lands seem to name their young, after all, Sapphire is often considered a woman's name, then again, given the two examples, it's likely the best name out of his generation. He watches as money gets passed around, with most going to Faust while people pull out their phones, likely alerting the results of bets then the information he just shared, it's too sensitive to share outside the security of magical wards.

"Was he well?" He glances over to look at Ye Rou, the current reincarnation of Hyuuga Hinata, a possessor of one of the seven Twilight Healing Sacred Gear. Rou is in her late teens and born to a couple as their third child but eldest daughter.

"He's a Dragon, Ye-san. There's few things that can harm one of those." He admits but there's a look in her eye so he admits, "He's been sticking close to the Dragon Lands, waiting out the current interest in him, not wanting to rouse any more interest then he has already."

"He told me that if any of us visited the Dragon Lands and attracted the attention of the inhabitants to say that we're there to speak with Sapphire about a Debt." And yea, there's that look of disbelief. "Named for his eyes, I'm told that some have been called Breezy or Puff."

Rou nods as the look fades and it's clear that Rou's already mentally making plans to do just that. "Thank you for telling me." Rou says and he gives her a slight nod.

There's a lightness in the young woman's step as she walks away, it's clear that Hinata's crush is influencing Rou's feelings. Then again, who is he to judge? As Sasuke he wasn't all that mentally stable after everything that happened to in his life. After all, it's only after thrusting a ball of lightning into his best friend's chest did it dawn on him just how he, as Sasuke, had been skittering the edges of becoming what he thought Itachi was like. Never mind the whole reveal of the fact that Naruto and himself had been their generation reincarnations of the two arguing sons of the Sage of Six Paths.

Being Hyoudou Kazu, he kind of prefers it. This world isn't perfect but there's more evidence of people working to fix that. People try for the diplomatic approach, but that could be more towards the fact that with the current level of technology, it makes it easier to do so. It's also reflected in the supernatural world, which is rather surprising given that there are Gods and Goddesses of War among the various Pantheons. Oh sure, there's discontent among members of various Pantheons but the peace holds, particularly the cease fire among the Biblical Pantheon and given how long its been since that cease fire came about, maybe they'll get around to talking about a peace treaty in a couple of decades.

Which reminds him of the fact that Kuoh Town is co-owned by the heirs of two Devil Houses, Gremory and Sitri. Which means, I should speak with Iris and Faust about who the heirs are and what their situation is. He decides and glances at the pair before deciding to approach Iris as she's likely more to have encountered the pair then Faust as she's a Pure-Blooded Devil.

"Sapphire! You got a Debtor!" He blinks and glances towards the entrance at the sound of Nipper's bellow in Dragon. It's been a month since Vali left, Azazel wanted to work out any kinks in the potions and personal ward before the school year began, which was reasonable even if he would prefer to spend more time with his self adopted younger brother slash charge.

"Gender?" He bellows in English as he's current form doesn't have the right lungs or vocal cords to speak proper Dragon. Naruto tilts his head expectantly.

"Female!" There's a bit of a snicker in the undertone. "Got one of those Gear things in her too by the smell of her!"

Getting off the floor, he pulls in most of his Dragon features until it's mostly just his nails, patches of scales about his body, and leaving his eyes pretty much alone. "Coming!" He bellows and walks down the walk way to the entrance.

He gets to the entrance to find a young woman looking nervous behind his clutch sibling, Nipper. The Flame Dragon takes a moment to study his appearance before nostrils flare, they both turn towards the human woman, while he doesn't have as acute sense of smell as Nipper does right now, he can tell from body language alone that the young woman seems to like what she see of his current body, much to the shared bemusement between Nipper and himself. "I'll take if from here."

Nipper snorts before giving a sharp nod and leaping straight up into the air, a bit of magic to get high enough in the air to take off. His focus remains on the young woman who's features are primarily from Asia. "This way please." He states after a minute of studying her features, trying to place if he's seen her before, turning and walking into the Lair, trusting she's following behind.

It's hard for her to keep her eyes from wandering about the back of Naruto's reincarnation. There's no shirt so she can easily see a collection of small golden scales about the spine and the shoulder blades. The gentle lights that come to life as they walk down the hall are not harsh in the slightest and she wonders of the magic behind it, after all, the lights also fade off once they get some distance away.

He's a shape shifter, is it any wonder he's so good looking? Rou reminds herself yet it doesn't help at all, really. He also doens't recognize me. But then, looking into the mirror and trying to match her current face to the one she had as one Hyuuga Hinata... None of them looked like they had during the life they lived in Hidden Leaf Village never mind their current names, well, accept for Naruto, but then, he could get away with it due to his race it seems.

They come to a large room that sports a lot of interesting items, most of which seem to be broken or shattered weapons, but at the sight of a certain, almost innocent piece, she breaths in sharply at the sight of it. "Took that from an idiot trying to rig Devil Rating Games for their own asinine reasons." The Dragon remarks upon realizing what's caught her attention. "Tannin didn't want it nor did I want to destroy it, so, I put it there. I guess I could use it to barter with Azazel, it's not like I have any plans to study the thing."

"That's an actual King Piece?" She finds her voice to ask in English, she's not sure just what her reaction should be. "And the Satans don't know you have it?!"

"I doubt they knew that idiot had it in the first place." Naruto remarks with a touch of amusement. "Besides, it's not like they can't recreate one, it's more they choose not to."

"No safer place then a Dragon's horde for it at this point." She remarks with a sigh as she notices a table that's got a strange helmet on it plus an open notebook, no chair in sight but then, the table isn't that tall. "I'm Rou Ye, the reincarnation of Hinata Hyuuga." She bows politely at her current host.

"Sapphire among the Dragon Lands, among the other races, Naruto Uzumaki." She shifts her weight a bit as she tries to figure out what emotions are lurking in those beautiful blue eyes. "I'll answer to either, but I do prefer Naruto."

"I tend to prefer Rou." She admits and Naruto nods slightly. "I asked Kazu about you and he's the one to tell me how to visit you."

"Ah yes, that... kind of slipped my mind." Naruto looks a tad sheepish with a matching grin. "Something kind of popped up and, well..." She smiles at the embarrassment the fairly young looking man displays in an honest manner.

"Well, you are a Dragon, I guess getting internet is rather difficult out here." She teases and Naruto snorts, saying, "Not really, it's more not use to having something like it. Usually it's used for watching things or quick references on topics that I want to look up when I'm bored."

"Vali uses it to play games online and to help Albion 'Troll' people." There's a touch of sadness at the mention of Vali while she's trying to wrap her head around the idea of the White Dragon Emperor of Supremacy engaging in something so petty as Trolling people on the internet. "So..." The currently transformed Dragon muses after a bit, looking at her with a curious look.

"I wanted to check up on you." She admits and Naruto nods slightly. "He mentioned about you having been a Griffin and befriending the Vanishing Dragon during that life. Of you picking your current race."

"Being a Griffin... the focus was more on the Here and the Now, not so much on the Past or thoughts of the Future, so it wasn't as bad as it should have been. Even when I managed to assume a human like shape, the mentality more expanded then altered, really. Clearer thoughts with a superior ability to plan using the Past knowledge and experiences, still didn't make much plans for the Future though." Naruto admits with a 'what could you do' shrug. "Never got around to marrying nor was I able to have kids, my bed partners after my altering of my body weren't the correct species after all."

She frowns at the mention of the one night stands but, well, couldn't blame him, after all, she's dated a bit in this life. "I was fairly old by the time I encountered Albion, as a Griffin, I had a Divine Enchantment that warded against old age and it's not like Albion didn't help me look for you guys, but, well, I think I might have been the last one to be collected." She sighs and nods, after all, they've known that beasts belonging to Deities do live beyond the natural life span, that it's an Enchantment, fueled by Divine magic makes sense.

"This life?" She asks curiously and Naruto snorts softly. "Too young among Dragons, I'm a bit over a century and even though I'm clearly bigger then my clutch siblings, I'm still regarded as a... preteen I think is the best word for it. Far too young to be thinking of seeking a mate or mates and eggs."

"Found anyone in this life?" Naruto asks curiously and she sighs, shaking her head. "Some were nice, at first..." She trails off and there's a looking of sympathy and she sighs. "Not sure about..."

"I'd be surprise if you can recall that time, to be honest. I mean, for all you know, you could have been born a guy." She blushes at the thought.

"I'd rather you born man for it then a woman." Naruto adds softly and she stiffens upon hearing that, she looks into his face to notices how serious he looks. "You really mean that." Rou can't help but remark.

"You think being a woman in this day and age is bad? Arranged marries, camp followers, sold to a whorehouse, or being pimped by your male relatives with any kid you had likely getting killed within hours of birth." There's a rage there at the mere thought of her experiencing that and, well, hearing it like that, she kind of found herself in agreement. "I wouldn't wish that on any of my friends from that life, maybe not even on my enemies."

That bad? She feels her stomach flop and at some point, Naruto's got his arms wrapped around her, hugging her as she trembles as she recalls some of the darker news stories and realizes that it might have been worst once upon a time. "Sorry, didn't mean to..." He says softly and she closes her eyes, leaning into him, finding him to be a rather warm comforting presence.

"No, no, you were just being honest and explaining some of what you've experienced." She says but Naruto sighs, saying, "I shouldn't have that blunt. Not with you especially."

"I forgive you." She tells him and hears, senses, something moving and folding behind her. She opens her eyes to find a pair of wings now coming from Naruto's back and also embracing her. She wonders if the wings were for her piece of mind or for his.

"We have ice cream, though I might need to make a run for more if you want to stick around for a while." Naruto admits after a while, the wings moving and folding onto the former ninja's back, allowing them both to take a step back from one another. She can't help but smile as she says, "I would like that."

With a nod and a smile, Naruto turns and leads her to a wall only for it to turn out to be the beginning of another tunnel, she follows close behind the other, not wanting to be left behind.

Feeling Albion seem to perk up, he waits to see if the elder Dragon will share only for a slight snicker after a bemused snort. He does his best to keep from frowning or moving, after all, Azazel is doing a full body scan with the personal ward on. After a while, Albion remarks, Just thought it would be you to get around to it first. Must be one of his old friends visiting him.

Well that explains everything. He thinks to himself as he does his best to keep from scowling. Then again, it kind of sounds like Golden has company, which is kind of a relief really.

After all, they're going to be apart for a good year with no connect at all viva magical or mundane means. Even Azazel will be leaving him to sink or swim once he moves into his dorm, cutting off direct contact, entrusting him to someone who owes the Fallen a number of minor favors. A wealthy someone given the school he's going to be attending.

The Dance Between Death and Life P4: DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

Snow is falling, melting upon touching down onto the ground, sidewalk, or road. Issei and himself walk towards the nearest grocery store for some ingredients for some holiday baking as soon as school let out, thankfully, his twin didn't try and play peeping tom on the girls locker room, then again, Issei wants to stop at a certain store to pick up a new release of a game, a dating sim if he recalls from his brother's chatting about it at home. He's the one carrying the money for the ingredients and they both have the list of what they need to buy.

Once within the store, they pull out their phones. "Ok, dry goods first, then frozen, and finally fresh." Issei declares with an authoritative nod and he merely hums before grabbing a pair of baskets, handing one over now that his twin finishes unzipping the jacket and lowering the hood of the jacket.

Following behind, he does the same with his own hood but doesn't unzip his jacket all the way down, stopping mid way. Seeing that Issei's phone is still out, he pockets his own. With Issei goofing off a tad, mostly in the form of a commentary that would be found in a spy movie or novel with him receiving 'harsh' and 'scratching' looks for not being 'stealthy' like Issei 'clearly' is.

He didn't even try to keep his smile from his face at his twin's antics and does his best to not chuckle at how the looks he gets from Issei. After all, soon enough they'll be entering into the awkward years of being teenagers and he shutters to think of how his brother will be once hormones get introduce into him, how much more into oppai his twin will become and likely control over his brother's course of action. He's been tempted to see if he can't find a way to curb Issei's future obsession with woman's oppai viva Magic or placing a Geas of some sort, Naruto does seem to know some aspects of Fae Magic from the few times it's come up on the forum.

But, well, is it really his place to decide what's best for Issei? After all, Itachi did that to him when he'd been Sasuke, all with good intentions of keeping him safe only, it just help screw him up. If Issei ever admits this obsession with oppai is a problem, then he'll offer some help in a supernatural manner, likely through magic but until such time and how much it irritates him, it's best leave Issei be. It's not like his twin isn't aware of their, his mom and his own, opinions on the matter, after all.

Putting the issue out of his mind and deciding to just enjoy his twin's more innocent antics, he finally notices that someone seems to be rather interested in Issei as they are in line to play for the groceries. The man is tall, nearly seven feet in height if he's to judge. The man is also sporting dark purple hair that's done up in corn braids with eyes of dark amber. Dark brown skin with features being a mix between Asian and Western. The build is that of an American Football player with cloths that are very much in line with a punk rocker, including a black stone skull necklace on a chain. I quote, a WILD Rugged Bad Boy Type has appeared, end quote.

There's something about this guy that clearly wasn't right, that couldn't be human and thus, he likely wasn't human. Actually, the passive pressure isn't all that different then... But why would one of those be here? After all, this is Devil own territory. Kazu muses.

He comes out of it to pay and before leaving, they each take a moment to get their jacket zippers up and the hoods. Issei leads them to said game store and leaving him with the bags to watch over. The younger Hyoudou can't shake the feeling of being watched, so he's mentally going through which Elemental Spells he can cast quickly.

Once Issei is out, he mostly just follows behind his twin, mentally gearing up for an incoming attack. "Ah, hey, Kazu? This isn't the right way home, right?"

Blinking, he glances around to find that yip, they were now in an isolated spot and he now notices the feel of some ward that's likely been set up to ensure privacy. "Just who are you and what do you want?" He calls out and watches as that guy from before seems to 'appear' out of a snow flurry and Issei stiffens near him.

"Name's Bova and I'm here to Pledge my support to the current Red Dragon Emperor." The newly named Bova states with a wide, toothy grin and Issei groans, saying, "So, another one of your LARPing friends then."

"LARP?" Muses Bova who he's beginning to suspect is a Dragon. "Live action role playing." He supplies. "We disguise our get together as a game."

"Hiding in plain sight." The Dragon muses, clearly nodding in approval while it finally sinks in just who Bova is here for. "He doesn't know, it's not active." Kazu states flatly while he's beginning to panic.

The very idea that Issei's Sacred Gear is the rival of Vali Lucifer, that his Oniichan is the bearer of one of those Heavenly Dragons, it's stomach turning while Bova merely hums. "That's... easily taken care of, after all, you two are twins. It helps that you're already got some training which means you'll help filter what's going to happen next!" Bova states cheerfully as a ritual circle lights up in purple and within seconds, there is a tall Western Dragon that's standing on their back legs standing before them, causing Issei to freak out and discover that no, they can't leave the circle they've standing in.

"Why are you jump starting this now?!" He cries out as he notices the build up of magic. "Shouldn't this, you know, happen naturally?"

"Oh I would, if not for the whole political climate going on, after all, given the rampage of the last Red Dragon Emperor, it's likely that the local Devils will allow him to die and use the whole 'I resurrected you, you owe me' deal on him, might not even really help him learn what his limits are even, just model him to a certain extent and call it a day." Bova explains and some part of him kind of had to agree that it did seem like the course of action a Devil would take in regards to obtaining the Boosted Gear. "He deserves a chance to figure out what he wants and I'm more then happy to follow in Naruto-sama's wing beats in this matter, it's not like he's going to be without aid in discovering himself, I promise you that."

Then the light is overwhelming and as his whole body fills up with magic, he's kind of aware of cloths ripping and tearing.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Groaning, Kazu finds himself laying on his back and feeling kind of chilly. Opening his eyes, it takes him a bit for his vision to come into focus and glancing to his right, finds Issei is without cloth and sporting some bright red scales that match the gauntlet that's now covering his brother's right hand and lower arm. Small dark gold horns seem to be threatening to grow from Issei's hair line, they are just nubs right now. Watching as Issei's chest rises and falls means that his twin is alive, which he's thankful off.

Then, he turns his attention to himself and finds that he's also got his own scales, the difference seems to be that they seem to be sea blue in color. Moving his tongue about his own mouth, he finds that yes, his canines seem to a slightly thicker now, both sets with some of his back molars pushed back in his jaw plus feeling a bit more pointed then before. Gingerly moving his right arm, he checks his own head for nubs and finds them along by his hair line.

Pushing himself up, Kazu glances around and is actually rather relieved to notice that the groceries seem to have been teleported away from them before the ritual began, not that they had been in a state to notice. "Now then, if only I knew how to create cloths viva magic." He murmurs as he notices the remains of their cell phones.

After trying to stand, he gives up and crouches down before moving on all fours towards his elder brother, sitting down on the ground, he gently shakes Issei. "Oniichan... Wake up!" Eyes slowly open and the gaze is clearly unfocused.

"You called me Oniichan." Issei murmurs. "You haven't called me that since we were ten, after those nightmares started..." His twin observes in a distant manner, clearly still not really wake.

He looks away guiltily, it's true, he's been calling Issei Oniisan since his memories started to come back, he couldn't find it within himself to go back to Oniichan, yet, he had. After all, it's hard to use that term of endearment after recalling what Itachi did to him as Sasuke. "We'll discuss that later, I promise." He says as he finally notices that Bova is once more human and is kind of cowering before someone who is little over five feet tall and very delicate looking, not that sound is reaching them as it seems that there's a privacy ward near the two.

"What the... Where did this come from?!" Issei cries out and he glances at the Sacred Gear. Huh, you talking about me? Hmm, well, this is rather surprising, never had a partner already get Dragon features just waking me up before. The voice is male and oozing with a more condense confidence then Bova and Naruto likely possess, which are the only two Dragons he's met so far.

"Ddraig..." He murmurs and he feels as though that green gem on the gauntlet is looking right at him. "Hyoudou Kazu, younger twin of Hyoudou Issei. Magician with talent in Norse and Elemental Magic." He introduces himself.

That explains it somewhat. The Heavenly Dragon muses after a bit. Sharing a womb with my bearer would have left some kind of mark on you, it seems that it manifested itself as you having potential to awaken to Dragon kin levels.

He swallows a bit on hearing that while Issei seems to be clearly freaking out in a more mental manner then physical. "Bova mentioned using me as a filter." He admits and this causes the trapped Dragon to chuckle. Well, at least this will prove to be an interesting experience, never had a Dragon kin weld me before. What's the word on Albion?

"Awake and his bearer is one Vali Lucifer, half Devil." He reports. "He's got a Dragon by the name Naruto working with him, though most seem to think he'd been a half Devil himself."

Naruto? Uzumaki Naruto? Ddraig asks in a slow with some odd undertone in that question. He can't help but slowly nods, hurrying to add, "Take it up with the Great Red, he's the one to collect our souls and reincarnated us."

The dark mood that even has his brother paling and coming out of his panic does seem to hover before it lessens. So, you're one of those souls then? He can't help but feel relief at stopping whatever mood the Welsh Dragon was working himself into.

"Uchiha Sasuke." He admits and Ddraig laughs, it's clear that Naruto talked about them with Albion and it seems that Albion shared some of that with his fellow Heavenly Dragon. Issei gives him a concerned look and he says, "My memories as Sasuke started returning when I was ten, Issei. His Oniichan, one Itachi, massacred the whole Clan save for Sasuke when he was starting school. Itachi... he used a temporal illusion showing the deaths of the whole clan for a good three days, it looped."

He looks away from Issei. "That's why I couldn't find it within me to call you that." He admits with a sigh as his gaze settles on Bova and the stranger, likely another Dragon.

Huh, that would be something hard to live with. Anyone try and talk with you about it? Ddraig asks and wasn't that kind of surreal? But then, perhaps it's more like wanting to dwell on whatever thought started that particular mood.

"They didn't try very hard, accepting when Sasuke pushed them away." He states in a matter of fact way. It's something that happened and, well, it's more of something he recalls then what actually happened to him as Kazu. There's a kind of dissociation between recalling a memory and living through the experience that created that memory. "Might have been slipped a compulsion to strive to kill Itachi too. Suicide by younger brother."

"That's messed up." His twin states and he chuckles a bit. "Well, according to Naruto, that was two life times ago. Plus, child soldiers." He explains with a shrug because that's what the academy turned out and was the tradition when it comes to ninja, kids learning to kill people by any means. The academy just pretties it up but that's the bottom line, then again, the teaching staff or lesson plans became crap.

"That's even worse!" Issei snaps and he snorts, shaking his head a bit. "It was kind of the same here, wasn't it? Some centuries ago? Even now, military groups will enlist kids into their ranks just because they are warm bodies and just need to know to point the nose away from them before pulling the trigger."

"Ah, who's that with that guy?" Issei finally asks and he gently corrects, "Bova."

Hmm, oh! Then Ddraig laughs and he finally glances at his twin who's staring at the green gem. Then the Red Dragon Emperor of Domination bellows rather loudly, Tannin! Still looking like a dandy elf, eh?!

He can't help but turn to look at the elf, trying to match up the delicate looking shape to the former Dragon King. "Tannin?" Issei wonders and he answers softly as the elf turns in their direction, "Former Dragon King, gave it up to become a Devil. Something about Dragon Apples, I think."

The ward shimmers away and the very short elf like being hollers back, "At least I'm free to find bed partners, unlike you, oh Crimson Emperor. You have to experience it viva your hosts."

So, which son is this one? Ddraig asks and it actually makes a lot of sense, given that Bova does look a lot like Tannin as a Dragon.

And why did he force this ritual on these two instead of waiting to see if I'd activate naturally?

"Politics and trying to emulate the young drake in the White Dragon Emperor's company." Tannin explains with a sigh and Bova grins widely upon looking at them, clearly pleased that his efforts bore fruit. "And this is Bova, my youngest son."

"You mean Dragons have politics?" Issei asks and he sighs, correcting that assumption, "Dragons don't group together so they don't have much need for politics among themselves, if two Dragons argue with one another, they fight it out in a physical manner."

Correct. No, he's speaking about the politics of the supernatural world. Ddraig states. What's Albion's bearer's role?

"Vali's been a free agent and managed to keep out of it but events march on, regardless of any involvement of the current White Dragon Emperor. He's out of contact right now, part of a deal that was worked out with Azazel." Tannin explains and it's kind of confusing as Naruto's usually by the Lucifer's side but Rou's been staying with the Dragon these pass few months.

"Who's Vali and Albion?" Issei asks and he explains while Ddraig switches to a different language as does Tannin, clearly discussing things in a private manner while Bova slowly walks over to join them, slipping pass his father to do so. He privately wonders if that language is a dead one or magical in nature.

"Lucifer Vali is the current bearer of Albion, he's a half Devil and a blood descendant of the original Lucifer." He explains. "Albion is Ddraig's rival and fellow Heavenly Dragon, he's got a long list of titles as does Ddraig, although these days those who are born with either of the two Heavenly Dragons are regarded as Dragon Emperors, Red for Ddraig and White for Albion."

"So you are now the Red Dragon Emperor and no, you don't have a kingdom to rule, although in time, you'll likely begin attracting allies to your side but you'll also have enemies. Dragons are very charismatic." He continues while Issei pouts a bit at the fact that it's more of a ceremonial title then an actual position. "As you've heard, the White Dragon Emperor has a close friend with a Dragon who goes by the alias of Uzumaki Naruto, which is why Bova approached you, wanting a similar relationship I assume."

"He did all this just to become my friend?" Issei asks with a hint of disbelief. "In his defense, he likely saved your life as Kuoh Town belongs to a pair of Devils, both are looking for humans to reincarnate into Devils to serve as members of their Peerage and given the rampage of your predecessor, someone might have arranged to have you killed so one of them could reincarnate you, holding the resurrection over you as something you owe them and, well, knowing you, you'd feel obligated to fulfill it never mind the subtle compulsion to listen to your King."

"But what if I didn't want to be a Devil?" His twin asks and he sighs, explaining, "It wouldn't matter, you couldn't go back to being human as you'd be a dead human even if someone manages to reverse it and, well, Devils do allow Harems."

Issei's expression now wavers between the idea of fulfilling his dream and then the fact that he'd have to be a Devil to fulfill it. "If you go rogue from your King, you get a kill on sight order on you and any member of the Biblical Faction will go after you. They'd put it on you no matter how long you've been a Devil, your the possessor of the Boosted Gear, a Longinus Sacred Gear and given time, you'll grow in power." He admits. "And yes, the Biblical Faction means Angels exist too."

"You're not in league with one, are you? Devils I mean." His twin asks and he rubs his check as he tries to think of a way to answer that. "Well, more like I know some Devils and half Devils through my LARP group, which is a cover for our Magician Cabal. And no, I'm not in a pact with any of them." He explains.

"And the scales we have now?" Issei asks and he just repeats what Ddraig had said, just in a different way, "Well, it seems I had the ability to achieve the means to convert into a Dragon kin, it just means that I have a dose of Dragon blood in my body, waiting to activate the transformation. Bova just didn't take that into account so, we both became Dragon kin along with activating your Sacred Gear."

"Then, why are mine red and your scales blue?" His twin asks and he reminds his brother, "We are fraternal twins, not identical." Which Issei seems to nod slowly and it's then that he realizes that yea, his twin is still having trouble accepting everything and he doesn't know how to help.

"Can we get some cloths?" He asks Bova as he turns to regard the Dragon and Issei jerks slightly at the sight of Bova being so close. "Sure." And with that, a set of cloths form about their respective forms, each in their new respective colors, red for Issei and blue for himself.

"How do we disguise our new features?" Kazu asks curiously and Bova blinks, as if such a thought hadn't crossed his mind, which it might not have. "You planned to just kidnap my Oniisan, didn't you?"

"I would have brought him back early next morning after giving him a quick run down." Bova defends himself. "I already bought a house here and planned to give him a key so he can return to begin training in welding his Boosted Gear and lesson in such subjects as magic and supernatural politics."

"So, you didn't plan for either of us to grow scales or these... growths?" Issei moves his hair to give them a clearer view of the nub of a horn. "Didn't factor into my calculations the idea that he," Bova looks at him, "possessed a dose of dormant Dragon blood. That he was capable of converting himself into a Dragon kin."

"Either you are born Dragon kin or you under go a ritual to infuse some Dragon blood into your being." Bova explains at the blank looks of understanding and that makes a lot of sense about the condition. "You don't awaken to it, it's there or it's not."

Unless a bored Dragon of Dragons decides to engineer it to be dormant in my body. He muses privately to himself as he moves a hand up and studies the scales that's on the back of his hand. "So... what does it mean to be Dragon kin?" His twin asks before he decides to do so.

He flexes his hand, watching the scales move along with his skin as he listens as Bova begins on his first lesson concerning supernatural matter for Issei.

The Dance Between Death and Life P5: DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

Snorting lightly at the ranting tone of the private message viva the forum, Naruto types out a simple reply to it. Congratulations on achieving a power up and I also know for a fact that Bova Tannin favors his old man's taste in liquor, so if you ever need to bribe him, it's best to offer a few jugs of rum or mead. I'll leave it up to you to discover his favor brands. He reads it a few more times before being satisfied with what he typed and sends it.

He exits out of the browser and puts the lap top to sleep before closing the screen lid. Given that he doesn't know the password for the desktop computer in the common room, he slipped out under his disguise as the Dragon kin agent serving under Tannin to purchase the latest Devil made lap top as it's generally a few years ahead of anything on the human market. Rou helped him set him up with an e-mail account and in creating a user account on the forum that the other reincarnations use to get in touch with one another.

Glancing at the bed he transformed from the couch, Rou is still fast asleep and moving the lap top onto the large coffee table, he walks silently over, grabbing some blankets and pulling them up to cover her again. The Winter Solstice is coming up, which means there's a holiday season, three days of Christmas celebration and one of the New Years. Typically, Albion, Vali, and him tend more towards doing something on the Winter Solstice then for the Christian Christmas celebrations. Generally, they don't keep to Christian holidays anyway nor did they really subscribe to any religious holidays actually.

They do things for one another during the Seasonal Solstices and Equinoctes. Which causes him to wonder if any of the others are expecting to exchange gifts for the upcoming holiday as the Christian holidays do tend to be global. He'll have to go through the forum to see if they did anything special for the upcoming holiday and if anyone is expecting anything from him. It's not like he's lacking money after all or means to grab a few novelties that none of them could get their hands on for any amount of money. After all, he still practices the skills Albion taught him when it comes to breaking into other Pantheons collective communal grounds and the Deity's individual Homes, general experience has to do with Deities of Health and Healing along with those related to the Sun.

Coming out his thoughts, he blinks as he gives Ye Rou one last look before heading for the fridge to grab a few fruits and heads back to the front area of the Lair that he keeps his trophies, he's got a few ideas of why that helmet kept killing the user and with some insight into a better model to use as an interface for the sessions, the Dragon is fairly confident that given some time and conferring with those more knowledgeable concerning certain fields of study, he might have a money maker among the supernatural world, of course he'd have to get rid of certain concepts, like causing physical growth and a time limit for wearing it. He's also planning to run searches about the topic concerning virtual reality, it's more then likely that humans have spent a lot of time fantasying on the subject of a more complete gaming experience.

Reading Naruto's reply to his rather lengthy private message did nothing for his temper, never mind the currently useless tidbit of information concerning Bova's taste in liquor or the fact that it's clear that the son of the former Dragon King already has preferred brands. The former human also logged off from the forum and it wouldn't surprise him if the golden scaled Dragon is away from his computer now. Guess I'll just have to wait on Ye-san to come online. He realizes with a groan as his temper finally dims as he releases a loud sigh.

Tannin had escorted them home once he allowed Bova to give Issei a key to said house, the son did leave in a hurried fashion once the former Dragon King suggested Bova check to see if everything is in order at his house. Once away, the elder Dragon then altered their current cloths, making sure they got hoods and walked with them to their house. Then Tannin introduced himself and once within the house, had them show their parents their new looks at which point the current Devil explains about the supernatural world while they put the stuff away in the kitchen and upon returning, Ddraig introduced himself, much to their parents' dismay at the fact that their eldest son was born possessed by a sleeping Dragon in his right hand.

It had been a rough time with their parents clearly frighten on their behalf concerning this turn of events and he came clean about his LARPing group, even Tannin had looked impressed at how they managed to hidden in semi plain sight. The issue of lying to them was pretty much swept away at the fact that he'd been able to hide from any negative attention that being a Magician tend to get or that he's not in a pact with a Devil of any sort. Then again, they didn't take the news very well that Kuoh Town is considered Devil territory and the reason for the co-ed change in the Kuoh Academy is due to Devils influencing the school or that the co-ed has to do with allowing young Devils to look for humans to reincarnate into Devils as members of their Peerage.

Sure, not all Devils view their Peerage as, well, pawns or tools but even still, until someone joins a Devil's Peerage, they might as well be a non-entity that just exists. It's just that if you aren't with them or against them, then, well, you aren't worth much attention outside of certain situations. It applies slightly to lower class Devils too, although they are a step above humans in the Devil social ladder of regard, more exists to help run Devil society as a whole then just existing cause they take up space.

Unlike his parents and brother, he has a general knowledge of things, the difference has more to do with getting insight into how Tannin approaches the subject or explains answers to their questions. He's fairly sure that Ddraig is keeping silence for his own reasons, maybe not really paying much mind to what's being discussed. A number of things actually got cleared up and some of his preconceptions proved right but for different reasons. In the end, Tannin hands over a business card once it's clear that this was proving to be rather tiring and he helped his twin to bed, it wouldn't surprise him if his parents stayed up far later, likely talking among themselves about what they learnt.

Their mom phoned the academy, saying they're sick as they haven't a clue how to hide the fact that they're gained some supernatural features, it's clear that the Devils will notice the change with them. Their dad headed to work rather tired while Issei decided to help their mom bake stuff to take their collective minds off of everything that got revealed. He'd been going through his various books looking for something to use to hide their newly magical surge before feeling the need to vent at someone who wouldn't take it personally. Ok, so maybe he should have put in a request for help in that message but typically, Naruto's usually one to leap in to help without ever needing to be invited, then again, Dragon so it seems that the former blond picked up a little thing called personal space and respect for it.

His phone gives him a notice after he's going through some of the forum, looking up Transformation Magic disguised as genjutsu or maybe iryo ninjutsu. It's noon it seems and he grabs the cell, opening it he swipes the screen. It's from Kenta about his absence while noting that he's online at the forum.

Was out in the weather a bit too long without the right protection. Boredom kicked in and looking up genjutsu disguises or body alterations viva iryo ninjutsu. He texts back, knowing that Kenta will realize something big happened and that he's looking into Transformation Magic. Messaged SONoftheFOURTH a venting commentary. Should have asked for his advice instead of just venting. He admits before Kenta likely finishes typing out a message.

Waiting on White|Eyed|Heiress to act as a go between? Kenta asks and he pretty much sends a nodding emoji. Might take a while, never know what dastardly things the two have been getting up too. His fellow classmate texts back and he makes a face at the idea of the two being busy with THAT.

Please, I doubt White|Eyed|Heiress would engage in THAT with someone she just met some months back. He replies back. But then, Hinata and Naruto had been dating when... No, they are two different people now, after all, Naruto's a different species and been around for some time by now.

It's unlikely the two will just pick up where Hyuuga Hinata and Uzuamki Naruto left off. After all, Elena Spade, current incarnation of Haruno Sakura, was at least four years older then he is and is currently in a relationship with the leader of the group of 'Stray' Devils that 'stole' her from the Church, one Giotto Squalo, likely not his actual name but it's the public identity of the known 'kidnapper' of the Miracle Smith nor does Elena plan to share her boyfriend's actual name with any of them. He's sure that there's going to be a wedding coming up between the two or perhaps there's actual substance to the reverse harem rumors that are circulating about in certain circles.

Either way, it's doubtful that either of them are going to be trying to salvage anything beyond a friendship from their previous lives as Sakura and Sasuke. They grew up in different cultures and his temperament is fairly different compared to his previous incarnation as Sasuke along with appearance. From what he's been able to tell, Elena's free in a way Sakura never could have been when it came behavior and expressing herself even if her appearance is also different then Sakura had looked. Never mind that instead of medical training, Elena's passion is working with metal and creating interesting items out of said material, which is how she created nine Holy swords, taking it as a challenge, and why the Church did its best to cage her within itself.

Getting up, he heads for the kitchen to get something to eat, his stomach rumbles at the idea. "Lunch?" He asks as he finds his mom in the kitchen, having passed Issei laying on the couch with a far off look in his eyes, the Boosted Gear finally gone from his twin's hand.

She blinks at the question and turns, it's clear that the events of yesterday still trouble his mom. "It's going to be ok, you know that, right? I mean, yea, sure, Issei was born with a Heavenly Dragon's soul trapped in some ancient artifact but at least that Dragon isn't angry at us for the situation, right? Plus, there's Tannin's offering to help explain things when you guys have questions." Kazu tries to assure her, not really sure if he's doing it right or anything of that is even remotely comforting to his mom.

Tears threaten and he moves to give her a quick hug, it's kind of awkward to be the one giving the hug but he's sure it's the thought that counts and that's what's worth it.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Shouldn't you text him personally about this? Is the reply he gets from Rou once he's back at his desk, he spent some hours keeping both his mom and twin company once he's had something to eat. He admits to her the venting session he did.

A bit later, there's a reply, He says to talk with Bova about learning to shape-shift the Dragon way. It seems that it'll also allow you two to hide some of your magical nature while mentioning that you guys need rely on the guy as Bova's not that bad just over eager. Plus, Bova's been wanting to prove himself so he's invested in seeing the two of you succeed. Apparently, he won't take issue you two questioning things, more from Issei then you, as he knows it's new information with Issei, so there's going to learning your new limits in regards to not just body wise but magic.

I think Naruto believes that Bova's ready for this responsibility and trusts him to do right by you two. Which seems to be a ringing endorsement given that he's a Dragon himself. And he blinks, it's clear the last bit was more personal opinion then anything Naruto said.

So, there are other ways to shape-shift? Kazu muses before sighing. Getting up, he heads to grab a shirt and socks for his twin as they have a Dragon to visit.

"We're going to visit that guy." He tells Issei as he drops the items of cloths onto his twin. "My source says he's on the level and that if we want to pass as human, we need to trust Bova to teach us how to."

"Are you sure? I mean, look what he did to us!" Issei says, gesturing at his chest with a hand, displaying not just the scales of the chest but the arm as well.

"As much as I hate to say this, but I rather we have scales then your cooling corpse at my feet and a Devil waiting in the wings to 'save' you." He stares into his twin's newly transformed emerald green eyes with his own emerald green eyes. His twin stiffen at the mention of that possible situation.

"How can you be so sure that would have happened?" His elder twin asks and he replies, "They might not have been the one to arranged for that death but they would have profited from it. The current owners are the younger siblings of two of the current Satans. And someone might think they are doing a favor by arranging said situation, allowing one of the two to recruit the current Red Dragon Emperor into their Peerage."

"Not this year but next year? Or the year after that? Someone knows you have a Scared Gear, Onnisan, they just don't know which one it is." He explains with a hint of disgust. "Bova's a Dragon and, perhaps, it's not that surprising that he could puzzle it out. As much as people think they know what Dragons can do... I doubt anyone save one of the more powerful examples of their race know what a Dragon is truly capable of simply because they've lived that long and attempted things that people never expected them to try."

"People freaked out some months ago when someone they assumed to be a half Devil transformed before their camera into a gold Dragon as nobody thought that the guy was anything but a half Devil until that point. It's kind of died down but it's got some wondering about the topic of are there other hidden Dragons among the supernatural population or human population?" He explains. "People know that the Dragon God known as Orphis, the Ouroboros Dragon who's currently in the form of a young girl being the prime example of a shape-shifting Dragon and they want such individuals to be the exceptions not the rule."

"And I don't know anything about Dragons and Ddraig, well, he's old and I think he's kind of got his mind on other things then teaching us, never mind the fact that he's far beyond the basics that it's an insult to except him to do so." He adds and the entrapped Dragon laughs, clearly tuning in at some point in the discussion. "Bova is offering his services as a mentor and likely willing to act as a body guard, for now, and we should give him a chance to strut his stuff. After all, He approached Us." Even if he was more here for you then me. He mentally admits.

"You can even ask him that question you're likely burning to know." The former ninja remarks. "Your life's goal."

"Oh! Well, wouldn't Ddraig know the answer to that?" His brother wonders and he shrugs, remarking, "He's ranked just under Orphis in the list of powerful Dragons, it likely different standards for him and you're not at his level plus, former human."

"Are we sure that Ddraig won't know the answer?" Issei asks and he counters, "Again, your not really human now and it sounds like Dragon kin have never welded the Boosted Gear before, so even if Bova doesn't know, he can start looking for the answer for you."

What's the question? Ddraig asks curiously with a hint of amusement. "Can I be a Harem King because I'm the Red Dragon Emperor?" His twin pauses while putting on one of his socks, the shirt resting next to Issei as the Heavenly Dragon roars with laughter, the kind that's clearly belly shaking.

"And I think the next question is, being a Dragon kin, does that mean he needs to be careful in bed?" He adds when it sounds like the laughter is dying down, the question was meant to add fuel to the laugh and he's rewarded with more laughter, although it's a bit more subdued, which is kind of surprising when you consider that Ddraig doesn't need to breath. Issei merely nods in agreement with that question upon him voicing it only now, his twin finishes with the sock before putting on the shirt now that the socks are on.

Yea, I'll leave Tannin's youngest son to answer those, it should prove entertaining to listening. Ddraig states and he mostly assumes there's a grin on the astral body's face or snout or was it muzzle? They leave a note for their parents before they bundle up, making sure to cover their faces and cover their hair, which hasn't changed color.

Arriving directly into his part of the Lair, he's more then happy to be done with school and teenage drama, never mind the fact he's missed spending time in Golden 's company. Stripping his current cloths off, the potions will be wearing off soon enough and just walks out in the nude, heading for the communal kitchen for something stronger then his stash of wine. His height changes within seconds his bangs return to his natural color, which means that the rest of the effects fade by the time he enters the communal portion and pauses at the sight of a stranger sitting in a chair with a lap top.

The stranger is a young woman and he's quick to craft a set of pairs before he makes a sound to grab her attention, she jerks and turns her body around to look at him. "Ye Rou, formerly Hyuuga Hinata." The woman introduces herself, likely in an Asian language given the last name coming first.

He blinks at her, it seems that Golden hasn't been alone without him. Vali can't help but tilts his head to the side, kind of puzzled. "You know he's not old enough for that, right?" He inquires and Rou nods, saying, "He mentioned among his race he's considered something of a preteen, far too young to think of mating or rearing clutches."

Sighing, he nods before continuing towards the liquor stash, grabbing a bottle of actual Scottish Whiskey. "Is he?" He asks as he moves to sit on the couch.

"Mentioned Tannin needing an errand but that was about week ago." Rou explains and glances towards the kitchen. "He showed me how to access the storage space as he filled it with a few month's worth of food and spices."

"Sleeping arrangements?" He asks curiously, never mind the fact they don't have a communal washroom. "He created a room plus bathroom for me to use two months ago in his section. I was sleeping on the couch before that." The only laundry machines are in the communal area as neither of them like the sound of them so she's good on cloths as that storage space also has the supplies for it.

"Lucifer Vali." He says to be polite. "Bearer of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear."

"Bearer of one of the Twilight Healing Sacred Gears." Rou returns the favor and recalls Azazel mentioning someone with a similar Sacred Gear. "Doesn't the Church have one of the current bearers?" Vali asks curiously.

"Yes, her name is Argento Asia and they have granted her the title of Holy Maiden. She's rather young and fully indoctrinated into the Church's teachings." Rou clearly doesn't sound please by the situation, the idea of someone so young or the indoctrinated being used thus. "She makes a decent target to use against the Church."

"They did lose that sword smith." He agrees and Rou smiles in amusement. "She's one of us." Rou grins rather widely as she adds, "In fact, she's Naruto's former teammate, one Haruno Saskura."

Given what he's heard about the Miracle Smith's temperament and love of all things mechanical, it's hard to believe Elena Spade had once been a medical professional. Yet, it's not like Rou has any reason to lie about something like this. Humming, he opens his bottle of whiskey and then creates a pair of glass stein, enjoying the feeling of his magic moving to his will instead of always flowing into that ward anchor points he'd been wearing.

Pouring a small among for their current guest before adding a generous amount for himself. He gestures to the glass stein which she thanks him for before getting up to grab. "Bova forced the Red Dragon Emperor active." Rou tells him as he turns on the rather large TV, going through his recorded shows and he feels Albion stir but still seems to be asleep.

"Oh?" Rou hums, "He's the elder twin brother of Hyoudou Kazu, the incarnation of Uchiha Sasuke. The process... it caused the two to become Dragon kin."

He couldn't help but snort before laughing at that fact. Not only did he not have keep gently decline Bova's attempts at Pledging but that the Dragon will be sure to train the other properly! "Best news ever!" He states with cheer and drinks from his glass stein as things are finally looking up. Plus, it'll be interesting to fight a Dragon kin who's got access to a Sacred Gear, the fact that it's the Boosted Gear was just icing, few want to go through the ritual to transform into one and fewer still have been born these pass few decades.

Give Bova a year or two and perhaps he'll get two sparring partners instead of just the one. Yes, things were looking up and he doesn't keep the smile from his face, he's just so pleased at the news. Rou clearly doesn't know what to make of his reaction but that's fine, this is just their first meeting after all and it's unlikely to be their last given it's clear that Golden isn't going to kick her out of here any time soon, although she'll likely need to leave at some point, she's human after all.

"What's his name?" He thinks to ask before he picks to play an episode. "Issei, Hyoudou Issei." Issei, huh? Kazu and Issei.

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"Dragon." Koneko reports to their shared King, one Rias Gremory concerning the Sacred Gear that one second year student, Hyoudou Issei, is the bearer of as they watch from their club room window as said teen and younger twin walk under their window. Yuuto's gaze is on the younger, Kazu at the news, after all, the two were twins, even if they weren't identical and clearly care for one another.

"How strong is the scent?" The Queen of Rias' Peerage asks, one Akeno Himejima. "Very strong." The former Nekoshou states in her typical manner.

"Strong enough to hold the Boosted Gear?" Rias wonders in the nude, an arm under her chest with a hand near her mouth. No answer but then, it's not like she's asking them to answer it.

How long will their bond last? When one becomes a Devil and the other doesn't? He wonders, not sure if wants to find out yet, the out come will come about regardless, after all, they were humans and powerless before a Devil's desire, before any supernatural might really.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

He's busy dealing with clients, wanting to be away from the coming fall out of that Fallen Angel's interest in one Hyoudou Issei. So, when he returns to the O.R.C. club room viva Teleportation Circle, he half expects Rias to be gone, likely dealing with a newly reincarnated Devil but, she's there and it's late now, midnight under two hours away. Glancing at the Rook, Koneko doesn't seem to be awake and Akeno seems to be else where. "Did he not get a contract sheet?"

"My familiar handed one to him before meeting up with her." Rias answers and she's clearly feeling guilty about allowing the Fallen to even approach Issei but, if the teen is indeed the inheritor of the Boosted Gear, then having this debt hanging over the Red Dragon Emperor's head should ensure that what sense of honor Issei possess will see him honor said debt, then again, given the kind of Vice said teen would fall into, it shouldn't be that hard to keep him attached to Rias as his King.

"Should I alert Sona-san of his likely fate?" Yuuta asks politely but Rias shakes her head. "No, perhaps she didn't make a move against his life tonight."

"Understood." He says before excusing himself to head home for a shower and to rest.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Issei is in the company of his twin and his two of his fellow LARPers. There's a particular look in Kazu's eye upon glancing at him. It's gone a blink of an eye later but it's enough to make him want to avoid said twin for the day.

There's teasing among the students about Issei's 'date' throughout the day. "No, I'm not going to be seeing Yuuma-chan again. It didn't work out." He hears Issei admit a touch of embarrassment in the hall, heading off for lunch. "It seems we just had different life goals."

"Active?" He asks Koneko curiously once the school day is over and they're getting their assignments of clients. "No change in his scent." The Rook states calmly yet there's a slight furl upon her forehead.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

"The abandon church looks like someone used dynamite to blow it up." He reports as he decided to check the old church for clues concerning what became of Yuuma. "It looked recent."

"Well, according to Sona, one Asia Argento's going to be joining the Academy in two weeks time." Akeno remarks from her position from standing behind their King. He stiffens at the mention of the former Holy Maiden.

"She's here? In Kuoh Town?" He can't help but ask in disbelief. "How did the Church let her leave without sweeping her into one of it's other divisions?"

"We don't know, we didn't even know she's here until the request landed on Sona's desk." Akeno states sourly while Rias is looking at a picture, likely the teenager who bears one of the Twilight Healing Sacred Gear. "The address checks out as one in town nor does the owner appear to be connected with the Church in anyway."

"Anything more to report about that church, Kiba-kun?" Akeno purrs out after a few seconds. He takes a moment to put the current issue mentally away for review later.

"A small number of Fallen had made the church their hide out and there's belongs that also suggests that excommunicated Church Exorcists were with them." He reports. "There's traces of Elemental Magic used and it's likely what bodies were there have been burnt to ashes."

"So, we have Stray Magicians now instead of rogue Fallen?" Akeno asks and he shrugs, not sure how to answer that. "Lovely." And much harder to track down as they are humans among humans, it's doubtful that they're purchasing their spell ingredients locally or have them delivered to their current residence.

"It's looking like we've been lax in keeping track of the comings and goings of other beings in Kuoh Town." Rias muses as she gently lets the picture, which drifts onto the table, showing the latest picture of one Asia Argento. He privately agrees with that sentiment after having investigated the abandon church's rubble.

"I'll speak with Sona about how we'll begin correcting this." The Crimson-Haired Ruin Princess states.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

He jerks his head at the sight of not just the color of the glow about the Hyoudou twins but the two LARPers as they glow as well, the color displaying that they were practicing Magicians. Those that they already knew to possess Sacred Gears also glow but it's those four that he's to report on. The glow fades within seconds but that doesn't keep him from shaking slightly, after all, not only did Issei light up as possessing a Sacred Gear but as something not human as well.

Returning to his own body, having piggy back on his familiar to stand guard at the High Schooler's Gate. His mind a whirl as he tries to recall concerning that color the twin glowed but it's not one they covered it seems.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

The twins arrive in the meeting room, neither look overly surprised to see the two co-owners or their respective Queens. Sona's Knight, one Tomeo Meguri are with him and just as tense, ready to act if either of them prove hostile. They still have no clue what kind of supernatural beings they're dealing with, thus they are cautious.

Yuuta closes the door as neither of them did. Kazu is on Issei's left and seems a great deal more at ease then Issei. "You are trespassing." Sona states in an ice cold tone.

"Once could argue that being born here, it's you who are the trespassers." Kazu remarks lightly. "Never mind the kind of pests we've been cleaning up that you allow to lurk in town."

"After all, did you both really think you wouldn't attract interest not being in the Underworld? Out of the way of your elder siblings' sight?" Issei adds, not really pulling off the light tone of his younger brother.

The two keep their emotions under control but it's clear that they hit the mark with some of their comments, after all, the two were indeed born here and been living here before either of the current owners took over ownership from when Cleria Belial abdicated ownership of Kuoh Town to pursue a relationship with one former Exorcist Masaomi Yaegaki. The pair are missing and nobody knows if they're alive or not, not when Church Exorcists are hunting for the pair.

"Kuoh Town has been Devil Territory even then." Sona states, ignoring the statements concerning their elder brother and sister respectively. "And we're are now correcting out oversight concerning the issue of our Territory."

"That's nice in... theory. One could argue it's a little late for that, after all, we've already reported the Fallen to Azazel and handed them plus their stage crew over to him." Kazu remarks and they all stilled. "Oh, don't look so surprised, we spoke with the Governor when Yuuma approached my Oniisan, which shouldn't have happened if you had done your job."

"And why would the Governor General take you serious?" Rias asks but he knows his King and there's worry. In answer, they watch as Issei's right hand and lower arm transform.

"Being the current Red Dragon Emperor does come with perks." Issei states holding said Boosted Gear up so Rias and Sona. "And I guess I should inform you that Asia, Goten, and Kenta are under my protection. Plus, since you seem to want to know who's also here in town and connected to me, Bova Tannin is my mentor and acting political advisor slash lawyer."

"So, if you want to continue on this vein, I'm obligated to inform you to contact Bova in concern any legal issues." Issei states smugly. "He's the lawyer of Asia, Goten, Kazu, and Kenta."

"Here's his business card." Kazu takes out a business card and takes a few steps to place it on the desk. "Good day."

With that, the pair leave the room and the Boosted Gear fades away, leaving the arm bare. He's pretty sure everyone is gobsmacked at the idea that not only is Issei active but he's also the current Red Dragon Emperor and somehow, managed to get someone related to the former Dragon King in his corner so early. "Who's Bova Tannin?" He glances at Tomoe upon her voicing his own question.

"The youngest son of Tannin, he's a Dragon." Sona answers as she reaches for the business card.

"First the White Dragon Emperor has unknown Dragon called Naruto and now the Red Dragon Emperor has a son of a former Dragon King." Akeno states with a hint of something. She laughs softly, a hand modestly hovering over her mouth. "My my, I wonder just what's coming that the two end up with a Dragon so early in their respective careers."

"They are not human." Rias states. "It must have been a recent incident."

"Kazu might have been a Magician like his two friends." Tsubaki Shinra, Sona's Queen, suggests. "Might be a magical experiment gone wrong? Or right?"

They part ways not long after, there is no point in bringing in the two Magicians now that Issei made it clear that the pair have his protection. "Are you worried that the Governor General will speak with your brother about the fact some Fallen set up shop in Kuoh Town?" He asks once they are in their club room.

"Why would Azazel get into contact with the current Lucifer?" Akeno wonders. "That's like admitting that he's got no control over his Faction Members, that would just show how weak he is."

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

"Rias! How could you let a Fallen near a student?!" And so the current Lucifer arrived, gave his younger sister a hug before beginning in to lecture her over the matter.

"Who told you that?" Rias asks in alarm, it's the weekend and they're here to gather up their assignments. Yuuta is sure to keep to the back, planning to enjoy the scene before him with a simple polite smile.

"Azazel did, of course." As if it's obvious. "Who called him about the matter of having a Fallen in Kuoh and offered to arrested the girl, only for it to turn out to be more then just the one, so he asked the student for a favor but the student mentioned that being that he's not the owner, he shouldn't be involved, that he'll wait a bit to see if the owners would notice."

"You didn't investigate and now, now it's questionable if two will be allow to continue living in Kuoh Town." He winces slightly. So, that's how they spun that. "After all, when you were given Kuoh Town, you're responsible for noticing these kind of things, you can't just ignore the matter when it looked like it solved itself."

"It's not like the student couldn't defend himself." His King states but the current Lucifer sighs. "Rias, its not a question of whether or not the student could fend off a Fallen, it's the fact that you didn't intervene nor did you look into the matter as to why the Fallen failed to kill said student."

Very true, in hindsight. He admits, after all, if they had, they might have found out sooner that the twins were more then they appear to be and maybe that they had Magicians among the students. Might have been able to get to Asia before Issei did. It seems that instead of driving a wedge between the Hyoudou twins, the pair have turned the tables and it's now more then just two brothers growing apart, oh no, it's taking ownership of the town from Rias and Sona.

"I just assumed she moved on." Rias defends. "That she likely just toyed around with him as a stress reliever before modifying his mind."

"You just can't trust assumptions, Rias. You have to study what happen and to do that, you need to investigate to get facts." The crimson haired Lucifer repeats, clearly disappointed in regards to Rais' lack of accepting that she made a grave mistake.

"That doesn't excuse the fact that Bova Tannin's been visiting the town." Rias states and Sirzechs sighs. "He's not just visiting, he bought a house and has been living out of it for nearly two years now."

"How did you know that?" His King asks and Sirzechs says, "He's just one of the few that are living here that you're suppose to discover by doing your duty of checking for unregistered supernatural beings. It's a controlled learning experience meant to get to you do your job."

"We knew you two were young and that's why we pulled some favors to get some we trusted to take up residence here as we know they are here and knew they were safe for you two to encounter them." The message was fairly clear, that they failed in this exercise. He glances towards the Queen and the Rook, it seems that Akeno isn't happy about this particular test while Koneko remains the same as usual.

"Are you aware he's mentoring the current Red Dragon Emperor?" Rias asks, trying to distract her brother, yet, while there's a clear look of interest but, well, it's clear that Sirzechs isn't going to get distracted.

"Regardless, Rias, he's a Dragon and his business is his own." States the current Lucifer. "We're talking about how you failed to do the basics of your job as co-owner of Kuoh Town."

"So, did they get ousted?" He asks Issei viva the head set, he's busy trying to build up his Zerg forces while keeping up a steady supply of fighters at the current battle ground. "Of course not, but they should be more motivated to keep track of supernatural beings throughout the town that aren't Stray Devils."

"Put a fire under their collective, lazy asses." Vali observes with a touch of approval. "Though, they'll likely won't give up trying to pin you down."

"Of course not but they clearly won't ask their siblings about what color we glowed. They'll likely research it themselves, they are striving for independence and they're have their pride." His rival states without sending a fresh wave towards their current battle field.

He begins directing scouts about the map. He finds some of Issei's forces and begins directing quick response forces while sending minor armies about his three bases. "How's Asia's Japanese coming along?" He asks ideally, mostly wanting to keep the other talking.

"Better with that nifty necklace you made for her." The younger Emperor states and he roles his eyes, "You commissioned it."

"Can't believe you wanted an air hockey match as payment." The other remarks and he remarks, "Got to start somewhere in our rivalry and you're not ready for an actual fight just yet."

He's building up his defenses and beginning to look for a fourth base as his first one isn't looking to last longer. They continue to make small talk as Issei presses an attack on his third base while he's looking to counter attack while setting up his fourth base.

The Dance Between Death and Life P7: DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"Irina-kun?" He hears Issei ask with a hint of disbelief and glances at the duo that's standing near an alleyway entrance. "Issei-kun?"

"Kazu-kun." He states in a light tone and the pair of teenage girls blink before turning to look at him, with the brunette girl's eyes widen at the sight of him while the blue haired girl seems to frowns, clearly not likely the looks of either of them. Or perhaps it's due to Irina's reaction?

"Wait, you mean Kazu was right?! You were a girl all a long?!" Issei exclaims, pointing at said old friend viva left index finger. He can only imagine the look of betrayal on his twin's face and Irina's eyes widen at the look directed at her viva the current Red Dragon Emperor.

"But... I've always been a girl! How could you Not know?" Irina asks with a look of bewilderment and a touch of uncertainty at this accusation. Even going so far as to look at the blue haired teen for support.

Not that the as of yet introduced Church Exorcist is incline to come to Irina's defense. "Irina, you know these Pagans?" Well, she's blunt.

It's kind of hard to believe that Irina grew to become a Church Exorcist, yet it's clearly what happened concerning their old friend. "They're... well, I guess, maybe... Anyway, Xenovia, these two are Hyoudou Issei and Hyoudou Kazu, they're old friends of mine from when I lived in Japan." Irina introduces them to her partner. "Issei-kun, Kazu-kun, this is my partner, Quarta Xenovia."

And with that opening, his elder brother senses a chance of mischief, takes it due to the poor wording on Irina's part. "Ach! Really Irinachan?! But... I guess it makes some sense as to why you allowed me to call you Irina-kun, guess you knew even then, your preferences." He places a comforting hand on his brother's shoulder while Xenovia looks suspicious while Irina looks rather puzzled by what Issei's implying.

"There, there Oniisan. Just think of it this way, at last she's happy and with people clearly accept them as partners." The former ninja says soothingly while chuckling inwardly as the pair still don't get it. "Of course they accept us as partner, even if she's a Protestant."

"See? They're clearly got a good base for their partnership even if they have their own religious conflicts going on in private among other issues that they are clearly working through." He says while Issei's now looking down at the ground, body shaking with his bang helping to hide his twin's expression. It's more then likely that it's a wide smile and suppress chuckling that's really the cause for the shaking.

"Well, of course! We might have a different way of approaching the teachings of Jesus Christ but we both work for the betterment of Heaven!" Irina states confidently while it's clear that Xenovia suspects that something about this conversation is going over their heads but nods in agreement with Irina. "Indeed. We shall smite any threats in the way of the Church's goals." The blue haired teen states, puffing up and glaring at him as he's the only one who's really facing the pair.

Issei's shaking only increases and he's having trouble keeping his factual feelings off his face, keeping to a polite look. Then, Xenovia senses Kiba Yuuto who's only just arrived. She glares while a much more hostile look enters her eyes while a sneer, he glances in that direction and finds that Yuuto's gaze isn't even on either of them but on the two Exorcists, he wonders as to why but the change in the mood does effect Issei, who recovers from his laughing fit.

"Is there something wrong, Kiba-san?" He asks the Devil politely and the Knight jerks a little at the sound of his voice, blinking as the double Sacred Gear welder takes in the sight of the two of them. "I just have business with these two, Hyoudou-san."

"I see. Shall we continue on our way, Oniisan?" He asks Issei as the current Red Dragon Emperor shrugs. "I guess so, after all, I wouldn't want to be accused of interfering with an other's business when it doesn't concern me right now." His twin remarks simply, the two teenage girls don't get it but Yuuto does so he relaxes a tad.

"See you later, Irina-Kun! Quarta-san." Issei says with a friendly smile, he nods in agreement. The pair of Exorcists murmur their own farewells with Yuuto just watching them walk off, leaving the three to discuss the matter of missing shards of a legendary Holy sword. Given that the Fae did created said legendary sword before they fully withdrawn and from discussions they've had with Albion and Ddraig about said race and some lessons about Fae Magic, it's doubtful that those shard are the genuine article, perhaps the remains of God's failed attempt at matching said Holy sword.

"Well, we've got permission from the four Satans and the Governor General to intervene before it goes any further." Kenta reports from their observation point within Kuoh Academy, a place they had been granted permission to create from Duke Zeoticus for emergency situations that could occur at the academy. Like invasions from other supernatural forces, like what's happening right now concerning the attempt to reforge the various shards to 'recreate' Excalibur with the backing of one off the rails Fallen named Kokabiel.

Asia is with them and in possession of the Holy sword Naruto enchanted that he named Soft Sunlight. Elena had examined it back when she inquired about what happened to said sword that had been in Freed's possession and, well, she's not speaking with the former blond nor is she overly pleased that the Dragon pretty much redesigned the sword, including a great deal of steel smelted on the sly at at least two Divine Gods' private forges or other resources used. He hadn't the heart to tell their former team mate that the sword was just a mere side project for Naruto, a way to test if the Fae really could have created a Holy sword before the Biblical God thought to.

After all, despite its name, Soft Sunlight is a fairly powerful Holy sword even if it's relatively new and rather untested in actual combat. It easily absorbs sun light even in its sheath, which allows the welder to call forth a ball of soft light that will follow the bearer around, lighting up the area, even if it's a darkness caused by a spell or an illusion clouding the welder's mind. The orb will always grant the ability to See anything its light touches, which is actually a passive trait then an active one. It pretty clear the sword is named more after this passive trait then any of its other features.

He's been doing his best to teach Asia how to weld a sword in defense of herself and any being that's in need of protection, she's only really trying for the latter reason really as she's rather selfless after all. Naruto lent him Soft Sunlight not long after the Devils became aware of his brother's status as the current Red Dragon Emperor, clearly expecting him to field test said sword against any incursions plus a stand in until he finds an actual weapon he prefers to use in this life, after all, he's just the reincarnation of Uchiha Sasuke and in possession of said memories, it does not make him that same person as their life experiences are very different as is their mentality. Maybe if his memories came to him earlier then ten years of age, it might have a greater effect on his current life as Hyoudou Kazu but they didn't and he's learn to manage the memories without losing the who he is now to who he'd been.

Which is why he's in possession of a long dagger and a one handed battle axe, he's been liking the feel of welding two weapons but didn't want to use twin swords. Both weapons are light and the axe will allow him to try and disarm weapons from foes. Plus, both can be thrown, even if the manner is different. He feels confident enough to use the two in what's going to happen tonight, thus he asked Issei to talk Asia into carrying Soft Sunlight instead of coming unarmed as Asia seems unable to say no to her brother, likely due to the crush she has on his twin given how kind and considerate he's been to her since they met.

"Right, so, weaken Kokabiel down enough for you two to chain him up." Issei muses with a slight grin, which Goten punches Issei lightly in the right shoulder for. "Mind out of the gutter, oh great Emperor and fearless Commander." Goten states in a light tone with a hint of mocking at the two titles.

"But didn't you like to bring up dicks last life as Sai?" Kenta asks Goten with a bemuse look and Issei snickers as Goten sends the former Nara a scratching look. "It was hardly Sai's fault for his socially ineptness or emotionally trauma." Which has the former ninja look towards Asia at the reminder of mental 'conditioning' not that Asia likely understood why Goten often went out of his way to get her to try different things, trying to pry her out of the mentality the Church had been subtlety installing into the Sacred Gear bearer. Only that he clearly wants her to have experiences beyond just school and dealing with the supernatural world.

"I'll drag the wounded away when I can or if I can't do that, use Soft Sunlight to fend off any attacks or use Twilight Healing just enough so that I could drag them off to safety." Asia repeats, clearly not likely the idea of not totally healing said person in one go or even using Soft Sunlight to cause harm to the enemy, but, they weren't asking her to go on the attack, just defend another life, which is likely more acceptable to her sensibilities.

"And I'm to watch my reckless twin's back from friendly fire." He reports as he glances out of the window, the sight of some old guy beginning to fuse the current set of Holy swords collectively called Excalibur into a single sword. The resulting sword likely won't be that nice looking let alone that strong as the Genocide Archbishop wasn't someone who was trained as a smith or engineer, let alone knows anything about Transformation Magic and Alchemy. After all, if the shards were a failed attempt by the Biblical God to create duplicate the Fae created Excalibur but shattered in the end, what are the chances someone like Valper Galilei, the Genocide Archbishop, have of succeeding where said Deity failed?

"My scales are better suited then yours for taking punishment." Issei reminds him and he counters, "But do you really want to expose us as Dragon kin so easily?"

"Point." His brother admits with a bit of a sigh and the three of them head out of the room, leaving Goten and Kenta to watch and prepare for the upcoming capture in this safe place. As they reach the doors that will allow them to join the battle, both Issei and himself glance at Asia, who stares back with a bit of a confused expression. "Did you want to do a prayer before we join in?" Issei asks softly and Asia flushes, nodding slyly.

It's a short prayer that Asia speaks and in Church Latin. Once done, he stands to his twin's left and, they both take a deep breath before pushing the doors open, causing more then a few to look their way. "By order of the Governor General of the Grigori, Kokabiel, Valper Galilei, and your current associates are under arrest for disobeying the ceasefire and attempting to restart the hostilities among the three Factions. Either surrender now or be prepared to face me in battle, for I am Hyoudou Issei, the Red Dragon Emperor!" His brother calls forth the Boosted Gear and holds it up for those gathered to see.

Irina's eyes widen while her jaw drops just a bit at the sight of the two of them while her partner, Xenovia, looks annoyed and rather angry, as if they lied to her, which they never did, after all, neither of the two ever asked if they were aware of the supernatural world that's hiding from the view of normal humans. After all, the pair only asked if they were associated with the Student Council or the Occult Research Club of the academy and they answered honestly, they weren't nor have they been invited to join either. They prefer to avoid members of the two and they mirrored their actions in that regard unless it's about assigned school projects.

Kokabiel looks down at them from his position, it's clear the Fallen isn't overly impressed by either of the, but, well, that'll change. After all, Kokabiel won't be taking this serious at all and they'll use that to their advantage, after all, let the Devils and Church Exorcists deal with the rogue human elements, they should be able to do that at least as they'll be 'playing' with Kokabiel. It's a question of what kind of tune they'll need to use but, they'll do it simply because they've not as green or untested as said Fallen thinks they are.

Dragon shape-shifting is such a wonderful thing and something they already promised not to mention to Vali, more to do with Vali's personal concerns and issues then because they want an advantage over said half Devil. They've used it to hide themselves in the name of dealing with on the job training and tests. He knows there's a memory he's intentionally repressing concerning his twin and is happy to continue repressing it, even though there's time when Issei gives him looks of nervous concern and a touch of guilt whenever they are alone in the bathroom.

"A slip of a boy like you is the current Red Dragon Emperor? You're human!" The Fallen states with a sneer. "And look, you brought some friends too."

"We're more powerful then we look." States Issei in a firm voice but allowing himself to glance towards him and then at Asia who's behind him and to the right before again looking up at the Fallen. Asia's reaction is clearly more real then his own expression but then, they had more experience acting as they did, unintentionally ended up that once on Leviathan Serafall's show due to them needing to steal an actual set piece of the show. They've been unable to use those identities or even the last names since as she's current looking to have them on the show again.

And then a light spear forms, with Kokabiel stating, "Here's my answer." The spear sails towards them. "Make. Me."

Issei is sure to grab Asia while going right while he dodges to the left. Within seconds, they're both using magic to argument their bodies, from their skin and muscles to their blood vessels and bones. He recovers faster and quick casts Lightning Spells at the hovering Fallen. They didn't cost him much but it ensures that he's holding the Fallen's attention on him, although he could feel someone else staring rather intently at him while Irina cries out their names while Xenovia clearly realizes that they won't need to worry about the Fallen for a few minutes at least.

"Attack!" The blue haired Exorcist cries and he hears the engagement going on. Kokabiel moves somewhat in the air and just as it's clear the other is going to be coming at him, a rather large orb of fire hits Kokabiel's current exposed wings, with Issei cursing, "I missed! Fucking damn it!" Which wing was he aiming for? He wonders as Kokabiel's feathers burn.

The Fallen's pain is a soul wrenching bellow and sends waves of power around as Kokabiel tries to extinguish the flames. Which don't go out given the likely nature of enchantments intertwined with that orb of fire. The flames likely meant to consume the Fallen's reserves of magic as fuel instead of anything on the physical plane.

It's not long before the Fallen is raging out and he's already moving towards his twin, his weapons out and he just manages to swing a second before Kokabiel seemingly teleports before his elder brother. "You insect!" The Fallen growls, all the while the wings continue to burn, the feathers gone and the skin is beginning to expose the muscles under it. Without those feathers, the appendages look fairly odd, kind of like an actual bird's wing only far thinner and clearly with less 'meat'.

The axe causes a minor cut while he attempts to stab with the long dagger, aiming for where the kidney would be on a human, after all, the body plan should be similar enough to that of a human, why reinvent the way a human looking being works when there's already a decent one right there to be copied? The dagger enters cleanly and a light spear begins to form, only for Issei to punch Kokabiel in the face with a nasty right hook. His grip on the dagger is loose so he lets it go while ducking under the way Kokabiel is being sent flying.

The wall gives way to the flying body that is Kokabiel, then the next wall, and then a third with the fourth managing to put an end to the flight path. Sure, there's a number of other things destroyed but at least the fire isn't spreading. "I would have thought he'd go through five at least." His brother remark with a hint of a pout as he helps him up off the ground.

"If there hadn't been things in the way? Yea, sure, it could have happened." He assures his twin.

"You really think so? Oh, well, it's not like we'll get the chance to test that out." The fire is still burning brightly and given the number of wings this guy is reported to have, it's going to be a while before those flames fully consume the magical reserves, then again, getting Kokabiel to fling around more light spears should help eat away at said reserves as well.

The Fallen growls and a shield flares up, one that Issei likely been mentally preparing once that orb of fire had hit. Numerous light spears hit the shield, not just from the one side either but from all around them. While his brother holds the shield up, Kazu is busy crafting a particular nasty lighting bolt that's he's intertwining an enchantment into that will cause a pair muscle to paralyze up for a minute before fading to do it at a different location within the body, it should last for a good ten minutes and it's meant to annoy this guy, after all, allowing Kokabiel time to stop and think is a Bad Idea as the other is fair more experience in battle then the two of them and could pull out more then his share of tricks.

Now it's a balancing act of keeping Kokabiel from realizing that fact, which is going to be Hard and neither of them were any good with Illusion Magic which could help them compel the Fallen into not thinking anything through, to just keep attacking the two annoyances with last names Hyoudou, something the Fallen could easily fall into the trap of wanting to do anyway. He's going to have to keep it up with being 'weaker' then Issei in both magic and in a physical manner until the point where it's to their advantage to disillusion that idea.

The shield drops as the number of light spears seem to be less then before and Issei does a Transfer into the prepared spell. It activates and darts around until it hits Kokabiel, who's on the roof of a building. He begins to quick cast more Lightning Spells, some hitting while his twin is leaping up the side of the building to get at Kokabiel in a physical manner. Once his twin is engaging the Fallen, he takes a moment to get his bearings and walks over to pick up his two pieces of his long dagger, he sighs at the sight of it, picking the two pieces up off the ground.

"Well, it's to be expected, after all, it's not like I asked for an enchanted dagger or axe." He admits to himself. "Shouldn't be hard to find someone to reforge it." There's some of Kokabiel blood still staining the metal and he grins a bit at that fact, after all, he work with this.

Taking the butt of his axe, he crouches and begins drawing in the dirt some Norse Runes, nothing overly complicated but something to ensure that Kokabiel can't attack anyone save Issei and himself without incurring a Curse to his strength. It's actually helpful that they are twins and lived in the womb at the same time, meaning that he can stand in for his brother in this particular manner. It helps that both of them have engaged the Fallen, even if he's the one to cause first blood to be drawn viva his axe.

He knows he's in a bit of a rush but at the same time, he's never tried to use Norse Magic in this particular way so he's got to be careful by the order of runes. Plus, he's likely only got the one chance as he's not sure he'd find any more blood from said Fallen just laying there next to a weapon that shredded the blood. That's important, some of the more powerful magic deals with symbolism and the fall out of random circumstances. There's going to be random chance here and its clear that even if the Curse effects Kokabiel, there might be a loop hole, like preventing him from physically attacking them but allowing spells instead. Still, as long as the others notice the spells, they should be able to dodge or set up some kind of shield.

Concentrating, he does his best to keep his arm steady while taking calming breaths. Yes, he needs this done and his mind is racing with a number of emotions, doubt being the primary with the feeling of worry in concern for Issei being a secondary. Still, minutes flow pass and some of his worries are soothed by the cries and curses the Fallen bellows at his elder brother. Studying it a bit more, he adds the completion rune and then activates it by transforming a nail into a claw, cutting himself across the palm, balling said left hand into a fist with the blood dropping down from his hand, and it glows blood red as it accepts the two types of blood.

"What the fuck did you do?!" He hears Kokabiel roar as he feels something etch itself onto his own forehead, causing blood to drip a bit down his nose. He wipes it away and puts the axe onto his belt, calling upon his magic, he casts Flight Spell upon himself and flies through the air, rising up and dodging a few light spears before landing.

"Huh, so that's what an Angel's wing bones look like." He comments as he gazes thoughtfully at the bones hanging from Kokabiel's back while the fire continues to burn only closer to the back. His gaze switches to the forehead to find a Norse Rune etched into the Fallen's own brow and it's clear that the Fallen's really beginning to feel the toll of the fight.

Issei's looking far worst for wear but then, they're both still looking human and operating to current body limits, even with them using magic to increase that limit, after all, Issei's using Boosted Gear to Boost his ability to self heal the injuries he's taking from this fight. The rune upon his twin's forehead is the same as Kokabiel, which could mean that he's sporting the same rune. "You know, you could just surrender at this point. After all, there's nothing wrong with losing to this generation's Red Dragon Emperor." He remarks as it seems to be a bit of a breather and the Fallen's glaring look says it all, it seems that this one's pride won't let him end this peacefully.

He's rather stubborn. Ddraig states dryly and both of the twins snort at the slight widening of Kokabiel's eyes at the fact that yes, Ddraig is very much awake and likely been watching this whole time. Not wanting to admit he's at a lost as to how to deal with that fire, never mind the random jolts from your last lightning attack, the effects that Issei Boosted before the spell released. It's clear that the entrapped Dragon is finding this battle to be entertaining.

And then Kokabiel calls upon his other wings and the flames roar in response, transferring to the new wings, not that the multi-winged being likely noticed or cared, clearly thinking that killing them will cause the fire to go out, which it will not, not until those chains Goten and Kenta plan to call forth chain the now ten winged Fallen Angel. "Just die already! The war will start again! With the siblings of two of the Satans dead, it will be the Final War!"

It rains light spears once more and he's not able to dodge all of them, but then, he just managed to evade enough not to have any actually enter into his body, cut into his skin yes, tear his cloths, yip, but he's been lucky that the light spears being so weak that they can't get pass his deeper into his magically enhanced body. What cuts Issei gets are already healing and his twin's got a rather cocky smirk, even if his brother is almost naked at this point. He is rather glad they left their actual possessions in that dimensional pocket, then again, how could they not learn after the fifth time their cells and/or wallets get destroyed during a fight?

It's really the reason they learnt to create said space pockets really, neither Naruto or Vali carry anything of value, any wallets and IDs are all conjured but then Naruto does not own cloths, he just conjures it since as a Dragon and a skilled shape-shifter, he doesn't see the point of owning cloths suited to a particular body form. Then there's the fact that they never did get how Naruto can create a cell phone out of magic when it's clear he doesn't know how it even functions let alone as number associated to himself, Vali could conjure a duplicate cell phone that he owns but then, it seems he needs to own one to duplicate it and the number he has is from the US, its set up to automatically pay the monthly bill. It's a work in progress for them but given Vali's success in the field, they're confident that they'll figure it out given time.

Issei is already moving to engage Kokabiel in a physical manner while the other calls upon his magics to create a Light Sword. He takes out his one handed battle axe and moves to engage said weapon. They trade blows, with Issei doing his best to shield him from any of Kokabiel's counter attacks. More light spears try to spear them but they don't get pass their magical enhancements, not that it isn't taxing his reserves and Issei does Transfer a Boost to him when he's bleeding a bit more then he should.

The two magical effects from their respective spells continue to plague the Fallen with the fire eating away at the magical reserves while the lightning causing paralysis in a pair of muscles for a half a minute before moving to another part of the body to do it again, a count down of two minutes before it activates in the new location and repeat. It's clear that the Devils and the two Exorcists did finish with the humans that were aiding the clearly mentally unstable Kokabiel in this endeavor of restarting the war. The new wings are not looking so good and as minutes tick by and an hour finally passes, it's clear that Kokabiel's stubbornness is really what's fueling him now.

He manages to slice into a knee while rams the Fallen off the edge of the roof, upon landing on the ground, chains erupt from the ground. The flames slowly burn low before fading from the base of the now bony wings. Taking a breather, they both take note that it seems that the current Lucifer and Duke Gremory arrived. "Cloths." He murmurs to his brother, who snorts before looking pointly at him in return and he glances at his own cloths, it seems that his belt survived, just barely but it did.

Even though they both know they'll be feeling the backlash later, they keep up their magical enhancements within their respective bodies while conjuring something far more suitable for their official introduction to Sirzechs Lucifer and Zeoticus Gremory as the Red Dragon Emperor and younger brother. The Boosted Gear fades away as they call forth magic to ensure a soft landing. He easily moves to the left of his brother and with magic keeping him together, he doesn't feel much of his own injuries. The same is likely true for Issei as well.

Asia looks like she'd love to run over to them but then, she's near the pair they are approaching anyway. It seems that the pair of important Devils seem rather impressed with Soft Sunlight, it seems that she used it after all, more then likely in the defense of someone else but still, it's clear she understands that you do need to take a stand and fight, even if it's not in ones own defense. He would look around to judge what kind of looks the Holy sword is getting from the others but, well, best not take your eyes off the pair of predators standing before you. They demand the respect of their full attention after all, best not to insult them.

"Satan Lucifer. Duke Gremory." Issei greets the pair, bowing the right depth as etiquette demands and he follows suit. "Sorry it took so long but as you can see, he is in our custody and will be handed over to the Governor General for his disobedience."

"And what of the others that served under him?" Sirzechs inquires curiously, its clear that the Duke is content to allow his eldest to do the talking. "If any are fellow Fallen Angels, then they, too, will be handed over along with Kokabiel."

"As for the former members of the Church, I believe there are currently two Church Exorcists here to speak on behalf of said institution for I doubt the Governor General will welcome them as they have decided to follow Kokabiel on his quest of restarting the war between your Factions." His brother states calmly and clearly. Well, let's see Xenovia play nice with the current Lucifer and a high ranking member of the seventy-two pillars. He muses, after all, she's been needling not just Sirzechs' younger sister but Leviathan's own younger sibling.

After all, one thing has always been clear when dealing with the blue haired teenage girl and it's that she's blunt in her opinions plus she's really into the bigotry the Church sprouts. "I think they're kind of too new as Exorcists to be able to make that kind of decision, Issei-kun." Asia admits, not aware that she's likely saved the pair from falling into any number of pit falls that they'd likely run into blind when dealing with the two high ranking Devils. "Isn't that why they could be sent here? Because they couldn't send more experienced Exorcists without anyone taking note?"

"Indeed, I do believe you hit it on the head, young Argento-chan." Sirzechs remarks and the young teen blushes at the comment. There's a slight glint of amusement at how the young bearer of the Twilight Healing managed to inadvertently derail Issei's attempt at watching Xenovia try and be polite to the current Lucifer and Duke Gremory.

"At the very least one of them can make a phone call and have it on speaker to discuss matters." His brother remarks just as politely. "After all, it's not that late there as it is here. Plus, it'll allow them to report to their superiors while at the same time receive new orders."

Asia doesn't seem to have any objections to that idea and neither did Sirzechs, so, he pulls out his cell phone from his dimensional pocket and Asia walks over. "Please hand this over to Irina-chan and direct them somewhere safe before they make their phone call." He says kindly to Asia, who nods and before leaving, turns to say her farewells to the Satan and Duke.

There's a touch of interest in the Devil's gaze but then, it's understandable as it's unusual for a human to create something like that without a Sacred Gear. "It's been a while since I received a report of you peeping on the High School girls locker rooms." The Duke notes, piping in for the first time.

"Well, as my brother pointed out numerous times, women are being paid to have their photos taken in said states and in being filmed in said situations. Far be it for me to deprive the porn industry of funds to continue producing more of both." His twin explains in a light tone and there's a soft snort from the current Lucifer along with clear mirth in his eyes. Then again, a flicker of mirth had also been seen in the Duke's own eyes.

There's another reason for that but... it's in that repressed part of his mind so he doesn't even try to recall it. Sure, one day, it'll come flooding back to him but for now, his mental fortitude is standing strong as is his extreme desire to not remember whatever it is. "It just took a few years for it to sink in." He explains with a slight smile.

"That's an interesting sword you have entrusted Argento-san with. I don't recall a Holy sword like it before." Remarks Duke Zeoticus Gremory.

"It's one of Spade-san's creations, it was taken as a prize, and they decided it was a decent enough sword for their interest in enchanting it using an old method." His twin explains. "They lent it to my younger brother until he found what kind of weapons he wants to focus on."

"We could make out the axe." Sirzechs remarks and he pulls out the long dagger, only it's mostly the hilt that comes out. He shows the state of said weapon for a few seconds before sheathing it once more, after all, how could something snapped in two like the dagger is be any use in that fight? It didn't have its former reach nor did it have a point to stick into Kokabiel once again.

They make some small talk from there, news concerning the sightings of the current White Dragon Emperor and rumors of Vali's current agenda to subtle probing about Issei's goals and about what kind of training Bova's given them. Privately, he would love for them to put this off as he's getting pretty hungry and knows that Asia is going to fuss about the fact she can't do anything about the feedback they're going to be receiving from keeping the magical enhancement up and running for so long. Yes, Asia will be more then able to deal with the damage they're likely suffering from, or rather, he's suffering as he's pretty sure even without the Boosted Gear out, it's still aiding in Issei patching up his injuries.

About thirty minutes pass and the trio walk over, Xenovia clearly not happy while Irina looking subdued, and Asia not being overly affected, then again, it's not like the Church has any authority over her. The phone is in Irina's hand and she bows in polite respect, saying, "Until a team from the Church arrives, we ask that the prisoners be held here in Kuoh Town and under the care of the current co-owners, the Land Owners Sona Sitri and Ria Gremory."

"We will be collecting the remains of the attempted reforged Excalibur and any of the recovered Holy that the Genocide Archbishop has in his possession." Irina finishes before turning to him, offering the cell phone back. "Thank you for allowing us to use your phone, Kazu-kun."

"You are welcome and it was Issei's idea to lend you a phone." He says easily with a touch of an easy smile. Irina seems to be relieved that he's not any different. "Thank you both then."

"It's good to see you are ok, Irina-kun." Issei says in a light and teasing tone plus smile, she huffs at the -kun but, again, some of the tension leaves her. Xenovia doesn't say anything as he pockets the phone, no point in wasting any more energy.

"I believe I will come with you as you hand over Kokabiel and his followers." Sirzechs states while the older Devil says, "I best see about canceling school and begin taking stock of the damages."

"See you later, Irina-chan, Quarta-san." Asia says as they begin to break apart. They each saying their farewells before walking over to where the chains holding Kokabiel, the other Fallen have been placed near their leader with their own bindings. They are subdued and there's a frightful respect at the sight of Issei and a touch less respect for himself. The sight of the scabbed over run upon Kokabiel's forehead likely means their own remain, or at least his did.

Kokabiel is very much out of it, which means that the chains also had a secondary function woven in, then again, the two had time to prepare the creation of said chains. Issei calls forth Ddraig's Dragon Gate only it's under them and they sink into it. Soon enough, they arrive at the meeting spot that's not in Kuoh Town. "Sirzechs! You're looking well!" Azazel declares once the Dragon Gate fades away.

"And you look like you could use a shave." Sirzechs remarks in turn, not that the leader of the Grigori seem to mind the remark, then again, Azazel's fairly laid back kind of person. It's not long before Azazel tisks at the sight of their collective brows, then again, there's a slight snicker at the sight of the rune upon Kokabiel's forehead. Then a flat look at the bones upon Kokabiel's back.

"Given time, they should repair themselves." His elder brother states simply and there's more then a few Fallen that take a step away from the current Red Dragon Emperor. He places a comforting hand on Asia's shoulder as she looks half tempted to offer her services.

"Perhaps they'll serve as a visual reminder of what can happen to those that cross the current Red Dragon Emperor." Sirzechs remarks and Issei shrugs. "It's doubtful he'll be able to have many visitors will want to visit him at his new home in Cocytus." Azazel states and those Fallen Angels presence look shocked at the declaration. "Perhaps he'll come to regret his actions, perhaps not."

Then the Governor takes a few minutes to study the collection of others who fell under Kokabiel's sway. "I'll have to speak with Shemhazai and Baraqiel about their fates though. I didn't expect any save for Kokabiel to be returned."

"Is there anything more you need?" Issei asks and Azazel takes in the sight of them before saying, "Thank you for your aid in this endeavor and I'll be sure you receive a bonus for these others."

"Are you leaving as well, Satan-san?" Asia asks as Issei calls up a Dragon Gate that will take them straight home. The current Lucifer smiles gently at the teenager as he says, "I have some things to speak with Azazel about and perhaps lend him a hand in regards to this Murder we deposited upon him." It's clear that Sirzechs Lucifer already has a soft spot in regards to Asia, but then, that's not all that surprising given her caring and gentle manner, it's clear it's something she naturally possesses then what someone forced her to grow into.

"Bye Satan-san!" Asia says before she walks through the Gate, they waited for her to enter first. "It was a pleasure." He says politely before stepping through himself and he's pretty sure Issei's own is polite.

They are in their room and they both get to their respective beds before releasing the magic enhancing them, they both let out hisses of pain and begin to feel the feed back. Asia is clearly in distress over this but his body begins to heal so that it's just more of a mental feed back with phantom pricks throughout his body. Feeling Asia's hand let go, he's miserable but then, that's the price he's paying for the continuous use of his magic to enhance his whole body outside of battle and instead of just keeping it to just his muscles and skin.

In the end, he's form shifts into his natural body and the pressure in his head lightens enough for him to begin dozing. Once it feels his brain isn't telling him the room is spinning, then he'll get up to grab something to eat as he's Starving now. He's pretty sure that Issei also reverted to his actual appearance too given the soft sigh he hears from Issei. They just need to be careful of their current nails and horns as he doesn't feel like temporary enchanting his bed and such against his current features.

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

Naruto in his disguise as a Dragon kin agent of Tannin known as Golden in that magical language Albion taught him still trying to wrap his mind around the request that the current Leviathan wishes for him to preform. "Why?" He finally asks with a touch of puzzlement.

"Because she doesn't like it when I show up." The Devil summarizes and he tilts his head in a manner of confusion. "Which reminds me, I have a gift for you to take with you!"

Serafall uses her magic to summon a rather large box that's covered in pink stars on a white background. There's a bow on the top of it as well, it's color being bright pink with white trim. At least it's color scheme works with one another. He decides upon studying the gift.

Personally, he's not sure why the Satan before him just attends the conference anyway instead of sending him as her witness. He wonders why she's even bothering to send anyone as it's clear that Sirzechs Lucifer will be attending on behalf of the Satans along with his wife slash Queen. Then again, it might have more to do with delivering this package then needing someone to act in her stead. He muses to himself, he knows Vali's going to be in attendance as will the Hyoudou twins.

Well, I'm kind of busy and Rou already agreed to attend if I can't with Vali. Which it's looking like is going to happen. The disguised Dragon admits to himself. "As you wish." He states calmly as he straightens up and puts on a politely professional look.

Stepping forward, he feels Serafall's gaze upon his hood. He's wearing simply black robes with a deep hood so it can hiding his face while the rest hide his body's form. Upon his body, his collection of Spell Gems gently move and click against one another, glowing softly to show they currently contained a spell. He stands nearly seven feet in his disguise as Agent Golden and his color scheme for his scales is light gray with black being reserved for the horns, spines, and claws. Both eyes sport a dark purple color and clearly more Dragon then, well, he never really picked a race that had been Golden 's original one, which kind of means that he's usually contradicting himself concerning his origins, not that any seem surprised as he's clearly been through that ritual at least three times from how pronounce his Dragon features are, so much so that if it weren't for the set of small wings, many would likely mistake him for a lizard man.

The gift doesn't seem to weight much to him but it does clash with his robes and the glow of his Spell Gems. Putting it under his left arm, he asks, "What is the time I am to arrive it?"

"I think now is a good time." Serafall says and it doesn't surprise him as a Teleportation Circle glows in activation from under his feet. After all, this is the eighth time Serafall has done this to him and wonder if it might have something to do with his refusal to appear on her show as a token villain.

He appears in what he assumes to be the Student Council room and the work stops at the sight of him. "What are You doing Here?" The current heir of the House Sitri hisses out at the sight of him, this is her third time meeting him in his role as Agent Golden . It'll be Rias' sixth time, it's not that odd that the Lucifer has been trying to get his little sister interested in trying to recruit someone who's proven to be fairly capable in political matters and is in good standing with a former Dragon King but it's kind of because it's always her brother subtly directing her to him that she doesn't even consider the idea.

Then again, that engagement has been sorted out just fine, so there's no pressure for her to recruit heavy hitters for her Peerage. He reflects as he smoothly bows before one of the co-owners of Kuoh Town, saying, "Satan Leviathan has engaged my services to this night's meeting and has asked me to deliver this gift, although, I do not recall who it is to be given."

He easily moves the box from under his left arm and places it upon the desk, it's clear that in Sona's eyes, it might as well be a venomous baby hydra. "Hey! Why do you have your hood up?" Asks the seemingly only boy among the group of girls.

"You have delivered the package and can now be on your way." The younger sister of Leviathan states, cutting into the beginning of what could be an enlightening discussion. Then again, given his association with Tannin and the recent events concerning the current Red Dragon Emperor, its clear that Sona rather not have him around any more then she must.

The current situation between the co-owners and Hyoudou Issei is still rather brittle even though they did deal with Kokabiel, leaving the others to deal with the underlings. That the pair owe the Dragon Emperor in their mists for helping to contain the situation isn't something they liked. The two's pride have been bruised by the fact that a pair of 'humans' not only engaged a Fallen Angel possessing ten wings but managed to win let while also get away without losing a limb or almost dying from some life threatening wound.

"As you wish, Heir Sitri." He says smoothly and bows before he exits out of the room, wondering if she's now regretting her hasty decision as school is still in session and he's rather tall never mind suspicious looking. Not that it matters as he taps one of the Spell Gems before the door closes and it covers him in an illusion of a thirty something, non-descriptive Japanese business man in a neat black suit and shoes.

After all, using a Teleporting Circle in the 'secure' Student Council room would just shatter what little confidence in her spell work concerning the security of the Kuoh Academy. It's not that Sona's bad at magic, it's just that as Agent Golden , it's in his job description to be a sneaky son of a bitch with a silver tongue and sharp of wit, capable to getting into and out of places he really shouldn't be.

Funny how it just clicks with what I did back with Albion and as a ninja.

Then again, even back then as a blond human who just happened to be the prison for the nine-tails, he'd be able to sneak around in an orange jumpsuit. Out run various pursuers, never mind setting up pranks done up as traps. His Henge Jutsu wasn't an illusion and looking back, he should have used it for a hell of a lot more then just knocking out pervert men, like actually go buy groceries at a cheaper price and if he'd known about his luck at gambling, use it to appear as an adult to add more padding to his wallet.

Conjuring a cell phone and using a bit of magic to ensure it'll connect to the local network, he texts Rou and Vali that he'll be observing the meeting in his role as Agent Golden . Once they reply, he allows the phone to return to its previous state of energy. He'll grab a few bottles of Sake before arriving at Bova, after all, this is Japan, it's unlikely the local store will have decent rum and zero chance at finding mead, never mind the idea that the two co-owners might engage in a petty revenge on Bova by ensuring that there is only cheap rum to be found in Kuoh Town and a slight pull of the strings for the surrounding area.

Well, that's only if they are aware of Bova's tastes in liquor... Naruto muses to himself. It's not something Tannin or his sons likely mention or the topic ever comes up. After all, who would think that a Dragon cares about the taste of food or liquor?

They arrive at the room to find Kazu and Issei already near Azazel while Asia is off to the side speaking with a pair who are clearly Church Exorcists. Few of those here likely knew that Vali's an agreement with Azazel, after all, the current White Dragon Emperor has proven in the past that he doesn't care for the politics of the supernatural world and many likely continue to assume that her often roommate and friend is still an independent recluse with no ties to any Pantheon or Faction. Or that if there's a group of supernaturals he favors, it's the Dragons.

In contrast, Hyoudou Issei has been in contact with Azazel and given the events concerning Kokabiel, most are taking it for granted that the Red Dragon Emperor answers to the Governor. There's no official agreement between the two, the only reason why Issei even reached out had everything to do with the assassination attempt on his life viva some random Fallen with too much of a power lust and too little sense to realize that maybe she's been played. Issei got the number from Vali and, well, that's that.

Oh, Azazel likely guesses where Issei got the number from and is slowly figuring out that the current pair of Dragon Emperors aren't going to engage in the traditional all out brawls of their predecessors whenever they meet up. Not that it they won't get into said brawls but they'll likely have them arranged in advance and maybe in some pocket dimension so that nobody notices them going at it, so that nobody thinks to take advantage of them during or after said brawl. For now, Vali's waiting for Issei to fully mature in body and become skilled in magic so they can have something of an equal match where they don't have imposed limits or restrictions, given that both aren't fully human, a decade wasn't much of a wait but then, given the current political climate, it's not like either of them won't have something keeping them busy.

It takes Rou a bit to realize that Asia is wearing Soft Sunlight, she recalls Naruto doing a bit of reforging concerning said sword along with making use of special runes that apparently the Fae help humans create once upon a time. Then with the leftover Divine metal, he'd forged her a nice metal shirt that's enchanted to fit her, passively self mend itself, self cleaning, and to comfortable, it's decent armor given it's as thick as an actual shirt. She's knows enough Transformation Magic to alter the shirt to appear in many different cuts, colors, and sport images that she wants it to display, the magic typically lasts a good five hours before the shirt reverts back to its natural appearance.

She's not wearing it tonight though, more for the fact that it would be hard to explain why she's got a spell active and who made said shirt, after all Divine metals are found in the smiths of Deities. It's a headache best never experienced or for anyone to be aware of in the first place. Even if there's a good chance of something happening to interfere with this meeting to begin taking steps towards a lasting peace, after all, there's plenty of people in opposition to the very idea of peace with their ancient enemies among all the Biblical Factions and who knows who among the other Pantheons don't like the idea of it happening as well as peace means that the avenues of profit into buying or researching weapons will go down, never mind the private bounty lists.

The Church Exorcists pause at the sight of Vali and herself before glancing in trepidation towards the Hyoudou twins while Asia just looks at the pair of them in confusion. Then the blond leans over and whispers who Vali is and her eyes widen before glancing at her in a questioning manner. It's hardly surprising that any of them know of her or her relationship with the current White Dragon Emperor, in a way, this is her first real public appearance as being officially in Vali's 'camp'. Not even Azazel knows of her as they've never meet nor have either Naruto and Vali spoken of her, so, in all likely hood, they're going to go with the most obvious conclusion even though, currently in this room, only four people know who she's really dating, well, six if one includes Albion and Ddraig but those two aren't likely going to be asked about something as 'silly' as if she's really Vali's girlfriend slash bed-warmer.

"Hello!" Asia calls out cheerfully at them both. Vali nods an acknowledgement while she gives her fellow bearer of the Twilight Healing a smile, greeting in turn once she strolls over to the trio. "Hello, who are you with?"

"I'm with Issei-kun and Kazu-kun. I'm Argento Asia." Asia introduces herself. "Ye Rou and I'm attending in place of Uzumaki-san tonight." She says after giving the two a chance to introduce themselves, only for them to decline.

"The Dragon isn't coming?" The blue haired teenager questions with a hint of disbelief. She hums a positive, explaining, "He's on an errand, it's one that will keep him from Lucifer-sama's side for the night." All true as Naruto will not be standing with them during this meeting.

"I don't think we've heard of you before, Ye-san." The blond comments politely while Asia looks a tad uncomfortable, likely aware that they are being rather rude by not introducing themselves. "I'd be surprised if you did." She states calmly and politely.

"Do you have a Sacred Gear? I have one, it's the Twilight Healing!" Asia says, breaking the slight tension that rose up. "I, too, am in possession of one of the seven Twilight Healing Sacred Gears." She replies to Asia and the younger's eyes wide at the claim. "Wow," then after a bit of a pause while the two Church Exorcists stiffen slightly, it seems nobody told them that there were more then just the one Twilight Healing Sacred Gear, "So... what does that make us?"

"Whatever we decide it makes us." She says simply. "Sharing the same Sacred Gear isn't all that odd as most of the more common ones have at least two to their number."

It's clear that this is a rather new plus and that it'll take some time for it to sink in. "So, how have you been finding Japan?" She asks, changing the topic to something that should be safer and not overly so personal.

And so, for the next little while, she listens as Asia talks about the differences between Italy and Japan, if she's asked something, she mostly answers honestly, making mention of being from China herself how some of that differs from Japan from with admissions of having gone on a few trips about Europe and America. Yes, she admits to being a Magician and belonging to a cabal or coven, she can't recall which should be applied to them really, which is how she's been able to travel so much even though she's not that wealthy. Summoning and Teleportation Magic tend to aid one another when it comes to long distance travel.

They stop at the arrival of the Devils, which include Naruto in his Dragon kin disguise. The dull black robe with glossy black embroidery, it's the kind of look that isn't typically associated with Naruto which is likely why it's so strange for her to know it's the former Hokage aspiring Naruto who prefers lighter shades of colors, never mind the effect of the soft spring green and baby blue glowing gems which just makes the whole look all that more eerie. All that's missing is a staff of some sort to complete the image of a sinister caster. Rou muses to herself. The hood is up, so she doesn't get a glimpse of his features and the robe helps hide his body's shape and deep sleeves hiding his hands.

Asia and herself give one another a look before they drift off to their respective Dragon Emperor. Rou's getting a better look at the rest of the Devils, the crimson haired male is clearly Sirzechs Lucifer and it's Naruto who's to the Satan's right with his old friend and fellow Satan Ajuka Beelzebub to the left with Rais Gremory and Sona Sitri following behind with their respective Queens walking next to them, she's forgotten their names honestly or did she ever been told the names of their peerages? She glances to find both Kazu and Issei frowning slightly at Naruto, but then, it's likely hard to not look at the seven plus be-robed unknown who just entered with the Devils.

Greetings are exchanged while Naruto merely murmurs his own greetings while moving to the back of the group. "So, who's this?" Azazel asks once the pleasantries have been exchanged, nodding towards Naruto.

"Satan Leviathan couldn't make it so she requested Golden , to attend in her stead." The name is in a very odd language and from the look upon Azazel's face, it's one that even the Fallen doesn't recognized. She wonders what it translates too, then again, Albion and Vali often call Naruto by another name as well, one that Vali doesn't know the translation to. All Naruto says on the matter is that it's the name Albion gave him back when the other 'donated' magic to a dying Naruto the Griffin.

Naruto pulls down the hood and there's a sharp intake of breath, even she does it at the sight of light gray scales with a pair of black short ram horns and a slight row of black spines. The head is more akin to that of a Dragon or lizard and dark purple eyes are in evidence. "Dragon kin." Azazel notes after a few seconds.

"I serve under Tannin and he had no objections to my presence on Satan Serafall's behalf this evening." Naruto explains in a rather odd accent and the way the mouth moves. She glances to notice that both Kazu and Issei look rather interested, but then, the two have every right to be. It's the look of thought upon Asia's face that answers if she's aware of the twins' actual race and a glance towards Issei and then at Kazu, although it's clear that she's more interested in Issei then in Kazu.

"Born or ritual?" The Governor General asks and there's a slight snort from Sirzechs, who beats Naruto in answering that, "Ritual, given the inconsistencies of his back ground."

There's a look of fake offense in those purple eyes. "Wait, what? You mean someone put him through a ritual?" The blond Exorcist asks and the room kind of turns to look at her.

"You can't really force someone through a ritual like that." Tell that to the twins over there. She thinks to herself as Azazel continues. "And expect them to survive, I believe the turn over for the animal infusion ritual has maybe ever two in five surviving only to be killed to be served up in a special meal that can only be stacked thrice and even then, people can and do end up not benefiting from it if eaten too often in a certain amount of time."

"And judging from Golden 's appearance, he's been through the ritual at least three times." The leader of the Grigori muses after a calculating look. "Which explains the memory inconsistencies."

There's a feral grin upon Naruto's current appearance's snout. "Maybe I have, maybe I haven't." Naruto states and most of the leaders seem to dismiss said claim but Vali and her know that he hasn't undergone said ritual at all.

"Why would he want to like a monster?" The blue haired Exorcist demand before an elbow from the other manages to find a home in the other's mid-section. The blue haired one glares at her partner while Ajuka picks up the explanation.

"For the power it grants those that survive the infusion process." The green haired Devil states. "Unlike most empowering rituals, none have yet to figure out how to fully rob a Dragon kin of their newly gained body and magic. Nobody knows of a way to reverse the change as well, it's one of the oldest rituals of its kind and it's also the one most likely to be preformed compared to the others, one that even the Evil Piece system was inspired by."

She's kind of interested in hearing more only, it seems that the rest of the Church group decides to arrive. Two Archangels, Michael and Gabriel, arrive accompanied with a much older woman, one who inspires a slight gulp from the blue haired Exorcist. More greetings exchange and introductions made, with Vali introducing her as Rou Ye, one of the seven Sacred Gears of Twilight Healing which Issei used when introducing Asia.

Gabriel's gaze softens upon the sight of Asia but widens slightly after a light study of Soft Sunlight. It seems another realizes the modifications Naruto made to the Holy sword he took off of Freed, not that they likely know that it's that particular sword. At this rate, Naruto should just gift the sword to her as everyone is going to assume she's the chosen welder or something along those lines. She muses to herself as she listens as minor banter begins now that the introductions are out of the way.

Some minutes in, she glances around to find that Naruto's put up the hood now and Kazu seems to be studying the glowing gems strung around the body. While interesting, she's not sure what the point of them are given. Rou glances a bit over to Vali who seems to be politely listening to the current speaker and decides it can wait for either a break or when Naruto's not playing his role as Tannin's Dragon kin agent.

Then the meat of the conference comes up from the Archangel Michael, "How do we prevent another Kokabiel from starting the war up again?"

"Why, we officially make peace with one another instead of keeping to the ceasefire." Azazel states and, well, there's a number of voices ringing out, "What?!"

Well, that's a waste of time and resources. Naruto can't help but think as he watches the Khaos Brigade's forces for this attack upon the likely beginning of peace discussions are easily becoming nothing but blood and corpses. It's not just a bunch of Devils among the assault forces but Fallen and Stray Magicians.

The Khaos Brigade's own forces aren't even under the same banner and so there's a great deal more friendly fire then there really should be. The Stray Magicians do their best to follow the orders of the other forces but, well, that's a lost cause and more then a few Stray Magicians are out right killed by angry Devils or Fallen. In this situation, assassinating the commander wouldn't end things as it's clear that this whole attack is a passion driven thing then done with any real thought out plan and carried out in a disciplined manner.

A few of the enemy forces die from his ice spears to the head, tapping a Spell Gem to conjure up said ice attack. He's skulking through the shadows and sniping at those who look like they are about to cause serious damage to someone who's not among the Khaos Brigade. Both Asia and Rou are busy moving about the field of battle with one of the teenage Exorcists guarding them, the blue haired one is with Rou while Asia as the other, their names have slipped from his mind given the situation.

Then Vali comes into sight of his hiding spot and it's then that he gets his first glimpse of the infamous God Killing Wolf of Norse Pantheon, Fenrir. Then a pair of smaller wolves, one sporting streaks of yellow among its bleach white fur and the other is ebony black with frosted silver about the back coat. Hati, the Moon Chaser and Skoll, the Sun Chaser. He realizes as the nearest of the smaller of Fenrir sons catch whiff of his scent, glancing his way, it's Hati's blue gaze not yet focus upon him while the ears flicker while the nose is busy sniffing.

Tapping a Spell Gem, he calls up an ice spear while Hati growls within seconds of said creating it. Skoll pauses from following their father's example of using magic to empower a leap towards the roof tops in pursuit of his charger slash younger brother. Skoll's bright yellow eyes don't really focus on him and Hati huffs something in Wolf, the Sun Chaser whines slightly but, in the end, follows after Fenrir, leaving the Moon Chaser to deal with him.

"Dragon kin." Hati growls out with a hint of dark pleasure in Norse. "Hati." He states in the same tongue in a simple and passive tone, he's not liking the thought of fighting this magical wolf in his current disguise. It's limiting him to a certain skill set, all of which deals with striking from the shadows and dealing a killing blow before the target is even aware he's there if he must fight at all.

The head lowers and ears turn backwards with a hint of flattening, he gets a better look at the silver glinting from the black coat as it puffs up. Tail goes up and tension coil, ready to spring forward to snap at him. There's just enough room at this point for Hati to bite him before he can withdraw deeper between the school buildings.

He's mentally prepares his next course of actions, in the end, it's best to do the unexpected in this case. Hati is clearly also going over his own set of tactics but given his image of a skulker... As he is about to complete that thought, Hati's front paws lift a bit off the ground and he releases the spear, sending it at the left eye, he's also leaping forward. His robe alters itself the moment his hands touch the ground so he can move on all fours far more comfortably, running under the now leaping Hati, it's unlikely the ice spear managed to hit the eye, the cheek is the most likely.

Hati growls in wolf, curses most likely, while he's rearing up, leaping into the air to land on the Moon Chaser's back. Clamping down into the hide of Hati viva his small talons on his hands and toes. His hood bounces around but does keep his head covered. Both of them snarl, although Hati's is far more throaty then his own as he curls his scaly lips back to bare his own set of fangs, not that anyone can see it.

Hati's eyes display the shock and a hint of disbelief at the fact that he didn't flee like the skulking rat or that he had the balls to leap onto his back. The growling becomes a tad more thunderous as Hati recovers and the Moon Chaser flex to bite down on him. Naruto does his best to back hand the incoming snout, hitting the nose, which is rather sensitive given that Hati's jaws snap shut before getting close. A hint of disbelief and astonishment that such a thing even happened.

A minute of inaction is enough for someone to the pause and the senior Exorcist of one Griselda Quarta arrives with Yuuto Kiba, bearer of one of the Sword Birth Sacred Gears, yet, there's something... Pushing the matter aside, he does a back flip off the back of Hati the moment the two attack the Moon Chaser. He taps a good seven Spell Gems to conjure an icy net to entrap Hati, hampering the legendary wolf's movements before he lands in a crouch.

While he would love to look about for Rou or Vali, he knows he shouldn't take his eyes away from his current opponent. The two sword warriors press the advantage while he keeps a finger upon a Spell Gem to help keep the icy net empowered. The sight of Hati getting attacked by the pair, it's hard for him to not recall memories of Kurama and the fight of getting said Entity to submit to his will. So not the time to be remembering any of this. He reminds himself as he switches to the next gem.

As they are about to do the killing blow, he subtly casts a spell upon the dying Hati, ensuring that the Moon Chaser enters into suspended animation with and illusion of blood still flowing from the various wounds, he moves from his position in a crouch. "My thanks." He states to the pair as the icy net vanishes as soon as he stops touching the Spell Gem.

"You have our thanks as well." States the elder woman before the two glance behind him and head off to continue doing their part. He approaches the 'dead' Hati and places a hand upon the flank of the mythical wolf. Glancing up along the roof tops, he then glances around the battle field. It's clear that things are winding down and he taps into his actual reserves to begin creating of a duplicate body of shadow and blood. Then, he Transforms Hati into the form of a normal size wolf pup of about a month of age.

Gently picking up the pup, he pulls the tiny body into his robes, sending the now puppy Hati to his room at his Lair before seeking the brother, Skoll. He arrives in time to barely save Skoll's life and does the same for the Sun Chaser. Feeling the weight of memories concerning Kurama lighten on his conscious, he finds Vali speaking with Odin with an unconscious Fenrir. Loki is covered in chains, he's not sure when the pair of Gods arrived but clearly they had at some point.

Naruto moves about the battle field, observing the fall out and moving among the bodies, looking for any damning evidence of informants or clues to any over reaching goal, then again, its founder being the Dragon God, it's likely to do with the Apocalypse Dragon and the Dimensional Gap. After all, for some reason, the Dragon of Dragons is now set up in the Dimensional Gap and that's kind of strange as it use to be Ophis claiming that space as their own private Lair. Nobody knew where the Great Red had claimed as his lair before taking residents in the Dimensional Gap nor did anyone know why he moved into the space when he hadn't shown any interest in it before.

Ophis wanting their previous Lair back is understandable but there's more going on then just the two getting into a fight over the Dimensional Gap. There is something going on, some kind of recent development and it involves the Dimensional Gap. Glancing around until his gaze rests upon Kazu before switching to Asia who's next to him, healing him. Tilting his head a bit as he tries to recall any Deity setting up something like the Sacred Gears or creating what could be considered a magical computer that covers the world, yet none come to mind.

Beyond collecting some notable items from the dead, like magically enchanted items, damaged scrolls, and what personal effects beyond just jewelry or wallets, he also had to disable a number of traps to keep said bodies from exploding or destroying any of value on the bodies. It's likely for the best that it's him who's doing this morbid task as he's got the right skills then the younger Devils or the young Exorcists as they never dealt with the idea of people turning their own bodies into a grenade in hopes of doing further damage to the victors. Some of the humans, he had to reach into their very body cavities to get at the trap with his bare hands, using his own strength to get pass whatever magical barrier that sprung up once the body stopped moving to get at it.

The leaders likely knew why he'd do that but they are busy with what reinforcements that arrived, thus busy and not able to explain what he's doing when he does that, not even Griselda seems aware of the reason why he'd thrust his right hand into the dead bodies of apparently at random. He's fairly certain that the ones he does it to are the less experienced Magicians as they likely hadn't noticed what someone had surgically implanted into their upper body cavities, typically near their heart. The older and more experienced ones seem to go in two paths as they typically go about disabling and removing it upon finding it, they don't set up a new trap or, rather uncommonly, they have a prepared ritual that springs up the moment they've been dead for ten minutes, something meant to leech the very life out of the one approaching said body with a secondary effect meant to mask the life leeching.

None of the Devils or Fallen have their bodies trapped upon their deaths, likely out of foolish pride of them being able to survive such an attack or just evidence of their lack of preparation. With the last of the Khaos Brigade bodies searched and what traps they held gone, he walks off a distance before tapping one of the Spell Gems and washing away the grim from his arm before doing another cleaning spell on his robes. With that, he find a decent spot where he can begin unloading his inner pockets of what he found, turning it all out.

Once that's done, Naruto takes a few seconds before glancing out at the latest turn of events and finding himself rather emotionally spent, yet, he really should pay attention to what's going on. Tapping a Spell Gem, he uses a spell to magically sort the items into two categories while activating the spells in the hood of the robes to help him pick up the words being spoken about the collection of groups. Most are to be expected while some going on among the younger Devils of the co-owners' peerages are doing their best to decompress over the night's battle with Xenovia cursing out his actions towards the dead, mentioning how he singled out the human members among the fallen for mutilation, and then there's the one going on that's going to have greater impact down the road that's going on with Issei and Vali plus their respective Heavenly Dragons, yes, it seems that the two had set up some security for their discussion yet, it's hasty and needing to be few in nature not to draw the attention of the various groups.

The four are discussing how they're going to proceed from here, the act they each felt they could pull off honestly. Mention of compulsions and a single mention of a Geas croup up, at least for the remainder for the night as tonight's battle has taken their toll upon the pair of Dragon Emperors. He glances among the non-important items before picking out a ring and begins to create a pair of clip on earrings, it's just a simple old gold ring so no gems on it, but he pulls the two to his mouth and uses Transformation Magic to create carbon crystals as he exhales into a setting on the two. The crystals are very fragile and barely visible but should serve as an anchor for the matrix of compulsions that it sounds like the pair are thinking of inflicting upon themselves.

He then Teleports the clip ons to the pair just as they began to realize they don't have anything to be a physical medium for said matrix and they haste, for good reason, to set them on themselves, on their own magical reserves. Naruto hears Albion and Ddraig chuckle at the appearance of said clip ons while the two bearers clearly didn't know what to say for a good minute. "Thank you, Naruto." Vali finally says and Issei echos the current White Dragon Emperor, although Issei now knows that he'd been bearing witness to their discussion.

You are welcome. He thinks to himself with a slight smile and widens his listening spells to get a better idea of what's going to happen next before the farewells are exchanged. Putting the non-important items back into his inner pockets, he grabs the rest and begins walking over to where Ajuka is, as the Satan Beelzebub isn't busy beyond studying the body of 'Hati'.

"I sorted out what's important from the not important." He states calmly. Ajuka turns away from the 'body' and inclines his head slightly.

"I see, anything interesting?" The Satan inquires and he replies, "Nothing ground breaking. It's clear that for at least two sub-groups, this was an act of passion while the stray Magicians were likely given orders to support their fellow Khaos Brigade beyond just going for the Seal Bishop."

"Never mind the inclusion of Loki's son and grandchildren." Ajuka notes and he is fairly sure that the reason why body has started to skill the two dead wolves have to do with Odin being here. Before leaving, the Norse God will likely order the pair of bodies burnt to ashes.

"I saw the young White Dragon Emperor speaking with Odin with an unconscious Fenrir near them." He recalls thoughtfully. "I did not wish to get too close as to attract their attention."

"A new recruit under the young half Devil's banner." The Satan remarks and that's a conclusion it thought up as well, but hadn't thought it was something Vali would go for. Then again, Hidden Village LARP is going to be under Issei's banner once Kazu's membership to said group is more common knowledge and they are in need of protection from being considered a stray Magician cabal. He reflects.

"Hard to believe that the current Red Dragon Emperor and his twin brother are Dragon kin." Ajuka remarks and he blinks, oh, he's seen the pair in their natural form. "I would not have thought Bova would allow the Red Dragon Emperor to under go one of the rituals given the random element involved." He idly muses out loud. "Never mind their current age."

"Indeed." The Satan states and they turn their attention to the number of items that he's carrying under his respective arms. Ajuka barely makes a gesture and the various loose papers are pulled from the various places, unfurling while hovering before the Beelzebub for the Devil to read.

He is patient and that he's still on Stage, so he can't break his Role until this Act is done, allowing the Actors to file off the Stage.

The Dance Between Death and Life P9: DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"So..." Naruto glances over towards the Fallen Angel who's leaning against the door of the hotel room that he's sharing with Vali. Stepping in, the Governor General allows the door to close before adding,

"Uzumaki Naruto, commonly known as Sapphire in the Dragon Lands and the infamous Golden Dragon."

He closes the book he'd been reading to give the elder supernatural being his fully attention as Vali's off grabbing pick up their supper. Rou's doing her own version of damage control concerning her connection with the LARP group that the other reincarnation people started up and yet, she's clearly in the White Dragon Emperor camp. It's getting well known that Kazu's been training as a Magician before the ritual Bova put the twins through that woke not just Ddraig but the trace remains of Dragon blood within the younger twin and it's the same Cabal Rou also got her own magical training and learnt to use her Sacred Gear.

"Should I repeat your own, Azazel? But then, I would assume that the list is must be nothing but background noise at this point." He remarks in his disguise as a Half-Devil with simple chemical hair dye making his hair glossy black and a pair of non-prescription glasses, taking off the glasses, he puts them on the end table.

The elder seems rather bemuse by his remark along with the frank tone he spoke in. The Dragon considers just why he's getting approached by the Fallen as they let the silence hang between them, then a number of reason slowly come to mind. "Does it bother you that I got to Vali first?" He inquires softly as he does his best to pick up any ques about the Fallen's state of mind upon that question.

"More that Dragons seem to see if fit to approach the current set of Dragon Emperors." The other male states and he represses the urge to sigh along with looking away. "I doubt my assuring you that it was my own idea to seek out the latest White Dragon Emperor won't reassure you any." He states dryly. Only perk his curiosity even more.

"You have seen the video recording of my natural form, have you not?" Naruto asks, deciding for something not as hard to swallow as being an old friend of the Vanishing Dragon reborn as a Dragon and waited until he was at the acceptable age to start looking for the latest bearer of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear. "Pretty different compared to the other known species. My clutch siblings are all Flame Dragons as are my parents." He admits with a sigh, it's unlikely the Fallen got that bit of information.

"I'm bigger then them already and yet we're the same age." He continues. "How old would you say I am?"

"I doubt there's any true expert on your race but I'd have guess at least a young adult." Azazel admits after a bit. "I'm a preteen in Dragon terms." He states and that sparks interest in the Fallen's eyes but also perhaps else...

"So, is this Q and A?" He asks one of the leaders of the Biblical Faction with a hint of curiosity after a bit of silence. After all, Vali's due back soon enough and he doubts that Azazel is someone the half-Devil wants to see upon returning to this hotel room as they are here to take a break from reality by playing tourist along with attending the local Gaming Convention, which they are both keen to attend for slightly different reasons.

"How are you getting along with Fenrir?" And he doesn't see how that is relevant, then again, nobody knew beyond Albion, Fenrir, Rou, and Vali that he saved the two sons, who are now looking like twelve week old pups for... reasons that center around them being far less likely to cause permanent injury to Rou when they want to play with her. "I established my dominance and other then I am making clear minor displays of that dominance, he tends to keep his fangs and growls to himself."

After all, the Great Wolf knew his sons when he smells them and it's clear who's scent it is covering them, so Fenrir is a touch more willing to tolerate him as a fellow second in command then put Naruto into his 'place' under Fenrir's chain of command. The split is, Rou is Naruto's while Hati and Skoll fall under Fenrir. Given time, who knows how things will play out but for now, things are stable among the White Dragon Emperor's 'camp'.

"Must have been some fight then." Is all that Azazel comments and he shrugs slightly. "Wolves need a clear hierarchy, they feel secure knowing where they stand in their pack." He states calmly.

"Are you sure you're a preteen?" The other asks with a hint of exasperation and he holds out his left arm, allowing it to transform into a miniature version of his own natural arm. Turning his gaze upon the golden scales, he tests a few until he finds one that clearly ready to be shed. Plucking it takes a few seconds as he moves it back and forth a bit before beginning to tug it out from its place, with it now in hand, the limb flows back into the previous state.

"This is for testing my age and life stage, nothing more, understand?" He tells the Fallen as he turns his gaze back upon the other, holding the now much larger scale up in his right hand. "Just your age and life stage." Azazel promises after a bit, interest clearly glinting in those slightly red hazel eyes.

After a few seconds of giving the elder supernatural a hard look, he gets up off of his seat and walks over, handing the scale to the Fallen. The scale grows to its natural size now that it's not touching him and Azazel's gaze is now on the golden scale in his own right hand. I better not regret this... He thinks to himself, it's not like it's uncommon for a Dragon to sell their own discarded scales on the magical market but then, those have been magically 'sanitized' so there isn't a 'living' connection between the one who shed them and the now sold scale itself. The process also is the reason why nobody could create an actual suit of good armor out of Dragon scales, even if they came from the same Dragon.

The old male puts the scale away and is about to say something when the door opens. "AH!" Cries a child's voice and they spy Vali coming out of Albion's Dragon Gate.

Concern for the kid, he's already moving to give the red head a look over, the cloths being a bit on the worn side plus there's something kind of familiar about the kid... "Huh, where did you find a kid Devil, Vali?" He wonders out loud as the kid recovers enough to notice him, wide eyes blinking into his own sapphire blue.

"What are you doing here, Old Man? We're here on vacation, remember?" Vali remarks while he realizes just who's kid this is and then snorts at the sight of the cloths, after all, they really do help hide the fact that this is the son of the current Satan Lucifer and the entitled Strongest Queen.

Millicas ducks his head upon realizing that he's been staring at Naruto and bows as he introduces himself, "Hello, I'm Millicas Gremory. Sorry for staring but... You're a Dragon!" He wonders if there shouldn't be illusions of stars shining in those grey blue eyes.

"Just checking to be sure you arrived safely." Azazel replies to Vali's question while he sighs a bit, it's pretty clear that any male traveling with Vali at this point who comes across as a half-Devil is likely Naruto, dyed hair or not. "Yes, yes I am and how long have you been away from your parents and grandparents?" He's pretty sure that the kid is living with his grandfather, Duke Zeoticus.

"Ah..." Millicas glances off to the side, likely at Azazel at this point while he hears Vali groan, he can already imagine the hand that's covering the young Lucifer's eyes at this point. "He's a softy for kids." He assures the youngest member of the supernatural world.

Vali snorts while Azazel chuckles, but doesn't deny it and Millicas does his best to not look unsure but clearly at a loss of what to do.

Then again, how often has the young Devil ever spent time in the company of strangers without a member of the Gremony house hold? "Vali rescued you and it's not like any of us are nameless strangers, you know our names after all." He gently points out and that did seem to get a nod from the kid.

Yes, he feels measuring gaze of a certain Fallen but he's a bit more focus on the kid before him. It's been a while since he's had to deal with someone about this size, let alone age. He crouches down but is careful not to touch Millicas, even if he wanted to place a comforting hand on a shoulder, he didn't want to invade Millicas' personal space given the situation. After all, they were still essentially strangers beyond the boy knowing their names and that Vali is responsible for getting him away from whoever took him.

Millicas stares at him a bit more before reaching out and, well, touching his hair. He doesn't react although Millicas does flush in embarrassment but it's clear that the kid is curious. Naruto's certain that if he were in his actual form, the youngest Gremory would be likely itching to touch his scales. It's just something about not being human or naturally human shaped that just seems to cause people want to reach over to touch the clearly non-human shaped being as long as it's not a scary situation.

Mentally sigh, he shifts into a miniature version of himself, about the size of a Great Dane as he doesn't want to take up a lot of room once Millicas isn't touching his hair. Eyes widen and awe is once more on the young Devil's face while the door gently closes and Millicas glances likely over to Vali, as if seeking permission which he only allows his tail tip to twitch slightly in annoyance of being thought of as a pet but, again, somethings are just that ingrained into most cultures. With likely a sign of approval, he mentally hears Albion snicker in his head, Millicas takes a step closer before beginning to pet his scaly neck.

"Well... I'm not sure but there was this... I thought it was a mirror only, it turned out to be someone looking exactly like me!" Millicas begins to explain with a touch of anger and undertone of unease after spending a few minutes collecting himself after moving to sit down on the floor next to him. Leaning a bit into him while he remains sitting and he lets the kid do so.

He glances towards Azazel as Millicas continues, "Then, whoever they were, push me and... I don't know what happened afterwards only that I woke to find myself dressed in these cloths and with my arms tied up behind my back in a small empty room. I don't know how long I was out only that it must have been a while."

Azazel's face sports a frown while Vali's stormy expression... Oh look, it must relate to the Khaos Brigade. He concludes while Millicas' talks about the few interactions with a pair of his captives and how they would only bring him food and drink for six times along with only two trips to a restroom, not that Millicas ever visited one before as he just remarked about it having more stalls and toilets then normal plus odd smelling and in need of a good, through cleaning.

Millicas recalls the food and water tasting odd before he woke in a new room and he knew it was new as the previous one didn't have a table in it nor had the metal door been any color other then black. "There was also a bucket but I don't know what function that served as it was empty." Right, sheltered kid. He muses as the elder males within the room all share a look and mutually decide not to inform the child what the function of that bucket was for while Albion chuckles, likely only being shared with Vali and himself given the lack of reaction on Azazel's face upon the chuckles getting started.

"Any way, a trio of entered into the room with this lady giving orders on a phone, about not engaging the person that they saw while the two pretty much ignored my questions with one of them threatening to knock me out if I don't shut up and walk before them." Millicas sniffs a bit and he moves so he can wrap a wing over the Devil like a blanket, the kid is a bit startled but relaxes once more, although the head bows down a bit.

"Not your fault for obeying." Azazel says in a comforting tone. "Better to be awake and able to evaluate the situation in order to escape then to be out cold."

"You did get away from them, after all." Vali adds and Millicas just nods. "Your safe now." The current White Dragon Emperor reassures the kid, which Millicas just nods in agreement with. Silence hangs in the room for a bit, it's clear that the emotional toll was settling in, particularly as he's not at his home just yet nor was it his parents or grandparents who came to rescue him. Nor were they present, that he's still in the company of strangers who he only knows from gossip or mentions from his elders.

"Hungry?" He guesses while Azazel manages to draw Vali away from the door, getting his younger brother's side of the story and the kid's stomach groans in a wet kind of way. "Well, Vali should have grabbed something for us to eat, so just wait a bit longer."

Millicas angles his head to look at him, a few tears have already fallen and he raises up a bit, moving his arms wide in a slow and deliberate manner. Then Millicas moves in under him and hugs him, he returns it and brings both wings about to also 'hug' the kid. He gently murmurs reassurances while the child clings a bit more tightly to him, taking comfort in his presence. It's hard for old memories to not surface up from their usual home within his mind, after all, Devil or human, this is a kid in emotional pain and he's not going to ignore that, he couldn't ignore it really.

Azazel leaves viva the bathroom of the room while Vali is placing the shrunk food order onto the table, dispelling the enchantment and he whispers, "Food is ready." Millicas hums but doesn't seem to want to break out of the hug just yet.

"Wow! Look all those people all lined up!" Millicas remarks, their hotel room hadn't been invaded by Devils but nor have they received word concerning what's being done about this body double, so, they decided to bring Millicas with them, only Vali went out to buy a few things while he kept the kid occupied by asking him about general things like music, video games, movies, and TV shows.

"Video games are very popular among the general population." He agrees, they had gone over what words to use in public and that if he gets caught forgetting, to just mention a game, book, comic, manga, TV show, and, of course, movie to cover up the slip and find a polite way to slip away from said person. Given Millicas' age and clear innocence, the tactic should work.

I wonder how many will mistake him for a girl? He muses at the son of Sirzechs Lucifer, who's currently sporting dark purple hair that he used a minor spell to alter the hair style into one that Millicas liked the look of upon going through a number of hair styles, since it's a minor Transformation spell, he's pretty sure said parents and grandparents will let the current look go, it's likely the fact they used chemicals to dye the hair that's going to cause a fuss. Never-mind the whole we didn't take him back to the Underworld right away but to a human gaming convention isn't going to help our case any.

Millicas keeps near them but does stop to gawk at the group photos going on with people dressed up in their favorite game characters or in the style of a certain game. They are standing in line to purchase a ticket for Millicas, who's going to be answering to Miles for now while Vali, now sporting a different dye job of light pink and pretty much just decided to dress up as G from Kateyo Hitman Reborn! with fake tattoo plus cloths, is going by Zack and he's going by Jer, short for Jeremy, he's also dressed up as another character from the same show that he could easily pass off as, one Chikusa Kakimoto.

Yea, Millicas hadn't fully believed them when they assured him that they'll have an easier time fitting in dressed up, now though? Given the kind of costumes and or props people are wearing or carrying around? The young Devil's doubts should be gone.

"One child please." Vali says while they also hand over their phones sporting the e-tickets for the event in question. Once they all had their wrist bands, they enter into the con proper.

There's so many people! So many different costumes! Then there's the noise and music while moving through the various booths. TVs are set up with game systems up and people waiting in line to play the demo of the game while others are gathered around a speaker, listening to a discussion. Plus, people are getting pictures taken at displays or with models, again, dressed up too.

Neither of the two seem to be in any rush which means that he can take his time checking out the various displays and even stand in line to try a demo of various games, which they also gave a try even if said game clearly wasn't one that suited their taste in games. After all, while the White Dragon Emperor was out buying a few things for not just for Millicas own disguise but to alter his own given what happened last night. Pink hair, minor Transformation spell for the hair style, then watching as Naruto used the temporary tattoo ink to put a tattoo on the cheek, and then the final touch being a business suit. Ok, so, maybe he didn't really believe either of them about nobody really batting an eye at their choice of disguises, even Naruto deciding to dress up even though he wasn't there with the half-Devil in rescuing him from those people, yet, they were right.

There have been a few who have waved at the White Dragon Emperor, a number commenting on the costume being decent and others taking a few second to realize who Naruto dressed up, some made comments about him being a Skull due to the purple hair but that's about the only comment he really received, but otherwise? Nobody seem to be aware of the Dragon, the Dragon Emperor, and himself, a full-blooded Devil, among them. The emotions that causes within him are all mixed up and head spinning, but it's also something of a relief as he's just another kid, Devil yea, but still a kid, in the crowd in the company of an older cousin? Elder brother? Maybe uncle?

There's this lack of pressure, lack of expectations that's kind of freeing yet it's kind of frightening too, as this is truly unknown territory for him as he's not sure if he's able to fend for himself as he doesn't know the rules of this new setting. It's a bit much and then they're in off in a quiet spot and glancing to his right, he finds Naruto studying him with a hint of concern while the White Dragon Emperor is positioned between them and the crowd. "Getting overwhelmed?" The Dragon asks softly and he flushes a bit, he wanted to deny it but, well, looking out at the crowd, he turns away, feeling his heart race a bit faster.

"It's so different..." He admits and Naruto crouches down, it helps, not having to look up at the other and it's oddly comforting, having someone going to the effort to look him in the eye near his own eye level. It's kind of strange at how patient and comforting the Dragon had been, is, towards him, the son of Satan Sirzechs Lucifer and Grayfia Lucifuge, a pure blooded Devil when there's no real need to be, after all, Naruto doesn't answer to the Devil Faction, just to the current bearer of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear. "Are these gaming conventions always so... so... big?" It's really the only word he could think to use.

"Depends on the convention, actually. This is a video game one, so you'll find larger booths plus the needed equipment to play said games." Naruto explains patiently and calmly. "Most of what is here... It's more for advertisement purposes, generating interest in their upcoming releases then them trying to sell any merchandise."

"There are other kind of conventions?" He can't help but ask while feeling a bit better about the lack of need to buy anything. "Yes... Huh, you'd think..." Naruto snorts and gives his head a slight shake, a bemuse expression upon his face as he continues, "Anyway, do you want to continue on?"

Millicas glances between the two before looking back out at the crowd of people, yes they were all likely human but, well, they just... The numbers of them... But I trust them, to protect me. He admits as he glances at the White Dragon Emperor and then at Naruto. Yes, he wants to see his parents and grandparents yet, it's more of the fact that the White Dragon Emperor does have a cell phone and Governor General Azazel should have given them a way to contact him, which means that his family likely do trust his current care and well being to this pair.

"We can take some breaks from the crowd, right?" He asks and Naruto hums in agreement, remarking, "You're hardly the only one out of us that's bothered by being surrounding by so many bodies, it's just a matter of tolerance at this point."

That makes him feel a bit better about his own wariness of the crowd being something they got and could relate to as well.

His King is a hasting a bit while Rossweisse, latest member of Rias' Peerage and her second Bishop, seems to be scowling at the sight of a banner for some a Viking video game. Akeno, Koneko, and a recently unsealed Gasper are still back in Japan and working on setting up a room for Millicas to use for the next little while due to some counter operation going on within Gremory house hold, never mind the overhaul over their security as it seems that Millicas had been successfully kidnapped without anyone being the wiser. Which clearly has the whole of House Gremory's hackles raised and looking for blood.

His King included which is why both Rose and himself have been running interference between the usually gentle mannered Heiress and any unfortunate people that cross their collective paths. From what little murmurs Yuuto heard from his King, he prays that she won't be trying to tear apart whoever Azazel hired to be Millicas' current bodyguards. After all, they weren't the ones who kidnapped the young Devil and likely were just doing their job.

"I'll go stand in line." He offers and Rose nods, in her hands a gem that's homing in on Millicas is still reacting so he's still in this building. Rias just gives a sharp nod, being sure to hand him a credit card, he's pretty sure that if it were for any other reason for coming to such a place, she'd be able to enjoy the current setting, maybe even want to linger a bit longer.

"Rias?" He looks about for a red haired child only to find a kid who's got purple hair done up in a pony tail with hair that's fairly long, longer then Millicas should have yet, the eyes look right as does the face. "Millicas?" Rias asks with a slight bewilderment.

"Do I really look that different?" The kid asks with a hint of bewilderment before glancing down at his orange hoodie that's showing a navy blue shirt plus wearing blue jeans plus dark gray runners. Rais surges forward to give him a hug, which Millicas soon returns after being a bit startled at the sudden express of emotion, all the while he finally gets notices a pair of young men near and looking on, one sports a business suit, tattoo, and pink hair while the other has a beanie, black hair, glasses, tattoos, and a simple band-aid near the lower jaw.

"Thank you for looking after him." He says politely, re-framing from bowing politely given their country while Rose nods while moving to stand near the reunion. "Just what did they do to your hair?" His King wonders as she recovers her composure while Millicas looks kind of sheepish.

"I picked the color and the style." Millicas explains. "Na... Jer is the one to do the work on my hair." Adding, "He also drew the temporary tattoo on Zack's cheek, he's pretty artistic."

Which means causes 'Zack' to smirk slightly and 'Jer' to sigh slightly while also bringing the two to Rias' attention. His King draws herself up and clearly evaluates the two, not that either of them seem concerned to be in her cross hairs. Then again, Millicas tugs on Rias only she's not in the mood, gently directing the kid to Rose's direction and Millicas turns pleading eyes on him as his aunt gracefully stalk towards the two with clear intent to 'discus' the situation with them.

Their current location is away from crowds and off the 'beaten' path, so they do have some privacy. "I can't believe you thought it a good idea to bring him somewhere this crowded! Never mind those cloths!" Rias snaps and Millicas groans which causes Rose and himself to share a look.

"You ever thought they'd snatch him from you in this crowd?" She continues and there's a frosty look in 'Zack's' eyes with 'Jer' studying Rose and him before leaning back with hands in his pockets. There's a particular look in those sapphire eyes...

"Didn't you think about security at all? Or about he'd need time to recover from his captivity?" His King snaps and Yuuto glances at Millicas, who's looking highly embarrassed and a bit annoyed.

"Well, what do you have to say for yourselves?" Rias demands with a hint of a growl and in the tone of an order. "Ah... please go easy on her, Mister Lucifer." Millicas asks upon stepping forward to bow at the current pink haired...

He stiffens before snapping his head towards the glasses wearing being and yea, those sapphire eyes are alight with amusement plus a slight smile. "Mister..." Rose repeats with Rias finishes, "Lucifer."

"I will excuse her current manner given her clear worry for you, Millicas but I hope she remembers herself in the future." The White Dragon Emperor states in a cold tone. "After all, I might not be so lenient in the future."

And we are now two for two for Dragon Emperors. Yuuto thinks with a slight groan as the pair leave, although Naruto and Millicas do say their farewells, which include a hug on Millicas' part and a hair ruffle from Vali Lucifer. "I'm sure that if you apologize properly they'll accept it." The child assures Rias while Rose looks rather faint over their King's course of action verbally attacking the current White Dragon Emperor.

"How did Azazel even get them to agree to watch you?" He asks Millicas, who frown up at him. "Mister Lucifer rescued me while I was fleeing from the thugs trying to herd me back into the van. I didn't see the Governor General until we arrived at the hotel room, who was talking with Naruto." He notes that the use of the Dragon's first name compared to the other two, then again, it's clear that something clearly happened for Millicas to feel comfortable with using the golden Dragon's first name.

"Well... You at least had fun about this convention?" He decides to switch topics and Millicas relaxes slightly, nodding, "Yea, I did, although we did take breaks from the crowds cause..."

"There is a lot of people here and they are pretty much strangers." He agrees and the usual red haired kid smiles at him, beaming up at him, which he returns.

"So, I'm going back home now?" Millicas asks and seeing as his King is dealing with her issues, says, "Well, not yet, you'll be having a bit of a sleep over with us but I'm sure your parents and grandparents will be visiting soon enough to check up on you."

The Dance Between Death and Life P10:DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"The Governor General wants me to inform you that it been destroyed." Vali says upon arriving at the common room as he's walking Rou through the body reading phase of the magical VR helmet. "And... are you sure that's safe?"

"Safe is relative." Naruto remarks. "But, yes, my most recent animal test subjects recovered in under an hour of it being removed."

"Your previous test subjects had been chickens, goats, and cattle." Vali states while Rou chuckles weakly. "I think you should pick a pig or some primate instead of using Rou."

"I asked her, she said yes and she even supplied the game we're going to use." He states and the half Devil Dragon Emperor walks over to the open lap top to find this game called The First Tree title menu. "No chance of death, it's a simply enough game, if a tad sad. The only discomfort should be related to the body, given the player usually controls a vixen in game."

"He also used body paint to write a spell on my back to help me focus Twilight Healing on myself along with some bracelets to help pull my 'astral' body back into my actual body." Rou admits, reaching over with her left hand to tap the right's bracelet on the wrist. "And you have to admit, those two goats were pretty decently cooked, even if there wasn't any spices involved."

He sighs, yes, those goats did get cooked viva the magical VR head gear but their souls weren't in the bodies so, they didn't suffer. On a related note, he's managed to find a she goat and arranged so she'd get pregnant with twins of the correct gender before transferring the two goat souls into said respective embryos. So... the goats are going to be alive again and they got a decent meal out of that experience, it all worked out in the end.

"Well then, by all means, good luck." Vali walks towards the fridge to grab something before heading to his portion of the Lair. Looking back at what he's doing, he just hopes that his translation filters won't cause any problems.

"We don't need to continue from here, after all, he's kind of right. I likely should try this on something with some problem solving skills." The Dragon admits as they are about to go onto the next step which will begin the phase where Rou's body will sleep while her mind interacts with the illusions that are going to filter this game at her. It's not dissimilar to astral projection in a way, at least that's what his experiences with his animal test subjects seem to give evidence of.

"It's design is meant for an intelligent being, not beasts." Rou gently counters and he chuckles, yes, he did remark that on more then one occasion. So, they begin the next phase which should be rather quick and he moves to sit before the computer, waiting for evidence of the third phase to begin.

Scratching Fenrir behind one of his ears, Vali is watching someone playing the first Dark Souls game on his TV screen as his computer is connected to said big flat screen TV. The two sons of Fenrir are dosing next to their father's left side, still in appearing as three month old wolf pups, then again, he's used Transformation Magic, with Fenrir's consent, to make the God Killer look more like a normal, if pony sized wolf. He reflects on the last two weeks since that run in with the two Gremory Devils and a pair of Rias' Peerage members.

While the encounter with the Heir of the Gremory House did sour the rest of that particular day, it didn't spoil the rest of their 'vacation'. Setting up an illusion ward to secure their hotel room, they put the matter behind them nor did they bother to try hunting down the Khaos Brigade faction that had abducted the son of the current Satan Sirzechs Lucifer, Millicas Gremory. After all, the number of Devils and Fallen Angels among the forces of the Infinity Dragon God are likely far less these days since that ill conceived attack at the Peace Conference at Kuoh Academy, not that it's something he cares about, after all, his bastard of a grandfather had been and his pain in the ass father likely still is, members of said group.

Oh, he's received invites in the past from the so call Hero Faction of the Khaos Brigade and to be truthful, it had been tempting to join, if only to have sparring partners that weren't a Dragon of any kind, but, the bottom line was, how do you kill a dream? After all, Great Red is also known as the Dragon of Dreams and dreams, as Golden often remarks, are impossible to ultimately kill, never mind the idea that there's an S at the end of dreams which means there's more then one dream to kill. Which also means that even if Ophis manages to kill ever sentient being in the universe, it won't be enough as even the Ouroboros Dragon has a dream.

So, yea, there's no real benefit to joining said supernatural terrorist organization and frankly, it's clearly become a matter of Pride for the Khaos Brigade to kill Great Red, after all, even if they do get around to dealing a final blow, the Dragon of Dreams will just spawn back hale and healthy within seconds maybe, or minutes at most. And he's pretty sure that Ophis doesn't want Great Red chained up somewhere out of their way, nope, they want the Apocalypse Dragon dead and never able to respawn again, which is likely impossible when Ophis themselves couldn't put the True Dragon down for good. Plus, this whole thing kind of comes across as a private matter between the two top tier Dragons which means it will just end poorly for anyone caught in the crossfire between the pair.

Gods know if he'd have joined them if Golden wasn't in his life as the Dragon proved to be something of a reliable influence in his life and more then able to deal with his 'must cause others pain to ignore my own' phase, after all, when Golden did get around to doing more then tanking damage in their spars, he didn't exactly pull his punches, only made sure to limit the number that he dealt and do his best to have healing aids for when he ended up rather worse for wear. So yes, Vali can admit that Golden did his best not to handle him with kiddie gloves when it came to helping him improve his skills in combat or in regards with life, even though the Dragon is clearly of an optimist mind set, then again, it seems to work for him, even after all the shit the former ninja current gold scaled Dragon had to deal with once upon a time as a living jail cell to some nine-tailed fox shaped energy being while being human at the time.

So... you think he got it working? Albion muses as the video recording comes to an end and there's a timer counting down to when the next 'episode' is about to play. He considers the question for a few seconds.

"I think we'd hear something if it didn't." He remarks out loud. Fenrir flicks the nearest ear and he withdraws his hand, which is when the God Killing wolf to rest his head upon his fore limbs.

Point. The entrapped white Dragon admits as he reaches over to grab his drink. I wonder if he could get it to work to allow Ddraig and myself to have a go at it in digital space?

"That kind of reminds me of something... How come neither of you have tried to break free? Recently, really, I mean, from what I've seen concerning the Biblical God's system during my hacks of it, it's in sharp need of an overhaul of security along with system repairs." He says as the commercial at the beginning of the video ends and the video's content begins to play, picking up from the previous save point.

Say we did, what would be the point? We use to range about the whole world, doing what we wanted when we wanted. The last few centuries have changed things and I doubt we'd be able to fully fit in with how things are currently, what with the supernatural world sticking to the shadows, hiding from the general population, encouraging them to regard magic and the like as non-sense. We come free and old habits will begin cropping up, suddenly, we'd cause the general population to panic and take up arms in 'defense' of their 'world'. Albion explains calmly and rather logically.

So would end this current age and the false security of the general humans. Oh, they'd try, thinking that their technology would be enough to cover come our biology, never really believing that we would be more then just our biology or something engineered to wipe out humanity for some bizarre reasons. Hell, they'd likely try biological and chemical warfare but it wouldn't really affect us. The white Dragon continues and he admits that Albion is painting a rather believable picture.

Humans haven't really changed, only their tools and their population do. We've seen plenty of civilizations pull together to try and kill us, only to fall to ruin as their attempt fail. The morale of their citizen plummet and their civilization ends with the population creating cults to us in hopes by worshiping us, they appease us to fleeing as far from their native lands and hiding away, doing their best to forget they ever lived in that part of the world. Albion recalls. Not that it was anything we noticed at the time, it's usually long afterwards we'd hear about it. Nor did we really care as that civilization should have known better.

"That's not really covering the whole supernatural side of the issue." He observes and the original White Dragon Emperor chuckles. The thing is, if we could be trapped once, it means we could be trapped again. His eyes widen as he realizes that this reason might be the truer reason for why the two haven't.

"How many died to do it the first time? Never mind that the Biblical God created that world system to help him with entrapping you. I doubt anyone has managed to replicate that." Yet , hangs in the air.

Or that we are much more aware of how to counter something like this again. Albion agrees. To quote a former Nara, too troublesome.

"So... mostly just staying trapped to avoid those who will no doubt earn themselves a Darwin Award for their respective races." Of which there are plenty. "Well, I'm sure that once you mention the possibility he will either already considered it and have something for you to test or more then willing to help create something to allow the two of you to do so."

He's very good at that. Albion admits with fondness and he totally agrees with that sentiment. After all, it really helped when he was going through his teenage years, which he's rather amazed he survived given some of the shit he thought had been a good idea to try and pull, thinking himself invincible and in need of no help what so ever.

Drinking his almost forgotten drink that in his right hand, he puts it down and watches as the enchanted coaster summons more of his selected drink from the fridge without him needing to get up to get a refill. Don't care if people would call that a waste of magic, it's proven its worth time and again.

"So..." Issei trails off as he looks down at the kid Devil that followed him from school to Bova's place. "Well... I kind... of..." Rias' nephew and Sirzechs' son, Millicas trails off, clearly knowing he's not suppose to leave whatever apartments he's been staying at, yet, clearly showing signs of going stir crazy.

"Yea, I get it, your in a new place but nobody thought to take you out and about for a tour of the town, never mind the place you're told to stick too is likely tiny compared to what you're use too." He notes and Millicas' eyes widen before shoulders and eyes clearly showing relief over someone realizing what he's going through.

"It, well, it also reminds me of those places too." The kid admits and he had heard about that from Azazel as Naruto and Vali had been on vacation. "I mean, Mister Lucifer was able to rescue me and Naruto helped disguise me for the game convention..."

"Ah..." He trails off, this is kind of the first he heard of it, but then, Naruto's been focusing back on his testing of something that cooked two goats and its not like he's asked Vali about what they've been up too during their vacation either when they've been playing recently switching between two games, which are Dead by Daylight or League of Legends. "That's an illusion, right?"

"Yip, I spent some time looking up Illusion Magic for..." Millicas trails off and he chuckles, resisting the urge to ruffle the kid's current brown hair, it's all the same color no matter how the light hits it or how it appears in the shadows. "Ah... You don't mind if I..."

"Best stick close but if you don't mind, I'll give you some pointers about what you likely need to work on when it comes to making Illusions look more real." Issei tells the younger. "But first, I just need to add a few things before we continue on."

It takes a few seconds to toy with the already cast Illusion until it looks like before directing the young Devil conjuring a mirror. "Oh! That... Oh, it didn't do that before!" The kid shifts his head this way and that, watching how the light seems to cause changes to the way the brown looks.

"Yea, it's the little things that can break an illusion, like the way the light hits it or the way its shadow or shadows are cast." He explains, rather glad for the chance to play teacher. He's sure to cast a privacy ward on his uniform so they can continue their discussion of magic without breaking the rules. "There's others but given you are just using it on your hair, we'll keep to that."

He's sure to keep the kid walking next to him as they walk, as its the best way to keep an eye on the young Devil and allowing the kid do the same.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Bova hadn't been overly surprised at seeing Millicas in his company but then, that could be more due to being not really caring much as long as he doesn't mind having the kid around. His younger bother is doing something with his LARP cabal, a private tournament in the works or maybe it's starting today, while Aisa got asked to go shopping with some girls from her class. So he's been working on using Boost on speeding up the growth of a coffee bean plant and then Boosting its production of beans.

He mentioned to the son of the former Dragon King that Millicas could use some help with the basics of Illusion Magic, to which the kid clearly been rather in awe at meeting another Dragon disguised as a member of a different race. Although hearing Millicas talk about his encounter with Naruto transformed in a smaller version of himself makes him wish someone took a picture of the two while Bova seem rather relieved and suggested Issei display his actual form and other then Millicas asking if it hurt having those spines grow out of his skin, the young Devil didn't seem overly freaked out or apprehensive over the fact that he's a Dragon Kin. It was kind of nice, actually, for someone he didn't know very well not make such a big deal over his now natural appearance.

Then again, getting called Mister Hyoudou kind of makes him want to look around for his dad but at least Millicas isn't saying the mouthful of a title of Red Dragon Emperor. So yes, he can deal with being called Mister Hyoudou, likely due to the more European influences of the Devil society showing in this regard. The reason why Sona and Rias likely know to use the Japanese additions is from research in the culture along with having members that are native to Japan.

Glancing back at the pot, he feels his Boost limit approaching after a good thirty minutes of waiting for it reach that limit before thinks, Transfer . The pressure leaves and he watches as the coffee plant sprouts from the soil, a slight red glow that dims as the plant rapidly grows, branches bud and spread away from the main stem while smaller twigs then sprout from them, leaves bloom from the fresh branches while the main stem tampers off after reaching a good four some feet in height, the red energy of the Boost now spent. He holds his breath for a good minute and yes, some of it begins to decay, but by a good ten minutes have past, it seems as though the coffee plant is going to be alive for the next phase of this process.

This being his third attempt of the day as it's soon to be two hours since he arrived and will be soon time for him to figure out how to deal with Millicas when a White Dragon Gate appears and Naruto seemingly rushes out, making a bee line towards Bova. "Got it to work, Bova! Tested it with two single player games and finally with a MMORPG!" The Dragon disguised as a half-Devil exclaims before looking rather startled at realizing Millicas and then himself were in the room while Bova chuckles.

"Hey you two, hope you don't mind but I think I just cut your training session short." The blond admits with a sheepish grin. "Good to see you both are doing well." Millicas looks a tad shy suddenly while he snorts softly in acknowledgement.

"As expected of Naruto-senpai." The far older Dragon states once his chuckling dies down, it's not the first time he's heard Bova clearly respect the younger gold Dragon and he highly doubts that Bova knows that Naruto is a reincarnated ninja from another dimension, so it's all the more baffling why Bova Tannin considers Naruto to be his senior. "So, do you still plan to sell it to Azazel?"

Naruto's attention returns to Bova and the two slowly head out of the training room, leaving Millicas and himself alone, the Dragon Gate gone. "Dragons." He states with a shrug when Millicas glances questioningly at him before nodding, it kind of explains away a lot of strangeness when it comes to how Dragons act along with interact with others, including other Dragons.

"I almost thought that Mr Lucifer was going to come out, not Naruto." Millicas admits and yea, he gets where the confusion is coming from. "I think it was a reward or gift Albion gave to Naruto at some point, it's how he's capable of using Albion's Dragon Gate." Issei admits, admitting, "I'm working on figuring out a way for my twin to do the same with Ddraig's Dragon Gate. It's taking time, it's mostly the materials that's slowing it down as Ddraig is more then happy to explain how to do it."

Getting up from his sitting position, he walks over to the kid and suggests, "Seeing as those two will likely be talking about that break through, likely for the whole of the night, want to go out for dinner? Before we figure out how to get you back to Rias' apartment building." He's pretty sure that is likely where Millicas has been staying, it's not like he's making it his business to know every little detail of either Rias or Sona's movements within Kuoh Town, just at the Academy.

"Your treat?" Issei nods, asking, "What kind of food dishes are you interested in for supper? Or are you feeling adventurous in wanting to try something local?"

"Can we get hamburgers? I've never had one before." Millicas says and moving to grip his hand, pulling him out of the room. He gives the kid a smile, it's pretty clear that Millicas is very much a sheltered kid and it's rather understandable as to why that is, after all, his parents are rather famous never mind who he's related too. Devil or not, Millicas' clearly is still dealing with having his world off kilter and dealing with the fact that he's not as safe as he thought he was.

It's rather startling that Millicas felt safe at all with him or in Bova's company, but then, maybe it's because of his previous encounter with Vali and Naruto? Or maybe it's that Dragon now equals safe in his mind? Issei muses as he Shifts back into a human body just as they are approaching the door, Millicas does let go upon realizing he's been 'dragging' the current Red Dragon Emperor through the house.

"So, did speaking with Bova-sensei help clear some things up?" He inquires as they finish getting on their respective out door shoes and walk out the door. After all, Kazu's the more experience magical expert between them by dent of having practice longer, never mind having been a ninja with powers that could be passed off as magic in a previous life.

"Yes, he did and I'll be sure to do the exercises he suggests." Millicas promises and he smiles, humming in acknowledgment as he heads for the nearest burger place to grab a few as Devils do eat more then humans, after all, they have a more powerful body.

It somehow didn't surprise him that Rias' nephew managed to find Issei, the current Red Dragon Emperor, no, what's surprising is Millicas' hair and cloths plus how much more relaxed the younger Devil is just being in the Dragon Kin's company along with the fact that Yuuto, and the others, had thought that Millicas was still in his apartment. Millicas' looking rather rebellious yet nervous, shades of guilt, and a bit sad upon sighting him about to enter the apartment, causing him to wince as it dawns on him that they've been keeping him pretty much imprisoned within that apartment, just expecting that the only son of Sirzechs Lucifer and Grayfia Lucifuge would be content to spend all his time away from the Underworld in said apartment.

Glancing at Issei, it's rather odd to see the older Hyoudou without his younger twin around yet it's clear that Issei's expression is... "You didn't realize he was missing, did you?" The Dragon Emperor before muses with a hint of disbelief and a touch of exasperation.

"We've done our best to ensure that his apartments couldn't be spied upon by magical means." He states adding, "He never expressed an interest in seeing Kuoh Town with myself."

Issei looks down at Millicas, asking, "Have you tried broaching the subject with your aunt?" The kid sighs, giving a nod before answering, "I tried but she just tended to buy me more various video games back when I tried. I just sort of given up by the fourth attempt."

"I see." Damn is Rias. The Knight thinks to himself. You should have at least informed us about his desire so we'd be more alert to him leaving.

"I will speak with Akeno about this." He promises. After all, the former half-Fallen Angel might be able to talk sense with Rias about Millicas' current situation and if not, come up with something concerning Millicas' desire to stretch his legs beyond the apartment building. Issei studies him for a second before moving to kneel down to Millicas' level.

"Ok, so, it does seem that it's your aunt's fault for this little outing given she's not been listening to you. But, next time, be sure to grab your that cell phone you were given so that if anything happens, you can call one of your aunt's Peerage members or even the other co-owner and her Peerage." And he kind of mentally groans but, well, it's clear that Issei's suggestion concerning the cell phone will be heeded given the nod that Millicas does. "And if it's out of juice, you know where Bova-sensei's house is and I'm sure he'll have the needed numbers for said calls."

"Will I see you again?" Millicas asks and Issei answers, "It's more then likely that you'll see me given we're both in Kuoh Town, heck, you might get to met my younger brother, Kazu."

"What about... Oh, sorry, it's just..." Millicas glances towards him and Issei sighs. "I can't make any promises but I'll pass it along." Millicas looks rather relieved.

"Thank you for the introduction to Bova Tannin and for taking me out for supper." Millicas says politely and the current Red Dragon Emperor, the source of many a head aches for his King as well as Sona nods. "See you, Millicas." The Japanese raised Dragon Kin reaches forward and ruffles Millicas' current brown hair before standing up.

"Knight Yuuto, I leave him in your care." He nods, noting the rather quick change. "My thanks on behalf of my King for watching over her nephew for these pass few hours." He bows respectfully which Issei gives a nod of acknowledgement for.

With that, he ushers Millicas into the building while the Dragon Kin walks off. "Just what did you have for supper?" He asks as he waits for the elevator to arrive, breaking the silence between them.

"Oh, burgers, it was that restaurant with the yellow arches. We order a lot of different ones along with some drinks, we took them back to Bova's house, and ended up sharing the burgers and drinks with him and his guest." Millicas tells him with a slight smile.

It feels like there's weight in his midsection at the fact that someone besides Issei and Bova knew about Millicas' ditching of the apartment. "Who was this guest?" He asks, doing his best to sound polite and semi-interested.

"Just someone who Bova called 'senpai'." Millicas admits with a slight frown. "I'm not sure I said that right..."

"No, you got it right, it generally means someone older in age." He admits. "It also could refer to someone with more experience in a certain field as well." Yuuto adds, not sure which he'd prefer, after all, it could just be one of Bova's older brothers or someone Bova that was more experienced in one of the many fields the Dragon has pursued in recent years.

"I didn't know that! Huh, that explains it..." The son of the current Satan Lucifer muses and he really wishes to know just what that explained but in the end, figures he'll leave it to the boy's parents and grandparents to interrogate the boy over this person and what happened to the boy's crimson hair.

Please, who ever is listening, please let Rias be reasonable about what happened... Yuuto prays to whatever deity that is willing to hear the prays of a Devil. They walk into the elevator and press the button for the floor, he then watches as the brunette coloring of Millicas' hair fade into his natural crimson. "Illusion Magic?" He ventures a guess and Millicas just gives a slight nod, the cloths didn't change but then, they might be Conjured.

"Do we need to stop by your apartment for some actual cloths?" He asks and Millicas touches the black hoodie with red flame design along the sleeves with a stylized fireball on the back, it's clear that the kid put a lot of thought into what he wanted the hoodie to look like. The pants were just black jeans as were the runners being primary black with red trim.

"I guess we should." The younger Devil admits and he is sure to press that button, although he's tempted to just forgo the elevator and use a Teleportation Circle to arrive at his room then use the stairs to get to Millicas' apartments as pretty much none of them ever use the stairs as it's either the elevators or Teleportation Circles. But it's too late, security likely already alerted Rias to the presence of Millicas in said elevator along with himself.

"How much blame do you think she's going to put on you, Knight Yuuto?" Millicas inquires as they exit onto the floor where they've been having his King's nephew stay. He doesn't know the answer to that but decides to to be honest by saying, "As much as she believes I deserve."

Millicas ducks his head for a few seconds, likely feeling rather guilty about that, but likely a small part of the younger Gremory might be rather pleased to hear it. After all, upon reflection, none of them have spent more then the token amount of time with Millicas and it seems that the boy is more then likely feeling left out and put out. Not that this will affect him in the long term, just in the next little while won't be pleasant for him concerning the shifting of the blame onto his shoulders but Rias being tenderhearted, which means that she'll likely feel guilty about her over reaction about this incident and make it up to him later, once she's calmed down and she's had time to reflect on everything.

Which might be once her older brother and sister-in-law calm down upon hearing about this, after all, I think their parents are already expecting something like this to happen... He admits. The current Duke Gremory and his wife had suggested that Rias and her Peerage take some time off of school and doing Contracts, go do the tourist thing and visit some of the more famous sights of Japan. It was clear that they were hinting at something back then and it seems they perhaps should have listened to the older Devils but everyone wanted Millicas safe behind wards and hidden from public view.

"Hindsight is twenty twenty." He murmurs to himself as he waits for Millicas to change. He glances around the spacious living room, a fairly big flat screen TV with various game systems, a book shelf that's filled with games for said systems. There's a few movies on the two lower shelves, generally filled with Devil made movies and some Rias approved anime movies with at least two TV shows on DVD.

The decor is one he'd expect to find at one of the Gremory manors or castles, which makes the more modern items to stand out. There is a dinning room between the entertainment/living room and the kitchen. There is a small guest rest room that's between the front pouch area and the living room. There's no other guest room nor any servant quarters, the kitchen is mostly houses pre-made food that are preserved under a stasis spell and he doubts that the dinning room has seen much use as nobody's to host.

It's clear that Millicas spent most of the time either in his room which also serves as a study as it has a number of books his tutors want him to go through and to do his homework assignments, or in the entertainment/living room. The coffee table shows a lot wear, meaning that it's usually where the kid eats his meals. Yuuto studies the carpet and takes him a bit to notice the discoloration, it's not that surprising that accidents have happened. Given the color the carpet, the stains are hidden fairly well if you didn't know what to look for.

It's clear that they really haven't been there for Millicas and they should be. There's no maids or tutors here to keep the boy company, to distract him while the rest of his family was off doing their business. They left a child who's use to be around others, even if it was just servants, all on his own.

Perhaps the question isn't why he did it, it should be why he didn't do it earlier... He admits to himself as Millicas comes out of his room. The cloths Millicas is wearing, they are so very different from the Conjured cloths and in someways, it reminds him of those rare visits to Rias' parents home.

"Ready?" He asks and Millicas nods. "I am ready." Millicas Gremory states with resolve and he can't help but be reminded that this boy is the son of a Satan and the Strongest Queen.

Millicas marches forward, head held high and shoulder square. There's determination in those eyes and Yuuto wonders if he's glimpsing a hint of what the younger will be once he's grown. After all, it's clear that Millicas is determined to be Heard and Listen too, how well it goes for him with his aunt...

He follows behind the son of Lucifer and wonders if Rias is ready to square off against her highly unamused and fed up nephew.

The Dance Between Death and Life P11:DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"How do you know they're goal is to release this thing? And... why not, I don't know, mention this to the Dragon God?" Naruto asks as he stares up at the Dragon of Dreams. He's fairly certain this is a dream, given that he's standing on a cliff that sports six faces, standing upon his former father's head.

"Oh, she knows, we were told at the same time after all, but I believe the term best suited for her current mindset is tunnel vision with a hint of desperation and anger given how easily I won our argument." Muses the giant of a human, the disguise of the Apocalypse Dragon. The disguise has to be nearly eight feet in height, the current attire isn't all that different then a member of a biker gang member would wear, complete with a bandana about the forehead which looks to be the US flag while the shirt worn under the leather jacket is a band logo.

"I don't need to be reminded of what form they've decided to take these past few decades." He murmurs as he runs a hand through his hair and glances off to the side, staring out at the village that he's pretty certain doesn't or didn't look like what he's seeing before him. It's hard to recall, given how long it's been since he last laid eyes upon Hidden Leaf Village. After all, he's pretty sure that the Hokage Tower wasn't built or recreated out of a dull red stone nor did it sport planters along it's walls or that the Hospital look like it's an Persian Temple with park like setting surrounding it. Never mind the Ninja Academy looking like a mixture of futuristic military barrack and maximum security prison made out of metal and concrete.

"Gender is rather optional." States Great Red with a soft snort and he cringes as he knows that's very true given the nature of how Dragons can Shape-shift. The few other Dragons he's meet who does it regularly, they all tend to keep to their birth gender. "Something Issei figured out on his own and that his twin is busy mentally suppressing having caught the gender-bent Issei checking herself out in a bath mirror."

Ok, he can't help but react to that news by turning to stare at the currently disguised and visiting Great Red. "That... makes a disturbing amount of sense as to why he's calmed down so much on the issue." The former ninja admits before glaring. "Then again, it's information I didn't need to know as it is likely personal for the pair of them."

Then he realizes he's glaring at someone who could crush him like a bug, so adds a scowl as he states, "You changed the topic. Why do they even want to release this thing in the first place? I'm pretty sure there's quicker means to commit suicide then releasing this ultimate force of destruction."

Cause, seriously? Given how thin the Devils' powers have grown since the original founders of the Seventy-two Pillars, they can't think they have the means let alone power to control this being... "Of course they do... They're power hungry morons..." He mutters out loud as he rolls his eyes, using his right index finger and thumb to rub the bridge of his nose.

"The Seal is still holding... right? They haven't weakened it enough yet, right?" The former ninja lowers his hand after a few seconds to stare at the far more powerful Dragon before him.

"Not yet, in I think you should have some weeks yet..." Given how time is flexible for the long lived, he'd figure in about three months time at the most. "Mind supplying the names I need to put out of the world's misery? And a listing of their numerous hideouts will help." Cause when he begins his chain of assassinating these idiots, they'll go to ground quickly so it's best to booby trap their get away places when they get spooked.

"You'll attract her attention. They are suppose to be serving her organization, advancing her agenda." States the older Dragon and he gives the other a flat look as he states, "I'll deal with that when it comes up but I doubt they don't have plans to distract her when it comes to this plan of theirs. Or that I can't shift the evidence towards another Faction in said organization of her's ."

Because from what little he's been able to tease out of a certain Stray Kitty Cat Devil, the Hero Faction is trying to stage something concerning the Youkai of Japan and soon. "After all, it's not like I am the only former ninja around at this point either." He muses a bit to himself. "So, those names and locations should be more then enough."

"Well, I'll be sure to e-mail the information once I've got their names and get the... it is addresses, right? Or is it GPS now these days?" His visitor muses before shimmering away, leaving him alone in his Dream for a few minutes, allowing him to study the dream village below before he wakes up.

With a sigh, he grumpily blinks before he stretches his neck with his wings being next and yawns widely. Getting to his feet, the gold Dragon sits up from his comfortable bed and glances at a wall as he does his best to commit the dream to his memory before it fully fades away.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

Leaning up a wall in the room, he waits for people to arrive for the meeting where he'll be asking for help concerning the booby trapping the last few hide-a-ways at least, he doesn't want to pressure any of them into helping him assassinate the chain of command concerning the morons who think they have what it takes to put a collar and leash on the entity he's mentally nicknamed Triple Six, also known as Trihexa or the series of numbers 666. Vali and Issei seem to be occupied with a board that's been Enchanted with Illusion Magic so it projects monsters that are based upon a card either of them put down onto said board, they seem to be playing a collectible card game, it's one that Issei picked for them to try given their Rivalry.

Kazu is with Goten, Kenta, and Rou, the four of them are ensuring that the carting food arrives at the ordered location before they'll Teleport it here. They arrived a good three hours before the meeting is to take place, preparing the room, which took over an hour given they had to pick a room to hold it and then begin to move things around, taking out the unneeded while bringing in more tables and chairs. Preparing a place for where the good will go along with setting up various drink machines as the security wards will snap into place when everyone is here, keeping people who leave from returning to the room until the time the meeting is over and done with.

Which is why Kazu and Issei brought a pair of Enchanted portable toilet cabinets that are larger on the inside and sporting at least five washroom stalls within them plus two sinks and a trash bin. One for men and the other for women, they tested it and they are warded to keep the correct gender from trying to enter into them. Then they added at least three universal symbols showing which is for which gender.

About forty minutes until the meeting begins, people start showing up, the Dragon is more then happy to play greeter as he hasn't spent a whole lot of time with his reincarnated friends but then, they all got their own lives to live. Iris Andrealphus and Faust Dantalion arrive in each other's company and once they get the greetings out of the way, they make small talk, which is when Kevin Smith, Kimberly MacDonald, Garth Williams, and Fredrick Vargson, who is a werewolf and the reincarnation of Rou's, AKA Hinata's, old teammate, Kiba.

The Devil and half-Devil move more into the room after a nod, likely going to find spot while leaving him to exchange small talk with the reincarnations of Konohamaru Sarutobi, Meogi Kazamatsuri, Udon Ise, and Kiba Inuzuka. After about five minutes, Kazu's group arrives with the good and it's not long before Fred, short for Fredrick, to volunteer to help bring in the food while the other three decide to go find seats. Closer it gets to the time to start, the more people start to arrive and in clumps with one another, it's unsurprising that Elena Spade, AKA Sakura, came with her boyfriend, although the Devil doesn't enter into the room, being more then happy to give her a hug and kiss before heading off to occupy himself, he really should make an effort to learn the Devil's name, both of them.

Then again, she still seems to be angry at me for something. Naruto notes as Elena is quick to greet him and go sit down. I doubt it's because of the magical VR helmet as Goten, Kazu, Kenta, and Rou all seem more then happy to keep mum on the item, after all, they kind of have to share the same game experience... I really got to figure out how to untangle that sync connection going on with all the helmets that ensure they access only a single game. At least they end up in the same 'world' and can interact with one another or hire a team of programmers to create a game they are ok playing with one another.

Issei and Vali both don't care much about what game they end up in, recently, he's got an attachment meant for Albion and Ddraig that did disrupt the sync connection, so the four now end up in whatever game they pick. Which pleases the two original Dragon Emperors as they can now complete against one another in a more direct fashion. Given the two attachments are new, it's something he'll have to investigate more in the future but for now...

"First things first." Which means that the safety of this world is something they need to secure first and foremost. It's now a question of whether the others are willing to step up to help, he's pretty certain that Kazu will along with Goten and Kenta, those three are close friends in this incarnation, which likely helps that they knew one another before their memories began to filter into their current lives. Vali and Rou will, simply because he'll go through with this without anyone's aid. The Dragon isn't as close to his old incarnations of his friends as the old him likely would have liked but, again, he's recalls a life between his existence as Naruto Uzumaki and the Dragon

Sapphire, when he peace with that fact he won't be able to find them or fully reconnect with them.

The finally, the time to begin arrives and he closes the door, it Seals shut, meaning that for the next two hours, people may leave but they won't be able to return. Naruto walks towards the Host Position of the table and takes a minute to study those gathered. Taking a calming breath, he sits down at the table, meeting the eyes of any who glance his way.

"Thank you all for coming to this meeting," a common enough start, "I hope what we are to be discussing will warrant your attendance as well." That did grab their attention once more.

"About two weeks ago, I received a visit from a certain Dragon of Dreams that thought I wanted to know of a threat to this world that some beings are trying to unseal with the stupid belief they can harness this entity's power." Even Vali sits a little straighter at the mention of the Great Red. "This entity is often called 666 or Trihexa."

"Wait, isn't that the number of the Beast? As in, the Devil?" Elena remarks and there's a few minutes of people adding their own two cents.

He waits, after all, there's not that much information about this entity and is rather amazed that the Devil Faction of the Khaos Brigade even learnt of it. Then again, Ophis does know of it and they likely managed to tease information out of the current young girl looking Dragon. "How did these... morons manage to find information about this entity?" Asks one Vick Donson, a former Genin of Hidden Leaf by the name of Hayato.

"Likely from Ophis as the two were told at the 'same' time by the Biblical God, which is another reason for that system he created." He explains and more then a few likely shocked at the idea that Ophis would let any hints of this kind of entity being known as he kind of implied that there's a reason for the two getting told. "The Dragon God likely never thought that they'd think to pursue the lead or delude themselves that they could control it."

"Well... can it be controlled?" Another former Ninja asks and he replies, "It's pure destruction given form and lacks a 'mind' that can be reasoned with or influenced. It's Titles are the Apocalyptic Beast and Emperor Beast of Apocalypse, at full power, it's on par with Great Red and Ophis, and we all know how easy it is to kill either of them or control them."

"Talk about Darwin Award winners..." Murmurs Elena and most sitting at the table murmur their agreements. "It's not about to be released soon, is it?" Another asks and he shakes his head.

"No, they are entering into preparations to begin the unsealing progress and it seems to involve Evil Dragons along with a Vampire Faction." Naruto explains. "Given that Valerie Tepes, the holder of the Sacred Gear known as The Sephiroth Graal, AKA the Holy Grail of the Secluded World, which is known to be something of the ultimate bio-engineering device along with allowing the user to bring back the dead at a cost, of course."

"Which is why, I plan to finish booby trapping various Devil Fraction boltholes before proceeding to assassinate their chain of command. And I need help to speed it along as the Hero Faction of the Khaos Brigade is about to start some ritual at Kyoto, which is going to rile up the Youkai of Japan, which is going to be a political hot bed given the spread of Heros in said faction." He admits and the others look rather surprised by the news, whether that he's talking about assassinating Devils or that he's got a back up plan for when they become alarmed by what's happening to their fellow high ranking Devils, bolting for safe havens.

"Aren't the remaining Devils confirmed members of the Seventy-two pillars?" Ventures Iris in a slow manner and he hums in agreement. "If they find out..."

"Then they should have kept better track of what these Pure-Blooded Devils have been up too." He states firmly. "Along with funneling a bunch of Fertility foods and drinks into their collective food to boost the odd of them siring a few kids in hopes of forcing them to settle down."

Faust snorts while Iris gets a thoughtful look, but one of the others pipe in, "You'll have a price on your head. A steep one at that."

"I've always had a price on my head simply because of my association with the White Dragon Emperor of the Morning Star, never mind the whole issue of Dragon Slayer wannabes willing to pay for my Lair location." The Dragon remarks in a matter of fact tone and it's clear that not many really considered that he's already got strangers out for his head, the difference will be that he'll have an actual list of powerful Devils known to be killed by him instead of attributed to some one-shot disguise or under the service of Golden , agent of Tannin. "Or even Vali's father putting a bounty for my being brought to him alive." He recalls, he's pretty sure that one is still active, just hasn't been updated or spoken of since he got revealed to be a Dragon.

"Is that one still active?" Vali wonders and he glances towards the half-Devil. "Hey, isn't there one for 'rescuing' Vali from Naruto by his old man?" Issei wonders out loud about the same time as Vali's question.

Discussions begin and he sits back to listen to the various topics, a few did circle around the idea concerning if Fertility items could boost a Devil's couples chances at having kids while others did keep to the main point concerning preventing Trihexa from getting unsealed. A few get up and grab something to drink along with a snack, he soon joins them a few minutes later.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

"..." Ophis looks down at him and it takes him a few seconds to realize that, yip, he's not in his shared Lair and that the usually transformed Infinity Dragon God is not in their usual form but that of a very human looking Dragon. The look in those eyes seem to be very blank but then, given what happened just a month back, he highly doubts that the Ouroboros Dragon is very pleased with him, being the central figure and the fact that he's been in recent contact with Great Red, who, well, he owed his current incarnation too.

So many emotions swirl within, so much so that he seems to be frozen up even though there's that whole host of Flee or start sprouting excuses along with promises of doing 'anything' just to live a bit longer. Then, well, there's an old reflex that finally kicks in and he states, "Old Hag."

The Dragon God actually blinks at being called that and, well... "I so don't regret it, just so you know! Either start on the whole killing me or torturing of me but I stand by the fact they were too stupid to be allowed to continue living if they thought unsealing Trihexa was a Good Idea! Or toying around with the Sephiroth Graal!" He had uncurled as he'd been speaking moving to stands up, trying to keep from shaking cause there's this PRESENCE going on, being sure to keep eye contact with the Ancient Dragon. He wanted to say more but the words get caught in his throat.

All his survival instincts are screaming that he's being DUMB and he's already feeling guilt over dying, he can only imagine what kind of reactions his disappearance will cause those he cares about and who care for him in turn. Naruto can't help the shaking of his limbs and the whole urge to try begging for his life or bringing up mention of his loved ones. It takes everything he has to stay standing and his jaws clamped shut.

There's PRESSURE on his being, he struggles to remain standing, even though it's impossible to keep his head from bowing under the weight. Calling on his own magic, he manages to keep from having his belly hitting the floor and wheezes as he fights against this. He's not sure when, but at some point, he must have acted on the Fight urge as there's this tingle in his throat that means he used his breath attack... Used it on who he felt threaten by... Which had been... The Infinity Dragon God...

He's sent flying through the 'air' and it seems that it's not by magic but by causing the Ouroboros Dragon to actually physically strike him. There's a look of something upon the Ancient's face while staring at their own raised forelimb. Naruto lands roughly, moving to roll onto his side, still facing the larger Dragon, he's doing his best to catch his breath and he finds himself bitterly bemused that he's the cause of this odd mood along with odd reaction from the normally stoic and emotionless Dragon.

Then the Ouroboros Dragon's attention returns to him and, well, he watches as magical energy takes the form of snakes... He bellows in pain but after all while, it's becomes something akin to a Dragon's screams.

There is no satisfaction, in fact, there's a hint of something aimed at themselves actually at the sight of the child's bleeding and broken body, for one of their age, he had barely live. The matter of the alien nature of the Soul... They did recall some incident in the past but due to the fact that it didn't disturb them, ignored it. Yet, it seems that the annoyance colored in red did not ignore it and had meddled, arranging for this one Soul to be born a Dragon.

Ophis did not move to deal the final blow but stares, watching passively as this child's body slowly rebuilds itself, it's clearly a gift the red annoyance placed within the body, to be active when they are the one dealing the damage. Blood, muscle, skin, scales, claws, bone, organs, horns, spines, and teeth return to their proper place. The change of unconscious to sleeping is hard to pin point, yet, it happens and they don't know what they honestly want from this child that is known as Sapphire among their lesser relations and Naruto Uzumaki among the other races.

They had much to think about, though. The accusation concerning Trihexa's release by those Devils... They admitted that, perhaps they should have been a bit more careful concerning the knowledge they dole out to their collection of younger Races, particularly given the... recklessness and how easily their emotions have sway over their decision making. The incident at Kyoto by the subsection of their collection going by Heroes comes to mind, after all, they were over confident and now the younger Races are taking a harder look at her collection.

Perhaps... I need to take a more active role in how they go about it? Or a closer look at how they operate? Yes, they had much to ponder and perhaps the lost of some of those Devils will cause their collection to review their own methods and to move to ensure their own security.

Within seconds, their form shimmers and shrinks into their current preferred form, a young seemingly human girl wearing black dress. As the now female Ouroboros Dragon turns her back upon the Dragon child, she ensures that the now resting gold child is sent back to where she Summoned him from. As she leaves this pocket dimension, Ophis is sure to land somewhere she can get some ice cream along with Conjuring the needed paper to exchange for said treat.

"Naruto!" Rou cries out in relief as she finds the gold Dragon laying in his sleeping quarters. It's been a good day since they realized nobody could get a hold of the Dragon, worried enough that they spoke with Tannin after a good eight hours to trying to use Divination Magic to try and find him. After explaining their failure...

Tannin arrived and after running a Scan... Albion's out rage at Ophis' Summoning Naruto had been... Tannin didn't look happy either, looking rather regretful and mournful.

After trying to use her Sacred Gear, there's nothing to heal, she races for the common room. "He's back! He's alive! And... doesn't look like he's been hurt..." It's not long before Vali is running past her and she follows after.

He's alive, thank deities, he's alive. Albion states, relief fully evident while Vali's got tears running down his face while hugging Naruto's long neck. Naruto growls something and Vali murmurs, "We're here, Golden , we're here."

One of Naruto's eyes open slightly and tension seems to lift from the young Dragon's body, soft growls with a hiss or two come from the newly appeared Dragon. The eye focuses on her before Vali moves towards the head, keeping Naruto from moving. "Maybe a day, Rou. Tannin did a Magic Scan... We thought..." She approaches the head to stand near Vali, after all, it's clear that Naruto's disappearance hit both Albion and Vali far harder.

She's only able to follow one half of the conversation as she doesn't have the right vocal range or hearing range to learn the language very well. THAT BITCH WANNABE DID WHAT?! Roars Albion after a particular string of sounds, even Naruto winces while she catches Vali's own look of fury but also hopelessness. A bit of a soft hiss and a cooing sound, but Albion replies, I don't care if your still alive! Your still a CHILD! They should KNOW Better!

She's not sure what kind of look is now on Naruto's face as the gold Dragon manages to turn to look at Vali, both eyes looking at the current White Dragon Emperor but it causes Vali to groan while Albion sends a huff. Go back to sleep, we'll inform the others you've been found and ensure you get something to eat.

Naruto blinks but turns his head to yawn before pulling himself up off the floor, they move as Naruto sways towards the bed that's clearly custom bed that's resting in the center of the room and a few feet into the ground so that the nest is level with the floor, it's at least three sizes bigger then the gold's current size. Once on the mattress, Naruto falls back asleep once more, looking far more comfortable and peaceful then when she found him.

They both stand there for a while, just staring at the sleeping Dragon. Moving to stand next to Vali, she says, "I'll text Kazu and Issei that he's back. Did you want to speak with Tannin or should I?"

"I'll go visit Tannin and get us all something to eat, mind putting in a drink order?" Vali asks and she nods while promising, "I'll take inventory to be sure what needs to be ordered."

Yes, she's the first to leave but then, in some regards, it makes sense as it's not just Vali's own need for reassurance that Naruto's safe but Albion's own. She stops by her room to use the bathroom within, washing her face and doing her best to keep from tearing up once again. She sniffles a bit and then blows her nose at least thrice before she's ready to go about said tasks, all the while reminding herself that he's safe now and alive, whatever happened, it's likely that Naruto will recover from it, given time.

"For someone who got on the wrong side of Ophis... you are looking pretty healthy." He hears Tannin remark and he more fully wakes to find the former Dragon King standing near his right side of his snout. His body sports phantom aches and it feels like it's been days since he's eaten.

"Could be a reward for dealing with a problem before it became a Big Problem... From the Great Red." He admits, thankfully, they were discreet when they began that operation, Vali had been the one to end his father's life, but not until the elder Lucifer informed Vali of a younger half-sibling viva his actual marriage to a second cousin of the head of the Shax House. It seemed that the Devil had actually used his connections within the Khaos Brigade to acquire a few divine produces to help in conceiving another child.

His mind returns from its wanders to focus on the elder, asking softly, "How beaten up were they?" The disguised former Dragon King sighs with a hint of exasperation along with fondness.

"I'd say Albion was more broken up over your vanishing between the two but not by much, then again, he could only vocalize instead of demonstrating." Tannin admits and he winces. "Vali, well, Bova bought the twins over and Vali expressed his feelings in a very brutal fashion, thankfully the twins managed to wear him out. I think they'll be upping their own training because of it."

He huffs, yea, he recalls how much of a battle junkie Vali had almost developed into due to the influences of his grandfather and the lack of spine in Vali's father when it came to defying the older Devil. Only reason it didn't stick had to do with him being, well, himself. That doesn't mean that Vali doesn't enjoy the kind of chemical reaction that being in a fight brings out and it seems that the twins had learnt that while Vali wasn't in complete control over his emotions. Likely helping Issei get why Vali's more then happy to give other means of engaging in their 'legendary' and 'destined' Rivalry a try. The twins got years to go to be able to give Vali a decent battle.

"Mess with Ophis' Khaos Brigade, the Devils." He admits after sometime. "Ophis... was careless with a secret in trusted in them, Great Red knew it too, only, he took his duty seriously and once he realized what the morons were planning..."

"Don't regret it." The Dragon states simply. "Needed help to ensure that those who knew took it to their grave given the timing they planned to move."

"Vali..." Tannin trails off, only he gets a sense there's more to this particular question. "... I guess he could cover for me as Golden ... He'll need someone to do the spell on him though as he still doesn't know how to Shape Shift."

"Once you've recovered enough, the two of you can switch." Tannin states with a slight sigh. "Likely for a week, maybe two to be safe."

"Also, try not to poke another sleeping dragon any time soon. I swear, I lost a few decades of my life when I realized who Summoned you away." Tannin remarks after a period of comfortable silence where his mind was beginning to wander over the matter of how well Vali will be when it comes to the cloak and dagger missions he's gone on when disguised as Golden .

"Well, at least we know that Great Red seems to like me enough to ensure my survival after using me to provoke the Ouroboros Dragon." Naruto admits in a dry tone and Tannin snorts, moving up and patting him on his eye brow before giving the scales there a bit of a rub. With that, Tannin heads out of his section of the Lair, he'll have to redo the wards given they must be barely hanging in there after the forced Summoning.

Yawning widely and after getting up to get into a different position, he does his best to doze once more.

How can he stand wearing this robe? Vali can't help but wonder while he's doing his best to listen to the other supernatural beings as they are playing an odd gambling game involving a die being tossed and the result deciding the tools they'll be using in regard to the strange board, which is happening in a special section of Las Vegas, the owner is a demi-God belonging to the Mayan Pantheon. A few were actually supernatural mutts, as in, they've got more supernatural beings in their family tree then human or it's the human blood that's acting as a cushion to keep the various natures from fully mixing.

Tannin had been the one to cast the Transformation Spell on him so he, for all intents and purposes, has been physically transformed into Golden 's Dragon Kin disguised. The robes and the magically charged crystals were ones that Golden use to wear before he got skilled enough with Conjuration Magic to recreate said items out of his own magic, Tannin had found them in an old chest that Golden once used to store them in along with a bracer that is Enchanted to help focus raw magic into Ice Magic, likely before Golden got the idea to store Elemental Magic charge in the crystals he'd worn as decorations and likely subtle taunts about how good he is when it comes to stealth. That even wearing softly glowing crystals, the disguised Dragon was still leagues better then anyone else.

Nobody seemed to care that his hood is lowered but then, he's hardly the only Dragon Kin about this casino section. There's a pair of young waitresses, likely born Dragon Kin, working and he spied a poster for another Dragon Kin who does an animal act. All three show to be at the first 'step' of being Dragon Kin, same as the Hyoudou Twins and it's also clear that the information about Issei being a Dragon Kin is still considered hearsay in America, likely in the respective regions of North, Central, and South. He had spied a grizzled burnt orange third 'step' Dragon Kin nursing a drink before one of the few slot machines as well.

"Winner, Caspian!" Declares the Indian Rakshasa host of the table and the strange canine supernatural mutt gives a slight howl of excitement while collecting his winnings. He's pretty sure Werewolf is in there but some of the looks remind him of one of the native canines of this continent, a coyote never mind the human form sports a few Asian features so there might be some Youkai thrown in for good measure. A few around the table congratulate the winner, a few collect their tokens and drinks, heading off to try their luck else where.

Not that he blames them but then again, only reason he joined this table as to do with being waved over by the Rakshasa, who might actually know Golden 's disguise. "Got a break coming up." States the table's host before a fresh number of faces join the table and, well, he might as well take the invite for a private discussion at face value. Once more, introductions are made about the table and once the starting bets have been collected, the die is tossed.

It lands on two and having been at this table for nearly an hour, he's got some idea of what each game is associated with what number. With the right two tools selected, he watches as the board features a familiar situation along with the correct number of players at the table. They each can take two actions, one of which is, of course, moving 'yourself' about the board, allowing you to go up or down along with the other directions up to two spaces and the second is a testing action of the space 'you' stop at. The point seems to find a key, a certain safe that matches your color, and get 'you' to the safe. The others could block this by moving into the 'safe' but they would need to move out of it next turn, so at minimum, you need at least two people willing to cooperate with one another to keep this block going but at the cost of no find a key and then finding your safe.

Then again, there's no rule saying you can't buy the loyalty of another player or two to do this blocking for you. It's to the point, it's how he's been able to get some of his money back by allowing himself to be hired out for this blocking maneuver. Vali's not sure how Golden usually plays this game, as he's never even knew it existed until he arrived at this table, so he's making it up as he goes along. Given what he's spied concerning some of the other tables, he's fairly sure that bore Magicians and Deities likely created more then a few of them that he's seen as Enchanted items seem to be the norm for this casino's section.

Finding his safe within the fifth round, he now just needs to find a key. It's near the ninth round when he finds one but the Vampire at the table is the one how won as there had been a key within a two spaces of her safe. "Winner, Jeanette." And he is among those to congratulate her.

By the beginnings of the four toss of the die that a young Wereleopard woman arrive, chiming in, "Break, Earnest!" He is gathering up his tokens and finishing his drink before he leaves the table, murmuring his good byes a minute after the Rakshasa leaves.

"Kind of hard to believe, isn't it? A bunch of high and mighty Devils all got killed." Earnest remarks standing at the fire exit with a special kind of smoke.

"All members of the Khaos Brigade." He remarks in a dry tone. "Such a shame that they were so easily lead astray." He remarks with fake sad tone.

"Pillars must be in such an uproar over the death of so many upstanding members of their nobility." Earnest's eyes seem to dance while the tone is full of fake sympathy. "Just how worried are they?"

"Why worry about a bunch of so call Heroes being able to invade, subdue, and then Summon the Apocalypse Dragon when so many important Head of Houses are dead? It's not like it's any of their business, it's not like, oh, I don't know, Devils were involved." His voice oozes with venom.

"Except that it all comes down to the Khaos Brigade, in the end." Earnest notes. "Got no solid leads?"

"Enough to rule out that it wasn't Angels or Fallen." Vali admits truthfully, after all, the Devils pursued those leads viva their new, nice, and shiny Peace Treaty. "To be honest, I wouldn't be surprise if it weren't an inner organization thing as I was there for when a number of Devils and Fallen attacked Kuoh Academy, those two group almost made it a point to do friendly fire at one another even when fighting off the defenders."

He can tell that Earnest files that bit of information away for the future. "Well... you might want to check out the two Vampire Sects." Earnest muses and he mentally makes a note of that, which means it a connection not many knew about.

"I believe I will." He muses and he does realize there did seem to be an unusual number of Vampires out. Vali takes out a few tokens and as they shake hands, the tokens are not in his hands, he heads back inside.

It looks like he's going to have to actual do something until Golden 's ready to switch with them. Not that the Vampire lead is a new information. He mentally admits.

It likely is to Agent Golden though and it's likely that people are watching you, reporting on you. Albion remarks. After all, Agent Golden likely is known among this cloak and dagger game as someone connected to the Devil Faction through Tannin.

So, I'm kind of playing out a spy movie or novel, in a fashion? He mentally remarks as he takes a moment to study the room from the bar, putting in an other drink order. Albion chuckles as the Dragon knew what he feels about those kind of movies, shows, or books.

Indeed. I'm sure you recall Rou's bewilderment at the concept of him assuming such a role. The Vanishing Dragon muses and yes, he did. Then again, just because Golden can play the spy doesn't mean it's his preferred method, after all, Agent Golden might get two missions a year on average. That's likely because he's already spent the time to get this well establish along with the fact that Devils likely rely on others first and foremost instead of always hiring Golden through Tannin.

Then again, he isn't sure what kind of price tag Agent Golden sports as he's never really cared about this part time job of Golden 's. It's rather startling to find that there is still a few things he doesn't know about his older brother figure but then, it's also concerning a part of Golden 's own affairs and his lack of interest in this particular job. If he'd shown interest, it's more then likely Golden would share stories about his experiences but the Dragon knew his preferences well enough to know that he's not a big fan of complicated and cliche bread trail of clues that could be solved with some blunt words and quick dose of violence.

Well, this should be simple enough, right? It's not like anything bad could happen concerning the Holy Grail now that the Devils expressing interest are out of the picture, right? Vali muses as he spies a Vampire he was gambling with not long ago.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

I think you cursed yourself. Albion remarks as he's doing his best to slice the Enchanted leather that's mixed in with the iron chains keeping him tied up. Thankfully, he decided to wear that bracer and he's used it to freeze the chain portion, now it's just a matter of using a talon to slice through the leather before someone actual goes through with making a hybrid between a Dragon Kin and a Vampire using the Sacred Gear Valerie Tepes is in possession of, who's currently drugged but had been tricked into participating in this course of action viva a use of Illusion Magic and hostage use.

More lookout less commentary. He tells the Dragon within his Divine Dividing Sacred Gear. Vali is very glad for the usual villain cliche of gloating going on as it means he'll be able to you know, escape and put an end to Bran Tepes' insane vision of an Empire of Vampires upon the surface world with the use of an army of hybrid slave soldiers.

There's at least a hundred captive Dragon Kin of varying 'steps' slowly coming too from their drugged induced slumber. Given he's actually a half-Devil, the drug didn't effect him as strongly as the others, even though he's converted few parts of his body into that of a Dragon. It's a drug meant to subdue Dragon Kin not actual Dragons.

The leather gives way and he's quick to start creating a hail of ice shards in the air above Bran, they fall and he's already moving to attack the nearest guard. "Get him!" Bran cries out and he has to resist rolling his eyes at the cliche nature of this whole adventure has taken.

It's not long that a few of those who went through one of the rituals begin to stir enough to realize what's what and he's quick to use the leather bracer to freeze the metal chains while they use their own claws or talons to slice through the remaining leather. They are quick to take up arms and get their own pound of flesh from the various guards, a few free a captive, charging them with freeing the others.

He manages to get to where Valerie Tepes is laying and creates a barrier between Bran and Valerie as he's closer now, allowing for a stronger barrier to be created. "You miserable excuse of a half breed!" Snaps Bran, unknowing hitting the mark in regards to his actual parentage.

"Oh, you are so dead." He growls and charging to engage the crazy Vampire with the intent of ripping the head off and seeing if the skull is a worth while trophy for him. You do recall that your suppose to be a range fighter, right? He hears Albion remark.

The Dance Between Death and Life P12:DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"Do I want to know?" He hears Rou ask, likely Vali. Naruto looks up from his cell phone to find Tannin and Vali.

"He busted a Dragon Kin capturing ring that wanted to transform said Dragon Kin into Vampire hybrids using the Holy Grail Sacred Gear." Tannin explains, clearly amused while Vali walks over to the counter, placing a Vampire Skull onto the counter top. "Which lead to information concerning one Marius Tepes involvement with what could have gotten those Devils killed."

"All that happened in three days?" Rou asks in a hint of bewilderment, which, to be honest, is rather strange given it's usually his brand of Luck. "And... from Las Vegas?"

He got caught in Las Vegas and transported to the Underworld. They had a special drug meant for Dragon Kin, so he was able to recover faster then you would have if you'd gone on the mission. Albion remarks.

Yea, that sounds about right. "So, spoke with...?" He asks and Vali replies, "Earnest the Rakshasa."

"Oh, yea, he's a good source." The Dragon states. "How much did you lose at the six chance game?"

"That's what it's called? Six chance ? Six chance the game?" The half-Devil states with a slight glare.

"I didn't name it and yea, they roll a die, which determines the gamble. The dice is actually blank, Earnest picks the gamble game in actuality." He muses. "If you slip him a token, he'll pick the game your better at but other wise, it's just him deciding on the game nobody wanted or didn't bring up."

All three look at him and he shrugs, "It's a casino, expect the games to be rigged, magical ones were created to need a living anchor to work." Continuing, "Cheat subtly but as long as you only double what you spent, they won't ask you to leave or expose you as a cheater."

"That..." Vali is at a lost for words it seems. "Just to confirm, I was suppose to tip him for the info, right?"

"Yea, tokens will work in a pinch but Earnest prefers an actual coin rupee as payment, any domination really, it doesn't matter to him." He explains. "Hate's banknotes though."

"Ok, well... Here's hoping there won't be a next time." Vali states before walking to the fridge, leaving the Vampire skull on the counter while he glances over to the transformed Tannin. "So, there's no need for more investigation from Agent Golden ?"

"Looks that way, after all, the Devils had plans to resurrect Evil Dragons while also forcefully transforming Vampires into Evil Dragons." Tannin muses and Rou asks, "How's an Evil Dragon different from an actual Dragon?"

"It's... kind of..." He doesn't know how to explain it and Tannin also looks frowns. Generally they are far more brutal and vicious then normal Dragons, not really caring about damages they cause to not just others but also themselves. They are also typically more powerful, even more powerful then the Dragon Kings and are able to fall under the sway of Evil Deities. Very savage, though some might use the term 'broken' in regards to them. Albion explains. I believe there is one by the name of Crom Cruach that many beings think can match Ddraig or myself.

"Can he?" Rou asks and it looks like Vali's also curious, he wouldn't know given this Dragon was growing up during the time he'd spent with Albion. "Who can say, it's not like either of the two Heavenly Dragons have their own bodies to test the claim." Tannin remarks.

"Never mind that even if they got their bodies back tomorrow that they'd be in any condition for a fight." He pipes in. "After all, it's been a pretty long time since either of them actually had bodies never mind the need to get reacquainted with the idea of having a body."

Ouch, way to hit a sore spot. Albion complains and it takes him a few seconds to realize that had been a private comment from the sealed Dragon. As Tannin remarks in agreement with his observation, "Never mind we don't have any idea of where Crom Cruach is or what he's been up too, only that he had been one of the Evil Dragons they approached."

"So, we're going to spin this as them approaching an Evil Dragon who took offense, played along before striking them down?" He muses and Tannin hums. "It's not like any will believe any of the currently active ones if they protested. The name says it all." The former Dragon King points out.

They change the topic to what's been going on with the helmets and his efforts to concerning the Sync Connection. "I might as well just gather up a team of game designers and create some massive monster of a game that has multiple play styles." He admits after giving an over view of the problem with the 'typical' helmets, never mind the way the special Sacred Gear attachments only seem to keep the holder and the sealed being in contact with others of the same connection type.

"Still having trouble with getting the body conditioning to work?" Tannin inquires after they discuss the current design of the helmet for a few minutes. Vali had migrated towards a chair while Rou, Tannin, and himself move to stand about the kitchen counter with drinks.

"It's not that big of a deal in my books, honestly." He admits to that question. "It seems that if the body isn't being affected by the game, then no risk of death or show signs of the same injuries that the person received while within the game. It's seems to be you have to take the good with the bad at this point in time." Naruto admits. "After all, I've only been going at this for under three years and that's without reaching out to others beyond my current social circle."

After all, the reason why the helmet's original creation is something that is still highly appealing as it was meant to condition both the body and the mind of the one wearing it into either a body guard or a solider, into someone who follows orders. There are still people out there who'd excuse such immortal practice of taking someone unwilling or just a child and putting a more improved version of the helmet onto their heads, saying it's for the 'Greater Good'. Which, again, is why he's hesitant about approaching others who's insights would be very helpful in this project as those people likely have untrustworthy underlings or staff who'd be able to nab copies of said plans and work for other parties who would be looking for such interesting and profitable projects to begin with.

Tannin hums while Rou lets out a soft sigh, each look down at their respective drink or just the counter top. "I'd almost shelf the helmet if I didn't think I'd have a mutiny on my hands in regards to people actually handing over their demo helmets." He admits after a period of silence and Rou looks a tad sheepish while Tannin snorts before silently chuckling, yes, the odds of him getting said helmets back or keeping them from those who have grown to enjoy the experience it offers, even if they all end up in the same game regardless of what game they 'loaded' onto the helmet.

"How is the scheduling going by the way when it comes to which game happens which day?" He innocently inquires Tannin and Rou, he's usually a bit occupied with untangling the connections as it just bugs him that he can't untangle it when he's using the enchanted VR helmet himself and thus, he's often unable to fully appreciate the experience. At least people are enjoying it. He thinks as he listens to Rou and the former Dragon King 'talk', AKA complain, about some of the choices of games.

"Naruto!" Millicas cries out, it's been about some months since Vali rescued the young kid from his kidnappers. The crimson haired boy comes walking quickly over to where he's sitting on the couch at Bova's house in Kuoh Town once he's switched from out door footwear to indoor slippers, he grins at the kid.

"How are things back with your grandparents?" He asks after Millicas gives him a hug, which he returns before ruffling the kid's hair. Millicas moves to sit down on the couch, while giving a glance at some of the books upon the coffee table.

"It's a little strange to be living back with them and going back to my old routine again." The kid admits and he nods slightly. "It's so... so odd, having people wait on me again, cleaning up after me."

"Been feeling overly paranoid concerning the staff?" He muses, he's pretty sure that Kazu and Issei have headed off to go use the training room with Bova, leaving him alone with the kid. Millicas looks away from the books for a few seconds before nodding slightly, clearly feeling a bit of shame.

"It's to be expected, you know mentally that they've gone through the staff to weed out disloyalty or blackmail victims but it doesn't matter to your emotions." Naruto muses with a soft sigh. "Anyway, you want to know what's up with these books?" He asks after a minute of silence, deciding to change the subject.

Millicas perks up and leans over to look at the open book, he places a finger before closing the book, the title is Earthdawn with a green mask face with the words Player's Guide near the bottom of the cover. "Earthdawn? Player's Guide?" There's a questioning undertone to Millicas' inquiring.

"Table top role playing games book." The Dragon admits to the young Devil. "I'm pursuing an idea and, well, it's result is here. Most of these had been in sever disrepair so I got them pretty cheap but a repair spell has them pretty much good as new, although I did have to have some paper and ink at the ready to recreate missing pages." Opening the Earthdawn book to the beginning of the Discipline chapter.

"Earthdawn and Shadowrun, are set in the same world, just at different time periods and concerning different magical climates." He explains as he nods at the questioning look the kid gives, who then picks up the Player's Companion for Earthdawn. "In Shadowrun, magic is coming back which causes the hidden races among humans to regain their true appearance and abilities plus magic can now become something to use, which causes the humans to freak out. Same happens among nature too, the hidden magic beasts and plants return to their full potential."

"Earthdawn has magic in decline only after reaching its climax which weaken the barriers of the world allowing alien entities they dubbed Horrors to enter into the world. Although, it seems that the story plot of the game has to do with something causing magic to come to a plateau level along with dealing with the remains of the Horrors." The gold Dragon explains from his reading from various reviews when looking online for cheap but still readable books. "Dragons are scary in both settings although nobody really knows how they survived the era where magic was at zero level. The civilized races are collectively known as Namegivers."

"Can you play as a Dragon?" Millicas asks and he shakes his head with a simple, "Nope, but you can play a Drake, which is a Namegiver who can transform into a dracoform. I can't recall if it's only an option for Shadowrun or if you can do so in Earthdawn, then again, I've only begun reading the actual third edition books and most of what I know of the two games come from doing searches viva the internet."

"So... how do you play a table top game?" The kid asks and it really shouldn't be that surprising. "Well, a pencil, sheets of lined paper, at least a player book, and dice tend to be all one needs. Although, most of the games have their own designed character sheet, not unlike you'd find in a video game concerning a character menu. Some of the older table top games character sheets do look pretty intimidating."

"What is the dice used for?" Millicas asks and he answers, "The dice are rolled to see if your character succeeds in their task, like landing a blow with a sword or managing to lie successfully." Then remembers something, going on to explain, "There's also different kinds of dice types beyond the six sided kind you've seen or a d6, it's a short term for it and it's how most of the die types are usually called. The lowest die is a four sided one typically called a d4, then there's a eight sided one which is a d8, the twelve side is a d12, a d20 is a twenty sided... Oh, there's also a ten sided one as well. Most games do use the d4 through d20 but there are some that stick to a single type but uses a lot of them like Shadowrun with the d6 and Exalted keeping to d10."

"Wow..." Clearly, the idea that there is so many different kind of dice existing is a new concept but then, he'd been surprised by that fact as well, never mind the fact that people will pay good money on dice made out of rare metals or with gemstones if they are rich enough. Never mind various superstitions going on concerning dice among players of table top games. Naruto mentally admits to himself.

"Earthdawn third edition uses the range of d6 to d12 and if you roll the max number on the die, you get to reroll the die while adding to result to the previous number. You can also roll multiple die types or multiple of the same die type." The Dragon continues. "The one who decides if your roll is sufficient to succeeding at said task is person who's given the role of Game Master."

"The player who's role is to come up with a story, act out the roles of various NPCs, and role for the enemies you encounter, they often have a different title depending on the game you are playing too. And while they are suppose to be neutral element, they are people and, well, all that entails which means that they have their limits and can have their own goals when it comes to the game." He recalls, there's plenty of stories about Game Masters or whatever title the game gives them.

"That sounds like a lot of work." Millicas admits and he nods his head in agreement. "Yea, it takes a certain type of person to enjoy always being a group's Game Master, someone who enjoys organization, having numerous backup plans to deal with players going off the 'beaten' path, and can memorize the rules."

Sona Sitri suddenly feels like there's something... interesting to investigate, that there's a role that she's more then suitable for in regards to her skills and interests.

"So... Game Masters are kind of a person version of a video game software?" Millicas muses after thinking it over and he gets thoughtful. "Well, in someways." He allows.

"I think I know someone who might like being a Game Master." The kid admits before musing, "So... all this happens around a table? With other people?"

"That's the classic experience but they also have a few sites or download games that allow you to met people online and play viva the computer." Naruto explains. "I hear that some people meet as strangers at a local hobby or comic story, the owners have a space where they can play said game, often times once a week."

"Strangers just... show up and they play the game?" The kid asks with a hint of bewilderment and he chuckles slightly. "Got to remember that most of them are likely young adults and they can bond over their interest in the game. If they keep coming back, week after week, month after month... Friendships develop."

"That..." He sighs softly, yea, he can empathize with that sentiment. "Yea." Naruto states softly. "It's kind of why I mentioned the computer option, although I think your parents will likely do background checks on anyone you end up contacting. Most of what you need when it comes to the computer approach is an email address, headset, and copy of a book from said game, either physical or digital one. Having a video camera is optional."

Millicas nods, clearly looking a bit more happy. "Dice?" The kid asks and he replies, "Most sites have a digital dice roller."

"We can give Bova's Xbox a work out." He muses and Millicas looks more then happy with that suggestion. "You want to set it up while I get us some drinks or you get the drinks and I set it up?"

"I'll get the drinks!" With that, Millicas gets up and heads for the kitchen. He glances around for a book mark before closing the book. With that, he gets up to retrieve the remote from the stand along with the controllers.

He then clears the coffee table of books, putting the lot into the Conjured backpack that was created with a Spacial Enchantment. A few buttons pressed later, he's got the Xbox's home screen on the big screen TV while Millicas comes back with not just drinks but a big bowl of chips.

Handing over one of the controllers, he leaves picking the game to the kid as he puts down the controller to pick up the can, tapping the top for a few taps before opening it and taking a sip. The kid picks a Gears of War game and before setting the drink down, he takes another long sip. Once the can is on the coffee table, he's picking up the controller with his other hand.

Coming out of the training room, Kazu glancing into the living room to find the coffee table clear of the role playing books Naruto seemed to be pouring over upon their arrival. There's a few cans of pop and a bowl of chips, the pair are playing Bova's Xbox. The two seem to be playing Killer Instinct, it's kind of amusing, watching the two using their respective fighters to kill the other fighter.

Given the stunt of leaving the apartment without informing anyone, Millicas had been grounded upon returning to living with his grandparents and it's come to an end just two weeks ago, at which point, he managed to schedule sometime to visit Bova. Something came up for Rias and her Peerage so, knowing they were heading to Bova's anyway, the co-owner asked them to escort Millicas here. If he didn't know Naruto was well as he does, he'd almost wager that the Dragon caused 'something' to come up.

Continuing on through, he opens the fridge and grabs a pair of water bottles. Placing one down on the counter, he then unscrews the cap of the water bottle he's claiming as his, he gulps a few mouthfuls of water before sighing in relief. Leaving the bottle next to the unopen one, he heads to take care of some business before coming back to reclaim the two bottles.

"What did you guys want for supper?" Naruto asks before he leaves the kitchen, the Dragon bringing in the empty cans within the empty chip bowl. "Vali? Rou?" He asks.

"Vali's gone hunting with Fenrir and the pups in Alaska for the weekend and there's that women only weekend." The former ninja turn Dragon states. "I'll be spending the weekend here and Bova doesn't mind me sparring with the two of you either." The golden Dragon states with a toothy grin and memories of Sasuke's spars and fights with Naruto flash in his mind's eye.

"Why does this suddenly feel like we're about to have our asses handed to us?" He blurts out and Naruto blinks in surprise. "Might be because I'm a Dragon?" The current blond half-Devil appearing Dragon suggests and for some reason, the memory of Naruto and Sasuke's fight at the Valley of End plays out and shivers slightly at remembering the feeling of thrusting a ball of lightning into the former human's chest.

"No... I highly doubt that's the full cause at this point." He remarks. "Spells?"

"I won't use any but feel free to use them as you see fit." Naruto states and that does help settle something within him. "So, suggestions? Millicas doesn't care what it is."

"It's been a while since I had a good American pizza." He admits and Naruto looks bemused. "What?"

"Well then, I've a phone call to make." The Dragon says and he watches as a smart phone gets Conjured in Naruto's left hand, as he watches, the blond goes through a list of Contacts. Naruto then turns to give him a Look and he sighs, saying, "An All Dressed one at least."

"Understood." The blond states and he heads for the training room, wondering for a moment about the change in the cell phone before realizing that it might be due to the blond having done some work for Bova's father, the former Dragon King Tannin. It's likely that in doing some work for Tannin that Naruto earned a few favors from Tannin.

Issei can't help but wonder if they might have displeased Bova at some point in the last few months as he does his best to not collapse onto the ground and give up or gingerly rubbing his likely broken nose. Naruto's sticking to his half-Devil form and no spell use or using magic to argument his body yet... The Dragon doesn't look all that winded nor did it seem that the blows they landed on the golden scaled Dragon seem to hamper him much.

He's been sticking to hand to hand and human form, even though they're allowed to use whatever they had, including their natural forms and his Sacred Gear. He's coming to regret it as his younger brother didn't bother with limiting himself, so he's welding his two Enchanted weapons, both are one handed, the axe is in the right while a short sword is in the left. So far, neither weapon has managed to actually land a hit on the defending Dragon, he has to conclude that Naruto is very good when it comes to evading their team ups as well.

Oh, they've managed to land a few hits, it's just that, all the blows came from his own fists and as he's been keeping to human level of strength, they haven't really hurt the Shape-shifted Dragon. He's done his best to go for the usual weak spots while the Dragon dodges his brother's weapons. It's clear that Naruto's focusing a bit more on his twin's movements then his own, meaning that the Dragon dubs Kazu the greater threat between them. And he can't help but realize that it's warranted.

I was foolish, thinking I could fight someone with decades worth of experience with such restrictions. He mentally admits. With the index finger of his left hand, he gingerly runs the tip of his finger over the swollen flesh.

Indeed. Naruto likely has been sparring with Vali for years and you've only started training in a combat style for a handful of years. Ddraig states. Never mind that even a half-Devil's physical more powerful then a normal human.

He's also someone I haven't fought against before. The young Red Dragon Emperor admits to the ancient Dragon. Friend or not, I should have taken him seriously from the start. With Asia here, at least we'll be back on our feet sooner then relying on Healing spells.

Lowering his hand, he turns his head just so, getting a look at the worrying look Asia is wearing. Feeling guilt flare up within him but also a bit of anger at not just aimed at himself. There's a bit aimed at Naruto for a couple of reasons. He couldn't find it within himself to be angry at his younger brother for taking this fight seriously nor at Bova, as the much older Dragon seemed to think this was a learning experience for them, which, in the end, was one that he needed it seems.

"Oi, Issei! You wake yet?" Naruto calls out to him, snapping him from his thought and glaring at the current half-Devil, he allows his body to flow into his natural form and mentally recalling one of the Healing Spells he's memorized to fix his nose.

With the spell taking hold, he dodges the current half-Devil's in coming kick and is mentally going through the prep work for an attack spell. Kazu's following in Naruto's wake, moving to get between himself and the Dragon, giving him time to cast it. Naruto just grins widely while moving to attempt to get around his brother to get at him. Sapphire eyes clearly homing in on him, there's no doubt that Naruto's not going to be ignoring him that much from here on out.

Let's see how well you do against the Red Emperor. He thinks at Naruto as the current blond just manages to evade a thrust from Kazu's left hand while he manages to fire off a simple fireball, managing to hit the current half-Devil in his right forearm.

The Dance Between Death and Life P13:DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

"So, how was the weekend at Bova's?" Rou asks as he's in the front portion of the Lair, the area that's dominated by his collection, the lone vampire skull being Vali only real trophy. He's got the various RPG books around the area while he's working on creating something that might be able to filter the information within the books into rules for an illusion world.

Pausing in his project, he glances up at the newly arrived Rou, the local Dragons have grown use of Rou's presence in the Dragon Lands. More then a few Dragons wonder if Vali's courting her as he's of Age compared to him. "You..." Naruto trails off, not sure if he really wants to continue to commit on her current appearance or about the fact that she's been gone for an extra three days, meaning she's been gone for almost a week and it looks like the women only weekend proved to be... adventurous.

Rou flushes, which brightens the contrast of the... body paint? Gods above and below, I hope that's body paint. He can't help but think to himself. Then the paint color seems to change to another bright color, which had been a bright red is now a bright yellow. Then the shape of the body paint begins to alter from the modern tribal into a more pixel style while moving from a sun into a cloud. "Had an eventful time." He finishes and Rou nods her head, looking a tad more relax now.

"On another note... Are you acquainted with a Far darrig by the name of Haste by chance?" Rou inquires and he blinks, it's been a while since he's really had much reason to seek out a Fae being of any sort.

"I recall a young rattling that went by the name of Dasher, skinny specimen and albino as well." Naruto admits. "It was, oh, I a few years before the first World War that I spent time seeing what answers I could get from the remaining Fae about where their Nobles went." Dasher had been coined as bad luck by the various Fae communities.

"Albino?" Rou inquires and he shrugs, replying, "An off white with surprisingly dark red eyes, plus very skinny, even in his truest form."

There's a thoughtful look now on her face while he's kind of curious as to how they ended up in Europe as he thought they picked a tropical island to spend their weekend at. Much like the Asian Youkai, Fae don't wander beyond their usual haunting grounds, at one point, he actually mused over the idea that certain supernatural races might actually have evolved from a single race. Youkai, Fae, American Native Spirits...

It's been decades since he revisited that train of thought though. The former ninja begins to walk, her mind still lost in her own thoughts, so he takes time to regard the likely Conjured cloths and is rather surprised to note that the shoes look to be Gnome made, which, again, causes him to wonder how they ended up in Europe of all places never mind managing to get a hold of a Gnome made anything as Gnomes were one of the Fae types that seem to be... fading. The dress is a solid color that is a flattering color given Rou's complexion and hair, with what appears to be a matching jacket only there's some actual embroidery along the neck and the buttons looking like they were made from a light green jade shaped in a lotus flower.

"Haste, huh?" The Dragon muses with a thoughtful look, recalling the last words he spoke to Dasher. "Haste makes waste." He murmurs out loud to himself once they finish watching a Dual between a Barghest and a Brag that ended with the Barghest growing impatient and charging the current donkey shaped Brag. The Brag was quick to move and kick the Barghest in the head with her hind legs, winning the Dual. "Really? Good to know, Bright, good to know." Dasher says then darts off before he could say good bye properly.

Shaking his head, he dismisses the subject from his mind, after all, it's clear that whatever happened, they solved it as they did make it home in pretty much one piece. Even if they still had something hanging over their heads, it's really up to them to ask for help. As far as he is aware, he didn't leave any loose ends among the Fair Folk and he's knowledgeable enough to know how to check for that sort of thing and has done so once a decade.

"So..." He stares at the rather odd looking box, almost crate, item that Golden had been working on since he returned from Bova's place and having sparred with the Hyoudou twins. Needless to say, Issei had a LOT to say during a shared game in MVR, which had been the second Disgaea game. Both Albion and himself had been bemused while Ddraig seemed rather exasperated, likely due to this not being the first time the elder Hyoudou twin has expressed these thoughts.

"It's an experimental magic reader meant to take the information from physical books placed within to generate a digital world based on said world information." The Dragon explains and given he helped Golden look into purchasing cheap RPG books, he does have an idea of what game settings could be created. "If the results work, I might see if I can't do something similar concerning TV shows."

Kind of like a server then? Holding onto the game date? "Is it ready for testing?" He inquires as he pauses the TV show to give Golden his full attention. Rou went back to sleep after grabbing something to eat. He's fairly interested in just what happened to the women of that LARP Cabal that caused them to all be missing for five days, after all, a few of them were not human or fully human, but decides to wait for them to share the story.

"I'm hoping to use the TV screen, I'll be using my laptop to filter the information into a world... Ah, maybe you can take a look at the computer to see if it'll be able to handle it." Golden suggests and he smirks a tad before turning the receiver box off while leaving the TV screen on.

"Sounds good." He says and the half-Devil gets up off the couch to retrieve said laptop from the desk. Golden heads for his part of the Lair once he put the Enchanted crate onto the table to get the books.

Once he's got the laptop booted up, he uses the Enchanted connection cables, the ends easily connect with the magic that's been Enchanted during the creation of said crate. With that done, Golden arrives with the Conjured backpack that's likely holding said RPG books as he's running a scan to see if the MVR program could get readings from the Enchanted crate. The next step he does concerning the results is duplicating the program so he can start modifying the new one for what's needed concerning Golden 's new idea concerning the using game books in place of video games.

"Going to keep it simple?" He asks as Golden begins to pull out a few core books. "Might as well." The former ninja muses and studies some of the titles before beginning to put the more complicated books away, which were the original Rifts books and D&D.

"Well, which World of Darkness did you prefer?" Golden inquires upon setting a refilled drink on the coffee table for him. The current White Dragon Emperor blinks over towards the Dragon's face before looking at the selection of books still on the table.

"Werewolf sounded fun." He admits and Golden snorts but nods. "The latest edition work?"

"Yea." And boy did that book see a lot of use, some of the pages got loose along with the corners seen wear and the cover got some scratches. It had gotten dropped in a pond at one point, the pack that had been holding it got sent flying further then intended, the shear weight of it causing it to fly so far. It had been easy to repair the combination of damage done to said book including the water damage.

"Tell me when you think it's ready to read the book." Golden states before heading off to the kitchen. "Will do." He murmurs, at least whatever gaps in the information can be easily filled in viva the computer accessing only a small portion of the internet for modern day events and such.

| T = (/ I \ ) = T |

"So..." Issei trails off and he glances towards the younger Emperor, with a raised eyebrow up in a questioning manner. "Has Rou mentioned anything about that weekend? I mean, Kazu's kind of worried given how distracted a lot of the women are even after it's been two weeks."

"Rou inquired about a Far darrig going by Haste to Naruto. So they ended up in Europe as that's where the remaining Fae communities are." Vali tells the elder Hyoudou twin while their respective trapped Dragon partners are busy flying about the ruined sky, the two seem to 'dance' about one another, neither attacking the other, it's almost a game of chicken, the first to actually touch the other loses.

"Damn, so that's why they are so..." Issei admits and he nods in agreement, even as under powered as the current remaining Fae are, their specialty is mind games, viva using illusions, word play, and tempting deals. "Is there anyway to... you know, check to see if there's still... strings?"

Their conversation takes a pause as they spy more zombies racing towards their vantage point and they then begin picking them off with their respective sniper rifles. The few shots that miss, he tsks while doing his best to line up for the next shot. His crimson counter part tends to huff the first few times he misses his target before growling angrily. It takes a good few minutes to pick off the last of the zombie swarm, the ones that managed to get to the bottom of their sniper tower are a bit harder as the zombies do move around and some of the more fleshy zombies can take a few more hits from their pistols, then again, pistols are for more mid range then the current range they are using.

"Ok, so, back on the previous topic, is there?" It takes Vali a few seconds to recall what Issei is talking about. "Yes, there's a spell meant to magical connections with an individual. I've seen Naruto preform it on himself once, says he does it about once a decade on average." He shares as it takes him some minutes to recall that memory while reloading the sniper rifle before checking the time.

Then an alert sounds and the world pauses, he feels a 'weight' on his back that signalling that Albion has returned to his Divine Dividing. "Looks like you have school. I'll get Naruto to sent out the spell or ritual needed to check for said connections on that forum or viva the LARP Message Group." He promises while the score board displays who killed the most zombies by shooting which part of the body. The Red Dragon Emperor got the most kills but he killed the most viva a single head shot, which means victory for marksmanship goes to him as that was the goal of this session.

"Right, see ya." They then both log out and he moves the helmet off his head. As he waits for the verge of logging out fades, he mentally reviews what his plans are for today, talking with Golden will be easy to do and he will be more then willing to help as most of today is likely the same as the day before, which seems to be making improvements to the magical server concerning the ability to, you know, delete the stored world that is Werewolf the Apocalypse, it doesn't help that they've only managed to delete the pdfs concerning the other game line but it keeps trying to re-download said pdfs as well.

The server reading of the physical copies seem to become hardware for the setting world, which is now good to know but at the same time, Golden had already had the server box 'scan' the latest physical copies of other source books, which have been incorporated into said generated world. It's to the point that Golden thinks they actually have to play out the Apocalypse of the game's meta-story, which means they need to enter into the game setting world and the Dragon doesn't know how doing so will affect them.

We might be able to have Fenrir and his sons join us in said world as Lupus Werewolves.

Feeling gravity settle down, Vali takes the helmet off and then sits up carefully to find that Hati is on his chest, he gently holds onto said pup looking magic wolf as he fully sits up. Hati yawns and stretches, ears flickering around while the dark furred son of Fenrir decides to snuggle against his chest. "I swear, you two prefer to act your apparent age then your actual ones." He murmurs which only earns him a soft snort from said ancient wolf, who really shouldn't be content to appear as a three month old pup.

Moving off of his bed, he heads for the general rooms that are shared. As Vali gets to said shared space, he finds Golden laying on the floor, napping with Skoll on Golden 's upper body, it's a bit more toward the lower region, the so call stomach region. Fenrir seems to be content watching a Garou Moot on the TV screen, the language coming from the speakers is not one he understands, then again, it's not really a human language. The time period is hard to pin point just by looking at the scenery, cloths, and weapons, but a glance to the top of the video window, the date seems to be early nineteenth century and the location is in Ireland.

"Go bug your brother, Hati." He murmurs before crouching down to place the pup looking wolf onto the ground. Hati huffs at him before giving him the puppy eyes to get picked up once more. "Not falling for it. So, shoo." He states as he stands up, heading for the kitchen to make some coffee as it looks like someone could use a pick me up.

As he fills to mugs, he finds that Hati on one of the chairs, watching the TV screen like his father. The smell of coffee getting within a few feet of him causes Golden stirs, which causes Skoll to begin stretching and waking enough to give him a slight unimpressed look. "Spoke with Issei, you should message instructions on that spell or ritual concerning magical connections." He states once the Dragon is fully awake and going for the mug of coffee he brought over.

Humming, Golden scratches Skoll behind an ear once the pup moves to settle on the Dragon's lap. "Yea, I can do that. Although I don't think there's anything left concerning their adventure given how Fae powers have waned and the amount of time that has eclipsed." The other admits. "Then again, it would give them peace of mind that it's over."

"Any luck with..." He glances at the Enchanted cable. "No nor in eliminating the world's support pillars. I've managed to get rid of them in concerned with the computer though but... It's like something else is... Supporting it. The behavior of the Weaver, Wyld, and Wyrm, I almost suspected them developing into actual AIs but nope as they keep repeating the so call historical actions, with the Weaver 'waking' to the fact that it's creations are always getting destroyed by the Wyrm and creating the perfect Wyrm trap and it goes from there."

"I've managed to influence things within the setting though, yet the Wyrm always falls into said trap and even if I manage to weaken the trap within a few years for it to escape, it always starts a war between the Weaver and the Wyrm, it just means that the Wyrm isn't insane or develop multiple personality disorder save that it's then hell bent to destroy the Weaver's new Self Awareness of its actions, developing a certain level of self Awareness itself." Golden continues. "The Wyld's self preservation instincts is what actually seems to the reason for it's retreating influence and the few times I've seen the either try and reach the 'core' of the Wyld... It doesn't end well for them as the Wyld seems to cause a hard reboot, making the two lose their Self Aware nature, which is a massive blow for those sentient beings that look towards the Weaver and the Wyrm."

"How does that even work?" He can't help but ask. "It's like them reaching out with a hand into a hurricane, they likely assume that the Wyld would be weak and thought they didn't need to actually do anything in regards to the Wyld, which, might be the very reason for the seemingly instinctive, coward like behavior."

"And the two are always locking heads with one another that they don't dare take their 'eyes' off one another, always looking for weakness." He realizes. "The Wyld never gave them any reason to pay it any mind as it doesn't fight..."

"Seems clever but I've checked, the Wyld never developed Self Awareness like the other two." Golden explains. "Which means that it's done a few trail and errors of its own on a smaller scale before settling on this one. Which I've found minor examples of once I used a filter to observe only the Wyld's energies and highlighting the opposing energies 'harvesting' its energy for its own purposes."

"Regardless, it's a successful tactic for it to use." The White Dragon Emperor admits and then recalling what he spoke with Issei about, says, "You mind sharing that spell or ritual concerning magical connections with Rou and the others? You know, to help them get over their adventure in Europe."

The disguised Dragon blinks cocking his head slightly as while a look of puzzlement turns into understanding in under a minute. "Ah, yea, eh, should have thought of sharing it before now..." Golden looks rather embarrassed, going so far as to rub the back of his neck. "I'll start on that after I've eaten something and... taken a shower." Golden admits after taking a sniff at his current set of Conjured cloths.

Nodding, he drinks from his mug as he turns to regard the Moot on display, it looks like they're doing challenges given there's a wrestling match going on in their respective Glabro forms and without any kind of weapons save for their own fists and feet.

The Dance Between Death and Life P14:DxD

I do not own High School DxD and Naruto!

The world hitches to a very sudden and sharp stop and he finds himself flung forward, his vision slow to clear up enough for him to realize he's staring down into the grass and dirt that makes up the ground. It takes minutes before he's got an idea of just what's going on concerning his position along with the pounding of his brain seem to subside. It takes him seconds to realize that he's got tears flowing from his eyes and Naruto uses the back of his hand to clear the tears from his eyes.

Exhaustion seems to settle on him and things just feel so... different, particularly his midsection. Sniffling, the blond gets some help getting to his feet and for some reason, he just stares at the mask upon the ANBU's face. It's then that he realizes he's not the only one who's getting help getting off the ground, again, tears well up in his eyes and he turns to regard the Hokage Monument. Everything just seems to surreal for some reason yet, there's no reason why it should be, after all, all that Jutsu did was cause a smoke screen and maybe kicked up the dirt.

Though he tries to pull away from the ANBU with the mask of a bear but the other keeps a firm hold on him. In the end, he just allows himself to be manhandled away, all the while, he's taking note of everyone around him and finding it hard to stop himself from crying. Some of the others being escorted away are also crying, although, most of those seem to be tears of joy or happiness then sorrow.

And that's the emotion he's feeling, it's sorrow. But over what? There doesn't seem to be any answer to that question in the end.

"So, how's thing between, well, you know? Your team?" He asks Hinata after they talked about their latest series of missions. "Is there still that..."

"Kiba's partnership with Akamaru is getting better." His girlfriend admits after taking a sip of the tea. "It's... still strange, but we're adapting and doing our best to close the gap that seems to have come between us."

"Lucky you." Naruto admits to Hinata, it's hard not to relax when he's in her company, it's strange how before that Jutsu Incident, he'd be at his most nervous around her when they were on a date. Yet now, it seems only natural for him to feel secure and comfortable in her company. "Sasuke still works better with Sai and Shikamaru then with Sakura while doing his best to not engage in close quarter combat with me."

Which is bizarre, then again, it just feels so right as well. "I still don't have any troubles working with Sasuke, then again, it seems kind of..." Like we're missing someone or someones.

"Are you still trying to prefect your ability to transform into a bird?" Hinata asks after a bit. "Looking up at the sky... It just feels... Like I belong up there." He confesses but not for the first time.

Hinata smiles slightly at him and reaches forward to give him a comforting squeeze, he returns the smile and moves to hold her hand for a few seconds. They both flush and pull their respective hands from touching one another. A comfortable silence hangs between them for a bit, their conversation picks up as they refill their respective cups of tea, gossiping about a number of minor rumors floating about who's dating who.

"I have to re-sign the contract?" Naruto asks in slight bewilderment, it had taken him nearly a year to find the emergency Toad Contract among the Hokage Library that his godfather, Jiraiya, left behind years ago for Old Man Third. The moment Gamakichi saw him, the Toad started to cry and pretty much bear hugged him, from what little he's gathered, it seems that the Toads thought him dead.

"Yea!" Gamatatsu states, Gamakichi had been quick to Reverse Summon himself, carrying the blond ninja along for the ride. It hadn't been long before the other Toads realized that, yes, he's alive, and yes, he's actually Uzumaki Naruto. "Just need to redo the hand print!"

Glancing at the red Toad, Gamakichi merely shrugs, remarking, "If it doesn't work, then you can go through with putting your name back on it." He doesn't get a chance to reply before he's pretty much in picked up and they brothers are leaping to where the Summon Contract is.

And so, with a bit of Wind Chakra, he dabs his finger tips in his own blood after taking a few seconds to admire the scroll. Then, as his now larger hand touches the section, the scroll glows and then, his hand is recorded in a blank space only the name... "What language is that?" He can't help but wonder in bewilderment and feeling rather concerned.

"Was that suppose to happen?" Gamatatsu asks and in the end, nobody seems to know the answer. "Maybe we should speak with Gamamaru?" Gamatatsu wonders once they asked to see if anyone knew the language and none of the other Toads did, although Naruto did get a lot of warm welcomes and introductions to the latest Toads to put their names on the Summoning Registry.

"Well, maybe we should see if Naruto can Summon us? I mean, if he's able to, then does it matter if we understand the writing his name is in?" Gamakichi muses.

"Are we even sure that the name even means Naruto?" He can't help but wonder yet, in the end, he kind of has to agree that they likely shouldn't worry Gamamaru about it as long as the re-signing takes effect. They head off to one of the training grounds and then wait a few minutes before trying to Summon a Toad, which, he succeeds at, although he's going to need to practice so he can Summon the siblings with ease again.

Gamakichi returns him home and, well, he figures he might as well speak with Sasuke to give the Uchiha a heads up that he'd need to re-sign the Summon Contracts to Summon from said Summon Clan.

"Brat, we need to talk." Kurama states upon, pulling him from a dream. The gigantic fox... doesn't seem to be all that big.

"About?" He asks before blinking at the 'sound' of his voice and the crimson looking being just smirks at him as he feels his eyes widen. Then the bastard laughs outright as he freaks out concerning his 'body' being some kind of lizard with bat like wings plus gold in color.

"When did this happen?!" He can't help but exclaim once he stopped trying to dispel the 'body' he finds himself in. "Well, given what happened with the Summon Contract, I started giving you a look over, lo and behold, I began to catch glimpse of... this when I was looking for you. This just confirms my suspicions that the Jutsu Incident wasn't what you all thought it was."

Naruto feels a slight shiver go down his spine. "Oh, your body is human, it's just that you view of yourself is that of this." Kurama states with a tail twitch. "On a sub-conscious level."

He doesn't know what to make of that bit of information. So, he just sits and can't help but try to figure out just why he'd imagine himself as a golden scaled lizard with bat wings. Kurama lays down and seems content to watch him.

Ah... Oh, huh, yea, that explains how I finally managed to reach you. A much more booming voice remarks and he stiffens while turning his head in the direction to find a far bigger red scaled lizard with bat wings standing behind him. The whole area changes size to allow the other to fit.

"Who are you?" He asks while feeling rather intimidated by the new individual. Naruto senses Kurama's shock and hears the fox pad to stand next to him, it's a surprising show of comfort yet...

Don't remember me, huh? Then again, given how you all got ejected from those bodies, it shouldn't be that surprising. The crimson scaled being remarks. Not sure if I should take offense of that or not, ah well, that's easy to rectify. A fangy grin accompanies that particular declaration.

The eyes flash and suddenly... Suddenly the 'body' doesn't feel so... alien and he also remembers just who the other is while Kurama bristles in a threatening manner. "Great Red, Kurama. Kurama, met Great Red also known as the Dragon of Dreams, Dragon of Dragons, the Apocalypse Dragon, and the True Red Dragon God Emperor." He feels Kurama's jaw drop and he ducks his head. "Yea, I know, but those are actually his titles and what he generally answers to."

"Dragon?" Kurama remarks and he sighs, it's not like he doesn't get why either. "Yes, in the world that usually graced with Great Red, Dragons get divided up into a lot of ways but the most general distinction is Western and Eastern in appearance, though generally, Eastern Dragons are generally fall under the Youkai Faction as they prefer to have close ties with said group."

"So yes, I am classified as a Dragon, a Western styled one but still a Dragon." He admits. "As for why, well, we got our souls ripped out of us and then sent to another world along with shoved into bodies that weren't right."

"He," Naruto gestures to the towering Apocalypse Dragon, "collected our souls, many of which were damaged by the travel into said world." Taking a moment to stretch his wings before repositioning them, he continues, "Anyway, in the name of entertainment, he gave me the choice of picking the race for my body, one that would be properly attuned to my soul."

"I don't see you picking something like Dragon for power, brat." Kurama remarks and Great Red snorts softly. He picked Dragon due to his friendship with one of the two Heavenly Dragon Emperors, Albion, the Vanishing Dragon, the White Dragon Emperor, and Dragon Gwiber.

"Of course he just had to befriend somebody that powerful." The crimson fox remarks, moving to sit down while he ducks his head, feeling rather embarrassed. Oh, it's better! He almost died attacking a disguised Albion while he was in the body of a magical creature called a Griffin. If not for Albion being bored, he would have died from his injuries.

"Just what kind of luck do you actually possess, you baka Brat? To keep escaping death like that..." Murmurs Kurama, who glares at him for his foolishness.

"To be fair, I kind of feel a great deal more sympathy for you and your siblings for having to put up with idiot humans trying to kill you in the name of becoming famous." He admits. "If not for the whole able to use magic to disguise myself as a so called 'lesser' being, I think I would have offed my share of armies."

"Idiot." Kurama states and he notices the way the nine-tail Chakra being looks off to the side, perhaps in embarrassment? Then again, it just might be to glare off at some random spot, it's hard to tell to be honest as he's not able to see the other's eyes very well.

"So... how did our souls end up back here? I mean, I'm pretty sure you had plans to only send us back here after we died in that world." He states as he moves to fully give the humongous Dragon his full attention, looking up at the Great Red.

That Enchanted memory box got hacked by Azazel and Satan Ajuka Beelzebub due to them wanting to figure out how such a 'complete' world got 'created' and had been trying to create a space to 'investigate' it using their pocket dimension technology. Which in turn resonated with something the Biblical God created and thus, the whole of that world save for the Biblical Faction are currently 'sleeping'. Great Red informs him. Ophis keeps trying to end it only causing events to loop around again, which means that entrapped Angels, Devils, and Fallen also fall prey to this Temporal Loop. I've managed to help Awaken three members to the Loop but they are running into trouble concerning Ophis trying to make them Sleep.

"How long as this been going on?" He asks with a hint of dread, after all, Vali technology counts as a member of the Devil race simply being a half-Devil. Is Vali ok?

As if reading his mind, Great Red assures him by saying, You adopted sibling slumbers half the time with the rest of the world and only lives one life as a Garou. Which implied that the various members are getting Reincarnated after dying. As for time... Hard to say, but this is on its nine hundredth and something Temporal Loop. It usual begins at the so called Zero AD and restarts at some month in the year Nineteen Ninety-nine AD.

That's... a very long time to experience a Time Loop. He mentally admits. After all, it's been about three years since that Jutsu Incident. "How do you expect me to help? I doubt I'm capable of, you know, harming Ophis."

There are two things you need to access from within that 'world' and with Vali, he'll be able to help you 'hack' two of them. I'll deal with Ophis so that this Apocalypse that this 'world' is heading for can happen, which will clear it from your Enchanted memory box. Great Red states and he nods, guessing what the two systems that need to be hack being.

"And what happens afterwards?" Kurama asks and he glances towards the fox, then the inquiry registers properly. "Will you return him?" Will he return? Seems to be what Kurama is really asking.

Of course he'll be returned. Great Red states calmly. "Right away?"

To this point in time? Yes. Right after he does this? That, it up to him. After all, he does still have a life to finish in that world. Great Red states as the Dragon of Dragons looking down at Kurama.

"Rou... Hinata..." Kazu... He feels his stomach flip. "The others? Are you going to retrieve them as well?"

I will visit each and give them the choice to decide that for themselves. States Great Red and he nods. "Sounds reasonable." He admits.

"Idiot... I'm coming with you." Declares Kurama and he blinks as he turns to regard the other with a bit of surprise. "I will see for myself just what it is you see in this adopted brother of yours."

Oh? Well then, you want to keep your current state as a kitsune or try for something different? Great Red asks and there's a fangy smirk there.

Needless to say, he got pulled into explaining what races there are along with general weaknesses and strengths, which includes explaining why Youkai generally had to stick to Asia along with explaining that yes, Deities actually do exist and then about the various cultures of the world. Youkai are firmly connected with the Asia Pantheons and that trying to move away from Asia permanently never works out for the Youkai involved as something always calls them to return to some part of Asia. After all, it's the same as to why Fae never migrated to America or into either Africa and Asia, something ties them to Europe.

He lays down as the pair hash out in a verbal manner. Personally, he just wants to get on with meeting up with Vali in order to put an end to this reality overwrite that's happening because he didn't just destroy the damn fucking thing the moment it wouldn't let him delete the information it 'read' from the physical books.

The End of The Dance Between Death and Life

Readers:

Well, here's an ending to The Dance Between Death and Life, perhaps I'll continue in this universe perhaps I won't. Either way, I want to thank you all for reading this story, which likely could have had its own actual title instead of falling under my Random Thoughts of a Chaotic Mind.

Taken Child: KHR!

I don't own Katekyou Hitman Reborn!

He woke with no memory of a name nor can he recall his own life from before he woke. Having woken up, he'd searched around the small grove, all he'd been wearing is some necklace made out of tarnish looking metal sporting a large gemstone that's five centimeters wide at the top part then its side goes down about a centimeter down before it ends at a point. The gem is clear in color and he's able to see fairly clearly through the flat sides of it upon toying around with it, he also found he couldn't find the clasp for the necklace nor could he slide the necklace off over his head, even though it looks like he should as the gem pendant hangs pretty easily at his chest bone.

Another thing he notices is the lack of hair on his body, including head hair but also eyebrows and even the fine hair that's suppose to be on his arms. His skin is fairly pale and he's unsure as to the ultimate cause as he can only guess at this point as to why its so. Then he examines his skin, doing his best to become familiar with the sight and maybe find something, anything, that stands out, yet there's nothing. No scars, no bruises, no freckles, and no skin moles marring the parts of his body that he can examine.

The soles of his feet feel soft and gently running his finger nails along the bottoms of his soles... It kind of tickles slightly. It's not just the soles of his feet that are soft but also the skin of his palms. There's no really much more he can examine without aid now yet, he doesn't really know if it's safe to leave. After all, he Knows it's safe in this small grove, that there's nothing to harm him here plus it's currently the only place he Knows, that's Familiar.

"Can I... This is... Was I always... So confused..." He murmurs and his left hand gently glides over his bald head before that causes confusion within him as well. Then he uses his tongue to check the back of his teeth before using his right index finger to check the front, which feels wet, warm, and odd.

Wrinkling his nose, he studies the now semi-wet finger tip and then looks down, the sight of his nakeness causes him to hum while he tilts his head before wiping it on the grass he's been sitting on. Letting out a long sigh, he pushes himself up off the grass and is quick to use the tree trunk to catch his balance. "Just how weak am I?"

Nothing answers him and it takes him some time to walk in a straight line without wobbling off course. Once he's able to walk from one side of the grove to the other without using the various trees to help him, he takes a moment to look about the area before heading off in a random direction, after all, one direction is as good as another, right?

"Your a Statikling." The Gnome farmer states upon recovering from looking at the clear pendant that's on display. "But you don't recall a Name? Or anything?"

Nodding, he isn't sure what to make of the look the Gnome gives him and the vibrant blue haired Gnome sighs. "Usually you'd be at one of the Courts but it seems you've been found wanting so you've been abandoned." The Gnome stats.

"That pendant hanging about your neck? It's not suppose to be clear like that." The Gnome explains to him. "Which means you can't enter into any Contracts or be held to Favors."

"So... I am without worth cause Contracts and Favors are the life blood of Fae." He muses as this shakes loose some information within his head. "Yet, as a Statikling, I should have round ears."

"Huh, your right, that's certainly odd, too." Muses the Gnome. "You know, if you hide the pendant, you might be able to pass yourself off as some kind of Elf."

"You are being rather helpful." He admits as more information begins to descend into his mind with a slight frown. He'd like to ask a question but knows now how that can be taken.

"Perhaps I am feeling generous or perhaps I've got some kind of designs concerning someone who can lie in my stead." The Gnome's got a toothy grin and, yea, he can lie, can't he?

"I... find it interesting you'd trust me given..." He flushes and the Gnome hums.

"Oh, your young and not that jaded by life yet." The Gnome states and, well, he kind of concludes that the Gnome's got a point. "Ok, Ao-san, but I would like some cloths to help sell myself as an elf plus more detail about what's what."

"Ao-san... Oh, I like it, it's rather foreign sounding." The newly nicknamed Ao-san says. "It just means blue..." He admits, cocking his head to the side but it's clear that Ao-san didn't care what it translates into.

Ao-san doesn't seem to really reply while beginning to walk towards the small house, he follows after a few seconds later, after all, he wouldn't mind having something to wear. Even as he walks, he mentally reaches for more information about the usual expectations of being a Statikling, after all, it means that there's a Fae Changeling child living with his family, having been given his True Name and place in the human world.

= }] o - T - o [{ =

Time moves in odd ways in the Country of Neverever and thus, years seem to pass without him aging one bit, then he'd fall asleep only to wake seemingly a year older with his body having undergone growth spurt that means he's not as graceful as he is use to and his off white hair is always longer then it had been as well, which means he needs to get it cut shorter. His few, trusted contacts, Ao-san still among them, always tease him during his adjustment period with a few of the more feminine ones teasing him about how he is beginning to stop being cute far too soon for their tastes. Which is just bewildering as he's pretty sure as a Statikling, he's not really as cute or adorable as they say compared to most Fae, but, it's likely that he is indeed cute or adorable compared to other Statiklings that are part of the Courts.

He's met a few other Statiklings that exist are all part of the Courts and it's enough for him to be thankful that he was abandoned as worthless given how the Fae of the Courts just don't seem to grasp how to raise human kids, never mind how casually those same Fae are about enslaved them once they develop a new Name and get it from said young Statikling with ease. One of the very first orders a Court Statikling is ever given is that they are forbidden to lie, period. Which, of course, is what always causes them to be punished as they need to learn how to bend the truth but the Fae of the Courts just don't seem to grasp how a Statikling can't automatically grasp the concept after a time or two.

So yea, typical Statiklings become jaded rather early in their life and clearly have issues. Not that it matters as by the time a Statikling is near the age of ten, they are returned to the human world and left to fend for themselves. Most Statiklings find their way back to the World of Elsewhere, maybe even returning to the Country of Neverever, in their late teens or early adulthood, not able to feel at home among the humans, not even if they find the Changeling that replaced them and killed them to try to reclaim their rightful Name and place in the human world. It's a pitiful situation and he's just thankful that whatever is happening in the human world, it's caused a sharp decline in the Changeling and Statikling exchange, so now the mix blooded Fae are being raised in other parts of Elsewhere, even if they aren't allowed to grow up living in Neverever.

"Oh look at you, Shimo-kohai! You're now so tall!" Tanoshisa coos at him as the Dullahan ruffles his newly grown white hair. Her head is resting on her shoulders right now.

"Well, yea, I think I'm in my teenage years, Tanoshisa-senpai." Shimo is suppose to mean frost, it's not his Name but then, he's called that due to his hair. "Isn't it time for me to..." Trailing off, it's been a question he's brought up since he grown into a nine years old.

"I don't care if you are entering your teenage years, Shimo-kohai, I rather you here in Neverever then in the human world." States the Winter Court born Fae. "It's not like you even recall your Changeling or your old Name."

"And by staying, Shimo-san, nobody will think you anything other then a mix blooded elf." States Chishiki-san, he's a strange goblin who's not just an immigrant but a self taught scholar and enchanter. Most goblins tend to be members of the Summer Court, either through birth or upon immigration from other parts of Elsewhere for the sole purpose of pledging themselves to the Summer Court.

He's pretty sure that Chishiki-san was not raised by other goblins given that Chishiki-san's temperament seems to be rather non-violent compared to most examples of his race. Shimo's kind of interested in learning more about the other Lands of Elsewhere as the Country of Neverever is the primary lands of the Fae, which is why immigrants all end up loosing the ability to lie along with the need to be careful concerning their Names and they gain the ability to enter into Contracts and call in Favors in exchange of the hindrances. The goblin had admitted to that to him some time after they started to meet more regularly and is rather curious about how it is he's able to survive in Neverever given he's incapable of entering into Contracts or calling upon and offering Favors, never mind the clearly physical changes he's undergone upon arriving in Elsewhere.

"Even Chishiki doesn't want you to return to the human world, Shimo-kohai." Tanoshisa remarks while giving him a simple pat on the head before turning to walk to the table to eat breakfast. Following behind her, he does his best to watch his step, he takes a seat before the plate filled with breakfast foods.

Elf I might appear, it doesn't make me one. I'm a Statikling, a human stolen by a member of one of the Fae Courts. I don't really belong in Elsewhere naturally. Shimo thinks to himself. His current appearance is definitely that of a teenage human, this is the fourth time he's brought the matter up and it is the fourth time he's been assured that he's not going to be sent back to the human world, it's likely due to Tanoshisa figuring that it's the human world that 'breaks' the Statikling and thus if he never returns then he won't become like those returned Statiklings.

Still, the chain about his neck is looking rather worse for wear compared to it looked yesterday and Shimo knows that the older Statiklings don't have either the necklace or the pendant. Given the dead, frozen look Tanoshisa sports upon the sight of the chain... Before digging in, he moves the pendant and the necklace under his shirt, out of sight of his two contacts and associates, he knows better then to call them his friends, it's rather impossible to have friends in the Country of Neverever given the nature of the Fae.

Sawada Tsunayoshi, the Name is like a rush upon him, it's a Name that should be his Name very much isn't. Tsuna or, more fully, Dame-Tsuna, the nickname is the soothing balm upon the rush of being called Tsunayoshi or Sawada. He avoids introducing himself as Sawada Tsunayoshi, using Tsuna instead as even he knows that Dame-Tsuna is a nickname of derision.

Then again, it's not like I am much of a Changeling with that Seal keeping my natural form and powers from me. The teenage Changeling muses as he rests under a tree with his lunch bento resting to his right. He should be at school but, well, he can't bring himself to care as today is the Birthday of both himself and the taken Tsunayoshi, it's likely why his birth parents decided on the old practice of child swapping.

It's impossible for him to call Sawada Iemitsu his father as the human is never around and it's clear that the man barely cares for the woman, Sawada Nana, given how the man seems to think money is an acceptable substitute for his presence at the house. Nor does he really try to lie convincingly.

Like Iemitsu, Nana doesn't really qualify for the title of mother. A care taker, yes, a nanny? Sure but a mother she is not. He's fond of her but at the same time, there's cause for concern about her mental health as the woman just seems to lack a will of her own. Or perhaps it's more like she refuses to acknowledge the reality of her marriage?

For all intent and purpose, he might as well be human with the Seal on him and it's of a mix blessing as it means he's actually able to lie outright without it feeling like he sliced his throat and tasting ash in his mouth. Holding up his left hand, he calls upon the orange fire and it pools about the palm of his left hand, it's not that bright and it's very dark shade of orange yet, it's what he has to work with. There's an unease when using it but it's nothing compared to being called Tsunayoshi or Sawada. The boy he replaced, he was one of those able to call upon energies of their Soul and yet, this flame is here with him in the human world instead of with the taken child.

It's puzzling, honestly, he's not really sure how to shape this fire beyond calling it up to manifest it and dismissing it upon parts of his body. It makes him wonder if his birth parents guessed that Seal would enable him to call upon the pool of Soul energy that had been stored behind the Seal by switching them. Perhaps it explains why I am so human... He muses.

The dark orange flames fade as he slowly fists his left hand. Taking a deep, calming breath, he leans back on the tree trunk and stares blankly up at the sky. Tsuna's mind if rather blank as he just decides to live in the moment, after all, it's likely that Nana has forgotten what's special about this day, which isn't anything new, really.

I wonder what life would have been like for the actual Tsunayoshi if we hadn't been switched... He wonders to himself.

Something slams into his head and his vision blacks out.

Standing before him is a teen sporting off white hair and pointed ears. His eyes are drawn towards the chest and lands upon the clear pendant that sports a tarnish chain necklace. "Who...?" The language is both foreign and yet familiar.

Jerking his gaze from the pendant, the eyes are the same as he's seen in the mirror each day. "Tsunayoshi." The Name causes the white haired teen's body to jerk and they take a step back, eyes wide.

"Shimo." And it's his turn to take a step back, taking a sharp breath as he feels a Name settle on him. Frost. He smiles, it's a good Name.

Then... what once was a dark orange fire roars about him while a different glow erupts about the other teen. Then the two leap between the space between them, the two energies meet and swirl around, the orange shifts into a brighter color while the teal energy that seems far too light, to transparent, darkens before the teal energy surges to the Changeling and the orange to the Statikling.

Then it's like he's no longer... hindered and he can't help but smile widely as he Feels Whole. His vision goes dark as he's been pulled somewhere else...

Groaning, he pushes himself off the side walk, Bunkatsu Shimo, moves to stand. For once, everything is Right with him while he hears Reborn, a fake Name, a wishful Name, takes a sharp intake of breath. Glancing towards the tiny adult, he gives the man a toothy grin before turning from the man killer with a chuckle, being sure to grab his book bag, he heads off to school.

He wonders if the Vongola Famiglia's reach stretches into the other world, for he's pretty sure that Tsunayoshi isn't in the human one. It's just a feeling he has, after all, it didn't Feel like the Statikling's location was that of the same world as him. Spying one of his usual bullies by the school's gate, well, Shimo can't wait to return in kind the treatment Mochida Kensuke had been giving him throughout the years.

His collection of True Names is vast and it's time to pay like back with like. To be at the mercy of a wronged Fae, I wonder if Namimori will survive? He mentally notes to see about returning the favor Reborn had accidentally done him, after all, if not for the killer's course of action, the Seal would still exist and it would still be keeping his true nature separate from him.

"That's a Changeling." The defeated Lackey states with a particularly stressful tone and a hint of fear upon getting a better look at his student. "A what?" Colonnello questions while his troublesome student's eyes light up.

"I like you already, Skull." Declares said brat and the Lackey says in a very sarcastic voice, "Joy, it's that what every Statikling wants to hear from one of the Fair Folk."

"They call me Tsuna." The brat informs the Lackey, who counters, "And I fashioned the persona of Skull de Mort, taken by a member of the Autumn Court."

"What the hell are you going on about Lackey?" He growls and Leon waiting near his right hand to transform. He feels the Lackey's eyes dismiss him while the brat's send him a look of disapproval, then again, he's been getting those kind of looks since that day.

"Renato Sinclair." The Lackey says that Name in such a way that causes something to flip within him and the hairs to raise up, all the while he wonders how the Lackey learnt that name or of his connection to it. "Be silent and listen. Whether you learn anything, well, that's up to you."

"You know his actual name yet, I could not hear you speak it." His student says, glancing away from him and gazing upon Skull with clear interest. "I believe I need to learn to do that."

"I am not surprised, not many of Fair Folk wander the human world as they once had." The Lackey states simply. "A mix blessing that."

"Ah, you do have a point, although given the process involved with the boy and myself, I might not have had to worry about the usual situation." Admits Useless Tsuna and he can feel the Lackey's gaze sharpen.

"Kora! What the hell? What are you two talking about?!" Colonnello demands and he's gets the feeling that this is very much above his pay grade.

"Fine, you want to know? A member of one of the Fair Folk Seasonal Courts arrived in the human world with this young Changeling boy and swapped him for Iemitsu's son, returning to the Country of Neverever to be raised as a servant of said Court and is what is termed a Statikling, who then gets new Name, which the Courtiers use to enslave the Statikling before they know about the need to guard their Name." The Lackey says and Useless Tsuna clearly alarmed by that.

"Yea, figured you didn't know his fate, no Changelings do know what really happens to us when we're taken." The Lackey admits in an apologetic tone while glancing towards his student, who seems rather taken back by that revelation. "Took my Changeling a good month to convince me of that."

"He went his way and I ended up in show biz, up until that invite and well, ended up like this along with an alien blooded Seer and five others, two of whom are here with us now." The Lackey concludes. "I've got a way out of this curse that ends with me being, you know, alive but the six others don't. Kind of fond of them, a few more then the others."

"I do owe Reborn a favor for getting rid of that human Seal." His student admits and he blinks. "Perhaps ensuring he doesn't die from the stone about his neck will clear it." Muses the teenager.

"Which means lessons for you." The Lackey remarks and his student hums in agreement. "I can not say for certain if my Changeling will be interested in hearing from me but I suppose I can pass along an offer as I kind of heard from another member of this group of cursed humans that there is already a Cloud drifting near you."

"Please do, I have years of practice to catch up on." And that seems to be that, even with Colonnello getting frustrated and attempts to take it out on the Lackey, the Cloud just seems to have the devil's luck as the Sniper just keeps no landing any kind of blow.

The conversation is worrying to an extent, after all, if any of that is true then the actual heir he is meant to train has long since been taken years ago. He's going to have Shamal do some blood work to be sure, but, well, given the recent happenings that center around Useless Tsuna and certain residence, incidents that show no signs of Sky Flames being used and yet, it's clear that something seems to compel those people into acting in such matters.

+ } -] N = V = N [- { +

Tsunayoshi blinks as he glances around, there's something in the air and a shimmering energy that moves like fire, it's color is a blue-purple. Picking himself up off the floor, there's whispering and turns to find an older Fae of mix blood, a Changeling most likely standing with a familiar looking teenager, who's Name he knows as well as his own, after all, he received his Name back from that shared dream state. "I shall answer to Yugure." He states as he glances between the two Fae Changelings, there's others but his focus is on them, as even lacking any real might in magic like their kin in Neverever, the true magics of Fae have always been centered around Names.

His enchanted bronze gauntlets make it hard for him to wipe away the sweat from his forehead. "Fair enough." The elder Changeling states. "I answer to Brent and this young one will answer to Hyo."

Tilting his head in such a way as to show he understands, the energy barrier seems to die down like a dying fire before fading into flakes of crumbling ashes into nothingness. He slowly approaches the fairly large group while feeling many eyes upon him. He gets within six feet and notices how scrawny and short his Changeling replacement is in real life while it's clear that, in turn, Hyo, seems rather bland about his appearance although those still hazel eyes flicker down towards his gauntlets.

"Summoning seems a bit much." He remarks in a dry tone. One of the members of the group, a tiny man sporting a glowing yellow stone, speaks as he stares down at the almost Gnome tall man.

Still, he can't help but wonder what twist this will cause in his life. After all, there's a Feel of Something in the air now and for once, it seems like at the Center of it, which, is a Novelty to Feel. The tiny man continues to do so and he's pretty sure that both Brent and Hyo are aware that of the funny sight it must be, that whatever self important speech is being said is wasted on him.

"I have no clue what you said, tiny man." Tsunayoshi chirps a few seconds after the tiny man gives the impression of expecting him to say something. Hyo snickers while Brent speak to the self important tiny man in what might be a dry tone, it's hard to say given the language isn't one of Elsewhere and sounds rather harsh on his ears.

His eyes flicker about the collection of humans, most of them are male and are so Young. There's a woman sporting some kind of covering over her eyes that is not dissimilar to glasses only covers far more and seems press close to her head, there's a look of hostile intent and smug sense of superiority. Tsunayoshi already pangs her as a source of amusement. Though, to be honest, he's pretty sure that she isn't the only one who'll be fun to toy with, his eyes move to settle upon the tiny man, he couldn't help but grin with a hint of teeth.

Never mind when the others, well other then Ao-san, decide to travel here after me. He muses while this tiny lizard transforms into something similar to what he's seen during a tour that Chishiki-san gave him of High Realm Chapel. It seems that his grin didn't agree with the tiny man.

Stealing the Sky: KHR! Warning SexChange

I do not own Katekyou Hitman Reborn!

Vincent studies... Ah, herself, in the tall mirror with her back to the mirror. Long dark brown hair that trails down to her lower back, it's hard to pry her eyes from her current ass. The woman being reflected back, she's in her mid twenties while Vincent is seventeen years of age and has never... Turning away with a blush, the previous teenager's face reddens at the sight of her bare breasts even more.

Slowly, almost hasting, faces the mirror and arms move to cover them. "It's not too late to back out, right?" The now she wonders, noting the change to her voice, but, well, yes, yes it is and she knows it so she looks up and into the mirror, taking in the sight of her naked front.

"This is ridiculous, its not like I haven't seen porno." Vincent remarks to herself and steels herself, lowering her arms and get a better look at the B cup breasts, also noting how chilly her front now feels. There's twisting in her guts at the fact that, well, Vincent is still a seventeen year old teen, even if he's been out on the streets for the pass three months trying to make sense of the yellow fire he can call up after...

"Fucking damn it, why did I think this was a good idea?" Vincent wonders while her right hand moves to cup the sagging left breast. The feeling of the hand upon her skin along with pushing it up... Vincent is blushing, yet again, while trying to ignore the reality of the fact that, for now, this is still Vincent's body, some how...

= { | o T o | } =

"Are you ready for the next part?" The man, one Yaprak Arshi, inquires after they exchange pleasantries. It's been a week since the item that caused Vincent's gender switch to be delivered and, well, Vincent has kind of come to terms with her current body. It helps that there hasn't been much of a difference in height.

"Just what to make sure but, as long as the... target, no longer has the... package, even if I'm not the receiver, I'll still get the agreed upon amount along with the reversing... agent." Vincent asks after drinking from the glass of water and Yaprak hums in agreement. "Ok, then, yes."

She's pretty sure Yaprak's smile is rather predatory and wonders, yet again, at which point will the line be drawn but then, recalls that with the money, she'll be able to finish high school and attend university, hoping to find something to do with her life that didn't involve crime or magical, bullshit fire that comes in the colors of the rainbow. Yaprak pulls out an envelop and sets it on the table between them, beginning to inform her of what the second part entails. It sums up as, taking a plane to Japan and upon arrival, Vincent is to pick up a package from the gift shop that will have further instructions.

"I hate to tell you think but, well, I don't speak Japanese or know anything of... Japan." Vincent admits, shifting in her seat, there's a touch of a sour taste in her mouth at admitting this yet, it's something that she feels needs to be said.

"I expected that." Yaprak says with a hint of amusement and Vincent feels a touch relieved. "Which is why the transformation included a language download."

Is there anything these bullshit flames can't do? Vincent wonders to herself. "Any other mental additions I should be aware of?" She finally asks after taking a few seconds to curse out this fucking magic fire that screws with reality.

"Your new name, for the duration of your assignment, is Tasogare Momo." Yaprak informs her and she knows that Momo is the first name with Tasogare is the last name, she also knows that Momo translates into peaches while Tasogare translates into twilight. "Your passport and other important items are in the envelop."

Not finding the ability to speak, she just nods in understanding and the mood of Yaprak changes. "For what it's worth, I am sorry for the inconvenience of this job but the clock is ticking and you were the best I could find for this." Which causes her to shift uncomfortable at the apology and the reminder that if she succeeds, well, that's going to lead into a much longer assignment that Vincent isn't sure she wants to be apart of.

Pulling the envelop over, she opens it and finds that the flight is leaving tomorrow at ten am, putting the ticket back in, Vincent gets up and escorts the man to the door of the apartment that Yaprak secured for her to stay in while adjusting to her new gender and reality of the situation she agreed to take.

Momo is sharing a house with five women and have for the past month and is having a hard time of it, not only is she the most 'green' of the six of them, but she's suspecting her situation with her body is more extreme then their's given her actual birth gender and age, thankfully, no monthly visitor for her! Well, yet at any rate.

Also, it seems that the yellow magic fire that she can call up at will but is taxing as hell? It means she's a 'Sun' and her magic is best for healing for they can Activate it in people. For some reason, the others seem rather impressed that she's able to call a tiny flame of it without a special kind of jewellery called a Flame Ring to aid in 'sparking' it, which is bizarre in her mind as the magic fire comes from the person and not the ring, so, wouldn't the ring just act as training wheels for learning to call it up? Or that, apparently, those who are 'Mists' and 'Skies' can call upon their magic fire far more easily then the other Flame Users.

Most of the others don't really answer to their current Alias in the privacy of the house, most seem content to just answer to their fire types. Beyond Sun, Mist, and Sky, the other names are Cloud, Rain, Storm, and Lightning. Given the six of them and yet there's seven fires, Momo had asked if they were waiting on a Sky to join them, only for the five others to snort yet nobody really explained why they were going to be lacking a Sky, just mention that she's clearly 'green' and that's that.

"Hey, isn't that her?" She asks Rain, who's hair is a dark navy blue and purple eyes. The woman in question looks like the photo of one Sawada Nana and she's the one who has the 'package'.

They'd been sitting across of the local subway station, Rain seems to be almost thirty but that could just be due to some 'Mist' alteration to make her appear younger then she actually is as the woman in question seems to give her the impression of lived and seen things. "Good eye. That is her." The purple eyed woman says with ease.

"I'll call it in." Rain says pulling out the portable phone and she just keeps her eyes on Nana. It's not long before they catch sight of Nana meeting up with a pair of old friends, Lightning and Mist had been the ones to do a background check on the people Nana knows.

Without a word, Rain raises gracefully and leaves some Yen to cover her drink, smoothly following behind the trio. A number of minutes later, Storm arrives and with a slight nod, Momo pays for her own drink before following after the twenty something year old blond with gray eyes. It's in minutes that they get close to where Rain is, yet they don't approach. "We'll try today." Storm informs her and Momo shrugs, it's not like she's got much pull in the group and, to be honest, so looks forward to begin a guy once again as even as a woman, she really doesn't get women.

= { | o T o | } =

"Well, fuck." Lightning murmurs while Mist and herself are doing their best to keep Nana from dying on them. Which is mostly Momo

'pouring' yellow fire into the structure Mist created to use her fire to cause regeneration of the heart while using the almost blue and almost purple fire to trick the damaged heart that it's not damaged.

Lightning is securing the room using green fire to reinforce the walls. "I don't they we'll be able to save her." Momo admits softly and Mist seems to sigh.

"The bullet's been Altered." Agrees Mist as the auburn haired woman with surprising green eyes. "Not the best conditions to work this transfer."

"So, who's going to be the receiver?" Lightning asks and Mist takes a moment to study both of them for a few seconds before focusing in on Momo, which she just knows she doesn't like. "Sun, she's young and resilient. I almost think it was her along, given the quality of her body Alteration."

Fuck. Is all Momo could think and she swallows hard to keep the creeping burning sensation from coming up. "Best begin then." Lightning states and Momo looks down at the dying woman.

"What do I need to do?" She asks while her stomach curds while looking at the midsection, to where the not yet a babe is. Momo looks up and, well, it's like the world falls away for a while.

= { | o T o | } =

"Tsunayoshi." She raises a slight eyebrow at the name of the newborn boy that she'd just given birth to. Yaprak is holding said babe while Momo is trying to recover from just giving birth to a baby.

"Tasogare Tsunayoshi?" Momo inquires curiously and the man seems to get a thoughtful look upon his face. "Don't give me that look, I am looking forward to being male again and, you know, pissing standing up. God I miss pissing standing up... I miss having to not go pee every hour too..." Ok, so, yea, she's not in the right kind of mind state but she did just give birth to a tiny human being.

"Sure you can't be persuaded?" Yaprak asks and she can't help but give the man a flat look, cause even as tired as she currently is, she wasn't born for this responsibility of bringing another life into the world. "You best rest for now, once you've recovered, we'll hand over the reversing 'agent' as you put it."

Nodding, Momo sighs and sinks more into the bed, the group decided it was better they did a home delivery then doing this at a Japanese hospital. It also makes it easier for her to disappear without any real record.

Fon rocks Tsunayoshi gently as the two week old is just being adorable while the young, pretty much civilian Sun is getting re-familiar with his body. He wonders how well the Sun will take the fact that he's going to be a teenage dad as their time in this world is going. With a sigh, he takes out the necklace and holds the pendant so it's above the babe's heart, with a soft coo, orange flames sprout around the pendant and it sinks into the tiny baby's body, orange flames flare about Tsunayoshi's tiny body.

As the fire dies down, he looks up to find the teen staring rather bewildered at the two of them. "Tsuna here is a Sky." He explains simply and the young Sun blinks, it's clear that there's a number of questions there and he smiles as the former woman asks, "Why wasn't there a Sky with us? Seven fires but only six was part of the group."

"Skies are rare and if they do not get the correct protection, they will be either used as puppet figures or killed out right." He explains. "Sky Flames are orange in color and Harmony is their property."

It's clear by the young Sun's frown that he doesn't get it. "So, he's, like, support?" And Fon smiles while wondering how the soon to be teenage father came to that conclusion.

"Why not a leader?" He asks curious. "Well, Harmony is like blending stuff together, you know, not having any one thing stand out, really.

Kind of seems like they're more into being in-tune with things and maybe a drive to be part of a group..."

The Storm blinks a bit as he slowly examines that statement and makes a note to speak with Skull about what the Cloud thought Harmony meant when the concept of Skies and Harmony was given. "Most think Skies as the perfect leaders for groups due to their ability to draw people to them." He explains.

The young Sun just looks rather bemused and shakes his head, it's clear the Sun doesn't buy into that, well, not yet. "The pendant is going to serve as an anchor so that nobody will question whether he's your son or not."

And now the Sun stiffens, there's a touch of betrayal and 'Are you kidding me?!' in those hazel green eyes while the face on the whole looks like he's bitten something sour. "Neither myself or the other can raise him, our time here is coming to an end, as is the time of those who wanted to kill Tsuna before he was even known to exist." He explains. "Which means, the remaining funds we've pulled together is now held in trust for Tsunayoshi. You will be receiving monthly allowances to be spent on taking care of the babe."

"Why not one of the others?" The teenage Sun asks. "I'm... I'm barely managing myself, let alone knowing what I want out of life... I don't really care for this magical fire or for the criminal underbelly of the world. Shouldn't he be raise by someone capable and, you know, interested in these rainbow flames?"

He couldn't help it but find it amusing and fitting that Tsuna ends up being raised by this Sun, after all, the necklace chain is made up of memories the Neo-Primo wanted to gift the Tsunayoshi who is going to be raised in this world. "The others have moved on and have already forgotten the details of the mission. It would have been the same for you, if you hadn't ended up with the package." He states, the others hadn't needed to be Altered that much, mostly it had been in age and in appearance, not like the body Altercation that the teenage Sun needed or that Viper had already decided on the mother to be, thus slipping a certain extra to ensure that there was no chance that Tsuna would not be safely transferred into the Sun's heavily Altered body.

"So... whoever gave birth was going to end up raising him?" The teen asks and he frowns. "No, we had alternative plans on the off chance that the mother went into Discord or began to realize the prize they were carrying." Fon explains.

"To be honest, your lack of interest in Dying Will Flames and the culture we've scratched out in the criminal underbelly just... tipped the balance in your favor for raising Tsuna here." The Storm explains. "Usually, most don't get to escape the reach of the Mafia Flame culture but given how... green you were before taking this job, most have likely concluded you are dead and we've... helped with that, along with clouding their memories of your appearance."

"I'm getting a new name, aren't I?" The teen asks and Fon smiles at the conclusion the Sun reached. "Yes, your first name is still the same, it's your middle and last that have been changed."

"Which is?" The young Sun asks curiously. "Vincent Liam Azarola." He says and the teen just sighs.

He spends the next few hours going over the various contact information and then touched on what kind of career the Sun is thinking of pursuing. He smiles upon hearing the Sun admit wanting to pursue something concerning computers. Given his own personal experience and how important computers will become, he's sure that the others will be happy to take some time to speak with the soon to be teenage father about advice concerning what to focus on when it comes to computers.

"Daddy..." He rolls to make room and raises the sheet for his five year old son to join him in the bed. "Same nightmare?" Vincent asks softly as he lowers the sheet and pulls his son to his side.

Sun, which is a decent enough nickname given they live in the US, hums and he feels his son's arms move to hug him like he's a stuff animal. "Loud doggie or was it the one where that stranger almost didn't catch you?" He asks softly as he rubs his son's back.

"Scary toddler with a gun." Sun admits softly. "The one with the glowing yellow stone?" And he can Feel his son pull on his Sun Flames, pulling and then wrapping himself in them. That answers that, as it's usual the reason for why his son would reach for his Flames like this.

Feeling Sun relax once he's wrapped up in his Flames, he allows himself to start drifting off to sleep. Vincent controls his breathing as best as he can, he's got some work to do come tomorrow and Sun also has school. It's not long before he's fast asleep once more, although he does feel like his bed is a touch to warm but not enough to keep him awake.

The Fish Bowl Agreement: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter or High School DxD!

+ { _ | - o X o - | _ } +

Dear Brandon L. Graves

I know this letter seems to be rather startling, what with it being delivered by an owl of all things.

The Dragonkin Magician and Wizard's gaze flickers towards the rather white feathers of the clearly female snowy owl. Li, as he's more commonly known to answer to, Master Li to his students and apprentices, former or current surprisingly enough, and while it's Little Grave to Grief, who is the Dragon he dueled back when he was in his early thirties to collect some blood to be used in a modified Absorption Ritual. "Right, like you are the strangest thing to happen to me in my long life." Li murmurs and the owl puffs her feathers before deciding to take a nap before continuing with reading the letter, curious as to how this young Wizard managed to get pass the centuries old agreement drawn up between those humans born with natural, inner channels of magic and, well, the rest of the supernatural world.

Hedwig is a very intelligent owl and she's to stick around to receive a reply, even if you it's just a rejection.

My name is Harry James Potter and am thirteen years old, I will be fourteen come this July 31st. I am also an orphan and attending Hogwarts, which is a school for magic, since I was eleven. I'm a Wizard.

"No kidding." Li murmurs, taking a second to grab his mug of hot chocolate, he disliked coffee and tea, both are not something he grew to enjoy drinking so he uses of Transfiguration to transform either hot liquids into hot chocolate, it doesn't change the contents of either drink but it sure makes it easier for him to drink the two. "I really don't like the course of this letter already." He adds with a sigh and he's no opinion about whether Hogwarts is a good school or not, given it was likely built after the now 'Fish Bowl' Agreement was put into place.

I can guess what you are thinking and yes, magic does in fact exist.

"Great job at keeping magic a secret." Yet, he's uneasy with the fact that this teen doesn't have any crisis of conscious about revealing that bit of information. The wording kind of suggests it's a very minor detail, he can tell more thought went into the introduction of who the teen is then into deciding whether or not to reveal that magic exists. That doesn't bode well for the likely reason the teen is reaching out to him, not one bit as he's very much a stranger and its clear that the teen doesn't know a thing about him besides his name.

Ok, by now you are likely wondering, why I sent you this letter and that reason is simple, according to two sources of magical tests, you are listed as my great grandfather on my mother's side of the family. You had a daughter with one Iris Holden, who, well, yea, grew up to have a kid or kids which over time lead to the birth of my own mother, one Lily Evans who married my father James Potter.

Li blinks and then groans while rubbing the side of his left face as he does remember that two month long fling. Well, that explains some of the how but not all of it. He thinks to himself.

This is a very slim chance, I mean, you must be fairly old and for all I know, you won't be around for very long.

He snorts and chuckles at reading that. "I was fifty when Witches and Wizards decided to split from the rest of the supernatural world, brat and was still kicking when they finally ironed out that contract at eighty." He mutters out loud to a semi-empty office.

Merlin, this is hard... Look, I am just looking to spend time with family who isn't my Aunt and her family.

From, Harry Potter

And that confirms the theory that something happen to cause the some kind of incident between the infamous Magician and the UK Witches and Wizards. "Then again, Albion and Ddraig were a thing at that point, so of course, something happened." He recalls.

He didn't like the tone the letter pretty much ends in. Taking a deep breath, he slowly releases it. It's clear that the teen somehow managed to succeed in by passing the enchantments, the fact Harry lives in the UK likely the reason as if there's going to be a weak point, it would be where those two Heavenly Emperors were killed and sealed away.

Drinking the remains of his transfigured hot drink, Li considers how to deal with this. It's clear it's best he sees for himself what's what and, well, it's a question of how to go about doing that just. He studies the snowy owl for a few seconds before moving to get up, sensing his attention, Hedwig wakes and is quick to focus in on him. He gently reaches out and waits until Hedwig ruffles her feathers but that's it, so he strokes the breast feathers.

An idea slowly taking root.

/ - - _ -] N [- _ - - **

The train is about to leave when Hedwig comes flying through the window along with... "A miniature dragon?" Harry wonders with a touch of awe while watching as the glossy black scales of the miniature dragon, who sports navy blue eyes along with smoky gray spines and ivory claws. The tiny dragon gives the impression of being an adult, even though it's just big enough to enter through the window and moves to land on the free seat across from him.

Hegwig nibbles on his ear, reminding him that she's here. Flushing, he forces himself to look away from the awe inspiring beast, well, he's only got his experiences with Norbert to compare the miniature with, then again, the miniature dragon looks like the muggle pictures of what a dragon is suppose to look like, with four limbs and a set of wings. "Hey girl, I hope you've been well." He says as he strokes her feathers before opening the letter that she dropped onto his lap.

He's pretty sure that whatever the reply is, it won't be one to lift his spirits, not after the events concerning his Godfather and the escaped Wormtail. As he finishes, he hears the door of the compartment about to open and he's quick to hide the letter. Harry doesn't want either Ron or Hermione to know about his attempt to contact his Great Grandfather, who's still alive but must be pretty old by now, given the man is likely a muggle and likely on his death bed too.

"Blimey! Where did that come from?!" Ron exclaims upon the door opening and staring at the miniature dragon, who seems to be content with laying on the seat, giving the impression of a large, regal cat with eyes sporting half lidded. "Looks kind of like a dragon, by Merlin's beard!"

"Oh, Harry, are you alright?" Hermione asks as he feels her eyes on him. "Why is it here?"

"Came in after Hedwig entered. Doesn't seem to be hostile." He admits and he's not really sure himself, although Hedwig seems to have puffed up. He reaches up to try and calm her down while Ron attempts to shoo the miniature dragon off the seat across from him.

Clearly unconcern and not feeling the slight bit threatened by Ron or Hermione, the small dragon uncurls its tail and moves to lay its head down, clearly claiming the seat as its. Ron isn't pleased while Hermione slips pass the red head to sit next to Harry. It's clear that the miniature dragon isn't going to move until it wants to and he finds himself staring at the miniature dragon, finding it hard to not admire it.

"It's rather stunning looking dragon, isn't it?" Hermione admits and he nods while Ron huffs while steadying himself as the train begins to move, glaring at the magical beast. Clearly different then Norbert.

And then, he gets a letter from his Godfather viva a small owl, and the matter of his Great Grandfather along with the miniature dragon is put aside.

x - { = _ T _ = } - x

As they get in sight of the Platform, he recalls his letter and manages to talk his friends into leaving him, that he'll follow after. "I might as well try and talk it into leaving now that we're here, you know?" Harry tells them, it's kind of the truth and they do leave.

The miniature dragon now moves to sit on the seat once Hermione and Ron have left. Taking the letter out, he murmurs, "Sorry, but I want to read this, then we'll figure something out about you."

To My Great Grandson, Harry J. Potter

I am rather disappointed by how casually you revealed the existence of magic, though I have settled on blaming your instructors for not empathizing why you should keep its existence a secret.

That, wasn't want he expected but, it also made him rather hopeful at the same time. He continues reading.

Your owl should have arrived with tag along and he should be sitting across from you. Fine looking specimen, isn't he? I know that's my private opinion. He will be lead you to a place where we can met face to face and I expect honesty in said conversation, after all, there are reasons why you should not have been able to contact me, regardless of our shared blood and given what I know of news from the UK, I doubt you have been taught about the Great Magic Divide Contract or it's more commonly used, and very fitting name, the Fish Bowl Agreement.

Depending on our discussion, I may be able to ensure you do achieve your task of not returning to your Aunt's care.

From Your Great Grandfather, Brandon L. Graves

He can't help but re-read that and can't help but have questions about where the miniature dragon came from, if there are more of them, how come he shouldn't have been able to contact the man, and just what is this Fish Bowl Agreement? In the end, he's folding the letter and does his best to breath as panic sets in at the thought of meeting this man along with what kind of questions he's going to be asking. What should I do?! And how important is this supposed Agreement?

It's Hedwig who manages to snap him out of his panic attack and he turns to look at the miniature dragon, suddenly feeling like his life hangs in the balance. "I, I guess it's now or never?" He asks the dragon and realizing the sheer intelligence lurking in the supposed beast's eyes.

The dark blue eyes turn up and he sighs but does move to get his trunk. He hears the dragon move from the seat and once Hedwig is in her cage, the dragon leads the way out of the train compartment. He can't shake the feeling that this meeting is going to go badly for him.

/ - - _ -] N [- _ - - **

Li isn't happy, not one bit and he's pretty sure he won't be able to do anything about it either, as he's only here concerning the issue of whether he'll be able to take in the supposed teen, which he has his own doubts about given how short and thin he was. Never mind the reaction to the letter, although which part that caused the attack in the first place, he's unsure, yet he's more then likely going to find out. Whoever this aunt of Harry's, the teen won't be returning to her

'care', he'd rather help the teen become emancipated then legally allow this aunt to keep custody for clearly, Harry should be more then capable of finding some means to house and feed himself with some creative use of magic.

Once off the train, he gets his first look at the train platform and a few families are still around, so he gets gawked at while he's moving more properly away from the train. Honestly, he didn't know what irked him more, the fact that the murmurs suddenly switched to focusing on the topic of the Boy-Who-Lived and 'relief' over the fact that the 'poor' boy is alive after having that 'dreadful' Sirius Black attempt to 'finish' what 'He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named' started. He's pretty sure that he Doesn't want to Know yet, he's going to end up Knowing anyway.

Unfurling his wings, he moves into a crouch and then leaps into the air, wings flapping as he takes to the air. For a few seconds, he enjoys the sensation of flight before recalling why he's circling around. Spying a private spot that's a tunnel, he does his best gracefully land before Harry. Ignoring the Witches and Wizards, he leads the teen to the spot and the teen follows suit.

Once they are a touch deeper into the tunnel, he lets out a sigh and transforms back into his modified human appearance. "Well then, let's get this conversation going, shall we?" He says after casting a few layered security Wards around along with calling up a ball of light to light up the tunnel.

"Your an Animagus?!" Harry asks, eyes wide and he frowns at the title, it sounds like a title. "So there's a breed of miniature, non-magical dragons?"

"I do not know what that is and Dragons, by their very nature, are the most magical beings in existence." He informs the teen. "I am what is commonly referred to as a Dragonkin. I earned that titled by having collected blood from a Dragon during a fight and went through a self-modified Ritual of Absorption, which is how I could transform into a miniature version of a Dragon."

"Norbert didn't look like that nor did he seem..." Harry trails off and Li sighs, deciding to explain, "Yea, I wouldn't be surprised if it wasn't a modified breed of wyvern. No Dragon wanted anything to do with the 'Fish Bowl' Agreement."

"Any way, I'm Brandon Little Graves, your Great Grandfather." And it's clear that Harry hadn't expected for him to be the man he was going to be meeting. "Most tend to call me Li."

"Ah, oh, I am Harry James Potter, sir." The teen returns. "Most call me Harry."

"Are you ready to be honest? I already collected an opinion about reasons why you do not wish to return to your aunts." He asks.

Harry swallows and the body language kind of tuckers in. "As ready as I'll ever be, sir." The emerald eyed teen admits and he feels like he's dealing with an abused kitten or puppy. Abused is right.

"How long since you visited an eye doctor?" He asks as it's clear that the glasses are the wrong prescription and this seems to earn him an owlish look, which means that it's been far too long or at all. "I ask as I noticed your squinting upon reading those respective letters."

"Ah, my aunt was told I needed glasses and then we went to a second hand store, found ones that worked, sir." Harry shuffles and he hums, confirming a number of things. "Was I suppose to see an eye doctor, sir?"

"Well yes, for you see, eye glass prescription changes a lot when kids are growing up." He explains with a soft sigh. "As for wearing the wrong prescription... Well, I'm sure that an optometrist will be more then happy to explain the importance of why it's bad."

It's clear Harry is a touch surprise by his admission of ignorance but then, it's not like he needs glasses to see. "Next question." He muses. "Why were you not placed with a relative of your father?"

"Ah, well, Sirius... He got thrown into Azkaban without a trail and then Wormtail escaped..." Harry trails off and that's nothing he hadn't heard before.

"Nobody else stepped up to take custody?" Li asks and Harry shifts his weight. "Dumbledore put me with my aunt due to blood wards as my mom died protecting me."

His eyes harden and he is sure to glare off at the way they came. "Blood Wards, huh? Is your aunt a Witch per chance?" He asks after taking a few minutes to control his raging emotions.

"No, neither is Dudley, a Wizard I mean." Harry admits and it's clear the teen is uneasy by his anger. The teen worries his lower lip, clearly wanting to ask something.

"Is... is that important?" Harry finally asks after some time of silence. "Yes." He states as calmly as he can.

"Blood Wards are bad enough when all those involved are able to use magic, no matter a beings race." He says slowly. "The Norse Pantheon and their followers are really the only ones who still go around creating any kind of Ward using Blood as a focus and even they don't keep them up for longer then a week."

"I dread to think of what kind of effects you've developed growing up with said Blood Wards, never mind the effects on your aunt and her family." Then a thought crossed his mind and he asks, "They do live at a farmstead, right?"

Harry looks away and shuffles his feet before shaking his head. Li gives in and groans into his hands at the situation that he's not even going to be able to do anything about beyond ensure that Harry gets a through check over by pretty much any healing specialist he can hire or offer favors with, starting with finding someone with good, strong connections to the Norse Pantheon.

"We'll have to start dealing with this once problem as soon as we get this particular situation over and done with." He admits to Harry, he's already emotionally exhausted and he didn't even ask the teen half a dozen questions. Taking out what likely looks to be a pad of paper, he takes out a pen knife and slices the tip of his left pinkie.

The blood transforms into a tiny light before reaching the first 'page' of the pad. The papers glow bright colors and the pad now hovers while he uses a simple Wizard spell to clean the pen knife. "Left pinkie please." He says, handing the pen knife over and Harry takes it, takes a moment to stare at him before straightening and stabbing himself with the pen knife, making sure his hand is over the pad of paper.

As Harry's blood transforms into a tiny ball of light, a serpent hissing and fire-bird song fill the air until the pad of paper scatters around the two of them, the various written spells soon do their work. As the various spells finish, they have been teleported to his apartment in Vancouver. The papers break apart and then the bits flash as they vanish from sight. As his eyes adjust, he finds himself staring at Harry, finding himself at a loss of words at the sight.

"I, I do... don't feeeeel ssso go, goood..." Harry admits with a slight wavering tone. "Yea, I expect you aren't." He admits as he moves to steady the now Dragonkin Wizard, he's kind of curious as to where the purple coloring for some of the scales came from as his own are glossy black.

"I apologize, I shouldn't have gone through with this upon hearing you had Blood Wards upon yourself." Li says and Harry blinks while he leads now regressed Wizard towards the room he'd prepared on the off chance he'd end up taking the teen. "And no, I am to blame for this transformation of yours and yes, you have transformed along with the fact that your body seems to be regressing in age."

"Oh." Seems to be all the now ten year old Dragonkin Wizard says. Once he's gotten his new charge into bed, the now five or maybe six year old is sleeping. He hangs around for the next fifteen minutes but it seems that the regression has stopped and he kind of wonders if there's a reason it stopped at that age.

Great, just... Great. And what was up with the serpent hissing and fire-bird song? Damn it all... Li thinks to himself as he glares at the wall before heading back to the living room slash kitchen area for Harry's belongings and to release Hedwig.

x - { = _ T _ = } - x

"Well, it could have been worst, all things considered." Manuel tells the two of them, for some reason, Harry seems rather content to sit on his lap and slightly curled against his chest while he gently rubs the now child's back in a comforting fashion.

It turned out that Harry is currently rather... raw concerning magic being used on him right now, a condition that he'll be keeping in mind for the next three months before following through with other consultants. After the first basic scan, they put a halt on it, despite Harry's protests of 'I'm fine' and 'Let's get this over with', Manuel decided to see if using Harry's blood in the examines would be less aggravating as they can control the sympathetic connection between Harry and his blood. It still caused some discomfort to Harry but not the silent shredding of tears and body shakes that they concluded were a clear indication of his inner channels being raw enough that such simple magics as skin scans was causing unbearable levels of pain.

"Undiluted tears from a hybrid fire-bird, potent venom from a Basilisk, who spent centuries under a hibernation spell, thank Odin, and then you willingly shedding your own Dragon enhance blood... The changes to your Great Grandson could have been much worst from the start." Manuel says. "Currently, he's state of being is fragile and all I can really offer you is a list of what kind of produce to avoid."

The accepts the envelop with the information concerning the examination along with whatever else his former student thought to add. "My thanks, Ritual Master." He tucks the envelop away, mentally working out how to return to his apartment without the use of magic.

"It's been a pleasure seeing you again, Master Li sir." The almost fifty year old, former student tells him with a warm smile. "I hope you'll come back when his magic has settled."

"I wish I could give you the location of the Blood Ward or the name of the previous family." He tells Manuel and Harry pulls a bit more on his shirt at the mention of either topic. He gives the boy a gentle hug with one arm while Manuel nods in understanding of why he's unable to get the name or location.

"Still, something like that in the UK? I believe I know a few bored people looking for something to do in the lull between seasonal work." Manuel muses and then moves to stand, he adjusts his arms so he's able to stand while Harry is clutching his shirt.

"Be careful though, the idiot who likely set it up was a Wizard." He cautions. "They might stick someone to keep watch over the family, particularly in case young Padraig here, decides to return to that house."

"That group, huh?" Manuel muses, it's clear that the man is reconsidering what information and rumors there have been coming out of the UK. The Magician and a known Norse Seidr then leads them to the door of the clinic. "Good day, Master Li. Padraig."

"Good day, Master Rask." He says and Harry murmurs, "Bye."

With that, he walks out of the building, mentally reviewing his opinion of how to travel back to Vancouver viva non-magical means. "So... Want to do some sight seeing as we travel back to my apartment in Vancouver?" He inquires as he smiles as an idea blooms, after all, it'll prove a distraction for his Great Grandson and he's pretty sure that Harry's far to use to being caged in both a physically, emotionally, and mentally.

He catches glimpses of Harry looking up at him, clearly not sure how to react. Which, he hopes, won't cause a great deal of stress in the former teen. "Now then, what color of car should we get?" He wonders, he's pretty sure that he's more then capable of figuring out how to drive the horseless carriage that is a car.

x - { = _ T _ = } - x

"Ok, so... I will be creating a driver from now on." Li admits as he gets the car back in its original parked location and after fixing the damages done to the other vehicles in the parking lot.

"How does that even work?" Harry asks curiously from the back of the car. He's not sure what make or model this car is, only that it is a nice blue color and the previous owner had been more then willing to sell it for two thousand American dollars. Yea, the condition of the seats and motor wasn't the best but, well, that was easily fixed with various spell meant to restore metals and reforging the metal to it's previous shape, same for the interior.

"It's kind of a chimera spell, honestly, one that has been used by those who owned ships and turned them into something more. They didn't want to hire a crew to do the work the ship needed so they all figured out how to create something to do the work or operate the ship." He explains as he climbs out of the driver seat.

"And you know how to create something like that?" The boy asks curiously and he hums as he Summons the note book of his version of that spell. Paging through it, he replies, "I've never really needed a spell like that before. After my enchanted Yurt got destroyed, I invested in a decent size wagon and used various Enchantments and Wards to enlarge the space to suit my needs, and later, added a private garden to grow rare plants. Which became the source of my income for a number of centuries until I found myself being hounded for Magician training and demonstration of how Wizarding Magic works."

"How come you weren't..." Harry trails off and pausing in reviewing his notes, follows that train of thought. "Ah, well, I was born with damage to my inner magical channels so I wasn't able to preform Wizarding Magic as well as I should so I left my Birth Country looking for a different path towards spell casting then what was being offered when I was twelve. Bartered with a Selkie for help crossing the ocean to arrive at what is now called France and came to study under a hermit Magician with a Mastery of Elemental Magic."

"She'd been having trouble with the local Fair Folk of the near by lands and I, having grown up with learning how best to be mindful of our Good Neighbors, was more then capable of smoothing over their respective bruised egos." He explains and it's clear that Harry is rather bewildered by certain bits of information. "It was a different time and different world, child." He tells the boy in a soft yet calming tone.

"So, being a Magician doesn't make one a Wizard then?" Harry muses and he hums a positive. "Magicians tradition is not one born to humans but taught to them by various magical beings, be they Deities or a member of a magical race. Hence why even those who lack the inner channels can learn to make use of magic and can match those born a Wizard or succeed them with enough creativity and research."

"How long do Magicians live?" The former teen asks curiously. "As long as they keep the right spells up and empowered... Centuries, but it is not uncommon for them to grow tired of life and decide the time of their death." He admits.

"I haven't reached that point, as of yet, but it's not fully do to my own mental fortitude." Li admits simply and the younger Dragonkin clearly wants to know the cause, yet likely doesn't know if it's a sour point with him. He takes a few seconds to study the current child before returning to his notes.

As he gets the basic formula memorized, he's sure to keep the Illusion that everything is normal near the care and encouraging any on lookers to forget seeing him along with mind their own business. Illusions are easy as they don't change the world, just the perceptions of onlookers. The elder Dragonkin re-reads and rechecks the notes a much younger self wrote out and toyed with but never used it upon successfully completing the spell and testing it to be sure it worked as intended. Given the test had been on driving his wagon home, he figured that the driver he'll be Conjuring up will have no trouble with the car.

And triple checking to ensure he memorized the spell formula, he closes the book and tucks it under his left arm as he stares at a sport near the car. Slowly his magic begins to write itself upon the ground and then more of the formula begins to appear as it layers in the air at least one inch between each layer until it's a good four feet thick. With a single world in his native tongue, "Execute!" The glowing magical formula hovering in the air and written upon the ground glows and condenses into a humanoid shape sporting simple appeal and a fired clay mask sporting the features of a small bird beck.

Nodding, he moves around the car and as he enters into the passenger, the Conjured drive enters into the car. Within seconds, they are riding upon the street with the driver clearly proving itself capable of doing its job. Satisfied with himself, he Banishes the notebook back to his office library. "Ah, won't we be stopped because his face is covered?" Asks Harry.

"An Illusion about the car should ensure nobody cares about the mask." He assures the former teen. Now it's just figuring how the stops along the trip back to Vancouver from Washington, DC.

/ - - _ -] N [- _ - - ***

It's hard for him to believe that just a month ago, he'd been a teenager. Then again, I never thought there could be any form of magic besides what the Wizarding world offers or that someone could learn to use magic. Harry, or to use the alias his Great Grandfather gave him, Padraig Graves.

Never mind that he'd end up regressing to the age of five going on six years of age. Or that ending up on a road trip that spans across the US and Canada boarder. He admits to himself, not that he isn't enjoying himself.

It's like a new, fresh start. A reset. He muses as he stares up at the tourist attraction or what's nicknamed a tourist trap. There's been a few bumps along their trip in the form of stray Magicians trying to kidnap him to use him against his Great Grandfather or trying to subdue his Great Grandfather to viva use of Mind Control Magic, which is rather chancy given that if the target possesses a stronger will then the caster... He winces at the memory of more then a few exploding heads and the singular example of someone's brain just liquefying.

Not that it seemed to overly bother his Great Grandfather much, the man merely sighs in a disappointed kind of way but still removed the evidence of what happened from being discovered. Sometimes they'd end up encountering a local member of a Magician Cabal about claiming a bounty, if there is one, concerning any particular stray Magician or in general. A few of the younger Magicians clearly didn't know who his Great Grandfather is and tended to act far more important then they actually are, only to be forced into apologizing before they leave the Cabal's 'territory' by their senior members. Not that his Great Grandfather seemed to mind over much as he's more known for possessing Wizarding Magic then any notable, magical accomplishment.

Although that's not true as it once was. He reflects as he glances towards where his Great Grandfather is talking with a couple with a map out. After all, I'm still capable of causing my wand to react to me, thus I am a Wizard still, even though I am also a Dragonkin now.

Not that anyone besides his Great Grandfather and Master Rask are aware of that. Which means that Master Rask is a trustworthy man. He concludes. Then again, the Ritual Master, as his Great Grandfather called him, is a former student of his Great Grandfather. He wonders if that means that the man is some kind of religious

Looking back at the famous landmark that draws people to the town and wonders if this is what it's like, to be content. After all, he's not stuck doing chores under the glare of the sun nor is he getting fed scraps of food, plus, he's actually getting to see the new places, staying up late watching movies, or picking a restaurant for them to eat at. With his Great Grandfather, he's just Harry, or rather, Padraig and that's... freeing in some indescribable way which is why he's found it easier to smile far more honestly these days then the forced one for his friends and class-mates.

x - { = _ T _ = } - x

"Master Li, I presume?" A stranger is waiting in their current hotel room, black hair with dirty blond bangs. He feels his Great Grandfather's hand tighten slightly on his shirt, which is puzzling as the man never seemed to be overly concerned about anyone new approaching them before.

"Governor General." And that sounds like an important title. "I was unaware I rated a personal meeting."

The man gracefully moves from sitting in the chair by the small table to approach with a rather lazy air, it's one that his Great Grandfather usual has whenever they deal with stray Magicians, which means that this man is powerful and knows it. "And this is Padraig Graves? Your Great Grandson I take it?"

"Yes, viva his mother." And he's not sure what to make of any of this, so he bites his lower lip, moving to stand next to his Great Grandfather, who's hand moves to rest for a few seconds on his head before moving onto his left shoulder. Surprisingly violet eyes are moving over his features, clearly able to see the black and purple scales of his forehead and along his hairline.

"I wonder how he ended up inheriting your Dragon blood enhancement..." Muses the Governor General and he swallows as thoughts of ending up on a lab table dance through his mind. "I'm more interested in learning of how I managed to warrant your attention, Governor General Azazel of the Grigori." His Great Grandfather states in a soft and warning tone, which seems to cause the other to smile slightly.

"There's an interesting missing child report that's spiraling out of the UK for a teen by the name of Harry James Potter as well as a stir caused by the discovery of Blood Wards found in a mundane neighborhood where the teen's family lives." And now it looks like he's going to be forced back to Hogwarts and away from the only blood relative who genuine cares about him. "A teen who's appearance kind of matches your young charge."

His Great Grandfather sighs and he looks up to find the man running a hand through his own black hair with purse lips. "Ritual Master Rask didn't bulge on releasing the details of the examine, so, you came here for my copy." And, surprisingly, the other looks a touch sheepish but clearly not denying it, which is how the tension in the air is released.

"Ah, what's the Grigori?" He asks in curiosity and the two look down at him. "It's an organization of Fallen Angels and a number of those who possess Sacred Gears. Part of the Biblical Faction."

"Aren't Fallen Angels just Devils?" He asks and his Great Grandfather winces, sending a quick glance toward Azazel. "No, Devils are a different race of beings and yes, the original Lucifer did end up taking charge of them."

"He wasn't taught about the Agreement and given what he mentioned about his history teacher, I can't help but wonder if they ever put it on the lesson plan." Admits his Great Grandfather, looking right at the Fallen Angel.

"Oh ho? How interesting." And he notices Azazel's eyes glinting with interest. "Not much contact has been had since the Magic Divide Contract was written up and set in motion."

His Great Grandfather ruffles his hair before walking towards his pack. He watches as an envelop is Summon and then magical formula appears around the letter before the creation of another envelop appears upon the pack. The original one gets Banished away and then his Great Grandfather picks up the newly created envelop, walking over and handing it over. "Due to the magics involved, we hadn't gotten a full examination of what effects the Blood Wards caused him nor do we understand why he regressed in age."

Azazel takes the envelop and hums thoughtfully. "Waiting for his magic to settle then?" The Fallen Angel asks and his Great Grandfather nods.

"I see and I would like to speak with him later to get an idea of the state of the Wizard and Witch side of things." The other being smiles slightly. "After all, if this situation proved anything, it's that the Contract isn't as strong as it once was."

"Nice meeting the both of you, Master Li. Padraig Graves." And with that, the Fallen Angel teleports away.

He doesn't know what to feel about this, only that it seems they have a breather of some sort. "He's one of the oldest leaders of the Biblical Faction and he's the one that sued for a truce once the four original Satans were killed in battle with God." Explains his Great Grandfather.

"He's also has a finger in every porn company that exists and has bedded multiple women, and maybe some men, over his life. He's likely had his share of kids born out of wedlock." And yea, his jaw drops a touch upon hearing that.

"And this is common knowledge?!" He can't help but ask and his Great Grandfather remarks, "Well, let me put it this way, he's more honest then most human politicians when it comes to matters of sex but then, he doesn't need to worry about public opinion to stay in power as he isn't voted into office."

"So, is good? Evil?" He asks.

"He is who he is and his reasons for his actions are his own." Explains his Great Grandfather and, well, that's likely the most honest answer the older Dragonkin can give him.

The End?

Beyond Shattered Skyline: KHR!

I do not own Katakyou Hitman Reborn!

Tsuna isn't happy, not one bit yet his fear out weighs his hot anger. He's long since lost track of what the group of middle school students wanted from him and after begin kicked in the stomach from trying to ask, well, the eleven year old figures it's just another 'Let's humiliate Dame-Tsuna' sessions. Not that it stops him from feeling anger over his situation yet, well, it's not like being angry ever did anything for him and, well, like usual, it fades into self loathing and knowing he deserves whatever is about to happen to him. His mind feels so sluggish now although he doesn't feel the bruises he knows litter his body.

The teens are talking and laughing, Tsuna realizes as he's being carried over somebody's shoulder now. He isn't even aware of when that happened. After all, hadn't he been stumbling within the center of the group just a second ago?

I am so useless, aren't? I can't even recall what they have in store for me... The preteen mentally tells himself.

The next thing he registers is he's naked, no clue when that happened, and now he's being held down as they paint his body. There's a fur belt that's kind of interesting, it's clearly old and for some reason there's fur on the one side. As it sways from the branch, Tsuna swears that his eyes are playing tricks on him, after all, why would rainbow fire dance among what remaining fur the belt has?

"Full Moon tonight, Dame-Tsuna! Let's see if stupid ritual works, huh?" His attention is on the one with a bruise under his jaw, likely from a run in with Hibari-senpai.

They don't bother with his reply as they put the old leather belt about his scrawny waist, tying a knot instead of using the belt buckle and the holes. He's dumped in the middle and pictures are being taken, he tries to cover what he can but, well, he's naked save for that belt. Then as the sun goes down, one of them takes out their phone and out of the speaker is a chant.

The eleven year old jerks his body and head back from how he was curling in on himself, his stomach muscles start aching as a warmth attempts to sink into his body. It's uncomfortable and, well, everything become sluggish once more. Then, then there's more chanting and the words are like hot needles being driven into his brain. He begins to scream...

Tsuna studies his tail, he woke to find it out and he's done his best to pull it back into his body yet, it refuses to listen. His boxers are low in the back because of this, the fur color matching his hair, which isn't that unusual. Before his eyes, his tail moves from side to side. Hearing the knock on his current bedroom door, he groans as he says, "Its my tail."

The door opens and his host looks rather annoyed, glaring at said tail. His tail moves to curl about his boxers, it's not long enough to really reach his belly and he bites down on his lower lip. In Tsuna's mind's eye, he can see the spot where he sank his fangs into his host's throat, although it's been three months since then and the injury healed without even a scar to show of that encounter, he can't help but feel guilty of almost causing the teen's death.

His host rolls his eyes and Hibari walks out of the room. He continues to get ready by putting on his school uniform top. Hibari arrives with a pair of boxers that, to Tsuna's eyes, shimmer indigo as they come flying towards him. With that, his host and unofficial legal guardian leaves him to put on the altered pair of boxers, likely something Hibari had to alter with his Mist secondary Flame and grabbed from his basket of clean laundry. Switching boxers, the Mist altered ones didn't restrict his tail as he stuffs it in. He can feel it move and a few tries show that the tail can move up and down, although it can't curl towards his belly, which works.

He's quick to finish getting ready for his first day back to school and grabbing his book bag that contains his things for school. With it swung onto his shoulder, he heads for the table and sits down across from his host while the chief finishes placing their respective breakfasts down. Tsuna thanks the man while his host beginning eating, the food placed before them is different but then, that's to be expected, given what those teens accidentally triggered four, going to be five, months ago.

Just because his outside looks human doesn't fully make him human inside, not that they aren't working on that, it's just, he's just started to get the hang of willful transformation out of that other form. It's hard to call it a wolf as he is too large along with the fact that he's capable of naturally alter the upper body into a more human arrangement so he can have grasping hands while at the same time his bone structure will alter to allow for bipedal movement. Never mind how more talon like the claws then canine influenced. It's just a confusing mess made worse by some unknown factor.

So, the safest diet for him for now is raw meat and the occasional serving of 'safe' raw veggies, not at every meal though. The Hibari clan's private doctor had a pretty explosive reaction when he'd been force to describe his previous eating habits never mind how often he'd still attend school while heavily bruised before this whole thing. Nor did the woman like to hear how he mentioned his brain felt after his, brief, periods of extreme emotional distress or upon looking back it, how cold he'd felt compared to how he feels now.

Tsuna isn't sure if he wants to know what theory the Hibari clan have concerning the likely cause and, for some reason, it kind of seems that none of them have spoken to his host, Hibari Kyoya, about it. Likely knowing that there's not much the Misty Cloud could do beyond stew over the fact that he'd been suffering from a likely preventable condition and the people who should have caught it, weren't around for the young Misty Cloud to take it out on. He's very much aware that he's caused a lot of trouble in those three months he'd been functioning off of panic, anger, and frustration. It's surprising how the the Hibari clan at large did not seem to resent him about his actions, particularly given that he almost tore out Hibari's throat and the teen almost died from it if not for the teen's Flames going Active.

He's done before his host but waits for him to finish as he looks down while his fingers curl into his pants as he recalls what few clear memories he has. "Calm." He jerks his head to look up at his host, blinking a bit, he's grown use to the permanent look of anger in his host's eyes.

Taking a deep breath, he relaxes his fingers and leads away from the table that he's started to hunch over. In through the nose, out through his mouth. It's then that he realizes how close he was to transforming and entering into a panic attack. His heart is no longer hammering within his chest as he continues to hold eye contact with his host. "Thank you." He tells the teen.

Hibari simply hums and he find some other point to stare at and does his best to no dwell on the past right now. After all, he's got school today and, well, that's not much better but then, he's kind of hoping that without his mind being affected by his previous condition that he'd be able to keep pace with the rest of the students. Or at least know what I need to get caught up on. Tsuna muses.

Soon enough, Hibari is done and he's sure to be polite as he follows after his host, not waiting to lose sight of the teen on the way to school. After all, at this point, Hibari is a familiar fixture in his life right now, one that he trusts to be able to deal with him if he gets caught up in a panic attack and transforms. Trusting that Hibari will be more then capable of ensuring he doesn't cause too much harm to anyone while suffering through it.

Information can be wrong and thus, upon arriving in Namimori, the World's Greatest Hitman scoops out the Sawada residence to only find one Nana Sawada living within for what use to be a child's bedroom is rather bare of personal belongings while there's old cloths within the dresser that haven't seen use in the last few years. And so, for the next two days, Reborn does a stake out of the Sawada residence and the school. He's yet to spy his latest vic... sac... ah, student. Then again, the school is Warded with the use of Mist Flames, it's clear that the Wards are well maintained and he'd bet his fedora that there's layers of Wards along with extras, making it clear that there's an Active Mist that holds the school as something they value and belongs to them.

Which means he's unable to go through his planned operation concerning setting up secret stashes or personally map the building. It also means he needs to arrange a meeting with this Mist in hopes of getting them to at least not interfere with his plans for the future Decimo of the Vongola. Depending on how things pan out, the Mist can be slotted into the slot of the Decimo's Guardians, which makes things easier on him as it will be one less Element to rustle up.

And so, on the third morning, Reborn stands within the school's gate and waits for the Mist to arrive. A grunt and there's a rather displeased Kyoya Hibari glares down at him, which is rather odd as the teen had all the hallmarks of being a Classic Cloud and yet, the teen did seemingly appear out of nowhere nor did he notice the Demon Prefect's approach, which is from the school itself if he's any judge. "Chaos!" The cursed Sun says to the teen, his mind racing over what this could mean.

"Why are you here, cursed Carnivore." The teen demands with irritation coloring his voice. He tilts his head as he regards the teen who is either on good terms with the Mist or possesses Mist Flames himself.

"I'm Reborn, the World's Greatest Hitman and I'm here to tutor a student who attends this school." The teen merely huffs in an unimpressed way.

There's a period of silence and the teen demonstrates that he's not much of a talker, which, to be honest, is something he knows to expect. The teen's looks are familiar and yet, where he'd expect controlled calm there's an intense anger, which, ideally, makes him wonder if his associate had been like this during his own teen years. Those similar features etched in a puerperal frown and eyes burning with barely restrained anger.

It's rather surprising, in the end, that he's the one who breaks the silence. "The student in question is Sawada Tsunayoshi." And he just manages to jerk back in time as something tries to bash him in the fact with something. Reborn isn't the World's Greatest Hitman for nothing and yet, Kyoya's calls upon Mist Flames to keep him from leaving the Warded school's property while purple Cloud Flames cover a pair of metal tonfas, which seem to cause them to cause minor air pressure blows that cause his ears to ring.

Unable to flee out of the way he entered, Reborn has Leon transform and fires at the very pissed off teen. While he wonders what connection this Misty Cloud has to his student, he knows he needs to focus on the here and now as he hadn't expected this reaction nor this attempt at trapping him within the school. So he does his best to get around and to put some distance between them, after all, it's good that the teen is so eager to defend his possible Sky and it's just a matter of ensuring that the Cloud knew he didn't stand a chance of defeating him, Reborn. It's pleasing to see that the latent and Sealed Sky managed to ingrain himself so well to such an Element, particularly one of the hardest ones to ensnare into their sphere of influence.

It's hard for him to not notice how distracted Tsuna is but then, nobody has seen Hibari this morning either. Ever since the reappearance of the brunet after a good four month absence, which they nobody seems to know the cause of, Hibari and Tsuna have become the odd set of companions, they just seem to drift towards one another whenever they can. Then again, Tsuna always seems so much more calm and collected after a visit with or from the older teen and, well, that's rather important as Tsuna's return to school seemed to signify odd happening among the teachers and among some of the students.

After all, before Tsuna's return, the other had been Dame-Tsuna and such a bully magnet, not that Takeshi ever referred to the other by that nickname while the other had been within hearing. Everyone knew he couldn't do anything right, be it walk in a straight line without tripping over nothing to getting a good grade. At times, in his mind at least, it was like Dame-Tsuna was proof that someone somehow managed to take a rabbit and almost successfully to turn it into a human, at least in looks and enough to be able to speak and understand words.

The Tsuna that returned, he was still rather nervous and seemed at a loss when it came to interacting with anyone who wasn't Hibari. But, well, that changed and these days, Tsuna's not a bully magnet and none of the teachers seem eager to single the teen out. The brunet's grades steadily rose, he was finishing his homework on time, was able to answer questions if picked out to answer them, and could pay attention in class a lot better then he use to.

As for those odd things, well, he's never really recalls them very well, even when he's been able to witness them. Like, how was it those few time back when Tsuna had returned to school that the locker room got all wrecked and sporting claw indents? Or about how many times he's found chop marks along its length? Or evidence of something big trying to chew on it? Or the few times he's found coarse, black fur on his school uniform? Or his book bag? Never mind the guilt laden looks Tsuna sometimes sends to some people's way?

It's a mystery that he wishes to solve and yet, a tiny part of him feels he really doesn't want to solve it at the same time. There's this part of him, this fearful part that wants him to stay away from the brunet, that there's something WRONG and DANGEROUS. It's a rather small part, though, and it only feeds his fascination concerning what's going on with Tsuna. About whatever happened to him in those four months he'd been absent that caused him to come back so different, so changed.

As of yet, Takeshi has yet to act upon his fascination to approach the brunet but acknowledges that might be do to a lot more factors then just because there's that small voice in his brain telling him to avoid the brunet and it kind of has to so with their classmates and his beloved sport. Well, Hibari is another but that's because the other is so possessive concerning the matter of Tsuna. After all, it's pretty much a fact at this point that Hibari is pretty much has Tsuna living at his place, refusing to let the previous boy, now teen live with his mother. Never mind that it's Hibari that is suppose to be contact in regards to Tsuna, like the teen somehow became the brunet's legal guardian and, well, maybe it's true as its clear that Tsuna is flourishing while living with Hibari where before, living with his mother, Tsuna had been withering under her care without her notice.

Takeshi can only guess the kind of things are being said about That and he's certain that it's something that does get talked about. After all, everyone always assumed it was a defect of the son and yet now? Now it's a question if it wasn't something concerning the mother. Whatever the truth of the matter actually is, Tsunayoshi is doing far better while under the care of the Demon Prefect and the evidence can be seen just by looking at the teen. Which just adds to the reason why so many of the female students have set their sights on ensnaring the frightening Demon Prefect, much to his private amusement as he's pretty sure that Hibari isn't into that as of yet or at all right now, perhaps they'd have better luck in the future.

Tsuna turns to look at him for a brief moment before his gaze goes down the window. He glances out but there's nothing there to see and so, he does his best to focus on taking notes once more. Takeshi knows that today isn't going to be the day but he kind of wishes it could be, as he really wants to know what's distracting the other so much that he's not taking any notes or is focus on what the teacher is teaching. So, he chalks it up under the list of future questions to be asked at a later date and does his best to focus on the teacher's lesson.

Reborn is getting tired, irritated, and thirsty as he continues to evade the murderous Misty Cloud. He's trapped on school grounds and it's clear that the teen knows this school like the back of his hand, never mind the fact that, well, Mist Flames. It's clear that the Wards surrounding the school are meant to keep people from leaving not from entering or else he'd found a bypass or a hole to use to get out.

He's on the top of the school's roof and Reborn swears that once he's gotten out of this, he's going to demonstrate to this teen just why he's the World's Greatest Hitman. "What?!" He snaps into his phone, it's the third time it's gone off and he's reaching his limit.

"Reborn, what's this I hear of you being in Namimori?" Fon's rather mild tone isn't what he's expecting. "Contract."

"Oh? Who is involved in this... contract." The Storm inquires in a way that he's pretty sure is his demanding of an answer. "How did you even know I'm in Namimori?" He counters, he's tired damn it and did he mention thirty?

"A Ward of the Hibari clan texted a message mentioning you being chased about Namimori Middle School by Kyoya-kun." Fon sounds rather amused over his situation and he growls before frowning. "Your turn to answer the question, Reborn."

"I am here to train one Tsunayoshi Sawada as future Decimo of the Vongola Famiglia." The Sun informs the Storm. It takes him a few seconds to realize he's hearing muffled laughter from the Storm.

"That... that is rather funny, all things considered. After all, Tsunayoshi isn't a Sky and if I recall my information correctly about the Vongola Famiglia, only those with Sky Flames can become their Don." Fon informs him and he frowns.

"The Ninth himself claimed that the boy is a latent Sky." He states. "Latent... Well, that's up for debate but no, the child is no Sky and to be flat with you, we don't know what his Flame type." His Storm counter point informs him.

"Then if the boy isn't a Sky, why is there a Misty Cloud so keen on protecting him?" He remarks and hears taking a rather deep breath, hold it and slowly let it go. Reborn realizes that the Ward and Tsunayoshi were likely one in the same person.

"The child is under Kyoya-kun's personal protection and has grown very fond of the younger teen." And as such, the Cloud views the teen as part of his Territory. Is left unsaid but pretty much implied.

"How sure are you that he isn't a Sky? The Ninth seemed certain that the boy possesses the Sky Flame back when he visited Iemitsu's family." Reborn presses, after all, the elderly Don seemed so certain.

"Reborn... Are you aware of what time it is?" Fon asks suddenly and he snorts, "Nearing eight am here, why?" He had decided on a quarter to seven to lure out the Mist this morning.

"It's actually two pm, in the afternoon there." And Reborn blinks, holds the phone from his face, checking the time and... Begins cursing out the god-damn fucking Misty Cloud for screwing around with his personal sense of time. No wonder he's so tired and thirsty, hungry now as well, the Demon Prefect's Wards have been screwing him up without him even realizing it. Which also means that school is in session.

"Nobody save for Kyoya-kun and the Ward are aware you've been hunted around the school." The Chinese Storm informs him after his verbal stream of abuse is said. "And yes, the child in question is no longer a Sky if that is what his previous Flame nature was." Then with a note of warning, "I strongly suggest you distance yourself from the Vongola Famiglia, Reborn, the sooner the better."

With that bit of advice and warning, the Storm ends the call without a farewell of any sort. Now, it's a question of what he wants to do next concerning not just figuring out a way to un-ruffle the 'feathers' of the Misty Cloud but also concerning the contract, after all, it sounds as though Tsunayoshi is Flame Active now, the question is, if he did Shatter did Reborn have the skills needed to heal a Shattered Sky? As for this 'unknown' flame type, it could be the teen's attempt at reassembling his sense of self and heal from the Shattering...

Stomach growls and he swallows drily in his mouth. First things first , though. He reminds himself. He needs to get out of the school and the Wards surrounding it, which means dealing with the likely smug Misty Cloud who's skills he under estimated. The question is, how to go about doing just that?

= | - \ _ N _ / - | =

Letting out a huff, Tsuna's body alters as he touches the ground with his kind of pawish hands, with them transforming into actual paws while his whole body's muscles and bones moving, shrinking, and reshaping so that he can move about on all fours. Kyoya grunts and begins to walking back for Namimori, he cocks his head slightly before quickly moving to trot next to the Misty Cloud's right side, curious as to why he doesn't need to resume his human shape as he's not suppose to be close to Namimori while in his current shape as far too many students, former students, and teachers have seen him in his other shape and it's best for everyone if they don't remember the various incidences that happened at school, be it from his own panic attacks to attempts at bullying him, verbally, emotionally, or physically. It's one of the reasons why Kyoya set the Wards up around the school in the first place along with why they are so focus on keeping people from leaving or contacting people outside of the school.

Takeshi's interest only seems to increase instead of decrease... He ignores that line of thought, the other teen's fascination with him isn't healthy and he knows that, on some level, Takeshi does as well. It worries him that the baseball player, star member of the club, and considered the most popular kid of his age group is losing concern over his own safety, that he might be entering into a depression or suffering from it.

Doing his best to push the matter out of his mind, after all, Tsuna isn't someone who hangs out regularly with Takeshi, so maybe he's reading the situation wrong? After all, it might just be that the other teen could be a closet Furry, from what he's searched up on the internet, that's a thing, bizarrely enough. Again, he does not know much about Takeshi nor do they really talk to one another so he's just guessing about the other's teen's increasing fascination with him.

Surely someone closer to him would pick up the signs of depression? Perhaps his own father? He muses as he keeps pace with Kyoya as his mind chews on the subject, not for the first time and he's made mention of it to Kyoya before, who, has flatly told him that it's the herbivore's personal business until the herbivore breaks school rules or approaches Tsuna himself.

Still, his mind circles around Yamamoto Takeshi for some minutes yet as they continue to walk, which is odd given that Kyoya could easily use his Mist Flames to speed the travel time or ensure they get there without all this walking. Then again, it's the fact that there's no request of any sort, typically unspoken, to assume his human shape either. After all, his 'exercise' site is the old amusement park, he kind of recalls going to when he was little, called Kokuyo Land and it's got weaker Wards around it to keep people from visiting when he's within a mile of the location.

It's been a few days since the whole Kyoya running that almost toddler to the ground about the school, a toddler that sported a glowing stone of yellow which might make them someone Active with Sun Flames. It's not long that he notices some new scents, human. Tsuna's nostrils wide as he lifts his head up more and breaths deep to get more of the scents. Males. Gun powder for two. Chemicals for two. Coffee drinker. Strong coffee drinker. Three of them total.

Baffled, he lets out a questioning huff and look towards the Misty Cloud. Kyoya reaches over and gives the nearest ear a slight flick before there's changes going on with Kyoya's pose, scent, heart beat, and he feels the pin pricks of the teen's Flames rise to the surface. Which means, while this meeting is expected, the older teen isn't happy with the meeting itself or, maybe, the topic of the meeting? Looking forward once more, he feels his muscles tense, particularly his jaw muscles, he's suddenly wishing to be anywhere but here, after all, the trio are strangers and he's sure that he's never met any of them before, even in human shape.

"Calm." Kyoya states in a soft yet confident voice, snapping him out of his mental state. His breathing slows as he blinks to find that he'd stop walking at some point and with a soft whine, he is quick to retake his previous position of walking next to Kyoya. His heart is still beating rather fast within his chest and his ears more then likely showing his mental state and his tail is hanging limply behind him, not curling up towards his belly though.

Such a simple word. Tsuna admits as he gets to spy at leas two of the three. Yet it feels, at times, it's his only mental lifeline, the only thing keeping his head above the water when everything just overwhelms his ability to think and so much that he is pretty much operating on emotions and two different sets of instincts that don't always align properly.

Fear spikes the air for a few seconds before a soft snort, curse, and chuckle ring out. He's rather curious as to why they reacted like that but, well, Kyoya continues to get closer until there's barely ten feet between the two of them and the three, he spies the toddler on the ground between the two taller males. "Nice pet, Hibari-san." The tiny male smelling of strong coffee and gun powder remarks in a light tone.

He's fairly confused at this easily dismissal before it dawns on him that the tiny male likely shared the information of Kyoya being a Misty Cloud. Thus, they thought him to be a Mist Construct or maybe some animal that Kyoya used Cloud Flames to enlarge, after all, he's standing at minimal at five feet at the shoulder when he's standing straight and in the right stance, never mind how much more height there is when his head is raised high and ears perked forward plus up. So yea, Tsuna reflects, they likely don't realize that I'm 'real' in a flesh and bones kind of way or that this is actually 'natural' appearance.

And wasn't that a oddly relaxing thought. While the silent stand off goes on, because of course it will, he notices the taller male, a man given the style of dress plus a professional of a kind, medical or science, given the lab coat. There's a kind of interest coming from the other but it's clear that the man is annoyed with being here and likely didn't see the point of being here.

Then teen sends a Look towards the professional, who's scent, briefly, spikes with a hint of regret and sadness, meaning that the two know each other but parted company. The seemingly only adult gives the teen a slight shrug and a look that reads 'what can I do?' Which only serves to make the chemical and gun powder teen more irritated, muttering something under his breath but that's about it while the teen looks away, padding his jean pocket for something but not finding it. There's a kind of fondness in the professional man's face for a few seconds while the man watches the teen's antics out of the corner of his before it vanishes and the mask of boredom fits in place.

"What is it?" The tiny male finally asks in clear frustration. "I don't sense any of your Flames on it."

"Tsuna." Kyoya states and with a snort, does the thing that shifts his current body so he possesses fingers tipped with talons and the ability to stand plus walk around comfortably on two legs. The teen's eyes widen while there's a look of unbridled interest on the professional's face as the shift causes soft pops to ring out as things rearrange themselves. "Not a Sky." The Misty Cloud states by the time it finishes and he begins to do some stretches and flexing muscles.

"Not a..." The teen snaps. "That's not even HUMAN!" Which causes him to flicker an ear back but nothing more.

After all, it's kind of hard to argue that he's human while in his current shape. "You're telling me that... that... That was a kid? Once?!" The professional asks while the tiny male's eyes clearly harden into icy black stone before tilting the fedora so he can't see the toddler's face.

"Was eleven." He manages to growl and hiss out. "Belt was something. Chanting activated it." It always so hard to speak, even with his throat altering just enough for him to make some of the proper sounds but, well, Kyoya wasn't going to explain and it's clear they can hear what he's saying even if it's heavily accented with odd empathizes on certain sounds.

There's this look of horror in the professional's eyes while the teen doesn't seem to Get It even though he understood what was said. Which means that the teen didn't know much about Flames while it's clear the professional does. With a sideways look, he shifts into his human form, it's faster then when his kind of wolf body rearranges itself and thankfully the Mist bound cloths didn't appear inside out and the teen just stares, mouth open wide and eyes clearly disbelieving just what he had witnessed and the professional clearly looks interested, though there's a touch of pity as he feels another Flame brush over him and Taste him for a few minutes, he's had this happen before with those who are Flame Users among the Hibari clan. "Beyond Shattered, Reborn."

The other Flame's touch recedes and he really doesn't get what that means, let alone why it deserves to have the world beyond before it. The teen just looks rather whelmed by everything and is muttering in some other language. Shattered Sky was something he's heard whispered before in regards to him. Yes, he's got all seven Flames on him, but none of them are his now, they just seem to be what he's made of since what happened when he was eleven happened but there's a Flame he can use though, not that anyone feels comfortable with the thought of him using it all that much. It's unlike the seven Flames that everyone among the criminal underground knows about as well, yet it's clear that it's not some kind of chimera Flame type that some report or gossip about, like Wrath Flames, which the youngest son of an Italian Don possesses, or, the rumored, Snow Flame.

"Why did you think I was still a Sky? I mean, did you not speak with Hibari-senpai? Or thought of contacting the Hibari clan about verifying it? I'm sure it would have saved you the trouble of coming here to find this out for yourself." He inquires curiously while looking at Reborn, likely a fake name.

He's pretty sure Kyoya finds him asking that question to be amusing but he wasn't going to glance towards the older teen to confirm it. "They could be lying." Stated the professional, likely on Reborn's behalf, which means he's now looking towards the man. "Skies are... rare."

"Then why Seal a child Sky who just went Active? If it's so rare then surely it would have been better to take me in and start training me, make plans to ensure I wouldn't interfere with inheriting from the already picked and groomed Heir." Tsuna remarks and there's surprise then out rage at the information while Reborn hisses something under his breath.

There's a light snort and he glances towards Kyoya now. The older teen gives him a slow blink and he hums. "Well, it seems that our business is concluded. I hope you have a safe travel back to Italy." He tells them and then, Kyoya shifts them to the backyard of the house.

With that, Kyoya gives him an approving look and then heads for the back door. Tsuna turns his back on the house and reaches into himself for his Flame, it dances about as he feeds it his anger, bitterness, and resentment. He closes his eyes as he feels himself being lifted off the ground and then, after a while, his emotions are gone and his Flame releases its hold on him, it's not much of a fall but yet, it is still two feet off the ground. He's pretty sure the soles of his runners are ruined but that's fine, Kyoya's got a decent size crate that's Enchanted to repair the damage his Flame does to his belongings.

Once he's out of the runners, he picks them up and heads for his room right away. After checking on the few other items within, he takes out what has been repaired which is three hoodies, four rings, eight bracelets or varying types, a dozen wallets, clip and chain, and half a dozen pairs of socks before adding in his runners, placing them next to a collection of almost two dozen Frisbee which is the dividing line between the other smaller items and the sports stuff, which is currently made up of eight baseballs, five catchers mitts, a basket ball, two volley balls, three metal bats, and two wooden bats. Closing the lid, Tsuna places everything save for the cloths on top of his study desk, he'll be sure to hand them over to Tetsuya before school begins so they can be returned to their owners.

Life isn't fair. Tsuna gently reminds himself. At least I'm not going to be the focus of it this time around. He muses to himself with a smile, knowing that some form of justice will be happening on his behalf in regards to what his dog of a father and his boss did to him, about the state they condemned him to suffer through without any kind of support.

He wonders about the name of the Italian Famiglia that his sperm donor put before his family. Then, well, he lets it got by the time he enters the kitchen, after all, it's never going to be his problem nor will they factor into his future. He might still be legally a Sawada but it isn't the Sawada clan that's been looking after him these pass few years. He's not sure why the Hibari clan have washed their hands at trying to help his mother with her mental state of being, only that whatever the reason or cause, it likely stemmed from Nana herself.

"Steak hamburger, Kyoya?" He asks and gets a simply hum while the Misty Cloud is doing his own cooking. Giving the other a half smile, he begins to make his own supper, being sure to mind where Kyoya is as he does so.

= | - \ _ N _ / - | =

"Whatever it is you are thinking, it's not going to work." Shamal states once they are alone in the hotel room. He proceeds to not reply to the Mist as he stalks over towards the mini bar.

"There's seven Flames fortifying his very existence ! Whatever the eighth Flame is, it's the foundation of his very Will now." The Mafioso Doctor continues.

"It won't take much to tip the balance and I'm sure that the Hibari clan have reports of what that means." He listens even though he's enraged and feels instincts screaming at him to FIX HIM. It's rather overwhelming as it causes him a migraine which does nothing for his already frayed temper.

"He's not human anymore, for all that he can assume one." He recalls color of Flame that engulfed the huge, black furred, and crimson eyed almost wolf. Yellow at the core with yellow 'bubbles' fading into shades of orange as it moves towards the edges of the Flame, at which point it's a red, calling to mind the pictures of magma before it begins to shrink in on itself, then as it shrinks the Flame turns into a red brown coloring like rocky earth which is quick to vanish to reveal a teenager that clearly inherited his mother's looks. Reborn can't really help but recall how dense they'd been, possessing a weight that none of the Dying Will Flames usually have.

"He's not really a being dependent of flesh, blood, and bone either." Shamal continues to rant. There's a string of curses the 'good' doctor uses, languages ranging from their native Italian dialects through English and French and ending with bits of Russian and a few select phrases in common Japanese.

It's clear that Shamal isn't just trying to convince Reborn but himself, that there's nothing that they can ultimately do for Tsunayoshi. After all, the Hibari clan have more experience dealing with the teenager and his state of being... Well, it's also likely that they're still going over their options on how to treat it, never mind how to fix it. It's unlikely they'd risk causing Tsunayoshi any undue pain, given how attached Kyoya Hibari is to the altered teen.

"It was implied that he'd been Sealed latent ." He finally gets around to dulling his migraine with a few items from the mini bar. Curse it all, he'd trusted the Don on the matter, read the reports and thought the teen to be another Dino only who was civilian with civilian mind set and values.

Sure, he'd expected resistance to the idea of being a Mafia Don but once Active, there wouldn't be any choice for the supposed Sky to have a normal life outside of the Mafia or the criminal underworld for that matter. Yea, it wasn't going to be fair to do that a kid out of the blue but the world wasn't fair in the first place. A naive untested boy could, with Reborn and his skills, could grow to be a morally decent young man who'd be ready to be Don of the Vongola Famiglia by age eighteen and shake things up like the Ninth had wanted.

Well, looks like somebody's mistakes have come home to roost. Reborn muses darkly to himself. "I was expecting a civilian Dino, not... not..." He couldn't even find the right word to summarize how fucked up a Sky growing up Sealed. It wasn't just about getting rid of the Seal, it was figuring out the extent of damage done and whether or not the Sealed Sky could even Harmonize with another Flame...

Yea, he's getting in a talkative mood and doesn't see how else to deal with everything but to vent, like Shamal had upon entering the room. "Sealing an Active Flame..." Boy, wasn't that a mine field to walk through. "In a child no less!" What argument could Don Vongola put forth about Sealing an untrained, underage Sky that didn't make it sound like the Don wasn't threatened by a baby Sky? Of Primo's own bloodline?

Like the inhuman teen mentioned, they could have found ways to ensure Tsunayoshi didn't become a threat to Don Vongola's Heir and better to keep the boy close if only to keep a literal eye on him. "What was he thinking?! No, wait, he was thinking, he was thinking about how much of a threat the boy could be! And it wasn't like he named an Heir at the time, he never got around to naming one of his sons, even when there had only been one son left!"

"Weren't all three of his oldest sons over the age of twenty or at least seventeen?" Shamal asks, he's not sure where the Mafia Doctor got the German beer from but then, the man is a Mist and likely smuggled it through customs with ease and it wasn't like he was looking beyond the mini bar for a drink... "It should have been easy enough, to fill whatever vacant spot in their Guardians once they got named."

"Don Vongola also never pushed for any of them to marry." He muses with a frown. "Yes, they went through their skirt chasing period, some returning to it after brief periods of courting one of the other Famiglia's daughters but none came forward claiming a kid to be any of theirs."

"Isn't Xanxus imprisoned? Would have thought the Don would arrange male guards." Shamal remarks and he chuckles. "Perhaps. Not like anyone's heard from the youngest." There's been rumors going around concern the Wrath and his Rain but then, given their ages, it wouldn't have mattered much as long as they both gave their consent.

"So, you got your work cut out for you if he decides to keep you as the tutor for the Decimo." He hums but knows that at least Xanxus isn't stupid and it should be shorter then the one where he tutored Dino. After all, Xanxus knows how to lead and his Rain, at least, will be more then helpful in picking up the slack of his Sky given how Varia is still going strong despite their Boss' absent from the chain of command.

"What?" Iemitsu looks rather dazed while Don Vongola clearly looks like he'd just bit into a lemon. "What happened to my Tuna-fishie?!" It hardly surprises him that Iemitsu Sawada, External Advisor and head of the CEDEF, doesn't know what has became of his son. There hadn't been any protection surrounding the house nor did there seem to be much of a presence of the Vongola Famiglia's interest in Namimori either.

"Perhaps we should involve R&D and Medical for their opinion on the status of young Tsunayoshi." States the elderly Don and Reborn finds that to be a touch alarming, after all, for whatever bad blood is between the two, surely they can come to some agreement, it would be easier, nobody needed to know that Xanxus hadn't been about to be tapped, and they wouldn't be spending money and resources to fix the teen, who's still alive against all the odd, and under the protection of an unknown quality that is the Hibari, never mind the presence of a very touchy and possessive Misty Cloud in said Tsunayoshi's life and who's likely claimed the teen as part of their Territory.

"I believe if you were to get into contact with the Hibari clan, they'd be more then interested in sharing what notes they have concerning his state of being." Reborn remarks. "They have been greater experience concerning Tsunayoshi's state of being and are invested in ensuring he's as healthy and stable."

"The child is of Primo's blood, he belongs to the Vongola." Coyote, the Ninth's Storm Guardian, pipes in with a disapproving frown. Eyes flickering towards the elderly Storm but settling back on the Don Vongola while Iemitsu murmurs his complete agreement.

They weren't going to listen. Reborn, the World's Greatest Hitman, realizes. They don't want to listen. They don't want to acknowledge that trying to wrestle the teen is a very bad idea.

It's a dizzying thought. Even as he sits there silently, they discus their plans, as though it were a foregone conclusion that the Hibari clan will allow Tsunayoshi to leave. That Vongola R&D and Medical would be more then capable of fixing this condition , let alone that the resulting restored teen would want anything to do with them or even return to being a Sky in the first place.

In someways, he knew that it didn't really involve him. That this was Don Vongola digging himself a deeper grave, that these people didn't want to reconsider their current pick for Decimo, never mind the fact that nobody knows if Tsunayoshi could survive leaving Namimori in the first place to come to Italy. A child who was had his soul Sealed away, had been a bully magnet for years by both kids and adults, who never had the kind of support needed to over come that bullying, never given the clear help concerning school work, and then ended up being robbed of his humanity by some generic group of teenagers bullies, who paid the price of that act in many different ways, two almost paying the ultimate price.

Reborn has been called a lot of things in his life, he's also done lot of things as well but the thought of aiding these... idiots in their endeavor concerning said teen, it turned out to be a line he would no cross. It was one thing when the subject in question had been a latent Sealed civilian Sky but with Tsunayoshi as he is? There's parallels between Reborn and Tsunayoshi, it's so hard for him to not see the similarities as they both had something torn from them for the 'greater' good, nobody asked for their permission while doing so, and, really, the one(s) responsible aren't really sorry for what was done to them. Tsunayoshi might be able to assume the form of a human but he ultimately wasn't one any more and Reborn, while still human, ultimately will likely never return to his adult appearance.

So, he listens to their plotting and is sure to keep his mind blank. Soon enough, the meeting ends, but there's a underlining message that they aren't done with the subject of the meeting. Once he's out of the Iron Fortress and walking off the property is when Reborn allows himself to feel and to think again. There's a migraine pounding away within his skull and it's not long before he uses Leon to contact Viper in order to make arrangements about certain facts to be sold to Dons of the Alliance concerning the incident between two adult Skies and a recently Active baby Sky.

He's sure to phone Shamal to check on the status of Smoking Bomb Hayato, they couldn't have the kid doing anything rash but then, given how rabid the runaway is, few have likely noticed that he's missing nor given the kid phone number to get in contact with. Both of them had hoped that by introducing the likely Storm Flame User to a Sky that the kid would start to settle down and put down some roots. Sadly, it wasn't meant to be, although now the kid is asking questions about Flames and posing questions concerning whether or not mythical creatures and beings could be stories about past Flame Users, wondering if a Flame type could cause such and such to happen. Which meant that the kid was looking for evidence of Flame Users from before Giotto's forming Vongola as a vigilante group, which, well, it kept the runaway occupied at least and who knows, the kid could be onto something.

After all, if humans always had Flames then surely people have been going Active long before the Mafia. Then again, the Mafia wasn't into scholarly questions like that or even into much of the science behind how a Flame could affected by certain gemstone, how they are cut, and how dangerous could this gem be to this Flame type? Reborn reflects as he gives Shamal the coded phrase that will inform the Mist the summary of Don Vongola's reaction to the status of Tsunayoshi.

As Leon crawls to his shoulder, Reborn reflects on the fact that he's actually going to put himself, willingly, between a powerful Famiglia and their goal for no real benefit beyond the fact that his conscious, something he thought beyond salvaging, couldn't stand the thought of some teen he just met suffering any more from the meddling of the Ninth generation of Vongola and the sperm donor of a father. It was foolish, it was idiotic, and so many other words that could translate into stupid with the right dictionary.

Then again, Reborn can feel his time in the living world coming to a close, so, why not go out on a high note?

The Sword that Smiths a Knife: FateStay

I do not own Fate/Stay Night!

The challenge, well, Shirou thought it sounded like one, then again, the one to spoke it could have done so jokingly as Zelretch the Wizard Marshall is a known troll but, well, the reward of 'winning' sounded promising and the elder Magus had even posted an announcement of a contest for said date, location, and time. Not that any of the actual students of the Clock Tower, Rin included, seem to take the whole thing seriously. The murmurs of 'impossible' and 'waste of time' whenever the challenge gets brought up in the halls and rooms of the Mage's Association over the next few days, even his Master, Rin, waves the matter off and assigns him readings.

By the end of the first month, the matter is rarely brought up and he's learnt not to bring it up with his associates among the students. The dead line for the submission is four months, meaning that if Shirou wants to pursue the project, he'd best begin. Which results in him seeking out text books concerning the legends, myths, and stories which include old tales of magical items, Mystic Codes. There's a few of them on display in different departments, all of which are mere shells of what they once were due to time, age, and taking of samples or attempts at recharging them.

Few seem to care about his interest in these pieces of history and the mysteries that surround them. Still, the Sword Incarnate concludes that while he can Analyze how they once worked, the materials needed to pursue the project would cost more then he could afford. Never mind that he knows that his limits when it comes to Magecraft, so it's more then likely the materials, even the more easily acquired likely would be wasted due to the narrow focus of his Origin and Element.

Yet, as the deadline approaches, Shirou finds himself doing some cleaning in the Wizard Marshall's Office at his Master's request, although the young man can't help but think it's suppose to be her chore assignment, not that Shirou minds doing is in her stead...

"Ah, Mr Emiya, I thought I assigned Rin for cleaning duty while I was away." Zelretch remarks and he couldn't help but remark, "You are back early, sir."

Then he mentally kicks himself while the Dead Apostle Magus gets a particular look in both his eyes and upon his face. Shirou will admit that he has trouble reading people, so he's rather unsure of what the expression and emotion glinting in those eyes likely mean. There's a reason why Rin is someone he feels comfortable with as her reactions tend to be far more expressive, voice often reflecting said emotions, and, with him, she's blunt and honest. There's rarely any subtly in their private interactions and he's spent so much time around her, that he can read her enough in public to pick up the clues concerning Rin's actual state of mind.

"Indeed, Mr Emiya, indeed." The Magician remarks while moving to sit at his desk, there's a package under the elder being's right arm. While curious, he knows that his best course of option is to only speak when being spoken to.

"Please, continue, don't let this old man halt you from finishing your Master's chore." Shirou gives a nod before continuing, doing his best to ignore his curiosity in regards to the package and yet, he finds himself asking a few minutes later, "The prize, do you intend to hold to it?"

"Oh? Prize..." Shirou does his best to listen but doesn't stop with his cleaning or turn to focus in on Zelretch as the other muses over various kind of prizes that the Clock Tower offered in the past along with concerning upcoming venues. "Ah, I do seem to recall offering a prize for a challenge, that was... Hmm, let's see it's..." The other rummages through some papers before pulling out the posted announcement. "Will be over in two weeks."

"Yes, that one." He states, after all, he's sure that Rin would like to have what the prize entails and given the few... incidences he's seen the end result of, he can't blame her or anyone, for that matter, for hoping that the prize would be followed through with. That it wasn't some trick of Zelretch's or a twisted prank, which, well, it could be.

This is the Clock Tower and it's a place where words are welded as both a weapon and a shield. It's a place of politics and playing with words, with them often chosen with care. There have been a few times when he had managed to deflect or match another in a battle of wits but it's rarely the ended there as wound pride seems to be something far more important then accepting a single loss in a verbal spar. Often, he regrets not knowing how to keep it from escalating into a matter that causes Rin to get involved.

"Yes." Zelretch states simply. "The moment I announce the winner, the prize is theirs from that moment forth."

"I take it you are lacking inspiration, Mr Emiya?" Zelretch muses. "Or is it that you just need a clear concept to approach the project from in order to forge ahead?"

Shirou pauses as he turn his head slightly to stare at the Magician as the turn of phrase seem to click into place. "That's... something to think about, sir. I shall keep your words in mind. Thank you for your words." It's clear that Zelretch's eyes glint once more while the Wizard Marshall pretty much lets their talk come to an end.

The words do echo into his mind and he's making plans to leave the Clock Tower, he needs to look things up on a computer and which he should be able to do at the nearest library outside of the Mage's Association. There's an inkling that he's capable of fulfilling the challenge but, he's not that confident that he's creative enough in order to do so. Hence, the need to make use of a resource that Magus decry as a waste of their time as no Magus worth their Magic Circuits would use it in pursuit of the Root, only, Shirou isn't pursing the Root, just a simple challenge issued by the in residence Magician.

"Well, congratulations are in order to Mr Emiya for his submission concerning my Challenge that was issued in May." Rin gives him a Look when Zelretch addresses the room. Shirou gets more then a few other eyes upon him, sizing him up while the Wizard Marshall continues with his portion concerning the addressing the school.

"Even though it was the only submission, I have tested it and then had a few of the other department heads give it a go." There's a few sour looks among the instructors and department heads. The Sword Incarnate assumes that they each experienced what the knife he created could do. "An unusual approach given that in the past, most of said Mystic Codes were of a more organic nature."

"So, the prize goes to Shirou Emiya for his Naifu Sukiningu Ningen !" Old Man of the Jewels says with a wide smile. There's a lot of eyes on him, the various instructors and department heads seem to be sizing him up while the students are glaring at him.

Soon enough, the speaking continues with another instructor moves to take center stage, speaking about the upcoming thirty-first and of those scheduling absences for the that day along with the days surrounding it. He knows Rin is impatient for this school announcement thing to be over and done with. It's clear they are only having it at Schweinorg-sama's request and, likely, amusement, but then, that's only natural given the character of the Magician in question.

Once in the privacy of their shared boarding house, which took a while as a lot of the students and members of the faculty of the Clock Tower wished to congratulate him on his win. The premature whitening young man is fairly sure that a few of those are rather backhanded in being given as well, clearly he ruffled more then a few feathers and some are smarting over this 'bruise' to their ego, even though none of them submitted anything and had just dismissed it as some kind of cruel intellectual exercise with an unreachable and likely poisoned prize of immunity from the Wizard Marshall's 'relieving his boredom' pranks or 'lessons' given to random students if not concerning either of his apprentices, who are his Master, aka Rin, and one Luviagelita 'Luvia' Edelfelt, his part time employer.

"Well?" She demands in Japanese once they are in the kitchen as he begins to fill the kettle with water so they can have some tea. "I thought everyone was giving up too easily and after he returned two weeks ago, I asked if the prize was something he was going to hold to and he did seem keen to keep his word." He explains.

"I plan to speak with him about giving you the prize, so that you wouldn't be overly bothered by his antics." Shirou adds and he can feel Rin stare at his back. "You're such an idiot, Shirou. The Clock Tower's rules concerning any of Old Man Zelretch's putting forth a 'challenge' include no transfers concerning the 'prize'. It's to prevent incidents where someone was 'kind' enough to 'share' with a rival or as 'charity' to an underclassman."

"I... did not know there were rules about these kind of challenges." He admits as he waits for the water to fill on the kettle. "Obviously." Huffs Rin.

As he turns off the water, he places the kettle on the oven's element, Rin draws out a, "So... What does it do? And really? Human Skinning Knife is the best name you could think of?"

"Schweinorg-sama mentioned having a clear concept and forging when we spoke that time. It... clicked but I didn't know certain details concerning how to go about it and I then I did some searching online concerning concept ideas. It... came together within three days then it was a matter of figuring out the inserting part of the challenge. It... took some time but I decided to keep it simple, so an image of the animal needed to go into this sliding part of the hilt or a sample of said animal." He admits.

"A knife that cuts into the human, slicing the concept of human from the one being cut, and then inserting the concept of the animal into them." Rin summarizes. "Time limit is?"

"I... did not do a time limit, the image of who the person was gets placed on the picture instead or there's a swapping between the sample of the animal and the person." Feeling sheepish about not realizing how having a time limit should have been the route to take as it means that the transformed individual would not rely upon the knife to regain their human form. "But the knife won't open until the previous person is restored to their original form, so there's no risk of anyone going around and transforming crowds of people or multiple people."

"And knowing the old blood sucker, he's likely already made some 'improvements'." Rin groans as he ducks his head as he rubs the back of his head. "Maybe? But, well, don't you have some kind of protection because of me? I mean, your my Master so, in a round about way, you shouldn't be his first choice of target?"

"This is Zelretch of the Jewels we're talking about." His teacher in Magecraft states and he says, "Then I'll just need to create something for you to make you immune to it's effects."

Rin clearly doesn't think he can do that, yet, well, why couldn't he create a countering item to something he made? Even if creating armor was out of the question, perhaps a dirk or tiny sword that could be worn as jewelry would work? Or maybe another knife that is meant to merge with her body? I could also see if it'll help her magic resistance concerning spells?

It's something to think about and a new area to look into, after all, he knows he's capable of duplicating any weapon he sees, hence why Faker was the title Gilgamesh flung at him as though it were an insult, yet, well, he's capable of recalling how many of those were created, the creation process those blacksmiths used, and the list of materials plus the how they resonate with the concepts they were being enchanted to carry. This thought... it kind of causes a thrill of excitement while Rin is talking at him, which isn't new when he ends up attracting attention at the Clock Tower, so he is pretty sure that he could parrot it back, although the order of the rant can change along with word choice.

So, Shirou's mind is else where as he considers this new line of thought while not being that sure if a certain Counter Guardian hadn't done the same but, well, he feels rather certain that EMIYA never tried his hand at creating his own weapons beyond Altering copies from their Reality Marble using Projection for his purposes. He's a Sword Incarnate, but that might actually mean that he's far more suited at creating Mystic Codes in the form of weapons. Old memories about the Fire rise up and he wonders at the possibilities, after all, there had been an Anime that mentioned a sword that could resurrect the dead...

Music Fitting the Type: DxD

I don't own High School DxD or minor element from both Cybersix and Ranma 1/2!

The water is cold, freezing and then the bucket hits the top of his head hard. The five year old's ears are ringing as his vision is fuzzy, out of focus. A man sporting black hair plus dark blond bangs comes into focus, the voice sounds off and he can't help but frown before following the gaze of said man, which falls onto a older boy sporting white yet dark grey hair plus blue eyes. It's the sunlight that causes the kid's hair to be so white and it seems that the kid looks kind of pale plus looks rather annoyed but is silent while the man continues to talk, he assumes the man is talking but, well, it's like the man is, well, singing only it's not like he's singing a song.

As he turns his head, even though his head still pounds and the 'singing' is so close, he can still make out the voices around him. Issei cocks his head slightly and fights the pounding of his head to listen into a group of kids that's some feet away, while their voices are soft, he can hear them as they talk about a plan concerning smuggling home a stray pup to Tamaki's place and hiding the pup in Tamik's room. Focusing some more on the group of five, he jolts a bit upon getting touched by the man, his eyes focusing on man and the stranger, again, lets loose a song note.

"I... don't... ah, get that?" The five year old admits while noting the dark hazel eyes peering down at him. Then there's a touch of a song but there's words can be heard, even if he doesn't understand them, turning he finds himself getting a minor glare from the white haired kid with clear annoyance in those gray blue eyes.

Then the man sings slowly at him, causing him to return to looking up at the man before looking away from the face. Issei still doesn't understand what the song means nor does he get why the man is singing instead of, you know, talking. There's a long pause and, well, he looking back at the man, who's still got a hand on his left shoulder, lips pressed together as he wonders if he shouldn't be doing his best to get away, after all, he's pretty sure he can scream to get the attention of the other adults so he can get away, after all, the man's got to be crazy, right? Singing instead of talking, right? Right!

"He's just asking if your ok." The kid speaks in accented Japanese with undertone of music that doesn't sound the same as the man now that he's really listening. Giving the kid a bewildering look, like, how can the kid not Know?

"He's singing! You're kind of... humming? Maybe? While speaking words!" Issei snaps at the kid. "What's upon with that?"

The kid blinks at him, mouth slightly opens before snapping closed. The gray blue eyes flicker between the man and then at him. The man sings and the kid talks again, only it's not in accented Japanese but still got that undertone of low tune, humming is likely the best word for it, he guesses.

He glances between the two while the pair seem to have a discussion, only, how?! How can the kid understand the man? Is it because the kid kind of doing the same? Issei is just so confused, after all, the more he listens to the pair, the more he kind of picks up the differences between their respective tunes.

The sudden snapping of fingers snaps him out of his mental state and feels the hand withdrawing, the man is walking off towards the nearest drinking fountain. Hearing a grunt, he glances towards the older kid and gives him a questioning look, which the other boy notices then decides to ignore. Pouting as he straightening his cloths, he can't help but think, Jerk.

As he moves to stand, the man is back and with a mug that sports waving air. "Where'd he get the mug?" He wonders out loud as the man approaches, then, yelps as warm water is dumped onto his head and his vision swims while he suddenly feels heavy on his feet.

"What gives?! What did I do to you?!" He cries out and the man chuckles, yes, chuckles. "Calm down kid, it's nothing personal, just... correcting the issue."

"Well, don't, cause I don't even know you! And people shouldn't be going around dumping water on others." Issei snaps as he does his best to move his bangs from his face.

"Seems that the problem got fixed." Says the man and he grunts, kind of guessing so. "Guess... I mean, you aren't singing any more or him humming." He shoots a look towards the older kid, who snorts while looking wholly unimpressed with him.

"Just what kind of song was I singing?" The man inquires and he shrugs while replying, "Kind of... light, airy, and... lonely sad? It didn't have words, just music."

"Lonely sad?" The man muses. "They just... went together? Linked? Don't know if there's a word that really fits." The five year old admits with a frown.

"And what about V... him? What kind of impression did you get from his... humming?" The man inquires and Issei glances again toward the older boy, face scrounged up while ignoring the minor look of interest in the eyes while the face is clear in showing disdain over this whole conversation.

"Heavy, hollow, sad, and pleading, there's pleading." He answers, the last was rather bone chilling a sound as it was a high pitch knell at the points. The older boy sporting white hair snaps something before turning and stalking off after recovering.

He watches the other stomp off and is just confused as to what the other could be pleading for. Feeling a hand ruffle his hair, he turns to find the man smiling every so tenderly. "My apologies for dumping water on you twice." With that, the man fast walks after the other boy, leaving Issei wondering just what happened, but then shrugs it off, after all, he did get his apology about the water, so, he should forgive the man for it as it's not like any harm had been done to him, well, beyond getting hit by the bucket, which knocked him down.

It's hard for him to not stare in confusion at the white haired boy who's glaring at a man, the ten year old isn't sure as to why but, well, the man sporting dirty blond bangs looks rather sheepish. Yea, he kind of beat up a trio of hollow speaking people, plus none of the three seem to speak the same language either, yet it was clear that the trio wanted something from him and he didn't pay any attention to the, maybe teenager, now he's gotten a better look at the white haired boy upon finishing to tie the trio up, when the other arrived, not joining the fight so, he ignored him. The man only arrived after he finally knocked the final trio out.

The music coming from the man is easy on his ears compared to those other... 'singers' that he typically encountered about Kuoh Town and then there's the fact that the teen's is more echo like then hollow like his attackers. Issei tilts his head to the side while the man studies him for a second before opening his mouth and music rings out, he does his best to keep from reacting but, well, something must give him away and the man runs a hand through his own hair, looking rather defeated. Then warm water hits him and he yelps at the sudden appearance of it, it takes him second to glare at the teen.

"What the heck?!" He cries out before noticing the lack of... bucket or hose. "Where...? Huh?" Then his eyes light up as he realize that the teen must be like the hollow speakers and discord 'singers', thus sporting a power or a few.

"So... Ah, how come you aren't with them?" He asks the teen, glancing towards the nearest tied up hollow speaker. He's kind of worried if he's about to get into another fight. "I mean, you did just blast me with water..." He adds after a bit of silence with a few glances towards the clearly pounding man, who pulls out a cell phone and might be talking to someone.

"I'm not canon fodder." The teen states simply. He waits for more but, well, yea, that's all the white haired teen shares.

"I guess so? You do sound different then these three." Issei admits and the teen seems to stiffen while arms move from their position of the jean's pockets to cross before the chest.

"..." He's not sure if he should continue on, after all, it's not like anyone believed him back when he was younger about the whole thing. So, the ten year old decides to keep his mouth shut and glance at each of the three tied up people, two men and a woman.

He takes a moment to study the woman, a familiar something tries to draw his gaze to her chest, so he pretty much look elsewhere. Taking a moment to study the man, who is now rubbing his temples with the cell gone, he finds himself frowning at the state of his cloths. The two men had been the ones get in close to attack him while the woman had been the one to fling mud and stone into combat, not caring if she hits either of the men, so he recalled some sage game advice that says 'Geek the Mage first', which he did, she had been far weaker of the two as well, so it had been easy.

Neither of the men tried very hard to stop him either, which likely had everything to do with her 'friendly' fire. The speedy one was the next to fall, it seems while quick and agile, the other lacked stamina and hadn't expect him to be equally as strong as he had been fast and agile. The long and thin sword had been hard to track in the air while the dagger in the off hand meant he couldn't just focus on the one hand of his fellow brunet.

The third was the tank of the group and used a two handed mace. While the two men did seem to know how to work together, they weren't use to facing a single target together, the only real way he did manage to get speedy out of combat had been having the two flank him on opposite sides before leaping out of the way as the mace user charged forward, swing the weapon. They'd wise up for a bit but, well, he'd only allow them close when they were trying to flank him, which they knew they shouldn't do yet, it they did seem to be in the gambling mood while he's sure to leap in different directions instead of in the same one each time.

So yea, Issei won by managing to land the knock out punch but his cloths... He's also a bit sore and he's pretty sure he's going to be crashing soon from exhaustion as there's no reason for the adrenaline to be continually fed into his system. Moving towards the nearest wall, he finds it hard to focus and, well, as he leans to steady him, he jerks a bit at someone touching him. Glancing, Issei finds the teen, who sports gray blue eyes, looking a touch worried.

x | _ = o - o = _ | x

Calm down, he's fine. It was just exhaustion. Albion informs him as the brunet kid faints.

"Wasn't worried." He snaps at the ancient Dragon as he lifts the boy up more, moving it so that the head is on his left shoulder before walking back to Azazel. He ignores the relief as he waits for Azazel to pull himself out of his guilt over the incident that happened almost six years ago.

"Kid's out." Vali states in a bland tone after a few seconds, which causes the Governor to jerk. Then glances at the canon fodder Devils of some minor Pureblood Devil before giving the older supernatural being a questioning raised eyebrow.

"Leave them." Azazel states. "Kuoh Town isn't under my authority thus it isn't my responsibility to deal with these trespassers."

"Not the first time he's fought Devils." He notes calmly as he watches as Azazel begins to set up a very secure ward meant to cover their use of magic concerning arrival and departing. Won't be the last time. Is left unsaid but implied.

"Well, we knew when he was transformed, he doesn't hear language from me." Comments Azazel. "I wonder..."

He snorts, it's clear where the old man's thoughts were headed and he's a touch curious as to the thought as well, after all, Reincarnated Devils weren't born Devils, majority of them were originally humans. "No training." He notes once they were safe in Azazel's lab, which lowers his already low opinion of the trio of Reincarnated Devils, for all that the kid's reflects and physical limits were in the reaches of inhuman, he was just a child and one who's never taken any classes in self-defense.

"The Knight likely stopped pushing himself to improve his rapier skills." Albion pipes in while he lays the kid, kind of worryingly light, onto the table that Azazel gestured to him. It's clear that the Governor is going to be a through examination of the kid. "The Rook just figured he didn't need to learn how to fight with that mace either." He points out.

There's a slight bemuse look on the now science mode Azazel's face and he feels defensive, "Kid's got some decent instincts and likely picked up a few things but he hasn't gone out of his way to learn how to actually defend himself." Then again, it's likely that the local Owner would be keeping track of who's learning what and where.

Red hazel eyes glint in amusement but doesn't point out the obvious flaw of doing that. Which means that the kid had a functioning brain to realize that at his age. Or played to many video games. Remarks his partner.

Finding a spot out of the way, Vali watches as the examine begins.

Yes, he choked, how could he not? He's pretty sure Albion is a touch dumbfounded at hearing what Sacred Gear the kid, one Issei Hyoudou was born with. "He's my destine rival? Him?"

Yip, it's hard for him to see it, honestly given a few things. One of which is how underweight Issei is due to nature of the water based transformation magic, it turns out that that cold base form as an alien chemical requirement that a human body doesn't create or need, then again, the form seems to be a type of Artificial Human. Which means that what magic the kid natural possesses is working to transmute resources within the body into that chemical upon the onset of the transformation and then doing it in reverse to get the chemical out of the body as it's not healthy for a normal human to have in their bodies. Which means that the kid needs to eat more then he actually has been while in his birth form, which he hasn't or it might be more to do with his parents not noticing how underweight the kid is. It's hard to say as his parents likely weren't in the know concerning the supernatural world existing side by side so they don't have any supernatural protection or means to notice magic interfering with their lives.

Then there's just the fact that the kid is growing up in a placed owned by Devils and thus, it gets visits from Devils. Issei ran into a prankster who thought it a hoot to use a minor compulsion spell causing people listening to develop a compulsion or hyper focus on something. Which means that the transformation magic had been helping the kid to develop a resistance to compulsion magic, then there's actually a good chance that he is on his way to becoming immune to similar spells at some point in the future. It had still there but had been rather weak along with not as tangled up in the kid's mind as it should be which allowed Azazel to easily break it without any mental back lash.

Another issue of growing up there is the subtle wards that Issei likely kept triggering each time he transformed, although, that was just plain amusing but it's likely a reason why the Owner has been allowing Peerages of other Devils to patrol the area along with their own. Must be vexing. Vali muses with a smirk. To not catch the Magician or Sacred Gear user who's always appearing and disappearing without a care.

Which also lead to more active measure to 'flush' out the 'trespasser' as well then just patrolling Devils but also employing magical means to entrap the offender. It's kind of bewildering the Owner hadn't started investigating the local kids but then, such advance magic does tend to take years to work up to and it's likely that there had been a simple check over those kid possessing Sacred Gears to see if any of them activated them before being dismissed from speculation. It's a question of whether a Devil's pride is the reason why Issei still hasn't been captured or if there's something more at work to disguise the kid's identity.

If not for the simple fact that the kid hosts Ddraig's Sacred Gear, Vali would have been more then happy to take the kid under his wing, training him to be a future sparring partner and subordinate. It would be very amusing to have someone the Devils are driving themselves crazy trying to find to be found to be his student/minion/sparring partner only to learn that they can't touch him simply because he's under the banner of the current White Dragon Emperor. How is this fair? He wonders to himself.

"I finally found him and he's a brat. A snort nose brat." He comments out loud, he's not whining, he's does not whine.

"Yes, I have to admit, this is the first I've heard of the current Dragon Emperors meeting under the age of ten." Azazel remarks and Albion hums in agreement. He is so tempted to say that it hadn't counted or that this shouldn't count, but knows it doesn't change the fact that yes they had and it's because of that what the then brat had said that had caused changes between Azazel and himself, for the Governor did end up spending a lot more time with him after that little encounter and did his best to be involved more in Vali's interests, training, and studies.

Both of them healed something in them as they began to grow closer, Azazel wasn't just his care taker or just someone giving him a roof over his head, cloths on his back, and food in his belly. He became a teacher and friend, then earned the title of dad. More then a few Fallen Angels that are members of the Grigori were jealous of the relationship between them and they weren't as subtle as they think they were when it comes to expressing it, then again, there's a reason why Azazel has stopped dating or even sleeping around, there have been more then a few cases of dead humans because they were jealous of the attention Azazel gave those people, not all of them had been women surprisingly enough, which lead to him secreting himself away in his lab more and more, trying to distract himself from, well, a lot of things. There have been a few 'accidents' but nothing he couldn't handle, even if he had been requested to leave the so called 'innocent' offenders alive and able to recover from similar 'accidents'.

So yea, if not for that minor meeting with the maybe four year old, five year old at most, Issei, they wouldn't have the same father-son relationship they have today. Still though... "Music?" He inquires.

"I actually surprised myself by summoning a blood sample from outside our universe and used it as an ingredient of my version of instant powder." The old man admits. "The spell identified it as close to human, I thought it meant that it got damaged during the summoning."

Oh yes, it had been him who sent that bucket flying, hadn't it? "It works as it should on Fallen and Devils, both kinds." The old man admits and given his participation in a few of those instances, yea, it does.

"Worked fine on me, too." He admits and Azazel gives him a slight look. "It was that thing with the cruise ship, you know, with the huge storm getting called up by the end... Did a shark with a timed release of ten hours." Meaning that if he didn't transform before ten hours were up, a spell would ensure that the water he's in or hit with next would heat up enough to cause him to transform back.

"So, it could be the blood I included or it might be because he's human." Muses Azazel. He's more then willing to put money on a bit of both. "Might need to round up some human volunteers."

"Stray Magicians? Or actual volunteers from among the Grigori's Sacred Gear holders?" The teen asks curious. "Well, the former first then the latter."

Then he glances back the brunet, who's got something a kin to an IV only with diluted potion being feed into the blood stream then the usual formula. Issei is still sleeping, there had been a few minutes where it looked like he'd wake but, well, it was pretty clear the kid was just too exhausted to wake himself up, so went on sleeping, not even stirring when they put in the needle to feed the potion into him. Azazel Conjured up a pillow and sheets, a bit of magic and the kid is resting more comfortably and more restful as well. And that's another reason for why he rather not dwell on the fact that the kid is his rival, because the kid looks so pitiable right now and it's clear Issei needs help, the sooner the better.

Still... This could be entertaining, if you think of it from a different perspective. His partner informs him. "How so?"

Think of the heart attack Ddairg will have once he wakes and realizes who he owes his current partner's life to and has been mentoring him. Albion muses and he stills as he considers that. "How about taking it a step further? Can you imagine the reactions of the supernatural world would have if the current Dragon Emperors have a truce?" He proposes in turn after a bit of thinking.

Albion laughter says volumes of how entertaining his idea was to the ancient Dragon, which causes him to smirk. "I think it's best that Issei and I think about signing a truce agreement to cease hostilities for either a certain amount of time or for this current generation." He informs the old man and Azazel snorts before thinking on it for a bit and then he's chuckling at the kind of chaos that would cause.

x | _ = o - o = _ | x

Issei isn't sure how it was that Ray, he's sure that's her name or it's close to it, hasn't been routed out of Kuoh Academy by one of the Peerage members of the two 'Owners' of Kuoh Town but he knows that they really shouldn't be allowing her to speak with him for as long as they were. Oh, he knows why the Fallen Angel didn't recognize him, he's talented when it comes to self Transformation given his exposure to that water based transformation magic that he's now in complete control of. Her not making the connection between him and his alias was kind of simple as he generally has a different appearance when he's among the Grigori, plus he answers to the name Rave. The most notable features of his alternate looks as Rave is dark purple eyes with bright, blond hair, which generally gets him written off as half Fallen, or half Devil given his association to Vali, due to the purple eyes.

As for why the two 'Owners' should interfere, it's because they should have been informed that he was born with a Sacred Gear. He's not sure what kind beyond it being a Dragon, he's pretty sure it's a Dragon simply because some of the comments and tips Albion and Vali offer up during their lessons or when they're just enjoying the odd quiet moment. It's kind of off putting that both Uncle and Vali plus Albion know what Sacred Gear he has but figures it's a kind of long term prank that he won't get until it's active.

Still, Gremory should be trying to put a stop to this. The brunet muses to himself as he does his best to evade whatever topic Ray is trying to get to. Even coming across as more dense then he does or naturally is at times, it's rarer now but he still has his moments it seems.

There's a bit of a crowd now and a quick scan shows that Rais' Knight and Sona's Knight watching but not looking like they are going to interfere. Which mentally causes him to frown but kind of lets up on the evading at this point. Which has Ray giving him a fake name, confessing to having a crush on him, and even going so far as to asking him on a date for this coming Sunday, which he declines as polite as he can, countering that he's busy and that it's kind of sudden for him to changes his plans. He's sure to admit he's not sure he feels the same way as this is the first time he's met her.

Oh, she does try to pull some emotional blackmail to get her way concerning this Sunday but, well, he's got something with Uncle happening that day and so he stands firm. Yea, a few girls among the crowd murmur darkly about his refusal while a pair of boy are bemourning the fact that such a beauty fell for such a creep. Yea, elements of the crowd are swaying to her side but there's a few mature individuals that sound like they get where he's coming from and seems to agree that he's in the right to decline the offer for this date, particularly given he does have something scheduled.

It's clear Ray isn't pleased with how things are going but, then, she catches sight of Yuuto and Tomeo. It takes the wind out of Ray's sails and she does one last plea before 'fleeing' from him with 'tears' in her eyes, heading straight out of the gate of their school. He stares kind of dumbly after her, before shaking his head and running a hand through his hair. Yea, he's making a note of how the two 'Owners' reacted and instead of waiting until Sunday to mention this, he'll phone Uncle tonight as he notes the slight hostility among the crowd of teens milling around.

It's not long before he's heading home with more then a few girls sending dark looks his way for 'upsetting' Ray. Issei does wonder if he's been used as bait to learn why Ray is here and isn't impressed as the 'rightful' 'Owners' of Kuoh Town, the pair should have the balls to confront Ray as Ray is the trespasser and thus they are 'owed' a reason for her visit in their supposed territory. Then again, it's a continuation of failings of the Heiresses of the two Pillar Houses, House Gremory and House Sitri, to monitor the greater going ons of Kuoh Town and set up wards to deter uninvited pests nesting in Kuoh Town, yes, the two get around to finding the more violent Stray Devils that arrive but they don't seem aware of the more subtle Strays Devils and others that seem to be finding things to their liking.

Or do they think that because of their Houses and who their older siblings are that nobody would sneak in to settle in their territory? Or sneak spies into the place? He wonders. "Do they... Have they been..." Checking the area Wards of Kuoh Town? Maintaining them?

There's a lot for him to think about. Then again, Issei has done his best to avoid thinking about it, after all, it wasn't his problem and he's been able to continue on with his life as usual since Vali decided to mentor him. He's a member of the Grigori and the only student of Lucifer Vali, the current White Dragon Emperor, and he's not looking to change to a different Faction let alone become a Reincarnated Devil. His life is pretty much his own to live as he sees fit as a member of the Grigori then if he'd be recruited into a Devil's Peerage as a Reincarnated Devil and the supposed honor of serving a King, who'd most likely be a Pureblood Devil or if he'd dedicate himself to the Church, its teachings, and figuring out the mine field that is their politics.

With Azazel transformed as an actual crow and is following him as he arrives for said 'date' with Raynare, that's her actual name it seems. He takes the offered Devil Contract and shoves it into his pants pocket. In coming into contact with the enchanted stone, it'll be destroyed, it's why he even has it, really, to destroy any of those contracts that end up in his possession. He's been carrying one since school begun as he's paranoid about the Devils offering them at school or stuffing them into people's belongings.

He's got a special app on his cell phone to be used when Raynare finally gets around to displaying why she wanted this 'date'. Which is around evening and she 'lures' him away from the busy streets. Then she does her villain bit and transformation, but he manages to ask her for one simple request.

"Which is?" Raynare asks, clearly confident and feeling like she's in total control of the situation. He does his best to not roll his eyes as he requests, "Can I take your picture with my cell?"

"Sure, go right ahead, it's not like I won't destroy it once I'm through killing you though." Remarks his 'date' of the afternoon. She even does a pose as he focuses the cell on her.

The cell flashes and Raynare is ensnared in the spell that the app carried, it's gone now that it's been used. He shifts into his Rave alias while his Uncle lands on the ground, triggering the reversal of the transformation. He's a touch busy altering his cloth as well as taking out a earring stud to put in his right eyebrow, the hole is easy for him to create for it. Once in, his Uncle is done setting up a privacy Ward and has already did a bit of mental editing with Raynare, he's not sure in what way, only that she won't wonder where Issei vanished off to, then again, with the Governor General before her, it's unlikely the grunt will think to demand answers or even put forth questions of any kind.

Holding his cell phone up, he begins recording this Q&A, a live feed of it directed for certain members of the Grigori to watch. He notices Uncle adjusting a blue tooth device in his ear, looking like a hearing aid or ear plug. "Can you hear me?" Uncle asks softly as Raynare begin to recover from the out of it state. "Let us proceed then." And now Raynare stiffens just as the oldest standing leader of one of the Biblical Faction focuses on her, paling some more at the sight of Azazel in his Governor General mode after eyes flickering his way.

He does his best to keep his expression neutral as the questioning begins, he's pretty sure that Raynare will mostly live after this, after all, grunts aren't well known for their disobeying their chain of command, which means that someone higher up the rank told her to target him. There's likely going to be some time imprisoned some place or time spent in the form of some creature, but it's unlikely she'll be killed, even though she does try to dance around the questions but it doesn't last for long and it wasn't doing her any favors, which likely means she'll find herself along with any others who might be around in Kuoh Town spending time as animals of some kind, the longer it takes, the more humiliating the form, like ensuring if they become chickens they'll be egg layers for the duration of being such or cows and producing milk on a regular basis.

It's kind of a surprise to learn that it's Kokabiel who approached Raynare's group directly and then they also get some info about the destination of the former Holy Maiden of the Church, which is kind of a bonus and yet, there's the bit about them getting a Sacred Gear extractor to remove Twilight Healing from Argento Asia before handing her body off to a Devil. Given there's only one Devil who enjoys and is forever interested in reincarnating former members of the fairer sex of the Church... The sad part is that they couldn't kill said Pureblood Devil but, well, maybe there's still some measure of punishment that can be done, after all, Uncle can be devious and it won't kill the younger brother at all, just make his life interesting for a time.

Once done with Raynare, the other falls fast asleep and Azazel speaks with those watching about something. In the end, Raynare is levitated and then follows them as they head for the abandoned church to speak with the rest of the group. It's clear that Uncle has been over ruled about administering suitable punishment on Raynare, for the time being at least. Then the Fallen at the location are torn between fleeing and pleading while the former Church executioners look rather baffled at why the Fallen are reacting like that.

He can't really follow what's being said, it's all music to his ears. Although when the former executioners speak, there's this very faint sound of wind chimes, which is interesting as he's never hear any instruments with the two types of Devils, half human children that call Grigori home, and Fallen Angels. Then again, he hasn't met an Angel as of yet and it takes him a bit to recall about a Church practice which allows humans to speak and understand any human spoken language. Which might explain how odd sounding their Japanese sounds, it's clear that they haven't spent much time among the local population, speaking with them enough to subconsciously learn the language to the point that they won't need to rely on the ritual to forever translate Japanese into whatever their native language was or for it to translate their words into Japanese.

Issei watches the body language of the Fallen involved, noting those who shoot him dark looks on the sly, which isn't that surprising, jealousy seems to be a common trait among the Fallen as is spite. It's hardy a surprise that Uncle began to feel isolated among the Grigori's Fallen Angel population, not when so many of the grunts seem so content to remain childish and short sighted in their quest of impressing the higher ranked members of the Grigori's Fallen Angel leadership. The sad fact is, those who had could mature and get over themselves have long since done so, achieving higher ranks, like centuries ago.

There's a reason why there's two separate command structures within the Grigori, one for Fallen and another for Sacred Gear holders. Typically, those members sporting half human heritage are slotted into the Sacred Gear holders. As for the former Church executioners, well, given they also 'fell' from the grace of Heaven, they seem to default to the Fallen command structure, but then they do tend to be a blood thirsty lot, it's likely why they fled from their fellows as they got to the point that their effectiveness wasn't worth how they began loose themselves to the need to see blood, any blood really, is spill by their respective weapons. Which suit many Fallen indeed as there's always a faction within the Grigori pushing for the war to heat up again, although for different reasons.

Personally, he doesn't like Pureblood Devils, their very music grind on his ears and the emotions invoked, that was before he learnt more about the Peerage system and the farce that is the Ranking Games. He hates those that don't think of asking a person if they would like to be reincarnated as a Devil after explaining what that even means for them once the deed is done or engineer situations where they could 'gain' the loyalty of the human, be it by them dying and being brought back or arranging their fall from grace among their peers and social circles. Issei honestly would love to see the destruction of the Reincarnation aspect of the Peerage system, after all, there is such a thing as non-Pillar Pureblood Devils, so why are the Pillar Pureblood Devils so keen on finding a human when they have plenty of these so called common Devils who would jump at the chance to change their station in life, no matter the level of danger or what duties are expected of them.

Then again, there's plenty of examples of that kind of thinking among humans. He mentally admits as he recalls how interested the USA is over matters of Third World countries, spending millions of their own money improving the life of those living there when they still have homeless people among their cities and in need of medicine or basic shelter, never mind food. And Reincarnated Devils are bewildered by their treatment by the general 'common' Devil population.

With a soft sigh, he takes note that yea, it looks like they are nearly done here.

Ending it here!

(Not sure if I'll continue this)

Insert Villain Conditioning Here Ch 1: M

I don't own My Hero Academia!

It was just suppose to be a Game! Thinks one thirteen year old Midoriya Izuku as he stares at his reflection, at the name hovering over his head. Gentleman Draven Ose, it isn't the name he put down as his Avatar, then again, he's Avatar's race or looks weren't want he picked out for himself either.

Skin is dark gray with leopard spots of dark brown with hints of light darker gray can be noted on his forehead plus the edge of his eyes and casting his eyes down a bit, Izuku notices upon his neck. Looking down, he's got them on his currently bare arms and shoulders. His Avatar's eyes are a dark purple that sport a gemstone shine to them and are slit like some predators with black sclera. Those eyes send shivers down his spine while he feels his heart race up.

It takes a while before he finds himself able to continue examining his hair, which is off white and noting the pointed ears on either side of his head. Opening his mouth, his teeth are all pointed and sharp looking and his tongue sports a tiny fork at the tip of it but that's it. His teeth are white and his tongue is its normal red. Sticking his tongue out, he curls it and it responses, pulling his tongue back in and closing his mouth, he notices his lips are now black and thin.

Then there's the age of the Avatar, which seems to be early to mid twenties in age. It was far too aged up then is allowed for Players, which is aging up by five years or down by the same. It's clear that some kind of glitch happened to cause him to end up as he is.

He's dimly aware that he should be reacting far more strongly then he is, but he's just emotionally numb. Logically, he should be suffering a panic attack, this is far beyond what he's able to handle.

So it's clear that it's something going on with his helmet's interface and it's doing something to his brain chemistry.

Finally leaving the bathroom, he walks around the room and looking for clues before pausing to access his Menu and smiles bitterly at the lack of Log Out or a Feedback option. Then he brings up his Character Menu and the first page shows his Avatar in all his 'glory' which also includes what he's wearing, which is a simple tunic and cotton pants. Rotating it, Izuku notices the placement of the leopard spots on the body along with how long his hair is.

There's a Bio Tab that he ignores, he'll read it later, and then goes to his Basic Stats Tab. He's Level is 5 and he's stats are already done, there's no spare points to spend. His race is the NPC only one, a Devil and the Noble House he is belongs to is House Ose, which is listed among the Seventy-two Pillars of the Underworld and the House Noble Ranking is that of President. His personal Title is Gentleman and it's the lowest Noble Title that a Devil born among the Noble Houses can possess.

And yes, he can advance within House Ose's own ranks, trying for the coveted Title of President of House Ose. From what he recalls upon researching the game, the set up of the Devils of the game are based off of some old religious book called Ars Goetia and Devils aren't the only Faction within the game. A lot of things were borrowed from old books and mythology concepts, examples of which range from Asian Oni and European Goblins to Greek Minotaurs and Indian Rakshasa.

A chime rings out and his Character Menu closes as he was reading his Magic and Skills Tabs. He's suddenly teleporting away from the room and, as his vision clears, Draven's head is pounding and rubbing his forehead. There's a number of voice groaning and cursing. He... feels like he's forgetting something, but, well, for now, it's best he focus on the meeting. A glance around shows there's at least eight others to be summoned for this meeting, an Oni, Hobgoblin, Orc, Minotaur, Rakshasa, Werewolf, Tengu, and Ogre.

He doesn't see the point in learning their names as of yet as he focuses on Ultimate Doom with a crimson Crown. The almost skeleton looking Elf's smile is very wide, so very wide and it's clear the Elf is rather gleefully studying each of them. "Well, nine Quirkless Players, more then I thought I'd get." Remarks the Elf and something about the word 'Quirkless' makes him want to grind his teeth as he gives the Elf a glare.

"Fuck off!" Snaps the Werewolf with a snarl and there's growling. The Elf chuckles in delight at the reaction that remarked caused.

"Well, the game's begun and I now have you nine as my Boss Monsters." Continues the Elf and he's a touch confused by what the Elf is talking about. The insane Elf's eyes land on him and he does his best to keep a neutral expression along with a polite pose as he files this away, it could be of use later.

"Some more impressive then others." Comments the Elf after a few seconds and glancing away, he can feel a few stare at him, likely already not liking that statement or what it implies. He's a member of House Ose, of course he knows how to keep a mask of neutral interest and how to ignore the urge to fret needlessly. He knows his place in his House and this promises to be a way for him to advance his standing within his House, perhaps even earn him a chance for marriage if he can prove he can provide for said wife and any child they might be able to conceive in such a union, he's young by his Race's standards but it matters not if he manages to prove himself in this regard.

"Now then, your Quest Log will give you the details you need for your respective tasks and be sure to terrorize any Players you happen to encounter, Adventurers or Laborers both." The Elf says and a book forms before him, a simple tab with his index finger sees the book fading while he gets a mental note that it has been added to his Character Menu. "Now, off you go kill, maim or torture and be sure to recruit!"

With that, Draven finds himself teleported back to his rooms at his Great Grandparents' estate. "At least he's not going to micro manage my course of action." He remarks out loud in the privacy of his empty room.

It's not long for him to change out of his current attire and into more formal cloths, he's sure to pack up every personal belong into his Dimensional Pocket. He's in possession of one hundred gold, a four hundred silver, and eight hundred copper. He's confident that he'll be able to recruit Devils from the labor force, there should be plenty who'd join his venture for a silver a month or less. The money should also allow him to purchase armor for them along with supplies.

It's now a question of where does he want to start with this venture, after all, while he's likely higher in levels of power to the current wave of Heroes and their Supports, it shouldn't take them long for their power to grow.

! = - ^ o ^ - = !

"Temper, temper, little Hero." Draven remarks with a smirk which only serves to cause the already fire based caster to snarls and try to pull away from the wall that he's chained to. "Fuck you pansy ass kitty cat!"

Attempts are casting quick spells cause the shackles about the wrist to glow, interrupting the casting of spells. "So this is your Dungeon." Draven mentally sighs as he turns to regard Ultimate Doom, who struts through the door to regard the current prisoner.

"If I had known you were interested in a tour of my abode and would be honored to ensure you receive a proper look." He informs the insane Elf in a polite and respectable tone. "Who the fuck is this skeleton nut job?"

"He's got quite the mouth on him." Remarks Ultimate Doom, it's clear that the Hero's foul and curse language just amuses the other as the Elf walks lazily to stand before the Hero. "I'll blast your skull to bits before shoving that fucking Devil's intestines down his shitty throat!"

He's so tempted to roll his eyes but instead he casts a paralyze spell at the prisoner, noting how the other is beginning to tense his legs. "Ruin my fun why don't you?" The Elf says in a sulking tone.

"Forgive me but he was getting ready to try something stupid in regards to yourself and thought it prudent to prevent from happening." He explains politely and the Elf takes a moment to study the prisoner before grinning in pleasure. "And this is why your my favorite Boss Monster, always eager to protect your Master."

I rather not have you throwing a temper tantrum at my base of operations. I rather not rebuild them. Draven is tempted to say but instead remarks, "Is there anything you wish for me to do in concerns of this prisoner, sir?"

"Hmm...? Oh, perhaps, why, are you offering him to me?" Inquires the insane Elf possessing insane amount of power.

"If you wish to claim him, then please tell me so that I can ensure he is properly packaged with his belongs." He had this one captured simply to see how long it would take for a Hero to die of starvation, he could always capture another, there are plenty of foul tempered Heroes and Supports to pick from after all. The Elf grins widely and glances towards the prisoner, speaking to the Hero, "Hear that? I can claim you as a private play thing right now."

The Elf reaches out with his left hand while the right index taps his chin. The prisoner's head moves right and then left before the insane Elf steps to the side just a second before the paralyze spell wears off. A leg kicks forward and then the prisoner turns and tries to kick the Elf once more, it does hit as Ultimate Doom is already a few steps to the side while the Hero hurls out a limited vocabulary of curses, generally repeating the same ones in an unimaginative way.

"Well, this is boring, why don't we head for the kitchen? I'm sure you have something good to drink, you are a member of a Pillar House after all." Remarks the Elf, glancing at him with a smirk.

"Is there a particular favorite you wish to sample?" He inquires as he falls into step behind the Elf, the feeling of the heated glare at his back seems... nauseatingly familiar. It's hardly the first time the feel wells up within him and there's also a smug feeling of turn about and feeling guilty.

It fades once the door of the cell is closed, locked, and they walk for the stairs. Listening politely as the insane Elf doesn't really answer his inquiry but begins chatting about how pleased he is with how this game is going and chatting about the exploits of the other eight 'Bosses'. Clearly happy with how much of a brute so and so had been at this settlement, it's always been clear that the Elf has a preference for violence, finding it anything they did as amusing and very self satisfied, like he personally had a hand in helping them achieve such course of action or planning.

It's rather unsettling and it makes him feel uneasy, along with a sense of something important that's just out of his reach, like it this a critical detail that will make everything fall into place. It'll be a year since I started working for him. Draven mentally notes in a matter of fact way.

! = - ^ o ^ - = !

"You ever fucked a tiger before? Or is it you're the one who prefers to take it up the ass?" He ignores the prisoner, who's still very much alive even though it's been a month since Ultimate Doom's visit and after not receiving any drinks for the pass six days. Draven casually uses a paralyze spell and regards the Healer he brought.

Wordlessly, the Healer approaches with a certain glint in their eye and begins to examine the Hero. Then moves on to examine the space about the Hero. A questioning look and the he gives a slight nod, the other Devil of common lineage begins to unlock the shackles of the Hero once the Healer applies the knock out drug.

"Fascinating." Healer Bina remarks as the two guards enter now, carrying the Hero out of the cell to take the foul tempered Human Hero to the prepared examination area that the Healer will be using. "And no food at all, for the pass thirty-two days? Or water for the last six?"

"No waste what so ever about his space either. No stench of an unwashed body." The typical red skinned common Devil muses as the Healer walks before him once the guards have carried the Hero out.

There's no point in commenting as it was something he had already covered with the Healer, he rather speak more after the examination. Healer Bina will only be with him for a week as she's on loan to him from a Great Uncle of his for not just two favors but also having paid in gold. He's got two weedy common Devils assigned to her and hope that they'll pick up a few things about the profession, both know how to treat creature aliments and it would save him money if they can learn to do the same for beings, or at least pick up the basics of the Healer writings and self study the profession, it's not like he can't raid Order settlements or buy from wandering Merchants said scrolls and books.

Escorting the Healer to the prepared room, Draven takes a moment to regard the set up, the Hero's always worn attire is now gone leaving underwear covering the privates. Satisfied with leaving the trio of common Devils to their appointed task concerning the Hero, he walks away. He tours the smelters and the forges before checking on the work of the carpenters and the lumber yard.

His newest expansions are coming along well while the masons and quarry-men are still off on the mission of mining suitable stone from the previously abandoned quarry. Yes, he did need to clear out a nest of Kobolds and their tamed ridge crested monitor lizards. He's not happy that he's had to build an out post there and keep it manned with a score of his fighters and support staff at all times as if he leaves it unoccupied for a minimum of three days, Kobolds would once more have made themselves at home within the quarry, which is unacceptable in his mind, given he rooted them out already.

His coffers are still filled decently enough and with the smelters now turning what ore they mine along with the stone into ingots, they can now make better metal armors and weapons that weren't bronze or copper as copper and tin ore are far cheaper to buy then iron. Some of the uncut gems that also get found are being sold as he doesn't have any use for them at this point in time. With better armed and protected forces under his command, he'll be able to target stronger settlements and pursue Ultimate Doom's plans of terrorizing Heroes and Supports.

The thought of the insane Elf causes him to frown as he stares off at the distance. Given the power the Elf possesses, he finds it hard to believe that the Elf needs him or the others. Given the 'subtle' plays of power, which weren't subtle at all in regards to Horde Lord Wrath the Orc or Pack King Ruthless the Werewolf, it's clear that the Elf should have no problem destroying one of the cities of the Order and yet, the Elf seems more content to spur them into doing so instead, with giddy glee and cruel amusement in his eyes.

Draven is a Devil, born to House Ose of the Seventy-two Pillars and he does not like being regarded as the Elf's play thing, a tool meant to amuse its 'owner'. Like the other eight members, he has no love nor hold true loyalty to the Elf but unlike the others, he's yet to make an effort into working against the insane Elf as well. There was nothing to be gained as of yet to rebelling to the Elf's twisted requests or trying to defend himself from the sweeping moods, which seems to be reason why he's regarded as the 'favorite' as he 'knows' his 'place'. Not that Ultimate Doom hasn't attempted to push him pass his limits in hopes of causing him to react in such a way as to be in need of 'correction' and thus has suffered humiliation upon humiliation, most often when the others are presence as well.

Even with his training in manners and in self control, he should have snapped at the Elf at least once this past year, if only because of his pride in his Noble House. Nor is there this... festering negativity focused on the insane Elf or at the others for witnessing such things. Just this bizarre, passively focus emotion of self loathing and this continuous sense of him being useless... of him not being of any worth.

He's done a lot of self reflection and can't, for the life of him, pin point what experience he has that could cause such emotions and self image issues to crop up! Draven knows that his House's standing isn't that high among the Pillars but that doesn't mean he was not any less of a Noble as those born to Houses in stations above his own. Like all children born to House Ose, he'd been groomed and educated to pursue goals that would align with benefiting his House and his standing within it. He's still far too young to be considered an actual contender for advancement within the House as he's not yet a century old and thus is allowed to do as he pleases as long as he doesn't do it in the Underworld or provoke open conflict with another House of the same standing.

Draven isn't the only Devil who's active upon the core plane of The Expanse nor is he the only one leading an army or in the process of laying claim to portions of land. The common Devils tend towards mercenary work of any kind while a greater of his fellow Noble Devils tend towards leading plundering armies or mercenary companies. And then there are a few others seek to secure resources for their future projects among the Underworld or set up profitable operations that could generate money, which is kind of what building this wooden fort which is slowly turning into a stone keep generally means. Yes, he's not above using the fort as a launching pad for raiding the Order settlements or for hunting down the odd Hero bounty, but his ultimate aim is for generating income so that he will have money to pursue a mastery or two in magical subjects once back in the Underworld, which can be expensive given the need for spell components and paying a teacher for lessons.

Yes, within a week of having met Ultimate Doom, he realized that it's doubtful that the insane Elf could help him cheat in climbing the social ladder of his House and feeling a touch foolish plus annoyed, he revisited his options. Sadly, he can't seem to cut ties with the insane Elf or he would have done so a long time ago. It's seems far too late for him to escape the Elf's clutches and this 'game' he is playing with the current generation of Order Chosen Heroes and Support.

He's done his best to escape his death multiple times and is highly motivated plus interested in continuing to do so as there has to be a price for the Resurrection that Ultimate Doom uses to bring the others back from their final rest. Which means he's in need of homing his skills and seeing to improving his forces. After all, while he may be able to win against a single Hero in single combat, the odd increase against him the more Heroes he faces as a couple of his common Devil recruits can kill a Support they would not hold long against a Hero.

His thoughts are interrupted by his Quest Log appearing before him and then flipping to a page, signalling that this Quest is new and that Ultimate Doom wish it to be completed as soon as possible. "White-Out, hmmm?" It's just as strange a name as all the other Heroes and Support that he schools his expression as he reads the details instead of skimming them once again.

Tapping the portrait of this White-Out, he can't help but wonder to himself, Why would he not retrieve you himself? After all, there have been other Quests of this nature had them creating distractions so that Ultimate Doom could collect some Hero or Support, even steal something from some Guild's vaults. The image is another Elf who sports spiky dark grey hair, gemstone blue eyes, and who's cloths are made out of leather. There is a simple long dagger on the belt and then there's a special belt that goes from left to right that possesses more knives, likely off of which are mean for throwing. Everything leading him to conclude that this White-Out is a range fighter and might be more into being a stealthy kind of Hero.

The type of Hero that is going to be hard to flush out.

Ok, so maybe not so hard to flush out. Draven mentally amends as White-Out glares at the trio who just tossed the Hero down before him upon him dismounting from the Strider, a breed of horse that magic was used to alter their stamina to be hardier then a normal one. Taking out a pouch, he puts twelve thousand gold into it from his Dimensional Pocket and flings it to the feet of the leader of the three.

The Dwarf member of the trio walks over and picks up the leather pouch, without even counting it, the pouch vanishes with a nod from said Dwarf. "Pleasure doing business with you." The leader states and the trio are quick to use Teleportation Stones to leave the area.

Looking down, he notices a stick in the mouth with leather straps ensuring White-Out couldn't spit it out. A quick sleep sleep and the Hero is out, with that, he bends down and easily lifts the Hero onto the back of his Strider before getting back into it. With that, he and his escort of four leave, heading back the way they came.

It's only been a week since he crafted those flyers concerning a bounty on White-Out and how to contact him, Gentleman Draven Ose, in order to collect it. He decided not to really put much effort into the Quest after thinking about it for a day. Oh, Draven knew that the Heroes and Support have been having trouble managing their funds but didn't think they'd actually betray one of their own for a mere twelve thousand gold coins. After all, Support can build things and sell said things to the Temples or even to the Order merchants while Heroes gain money from 'mob' bounties never mind the money gained from raiding abandon ruins or non-Order settlements. It was a simple matter of fiances and knowing how to barter in the end yet, it seems that it's something that this generation of Heroes and Support lack.

He follows behind his two guards as they carry White-Out down the stairs into his prison cells. There's half a dozen dug out and out of them, only one is in use. The foul mouth and tempered Hero curses at them as they pass his cell, although there's beginning to be a lack of real heat in those words, then again, it seems that the Hero is starting to become effected by his surroundings and the lack of rescue attempts. After all, it's for that very reason he decided to capture him to begin with as the Human hadn't endured himself to his fellow party members and he figured that if that were true, then it's likely that the Hero hadn't endured himself at all among his fellow Heroes or among the Support.

It could also be the change in cloths as well. Draven muses thoughtfully as well as one of the guards holds White-Out while the other shackles the wrists and ankles. In the end, it matters not, Healer Bina could only suggest that it's some kind of Gods' Blessing upon the Hero, she had been unsure if all the Heroes and Support have it or if it's only granted when they are captured. Either way, it means that he doesn't have to order that the cell is to be added to the cleaning duty nor does he have to order the 'washing' of the Hero.

"There should be a special collar in my office, fetch it for me please." He state upon opening his Quest Log and checking the Quest for an update. Soon enough, it's just the single guard alone with the prisoner and himself.

Yes, he wants that stick gone from the mouth but he isn't going to chance anything just yet, given that the Quest did warn against allowing White-Out the use of his voice. Plus, the latest prisoner stirs and then jerks wide awake, then begins to glance around the cell. Teeth bite down more forcefully at the sight of him and those gemstone blue eyes glare at him.

White-Out tests his shackles and then glances down at his legs. The other guard returns and he, personally, clamps the collar about White-Out's check, even thought the Hero tries to fight against him by trying to sway to the sides. With it on, he takes one of the throwing knives and slices the leather. The stick gets spat at him but falls harmlessly to the ground as he puts the knife back.

"Let me go." He raises a simple eyebrow at the Hero. "Damn, it wasn't even fair! You just made those flyers and didn't even have the guts to track me down! Or even engage me in a fight! How's that not the actions of a coward?!"

"Who the fucking hell is that, you shitty excuse for a leopard?!" Bellows the other and with that, he decides to leave as the two Heroes are now yelling at each other. It seems his original prisoner's fire is back and one of the guards shuts and locks the door, then with a guard ahead of him and behind, they leave the prison area, heading up the stairs.

Closing the door and the yelling from below fades into nothingness. They part company as he heads for his office and the two head to the kitchen area to grab something to eat and drink. As he sits at his desk, Draven wonders when he can expect a visit from the insane Elf.

It takes him a second to realize where to find the insane Elf and lets out a sigh as he gets out of his nice, warm, and comfortable bed. Draven manages to put something on, it was a quick pick really, and does a little to tame his hair before being forcefully Summoned to his own prison area. The Elf takes a moment to study him with what could only be, for Ultimate Doom at least, look in his eyes before turning back to said captured Elf Hero. "He is one of mine." There's a smug tone in announcing that.

Yea, the first prisoner is cursing and sniping, it seems that neither are really paying attention. It seems that the first prisoner isn't aware that he's here now. So, he turns a deaf ear to the ravings of the other Hero, being sure to focus on the two in the cell with him.

White-Out's expression darkens and regards him with a bit more interest their previous interactions. "So that makes nine then?" Inquires the Hero and there isn't a reply from the insane Elf, just a smirk.

"Some how, I find myself rather disappointed with this one." Remarks White-Out and he mentally sighs as Ultimate Doom's all defensive and offended over that causal remark. "Come now, he didn't capture me, he didn't do any of the hard work, just played off of the greed of the Players."

"I find it rather bemusing that your... Players would even consider twelve thousand gold to be a good amount to betray one of their own." He comments before Ultimate Doom could fall for the ploy the Hero is aiming for in a rather smooth tone. "In my mind, it's a rather insulting amount but then, I guess what I've heard about the current generation of Walking Legends and Wonder Makers concerning their mismanaging of their own funds and seemingly lacking the skills to barter are very true."

Ultimate Doom chuckles, clearly pleased with how he defused the Hero's comment. "That's one of the reasons why he's my favorite." States Ultimate Doom and White-Out is eyeing the two of them with a surprisingly good blank look.

"Give our previous discussion, I would have thought your... preferences would be towards the more... volatile temperament, particularly towards that Werewolf Boss of yours." White-Out comments in a dry and matter of fact tone. He doesn't need to glance at Ultimate Doom to know that the other Elf's mood has swiftly altered.

"Oh, I do just so love the others but at the same time, there's just something to be said for someone who knows their proper place in my organization and prove themselves capable of long term planning." Ultimate Doom remarks and he doesn't like how true that comment was as he keeps his thoughts from showing. The insane Elf approaches near White-Out and taps the collar. "We won't be having that... conversation again, I can't have you or your Quirk around to spoil my plans."

"And just what are you so afraid of? Don't think I didn't notice how quick your anger turned to concern or would the better term be fright?" Oh?

Withdrawing the hand, Ultimate Doom turns sharply. "Bring him." The insane Elf states.

"Might I inquire as to his fate?" He asks as he casually uses a paralyze spell upon the Elf Hero. Already moving to unlock the shackles, curious if he'll get an answer while his mind races in how to keep the insane Elf from making off with the Hero.

"Hmm..." It's clear that Ultimate Doom isn't sure himself. He easily swings the now unshackled Hero over his shoulder and politely waits for the insane Elf to figure something out.

"Shackle him back up, I have something to research." And with that, the insane Elf vanishes in a whirl of shadows. He casts a spell of silence upon the cell and then gently puts the Elf Hero down, being sure the back is near the wall and moves to stand by the door, waiting for the Hero to recover as he mentally works on how to get some trust out of the Elf so that he can get a measure of the truth.

White-Out scowls and moves to get up, but there's interest there, in those eyes. "What is it that you want, Devil?" The Hero finally asks but makes no move to pull out a weapon.

"I'm a Devil, what do you think I want?" He muses with a hint of amusement. The Hero scowls and tugs on the collar but he can see through the mask of neutral blankness.

"To be betray him, I think." Finally White-Out states. "I want free of him, yes, but I'm more interested in what power your... Quirk is and whether it can help me get pass a mental block that I seem to possess."

"You see, there are... inconsistencies concerning between what life I know I lived and the emotions I seem to possess." Draven finally admits after taking a second to consider how to explain it. Eyes widen slightly but the other clamps down on the emotion.

"And how do I know that once I helped you that I won't find myself... Well, tossed aside." Remarks White-out. Both studying each other in a wary kind of way.

"You don't." He agrees before adding, "But, for some reason, I think you'll want to take me up on this offer."

"And how, do you plan to go about winning my trust?" White-Out inquires and he gives the Hero a thin smile. "Why, not being shackled to the wall."

"Which means you expect me to not try and leave this cell then." The Elf muses. "Well, trust has to be given in order to be earned." He informs the Hero.

"Devils are two face." Remarks the Elf Hero with a frown. "Hardly our fault that the Order don't like employing magically binding contracts or teaches how to properly use and read Fae Runic Language." Draven states with a simple shrug.

"... You mean those things are actual things?" White-Out asks in a tone of disbelief and he moves quickly and moves the Hero's wrist, feeding a bit of magic into the skin before White-Out pulls away, but he activates the Gods' Marking. Within seconds, the layers of the Seal, a total of twenty-four, is on display. "Why yes, they do exist." He says in a dry tone, White-Out doesn't really look away form the slowly rotating Seal that makes up the Gods' Marking which is a magical contract between the Hero or Support to the Pantheon of Gods that Order worship.

The Gods' Marking slowly withdraw back into the wrist and he waits for White-Out to speak. It's clear that none of the priesthood have done much to teach the current generation of Heroes and Support, which really should be surprising yet, it doesn't. He's reviewed the previous generations of Walking Legends and Wonder Makers and it's clear that something more is going on among the Order's ranks, perhaps it's due to such a large gap of time between the previous and current generation, but there seems to be corruption among the Order, one that reaches into the priesthood it seems.

White-Out manages to spark the Gods' Marking and once more, the magical Seal appears but not in its total layers. "These markings are Fae Runes?" Asks White-Out as the Hero finally look up at him, there's excitement in those blue eyes.

"Yes, the Runes the Gods of Order use are called the Light set. The ones Orcs and the goblin breeds are the Blood set." He answers, not sure if he really should be sharing this but, being a source of likely needful information... Yes, White-Out won't be leaving, not now, the price of keeping him here is rather cheap all things considered.

"How many sets are there?" White-Out asks and he replies, "Hard to say, really, there's the Pure sets and then there's the Patchwork sets. It's hard to say what which sets are which, only the Gentry likely know and they left ages ago, heading into the black expanse instead of crafting a dimensional world of their own."

"Fine, I won't try to leave." White-Out states after frowning and running a hand through his hair. Now to figure out how to prevent Ultimate Doom from entering right into the cell without any warning. He thinks to himself as he gives a nod of acknowledgement.

He leaves and locks the door behind him, content that things were looking up.

= - / o ^ + ^ o \ - =

Shinsou allows himself to relax now that Gentleman Draven Ose is gone for a few minutes, the silence spell also fade and he can hear Lord_Murder|Exploder shouting out abuse. Yea, nobody really cared that the Adventurer Player had vanished and nobody has heard from him for almost two months. He accesses his Inventory and pulls out his sleeping bag plus something to eat.

Calling up his Friend List, he selects ErasingError and begins to type out a report, namely how he got turned in, the names of those Players who let their greed overcome their common sense, and then mentioning about Gentleman Draven Ose, his relationship as serving under Ultimate Doom and it seems that the shackles of the cells interfere with use of his Character Menu. His gaze strays towards his wrist and sports that Gods' Marking, suddenly wondering if it the just something that's typical when it comes to any shackles, after all, the metal does cover the spot rather easily.

He puts that into the message along with the information the Devil mentioned concerning the Runic language along with mentioning that there is such a thing as a magical contract and it sounds like the Order doesn't employ them. Then he explains how to bring up the Gods' Marking, questioning why none of the NPCs of the Order bothered to demonstrate how to call up the magical Seal that makes up the Gods' Marking. He also mentions that it seems that the Devil is going to try and win his trust, as he's not shackled to the wall but he's been asked not to try and leave his cell.

Shinsou mentions that his Quirk is being canceled due to a collar and that, there's hope that he could get the Devil to remove it. He doesn't trust this Devil but, well, he doesn't have to trust the Devil, just trust that he'll uphold his bargain. He does mention Lord_Murder|Exploder being held here, it's more of an after thought.

He sends the message and then eats some jerky to get rid of his hunger condition, along with the phantom pangs of hunger. With that, he moves into the sleeping bag and for the first time since his capture, he actually gets a restful sleep.

Sitting on the chair and across from Draven, the leopard themed Devil is studying the game board upon the table. It's been two weeks going on three since that visit from Ultimate Doom and the Devil has visited him four days after, their discussion had been short but he get a few questions answered and put in a request for a book, due to him being bored. A guard delivered a book in the afternoon, it was different then the books he's usually found within the Order's Libraries, for one, the author was a Minotaur and for another, the tale's tone was different, likely due to the influence of what culture the Minotaur race came from if he were forced to guess.

It also somehow was suitable for his mood, even if sported too much drama for his taste and the tragedies within could be avoided if they just talked with one another or by employing common sense, well, what he thinks is common sense. Still, the next day, Draven arrives and inquires if he wished for another book or if he's still not done reading the first. Which led to him criticizing the book and it's clear that the Devil finds his thoughts of the book to be amusing.

Returning the book, the Devil left and that afternoon, he gets another book, this time, it's a collection of short stories. The collector being a Hobgoblin. Each story was clearly from different races, including a few from Order belonging races. There's at least two stories from each race, some are what you'd expect and others... not so much. Which might be why the Hobgoblin put which story came from what race at the back of the book.

And now, he's out of the cell for the second time, the previous time had been so he could use the bathing pool. That had been two days previously and now, since he is following ErasingError's order concerning learning the basics of the Fae Runic Language, he's being taught a game that's not unlike scramble only with a more magical bend. The game is that of a child's and he's not sure about which race created it, after all, the Devil doesn't fully know the rules that well himself, he's only got an edge due to being more familiar with the Runic language.

"Devil made?" He finally asks curiously. "Rakshasa." His foe states while focus totally on his titles with a look of concentration.

Huh. He kind of felt that Draven is telling the truth. "You... look different then your... underlings." He notes and the Devil sitting across from him snorts.

"Of course I do, I'm born to the House Ose." The leopard themed Devil states as if it explained everything, but, it kind of doesn't, to him. Draven turns a few tiles before sighing, taking a blue gem, he places it on the board, signaling he's passing his turn.

"So all members of House Ose look similar to you?" He asks curious as he lays out two of his tiles, completing a Seal, which earns him all the gems that's on the board. The Devil discards all four of his tiles and draws from the blank pile, they light up with a bit of magic on the side the gray skinned Devil holds up at himself.

"No, there are some who's other House parentage shine through a touch more strongly then the House they are born in." Explains the Devil. "And if they prove they have more in common with that other House, then the Head of House, in the case of my own, it will be the President of House Ose, either approaches or is approached by either the other Head of House or, if the House is of higher standing, by a representative of that House concerning the transference of said Devil to the other House."

"These Houses are Nobility for Devils." He muses. Which explains the differences in appearances.

"We Devils have Seventy-two Pillar Houses, President tier is the lowest among the Nobility with King tier being the highest." Draven informs him, taking a moment to study him. "And yes, all the Devils I have hired are what we term common Devils."

"Can't afford to hire another Noble or is it more due to fear of being over thrown?" Draven chuckles and he blinks, kind of taken back by the sudden expression of emotion. "While old enough to be out on our own, to survive by out own devices, we are not yet considered adults by our Races standards. The life span of a Pillar Devil are far greater then that of a non-Pillar Devil."

"Simply put, we each get some funds and are allowed to leave the Underworld in pursuit of our personal desires or indulging in baser instincts." He blinks while the Devil continues. "As long as we do so outside of the Underworld, we are allowed a great deal of freedom until we either die before our times due to our ill thought out choice of life style or we manage to live to be a century of age, returning to our respective House much wiser and ready to settle into productive roles within our House, all the while seeking opportunities to advance ourselves within our Houses social ladder."

"So... your pretty much a teenager in your race's eyes." Shinsou summarizes and Draven clearly doesn't see the point in commenting for or against that assumption. He finds it kind of interesting and on some level making him a touch more confident in regards to dealing with the Devil, after all, it's clear that the Devil is young and still starting out concerning this stage of life as an independent teenager. Then again, it's clear that, as a Noble, the other has received training in social skills meant to allow him to command over those lower then his own social standing, both the positive and negative.

And yet he makes better company then most that I can name off the top of my head. He mentally admits with a touch of sourness. It's tiring dealing with the swears and empty threats of his fellow captive.

A few rounds and he finally asks, "Why haven't you killed him?" The Devil raises a slight eyebrow and he expands, "Lord_Murder|Exploder."

There's a slight look of confusion in those purple eyes before the other gets it. "Ah, that one. There's no point in killing him, he'll just revive at an Order Graveyard or Temple and given his character, likely try hunting me down after recruiting others." Ok, point to you. "After all, he can't escape nor cause harm beyond that to ones ears from the volume of his voice these days. His cussing isn't very creative nor does he seem to thrive very well without an audience who is overly responsive, in either regard of positivity or negativity."

Huh. That's something to think about. He mentally admits. It's times like this that he feels like he's talking to an actual person and not some well crafted AI meant to act out a NPC.

"And until I arrived, you and your underlings can easily just avoid the cells, so there wasn't any point in investing in a permanent silencing spell on his cell." He remarks and Draven hums in agreement. "So, why did you capture him in the first place?"

"I was curious if I could hold one of you indefinitely without needing to feed him or provide drink." Remarks the Devil. "It has been... an interesting endeavor and rather enlightening."

He's not sure how he feels about that, then again, it's true that it's not like they actually need to eat or drink, it's just simple phantom sensations that can be ignored. "You haven't been... You know, doing anything else?" He asks.

"Brought in a Healer to ensure that he wasn't suffering any harm from lack of food and drink." The other finally admits after studying him for a minute. "What we found most interesting as to do with the lack of waste and ill body odor. It was rather puzzling, I thought I'd at least have to move him from cell to cell in order to clean up any messes."

It's clear that it baffles the Devil every so slightly and he guesses he could maybe see where the NPC is coming from. "No torturing him?" And Draven sighs softly, "No point, he's not someone who possess much in the way of empathy and is rather self centered. We're all 'data' trash this one day, the next fucking bits of shitty 'coding' mob that, etc, etc."

"And if your not careful, he'd die from said torture." He notes and Draven's lips turn up every so slightly but doesn't reply. Then again, that's telling enough and, well, yea, it seems that until somebody decides to rally a large enough raiding party of Players to storm this fort, Lord_Murder|Exploder is safe and not bullying anyone verbally or otherwise.

Looking down at his tiles, he does his best to remind himself that this Devil will be turning him over to Ultimate Doom, after all said and done. And yet, he can't help but find himself growing rather fond of the Devil simply due to the fact that the guy hasn't gone back on his word.

A guard knocks on the door, waking him. "Put the stuff away, we're about to get a visit from that Elf. Gentleman Ose says to tell you if you put the shackles on yourself, you'll be able to get out of them as well." With that, the Devil heads off and it takes him a few seconds to mutter a curse.

Shinsou does put the sleeping bag away and frowns as he studies the shackles, not sure if he should trust whatever it is that Draven had planned. In the end, he moves and testing the shackles around his feet, he can close and open them, he bites his lower lip but does shackle himself to the wall, wondering just what the Devil's plan is concerning Ultimate Doom. Being nervous, it feels like time is passing by far too slowly.

Then the door opens, slamming slightly against the wall, which wakes the other prisoner, who does what he typically does and spews repeating insults and curse words. Then he jerks at the sight of the insane Elf looking at him through the barred window of the door. "Still haven't relieved him of his weapons or armor?"

"The Human's manners might improve if he was wearing the appropriate attire." Response Draven in a rather neutral tone. There's more cursing coming from Lord_Murder|Exploder.

"And you didn't see fit to do the same for this one?" Even he knows that's a trap and yet, it seems that the Devil seems to know how to disarm it. "I apology for not thinking to dress your prisoner up as my own prisoner."

Oh... Good one. He couldn't help but think. "He is mine." Muses Ultimate Doom and the Elf moves back, he watches as Draven stands before the door, then opens it, moving to the side like a well mannered butler, allowing the unstable Player into the cell. "It's good to see you once again, aren't you happy to see me? I'm sure your stay here isn't what it could have been."

"I've been well enough and are you who I file complaints with concerning my stay? I mean, I kind of have this major one but your pet Devil didn't see fit to fulfill it." He remarks drily.

"Oh, and what request was that?" And the guy just walks right into that one. "My freedom." Is the easy reply and emotions flicker about before the insane Player choices to laugh.

He keeps his eyes on Ultimate Doom given that he's pretty sure that Draven is exercising his social training in this little encounter. "Well, yes, that issue. Oh, don't worry, you'll have your freedom... from this cell." He does his best to not flinch at the reminder of why the Elf is here.

"Oh yes, I have something planned for you." There's a wide, predatory smirk with eyes glinting with dark amusement. "I'm sure it wouldn't hurt... much."

"So, time spent behind another set of bars and still no room service? I think I'll pass as I have enough of that here." He remarks. "I might not have visited your establishment as of yet, but I think I know I have a better thing going on here, with your pet." He kind of expects a glare but a lazy look sent the Devil's way shows very little in the way of emotion nor does the pose seem to give anything away.

"Maybe after I'm done with you, I'll return you to my favorite's possession." Remarks the Player. "Unshackle him, I'll be taking him."

"Of course." And he's hit with a paralyzing spell before Draven approaches, and like before, the Devil asks the all important question, "I hope your previous testing went well in preparation for this one's fate."

"Testing! Who needs... I mean, it should..." He's on the Devil's shoulder now as Ultimate Doom muddles with worry and personal pride.

"Perhaps we should take my other prisoner along to ensure that your course of action will result in what it is you aim for." Suggests the Devil, he'd relax if he could when it looks like the Player considers the suggestion. "You know, this is the second time you've offered that one to me." Muses the most likely real life Villain.

"If he is not to your liking then perhaps I should fetch you another? After all, if he dies then all this work in retrieving him goes to waste." Like you actually worked to get me in the first place. He thinks sourly at the Devil.

"Damn it, you're right! And I really wanted to turn him into a huge, blood thirsty monster!" Whines Ultimate Doom like a child and he's not sure if he should be thrilled at the stalling tactic or guilty because it could lead to other Players getting targeted. Then again, this is Lord_Murder|Exploder that's being offered and that guy... nobody likes him.

"We can take both and if everything works out, then you will have two huge, blood thirsty monsters." Reasons Draven. He's amazed at how much like a spoiled brat the Player is that the suggestion seems to brighten up Ultimate Doom's face, like it didn't occur to him before that he could have two in rapid succession.

Wouldn't take much for the blood thirsty part with that one. He mentally muses as said prisoner continues to hurl curses and threats about without even realizing he's subject of a discussion, that his fate is being decided. The irony is, if the other would shut up for a few seconds, he might have been able to realize the danger he's in.

"Well, if he's unneeded..." Ultimate Doom remarks. "He's served his purpose some time ago." Assures Draven. "Then I accept."

The Devil waits for the other Elf Player to exit out of the door. "We will be entering negotiations after this, Hero." Murmurs the Devil before following after the Player.

He would have stiffen if he could, jerk his head and looked at the Devil. After all, nobody ever called any of the Players that, although they mention them being heroic, but that could be switched out with brave. In fact, there's no linkage between an Adventurer or Laborer sporting the title of Hero. In fact, most NPCs act like the word doesn't even exist nor do they seem to register the word if one asked them for a random tale concerning a local Hero, you'd just be asked about 'what kind of story are you interested in again?'

So, how can he know of that word? Never mind think to call me one?

Halloween Episode, My Style Part 10

I don't own ANYTHING !

Author Note: Just a little something for 2018 Halloween.

October 31st

"Beware the former knight, for he has become greatest of foes!

For there is a dragon heart beating where a man's should!"

The world spins and there's hints of rainbow flaring at the edge of his vision. It reminds him of something yet, as Sieg tries to focus on the information, it evades him and yet, the world suddenly comes into sharp focus as tiny... beings are racing around, chasing children around. Sounds roar to his ears and the former Master of Rider of Black tries to understand the hows and whys of his location.

A look at the back of both of his hands are clean, no Command Seals nor discolored skin or the beginnings of scales. It's the weight of a familiar belt and the sheath plus sword causes him to regard his clothing, which is odd as last he recalled, he had been transformed into a dragon, a clone of the great dragon Fafnir, and had journeyed to the Reverse Side of the World with the Greater Grail. He can not fully recall if he reached the end of that journey yet...

"Am I dreaming?" The Homunculus wonders in English. Then there's a cry for help and he surges forward in the direction, pushing the matter to the side as he moves to defend the elderly woman being clawed at by the tiny beings. "Begone!" He cries out as he kicks one off of her and then throwing another off.

"Hurry! Get in the house and lock the door!" He orders as he helps pull the woman up, she is clearly shaken yet is quick to do as he says. With that, he glances around and is already on the move, there's other people who need him as he's pretty sure that there are far deadlier beings roaming this night then just these short monstrosities.

After all, it's the right thing to do and that's all the reason for Sieg to act.

"No Slayer wander this night, for in her place a Crimson-Haired Princess reigns this night.

She is but one of a Heavenly Emperor's loves."

Rias is fairly sure that she doesn't want to know how she went from trying on wedding dresses with her Peerage and members of Issei's own Peerage to being here, on her own. The illusion upon her hair is gone, her crimson color once more on display and she'd been on the move, after all, she is Heir to her House, the younger sister of the current Lucifer, and the King of the current Red Dragon Emperor. While she could deal with the strange beings that are rampaging upon the street, the Crimson-Hair Ruin Princess needed to find a secure location and hope that she can summon or contact her Queen or her Rook, Rossweisse.

It takes her sometime to find a place to duck into, she's fortunate that there's a few people trying to manage the horde of short terrors by knocking them out or tying them up. Feeling a touch calmer, the Pure Blood Devil finally notices that there's something... She frowns as she tries to pin point what it is about this place that excites her so, that causes her to feel like she should just...

Let go... For a second, the lure of calling upon her inherit powers and taking to the air... There's insane chuckling and it breaks her out of that lull, she blinks as she finds herself ready to leap into the air, feeling her wings primed to come out.

Looking up at the sky, the source is some odd human that sports a long pony tail that... "Is that moving on its own?" There's a sound of metal clanking against one another.

The opponent is a swordsman in old Japanese attire. Light red hair and a cross scar upon a cheek... Her eyes widen as she realizes who it is fighting against the odd, maybe human with a stinger in the point tail. After all, she's an otaku and there's only one character who fights with a sword like that while fitting that description of a crimson hair swordsman with a cross scar upon that side of the fact.

Rurouni Kenshin... Kenshin Himura! Rias thinks as she finds herself holding her hands as if in prayer. She sighs in disappointment as she pats her self down to see if she has one of her Evil Pieces but there's none on her and the fighting has already changed locations.

Sighing, Rias Gremory leaves the alleyway and begins to search for said swordsman to see if she can't talk him into escorting her for a time. After all, there shouldn't be any harm in at least asking, right?

"The spirit of a child of Loki's familia waits for the dawn to set all things right.

She's who should be the boldest of the three is not but the watcher for this weary night."

This place is... troubling. Ais admits to herself. There's no familiar stone walls of the Dungeon nor does it appear to be any ceiling above.

The monsters are not ones she's familiar with, never mind the streets or the strange wagons. It does not help that she is unable to interact with this place in anyway as well. There's a body by her feet that's covered in a white sheet.

She does not venture far from the body and none of the odd monsters seem incline to test her skills with Desperate, which she is wearing. Perhaps it has to do with the look upon my face? The War

Princess of Loki Familia muses. She is reminded of Bell and his reactions at times.

"Oh hey, what's with that look on your face?" Blinking, Ais Wallenstein finds that there's a young woman wearing a white dress with blue eyes plus crimson hair on the wooden steps, looking at her with interest if she were to judge the look upon the other young woman's face. "You... didn't kill... whoever that is, did you?" There's a hint of something in the other woman's voice.

"No, I had not. When I felt the world snap into focus, it was there." She answers. "There does not seem to be any obvious signs of injury."

The blue eyes move from her to the body and with surprising boldness, the other approaches and they both seem to pause when the other moves through her. She's unable to make sense of it, taking her first real steps away from the spot that she had been observing the flow of happenings around her. There's a look in those blue eyes that she is slightly familiar with and a slightly sad smile upon the other's face. "Your a ghost of some kind."

"Perhaps." The Adventurer allows while pressing her lips together afterwards. "There are strange happenings this night."

The pity and sadness fades as clear agreement flickers upon the other's face. "True. There is something about this place that..." There's something flickering, trying to take hold within the other woman's face and eyes, the eyes bleed crimson for a few seconds before the other woman recovers her bearings.

"Well, let's see if we can solve this mystery at least." And with that, the white sheet moves to uncover someone wearing her equipment only the young woman clearly doesn't look a thing like Ais herself. The woman glances from the dead girl that seems to dressed up as her and at Ais herself.

"I'm Rias Gremory." The other introduces herself and Ais replies in kind, "Ais Wallenstein." She isn't sure if she should include her status of Adventurer or membership to the Loki Familia, after all, it doesn't look like either would mean much.

"I'd ask you to help but I think you can't do much in your state." Rias states with a soft sigh and she tilts her head just so to show that is true. Ais watches as the crimson haired woman picks up the body after recovering it at least.

"There can be things that can do horrible things with the dead." Ais gets the feeling that she means other then eating the corpse. She merely gives a sharp nod before moving down the steps, it is obvious that Rias has some experience with said 'horrible' things.

"Well! Which direction did you want to venture towards first?" Asks Rias as they come near the end of the lawn of the house. She isn't sure herself, yet thankfully, someone marches right up to her, another woman wearing rather scandalous clothing in black with a headband sporting cloth 'ears' and a stuffed tail.

The woman opens her mouth only for it to close and actually study her face, much to Ais' confusion. "Great, just great..." The latest arrival muses in clear exasperation.

"Excuse me but what seems to be the matter?" Inquires Rias and the scandalous young woman's head snaps towards the crimson haired woman. Who then blinks before eyes dropping down onto... Ah yes, the cloth covered body.

"Willow? Is that... Willow in your arms?" There's a hint of some emotion in the other woman's voice.

"Willow?" Muses Rias in a curious tone. "The teen did have red hair, although she had been dressed as my associate here." There's a slight incline towards Ais.

There's a sound of acknowledgement from the other and she glances between Rias and her, there's a look of puzzlement and clear studying going on concerning the crimson haired woman. "Your dress..." The woman moves to circle Rias twice before a look of complete disbelief settles on her face, Rias tries to share a look of puzzlement yet she's a touch more focus on studying the other woman, realizing that they could get some information from her.

"You recognize the dress but not the one wearing it." Ais states in her calm and confident matter of fact tone. "This Willow had been wearing cloths similar to my own under that sheet."

"Willow always dresses as a ghost on Halloween." The stranger states in a dismissive tone but Rias' does a sharp in take of breath within seconds of hearing that. "Ghost... But she was also dressed up like you Ais and you are fairly ghostly..."

She isn't sure what to make of that but, it sounds about right. "You think that is why I am as I am, that I am that young woman under some kind of enchantment." Ais states.

"And that explains the various fictional people I've run into! But that means..." And here, Rias' eyes wide as she comes to the same conclusion as she did. "You are enchanted as well." One of the executives of the Loki Familia reasons.

There's a narrowing of Rias eyes, it's clear that this news is very unwelcome. "Well then, first, let's get this Willow some place safe and then, hunt out the source of the magic." It's clear that Rias is not human, not, whatever she is, the crimson haired woman is willing to see to the safety of the magically induced unconscious young woman in her arms before hunting down the source.

"Buffy's place isn't far from here." States the still unnamed young woman and with a sigh, the other leads them to said house.

Xander isn't sure what to make of, well, everything. As Sieg, former Master of Astolfo, leaves him along with whoever else had been inhabiting the foes that Sieg, Ichigo, Ranma, and Kagome had been teamed up to fight also leave, he isn't sure what to make of, well, himself. There had been other people Sieg had fought along side and against in saving people, it feels like days have passed only it's likely been a good seven hours.

The sword in his hand is once more plastic and it feels odd in his hand. With a sigh, he puts it into the sheath that's hanging from his sword belt. Glancing at those who'd been possessed by his allies, it seems that they, too, seem to find themselves also feeling surreal about their previous situation and, perhaps, their current one.

"Are you guys...?" His voice isn't the same as it should be and he does his best to push pass the rising emotions. The other three all jerk before turning to look at him, giving him a better look at each of them.

Each of the three no longer look like the people they had been just minutes ago and yet, he can spy the lingering traits from the possession of those people. The now taller woman sports Kagome's blue eyes and when she speaks, there's a slight look of surprise and panic in her eyes. "That... that happened, right?"

"Yea, yea it did." The now ten year old who'd been possessed by Ranma agrees. The voice doesn't have any hints of Ranma in it but, watching the kid take in his body and the way the cloths seem to droop, looking to be two sizes to big... There's streaks of navy blue hair in hair that is a honey brown.

"Fuck!" Curses the more then likely university student. The orange hair has darken but it's the sword that gets all of their attention as it's not the meat cleaver that Ichigo's had been. It's a katana sword, there's an etched design upon the flat surface of the sword that is of a cat sporting twin tails with fire wisps. "Damn it!"

"What?" Asks the kid and the almost twenty year old puts the sword away. "Ichigo. He was... leaking a lot of Reiryoku, he never got around to trying to dim the flow so..."

"So..." The woman trails off. "It effects... What was the range?" He asks in a voice that is now his own.

"It could have spread thinly throughout Sunnydale but it would have pooled in locations where he'd been fighting, hanging in the air more densely." Explains the now orange haired swordsman. "Fuck! Just what happened?! Since I mean, this is some kind of fucked up shit! We became our costumes."

"No, we invited the spirits of people from other realities to borrow our bodies for a time." He corrects them all and all three look at him. "Sieg... He was a magic user. When he checked himself over, he realized he was possessing me and though he tried to talk with me... Something prevented that and decided to call the condition of everyone involved, Demi-Servants."

"Demi-Servants?" It's clear where they are getting lost. "Servants are a kind of Familiar that are called upon during a Heaven's Feel. They are the copies of dead Heroes from a place called the Throne of Heroes and are summoned under a certain Class."

"Oh..." There's clear relief in all of their voice and there's also a few more voices. Glancing around, it seems their foes are coming closer, clearly wary but, well, also spooked by their own changes.

"Sieg ended up a Master in a Heaven's Feel, making a pact with Rider of Black." Xander explains. "The Ruler of that war had been Joan of Arc, who had ended up asking permission to posses a young teen by the name of Laeticia."

"We each dressed up in costumes for various reasons and someone... They made it into a kind of contract, that by wearing the cloths and such, we were willing to be possessed by that someone we dressed up as." He continues. "Sieg... He just didn't know how it was possible for so many people from so many different worlds could end up being Summoned though."

Xander bites his lip as he turns his head, looking towards his high school. "Sieg didn't have time to investigate that but, I knew the how it was possible." Ironic, that.

"How?" The woman who had been possessed by someone named Lust asks, there's a hint of anger there. "Sunnydale was built on a Hell Mouth. It's a dimensional weak spot and while it's likely more incline to access... hellish dimensions, it doesn't mean it can't reach beyond them." Xander is just so tired and wants to leave, either go home to get some sleep or search throughout Sunnydale for Buffy and Willow.

"Things have cross into our dimension." There's a finality in the formerly possessed Ichigo's voice. "Blood Demons needing human corpses as meat suits to survive in our dimension called Vampires. Demons of various... breeds with various needs, some needing to feed on humans while others just try to co-exist."

"Magic is... Real?" Inquires the kid who'd been possessed by Ranma. "Kind of? It's hard to say, given that this world use to be a hell itself, once upon a time." He admits and it's clear everyone has different thoughts concerning that idea.

"Look, there's a Watcher at Sunnydale High School and he's good at telling that story along with sporting book about that kind of hidden society." He really is tried and feels someone place a comforting hand on his left shoulder. "Just tired." He explains to the former archer.

"He's not the only one... Tired that is..." Yawns the kid, who looks sheepish.

"Yea, it's been..." The former leader, who'd been possessed by a Lord Mao, who had been a Demon, who is a preteen boy sporting white hair but the eyes and ears had returned to normal. "I mean, we have a location to meet up for answers and, well, the police should be starting to make their rounds..."

There's a questioning look from the former Demon Lord. "Maybe, now that the fighting is done but it also means that the actual Demons and Vampires will also be coming out to check out what's what." He admits and they all still.

"Fuck..." As the realization that they can't just leave hits them. "If any of them..." He realizes how bad an idea that is, after all, if they have even a minor sliver of the powers of those who possessed them, then it's a bad idea to not ensure that the others aren't made aware and escorted home or brought to a safe location.

Feeling a second wind fill him, they are quick to pick a buddy and begin to search for others who are likely at a loss of what happened to them and might have some changes to them from being possessed.

The changes caused due to Halloween sits ill at ease upon Buffy's mind. What trait she received from being possessed by the Devil named Rias Gremory wasn't much besides red highlights in her hair. Then again, she hadn't encountered the person who got possessed by one Ichigo Kurosaki, who's spiritual energy spilled over during fighting to 'drench' those within said area and also lingered at those sites. It's been the cause of how people kept so much from those who possessed them as the energy help leave deep impressions within the hosts.

And because of that... The Slayer glances towards drugged bodies of kids who are casualties of that night as they dressed up as 'generic' monsters and now, now those traits and more importantly instincts easily overwhelmed the kids they had been. It likely doesn't help that all the demons of this world actually have human blood in them, it also means that there are humans out there with blood of demons within them, dormant but could get triggered in the right circumstances...

They have people looking up ways to seal or weaken the demonic influence on those kids and the few teens. It's rather bemusing to know that the group includes Xander these days. Then again, his magical abilities give him an upper hand on making sure they aren't over or under dosing the kids and teens. Structure Analysis, how is that not a cheat? She wonders, what little she recalls about magic from Rias' world, it doesn't involve the ability to just look at something and get an info dump about the make up of said something.

As she continues to make the rounds through the make shift med ward, Buffy's thoughts turn toward's the changes within Willow. While Wills' body hadn't been overly affected, her friend's mentality and magic have been. Upon Wills has some kind of tattoo on her back thought, it's suppose to be a Blessing of Loki and yes, they did get a visitation from said deity and the Norse God seem to imply that he'll be visiting again in the future, if only to 'update' the Blessing, which didn't seem to disturb Wills one bit, she merely nodded as if that's to be expected.

Then again, she's won each of our spars... In fact, she doesn't seem to break much of a sweat in our spars... Which is annoying as Buffy is the Slayer and thus, she should be able to win without a lot of effort, after all, Willow never used a sword before. Yet, her red head friend seems to always win. It's slowly frustrating her and Wills has tried to explain what the Blessing was and how it's help anchor Ais' combat skills but, well, she finds it hard to swallow as Wills body hasn't really changed, she doesn't suddenly have more muscles nor does she seem overly concerned about her figure either. Then there's how emotionless Wills is during their spars and yet, how it seems that without the kind of passion a fight stirs up, Wills seems to win and there's something almost galling about her manner in winning.

And then the others have tried to get her to spar with them some more. Which is a hassle, after all, she's sparred with some of the others and have beaten, so she there's no reason to spar with them.

"So, when will you spar with Xander?" She blinks and turns to look at one Gerald, the kid who ended up possessed by Ranma Saotome. "Actually, when will we have a go at it?"

"Why would I want to do that? Your just a kid." She asks. "As for Xander, he's a mojo guy now, I doubt he'd be that good with a sword." Buffy states and Gerald just stares at her before snorting, turning on his heel, the kid walks away while chuckling.

Honestly, she's the Slayer and they, in the end, are still the same people they were from before. Yea, they got some new quirks and slight power boosts but they will never match her. Turning from watching Gerald walk out of the room, Buffy wonders if she should visit the Bronze, after all, Angel might be there and she hasn't seen him as much as she'd like this last month.

"She won't because she thinks I'm only just a kid." Gerald states and Willow sighs but it's to be expected, really. Buffy's no longer the only power house in Sunnydale and is clinging firmly on the past, refusing to acknowledge that the past is just that, the past.

"Has her head always been up her ass?" Gerald asks and Beatrice, or Rice, gives the kid a look about his language but doesn't say a world. "He's not wrong, she's firmly sticking her head in the sand and doing her best to ignore how much more effort she needed to win in those spars." She admits and the pair look at her.

"Or how much we could have improved." Rice muses, she'd dressed as Lust on Halloween. Her ability is altering her nails into actual claws, claws that grow to cover her finger tips, encasing them in the nail.

"And we are, aren't we?" Gerald asks, looking towards her. "Yes, you all have and will continue to improve as you find your limits then figure out ways to go beyond them." And she knows that to be true.

Gerald and Rice both seem to relax along with smile slightly in pleasure to hear such praise. With Ais' knowledge of how a Familia operates, she's done her best to set up a bare bones structured frame work, the others seem to find it easy enough to follow. Of course, it's altered as needed but it works for now. They are doing their best to support one another along with finding ways to ease money problems as they have plans concerning how to address the problem that is the Hell Mouth and how it attracts so many demons, namely the ones commonly called vampires.

"You plan to follow her?" She asks Rice as Buffy leaves the med ward. "It's more then likely she'll head for the Bronze."

"In search of that cursed vampire." Rice agrees. "She's rather predictable." The other woman says with a sigh.

"She doesn't patrol all that much, does she?" Gerald remarks. "I mean, yea, there's a lot of ground to cover but Sunnydale kind of shuts down at night, well, unless they cater to the night life. So she could do some roof hopping without worrying about anyone questioning her."

"Buffy isn't one for out of the box thinking outside of combat." Loki's Blessed Child admits. "I think it's a lingering issue of her still wanting a normal life, of being normal."

"Any idea about who Rias Gremory was? Maybe it's also something that's lingering from the crimson haired woman?" Rice asks and she gives it some thought.

"Rias wasn't human." She feels confident in that assessment. "She also was obsessed with various Japanese anime and manga."

"Obessed... Oh..." Gerald then snorts. "She's an otaku! Rias was an otaku!"

"Otaku?" Rice voices the question that crossed her mind. "Yes, I wouldn't be surprised if she also was someone interested in cos-playing too along with Japanese games."

The budding martial artist pipes in.

"Which means that obsession could be altered into something Buffy already slightly obsessed with, which is being normal." Willow muses and that means that when this obsession of a normal life finally shatters, Buffy isn't going to be in a good place. Which means, should we be the ones to break it or should we leave it for someone else to do it?

There's no good answer to that and both were going to break Buffy. "She's going to hate us." Muses Rice softly and she can only nods with a slightly sad smile.

"Either way, yes, she will, either for doing so in a controlled manner or for preventing an enemy from doing so." We'd be reminders that she'd been lying to herself, that we were stronger then her when it came to dealing with the aftermath of Halloween. Loki's Blessed Child acknowledges.

Her relationship with Buffy isn't what it once was and until Buffy accepts the changes, there's not going to be any healthy friendship between them. Damn it, Xander was right. The red head admits. Neither Ais nor she herself were good at understanding people but Xander does and he's only gotten more keen along with confident in that regards.

They've talked about not just their friendship, past and current but their friendship with Buffy. Xander's the one who tried to get her to realize that Buffy isn't really dealing with the events of Halloween. That she was doing her best to ignore certain elements of reality that didn't fit in her mental world view. That Buffy's going to break before she can face the fully situation going on around her. And I owe him an apology. She thinks with a hint of guilt. She had said a number of things meant to hurt him before she left.

"Going to be speaking to Xander soon?" Rice muses and she gives the observant woman a slight nod. "Yes, I will be."

"Good, cause he misses talking with you." Gerald states and she gives the kid a nod in acknowledgement. Yes, they've conversed with one another about official matters but she never really moved to talk with him about other matters once those meetings were done.

"Well, looks like I'm off." Rice says and with that, the other woman leaves. "Kitchen?" Asks Gerald and she gives the kid a slight smile before leading him to the kitchen they set up within the warehouse.

They find a rice cooker and a pair of dishes simmering on the stove, there's a stack of plates near the stove plus forks and serving spoons. It's not long Gerald piles his plate with both types of curry over the rice. She picks the one labeled mango curry chicken over the one labeled aigake curry. They aren't the only ones to be seated in the kitchen, sampling the curry. They nod to one another as they move to sit down, Gerald asks about what they are discussing and Virgil, formerly possessed by one Honoka Takamiya, is quick to give them both a summary while Emily, formerly possessed by one Tokiko Tsumura, takes the time to eat a few forkfuls of her curry.

Both are preteens with Emily being twelve and Virgil being thirteen. Both only have one physical feature from Halloween but they both received skills from being the hosts of said people. Emily is doing her best to get into shape and practicing with various weapons, trying to find one that feels fight while Virgil's learning how to use magic along while dealing with the sudden surge in growth in physical and mental department because of his magic helping to fuel said growth as a safe outlet.

She finds herself sympathizing strongly with Virgil's situation as it's akin to the same thing she's learning to deal with concerning her Falna, which possesses Ais' stats, skills, and level. She'd have wanted for Loki to do an actual update of it in hopes of correcting the issue but a few of the others, with Buffy and Giles being the most steady in keeping them from spending any time alone, as they didn't trust Loki's intentions concerning her. Willow is hoping the next visit will see the issue addressed and that people will be a bit more willing to listen to why Loki wouldn't do anything to harm her, after all, the Falna is... Really hard to put into words. Neither Ais or Willow were good with using words to express emotion.

It's not long before she joins the conversation, putting any issues aside and just enjoy talking with new people, getting to know more about them and they getting to know her.

Ending it here!

Misplaced Pair of Souls: Naruto

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation or Naruto!

Warm... So warm... Then he squeaks as something presses down on his body. "-Hey!-"

Then that something seems to twist and something clamps down on some part of him. "-Naruto?-" He twists his head and the pressure gives.

"-Naruto?-" The baby kit parrots back and tries to open his eyes, only... they don't open! That something, no, someone again bumps into him and tries to clamp down on him.

"-Well, guess not any more... Huh, how'd this even happen?-" The other muses, clearly content to keep a hold on him.

There's no more words coming from the other and he's growing tired. Then there's something is moving over his body and the tiny fox kit is lulled to sleep.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

"-Xing.-" The black fox sporting two tails turns to regard his red furred brother. "-I'm naming you Sheng Xing.-"

"-Ok?-" Sapphire blue eyes meet golden eyes of his nine tailed litter brother and fellow stray soul, after all, the former Shinobi had expected to end up in the Pure Lands not... not reborn as a fox kit, let alone in a world that doesn't have Chakra. Not that the newly named Sheng Xing really cares about his previous incarnation much, his life is infinitely more peaceful then when he'd been Naruto. "-So... this means you have a name too?-"

"-Sheng Feng.-" His brother states looking rather pleased with himself before pretty much coming over and nudging him. "-Now then, let's see how much you've progressed in this last decade.-"

Even as the black furred Xing move to get up, the two tailed fox whines about how much of a bully his brother is, forcing him to train in pulling in the nature energy of this world into his body and figuring out ways to use it to improve his body, let alone work at growing another tail. After all, one tail was just fine, as far as he'd been concerned, it's not like having more then one really means much besides vanity proposes! Golden eyes continue to bore into him as the red furred nine tailed Feng waits for him to fully pick himself up from the ground.

A gentle bite on his neck from his brother and he quiets down with the complaining. "-Honestly, I'm beginning to wonder if all of your drive died with your body.-" Feng states, not for the first time.

Laughing, he remarks, "-Give me a break, brother, this world is a hell of a lot more peaceful then the other one! Why can't I enjoy this vacation?-" Xing's tails moving up and down as he pulls his neck away before the other fox could bite into it again, jaws snapping a half an inch from Xing's neck.

"-Wrong! There's plenty of trouble in this world, you're just not encountering any up here, on this peak.-" His surviving sibling snaps and his ears go back, knowing that the other would know better then he.

As the nine tailed fox moves away, the black fox watches as the prisoner and, later, friend of his previous life's form shimmers and there's a fox headed man sporting a single red tail on display. The cloths are fairly traditional and in colors that are flattering with the red fur. His brother continues forward and he follows after. He suspects that the other could take on a fully human form but doesn't feel the need to do a complete transformation when it's just the two of them.

Soon enough, they arrive at a cliff space and it's not long before Feng begins to give him orders, the language spoken is more then likely the one that the humans of this world uses, knowing what would happen if he doesn't begin going through the exercises or if he begins to complain about how 'mean' his brother is.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

"So, this is your baby brother, huh, Sheng FanGuo?" The elderly looking man muses and he sends Feng a questioning look, after all, his brother said his name is Sheng Feng, not Sheng FanGou. "Nice to meet you, Sheng AnKun, I'm Su LeiShun!"

Huh?! What the... AnKun? FanGuo? Xing can't help but find himself at a loss at the names Feng and himself have been called. "AnKun-Didi is still getting use to having a courtesy name." His brother explains and he blinks before nodding in agreement, it's rather true, after all, it's the first time he's been called AnKun let alone has been expected to reply to said name.

So, tranquil plus earth? That's the best he could come up with? Xing muses as Su LeiShun begins to address his brother. Looking around the area, it's a small farm village not that far from this road sided restaurant.

The people he spies, all sport black hair, which explains why Feng's complete human form sports black hair instead of red. It's becoming clear that having odd colored hair is unusual, which makes him wonder if it's a mark of supernatural heritage or signifies something else. Which means... this is going to bug me until I get an answer. The transformed four tailed fox muses to himself.

His current appearance is that of a young human, in their mid teens, sporting sapphire blue eyes and semi-long hair. His cloths are simple ones and he's got a sword plus various pouches. The attire is to mark him as a 'Cultivator', which seems to be some profession that's kind of like a priest and samurai, well, that's the conclusion he's drawn from his brother's explanation concerning what a 'Cultivator's' duties or the image of the general public. And why do they create a 'Golden Core' to use nature energy? What's wrong with an internal spiritual vessels?

This whole trip is about getting him off of his mountain peak and learning more about this world along with mingling with the humans of this world, which isn't something he'd been incline to do. After all, in his previous life he didn't have any option to Not associate with humans, having been one himself and in possession of all that entails. Never mind missing... Xing shies his thoughts away from his previous incarnation's memories, it's a bit more difficult given that he's transformed into a human.

Soon enough, he's jarred out of his observations of his surroundings as the conversation winds down. With a quick nod of farewell towards Su LeiShun, the former Shinobi falls into step behind his brother. It seems they got the information about something that's been worrying the local villagers and travelers. "No transforming." Feng states and he sighs before nodding, he gets the message loud and clear, fight as a human, not as a fox.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

'-Hey, wow, so many tails!-' An ear flickers back before Xing turns his head to find a very fade soul weaving about his nine tails as they twitch and move. '-Oh! Those eyes!-'

Suddenly the barely there soul darts forward to float before his nose, both of his ears display his confusion. "-How... did you get here?-" The black furred fox inquires as he watches as the soul seem to brighten.

The soul back away as it's light flickers and it's remaining energies shimmer about the air about it. '-You talked?! Oh! Great! You can Talk!-' And the soul begins to circle about him, moving up and down while it seems as though the soul is pulling itself more together, becoming more then what it was as it, formerly a he, the voice is taking a more masculine tone and way of speaking. The soul asks questions and talks, chatting about anything under the sun except concerning himself.

It brings to mind his life as Uzumaki Naruto, doing anything to fill the unbearable silence that filled his previous childhood. Which is why he decides to do something to interrupt the flow of chatter and questions coming from this dead young man. In seconds, where he'd been standing as a fox, there is now a young human sporting short spiked black hair along with simple blue with silver trimming cloths with no fox tail or ears.

"Perhaps we should introduce each other? This one's brother has graced this one with the name of Sheng Xing, courtesy name Sheng AnKun." It's been at least a century since he's spent time among the humans.

The soul pulses with a rainbow of color, it's almost shaking in place. '-Amazing! You have a brother too? And that's kind of an old way of speaking! Just how old are you, Sheng Xing-gege?!-'

"This one's brother was born in the same litter as this one and how may this one address this younger brother?" He inquires and the soul seems to flush before doing so in a soft, almost hasting manner, '-Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian...-'

"Ying-didi." The former Shinobi muses, rather surprised that the clearly drained and worn Wei Ying even gave him his birthday on top of his courtesy name. "This older brother will do his best to take care of his new younger brother." He states, after all, entertaining Wei Ying until the other is ready to move on shouldn't take so long, after all, it's not like Wei Ying is able to lead any Cultivators to his chosen territory and home, right?

= - { [T h T }] = -

He never expected to ever encounter an actual immortal fox nor for said fox, Sheng Xing, to not only understand him, after all, even he can tell that he barely exists, he's so weak from using... Wei Ying's memory fails him on remembering the reason, then again, he knows that even when he'd been alive, he'd have trouble with his memory so, being dead just makes it more of a problem. Still, the home of the nine tail fox is so easy for him to see, like, he can actually, some how, see it!

Well, not see see, but he clearly could sense the walls and the door and stairs... Even the furniture! Sure, there's no color, heck, he's not even sure what Sheng Xing's fur color is!

Hovering near Sheng Xing, he grows rather bored and the few times he's tried to talk with the still transformed fox, he got no reply. Moving in close, he bumps into the shoulder and is flat out astonish at how he encounters with something keeping him from... Ying begins experimenting and figures out how to move the hair before just stroking the skin.

Then he's caught under a hand and Sheng Xing seems to stir. "... What are you doing, Ying-didi?" It's not said all at once and the transformed fox is now sitting up, moving him so he floats over the male's lap.

'-I can touch you, Xing-gege! And you were ignoring me, so I had got bored, so when I realize I could, I did!-' He tells his host, very pleased with his discovery and the hand moves from him.

"... You do realize I sleep, right? That this is my bedroom?" And he stills as it dawns on him that he likely is being rather impolite along with the fact that sleeping is something that the still living do. "How damaged are you, little brother?" That sounds a great deal softer, perhaps it's something that Sheng Xing hadn't meant to say out loud?

Feelings of pleasure and guilt flow through him, Ying is happy that Sheng Xing does care but he feels bad that he's causing his inhuman host worry. After all, he's not worth it, being worried and fussed over. A man like him who died the way he did, having caused the problems to his...

Jerking out of his thoughts, he finds his host, Sheng Xing, feeding him spiritual energy and gently stroking him, the energy he's soaking in is comfort that's flavoring the energy. Ying feels his negative emotions slowly disperse. The former Cultivator would be purring if he could as he feels so... so... safe and would love if this would go on forever.

Sadly, it does come to an end and he wishes he could pout at the other male, maybe cross his arms when he does it too. '-Ah, why'd you stop?-' Ying whines.

"I would like to get back to sleep." There's a pause and he notices how Sheng Xing stretches his arms, there's a shake in the body before the other continues, "Then there's the whole, not wanting to bind you to me, Ying-didi. You were getting to the point where you'd give me your everything and I don't have any use of a ghost familiar."

'-Aren't you a god though?-' How else could you explain the house, furniture, and just being able to touch you? '-Shouldn't you have spirit servants waiting on you? Your an immortal fox...-' Why wouldn't a powerful entity that is Sheng Xing want to do his own chores? Make his own food? Not be pampered like some high ranking lord?

There's a chuckle from Sheng Xing, watching as the transformed fox lowers his body back onto the bed. "I may not die of old age but that doesn't mean there aren't means to kill me, Ying-didi." He finds himself bobbing up and down in understanding of that point. "As for the servants thing, does this look to be a palace your senses, little brother? Does it seem like I have a parade of visitors coming and going that need to be housed and entertained?"

'-Don't you get... lonely?-' He asks curiously and softly. "My life here is very satisfying, Ying-didi. Much more peaceful then my previous incarnation."

Ying considers that bit of information concerning his host and finds that by the time he wishes to inquire more about said previous incarnation, Sheng Xing is once more sleeping. He moves, floating towards the slightly open door and exits out of the bedroom. There's a lot for him to muse upon, concerning mending his soul and working out what's holding him here, in this world along with trying to figure out a way to pay back the kindness that his host, Sheng Ying, has done to in allowing him to hang around in the immortal's home.

Coming to the study of the house that also doubles as the library, Ying moves about the shelves, curious if he can pull a scroll or book from it. Perhaps if he focuses just so, he might be able to read what's written upon either? After all, he doesn't seem to need to sleep like Sheng Xing and he refuses to answer the summons that are always pestering him, so he needs something to busy himself with.

The slowly mending soul of Wei Ying, more commonly known as Wei Wuxian, remains in the library until Sheng Xing comes to visit him and he's more then happy to abandon his efforts to spend time with the immortal fox.

= - { [T h T }] = -

With Wei Ying gone, Xing finds himself feeling rather lonely as he'd grown use to having the soul around his home that he crafted out of the stone of the mountain and the hot spring he called forth in the basement of said home. Hopefully , the former Shinobi thinks to himself, that he's gone to whatever afterlife this world has. The black nine tailed immortal fox is sorting through the notes that his former guest had written up during his stay.

He'd waited until the turning of the season to begin packing away the few belongings of the soul on the off chance that Ying had decided to venture off his mountain to spend time observing the nearest locals or maybe he'd gone to answer one of the many Soul Summoning that had been aimed at the lively soul. Whatever the case, Ying has been gone long enough that Xing is certain that the soul either left this world or something truly bizarre happened and Ying is caught in the middle of it. If he'd have to pick which was more likely... Xing would have to go with the bizarre option, as Ying kind of reminded him of his previous incarnation a little too much when it comes to getting into trouble.

Still, Xing is confident that of the soul's ability to survive whatever trouble he's in as Ying proved that death didn't hamper the former cultivator's ability to make use of spiritual energy. Yes, the soul had to reconcile his view of the world and his interactions with it but Ying proved he'd been more then up for the task. It's clear that Ying is in possession of a brilliant mind and while lacking in the common sense department, given what the soul was striding for, possessing common sense would have been a hindrance as it would mean that Ying never would have tried anything new. Nothing ventured, nothing gained.

He'd been around to help ensure that any problems got contained and then talked Ying into how to undo said contained problem. Yes, the soul had given off the feeling of pouting over the task but it proved to be a learning experience that Ying had needed and also gave the soul an idea of what he should work on to improve on the next attempt. In time, Ying refined his control over not just his techniques but also his own manipulation of spiritual energy, learning to be more precise with the amount spiritual energy needed to ensure that the technique will do what it needs without wasting more then he had to.

With the last of the collection of scrolls now put away in a safe spot on the shelf, the reincarnated Hokage gives the library once last look about before leaving the room, heading for the basement and a soak in the hot spring housed within.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

Finding the tree that the local humans had Sealed Feng in had been frustrating! It doesn't help that there had been nine off shot trees about this region that echo with Feng's spiritual signature. Xing's also not amused at the fact that the locals possessing the tiniest faction of spiritual energy that seems to be geared into increasing their youth, which only gives, like, an extra decade to their natural life span, that is if they live to reach said age.

Gods damn it, can't believe it took me two fucking years to pin point this freaking temple and then a shitty year to get pass the various defensive arrays! The black furred nine tail fox thinks as he glares off in the direction of the nearest settlement. You'd think being blood siblings would mean they'd want me to get into the place instead of keeping me out!

Leaves are falling from the withering tree, the enchanted ropes and spirit charged beads have fallen from their placement upon the trunk. The paper spells long since burnt up, leaving ash, which in turn has been swept away by the wind that's slowly brewing up a storm, a massive one that suits his current foul mood. It'll take sometime for it to fully realize but it will be region wide and forcing the locals to remain inside if they have any common sense, which he, at this particular moment, doubts they possess given the actions of their great grandparents had enacted upon his red furred sibling.

'-Good riddance.-' He grumbles upon casting his currently glowing gaze upon the remains of the now dead tree. Xing gently uses his tails to help get his much reduce sibling onto his back and begins to carefully walk away from this former temple, he wants to get his brother far from this fucking spot as possible, the storm will take at least a full day to finish gathering itself, so he need not worry about it as if yet.

= - { [T h T }] = -

They arrive at the breached temple just as the storm begins. Wei Wuxian comes to a stop before the withered dead tree that sports an assortment of formerly charged spiritual tools in the form of beads and ropes. Lips press together, the cultivator looks about but it's clear that they are too late to revive the Source Tree that is tied with the nine Sacred Trees.

His mood fouls further at the sight, even the comforting hand his husband places upon his right shoulder doesn't help him. Lan Wangji then gives him a pat and heads for the temple, to get a roof over his head. As the rain slowly soaks him, the infamous Yiling Patriarch, just stews and closes his eyes. Here... He set the storm in motion...

Whatever thoughts that follow after that are lost and Wei Wuxian lets out a long, deep sigh. He doesn't know what to think, not just is his mind a mess but so are his emotions over this... him. Wei Wuxian's divided in his desire to find this mysterious person and yet, he dreads it.

Giving the dead tree another look, he turns and walks towards the temple where Lan Wangji is waiting with their guide, one Yu Han. "Is there... Really?" The young man inquires, clearly clinging to hope that they could do something, anything, to restore the Source Tree.

"We'd need to fully investigate the tree but... it's not looking good." He admits, doing his best to give Yu Han a sympathetic look, which is rather hard to do. And it's not just Yu Han either... Wei Wuxian mentally admits. There's just something about the locals'... presence that just bothers him. It's been bothering him more and more the longer he spends time among the locals.

Yu Han can't do much besides accept his answer, he's quick to excuse himself from the young man's company before the other could try pry some other answer from him. Wei Wuxian finds a nice spot and tries to meditate, to center himself. Maybe remember something about who it is we're dealing with.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

They find a clearly ill immortal fox, even with them so close, the spirit beast remains fast asleep but he shares a Look with Lan Wangji. The spiritual energy that's coming from the red furred spirit fox is simply the more potent spirit energy that locals of this region possesses tiny wisps of. And it couldn't have been the one to free itself from the Source Tree...

"So, what are the odds that we're dealing with this one's mate?" Wei Wuxian wonders out loud and Yu Han startles then pales at the thought. Yu Han takes a few steps back while he crouches down to get a different angle of the red furred immortal fox.

'-Mate? That's my brother! As in, litter brother.-' The voice is faint, the words ghosting across his mind and Yu Han gives a startled yelp.

There's tension in the air and Lan Wangji simply calls his name, "Wei Ying." Turning to look behind the Yiling Patriarch can't help but feel like he's facing an old friend.

'-Wei Ying?-' The black furred immortal fox tilts his head slightly, he's not sure why he knows that this one is most definitely male, with sapphire blue eyes seem to be studying him. One ear flickers back and then it's the other's turn, then there's a sniff.

"Sheng Xing-gege..." The name plus title come out of his mouth without him even realizing it. Sheng Xing raises his head and then, second later, there stands a human.

"Ying-didi." Wei Wuxian blinks and then Lan Wangji is between them. He would coo at how protective his husband is of him... If not for the fact that he knows that Sheng Xing isn't someone either of them could fend off if they did get into a fight.

"So... this is Uncle then?" Wei Wuxian asks, most of what comes to the forefront is impressions and, well, strange 'images' but that should be expected, really, he'd been a soul during his time with Sheng Xing. Slowly getting up and giving the red furred immortal fox a more considering look.

"This is my litter brother, Sheng Feng. I doubt there's a courtesy names I can give for you to use." Shang Xing states. "I'm not sure why the locals decided they had the right to seal him away and siphon off his power to add to their own spiritual reserves but it was clearly for selfish reasons or them just wanting to boost their spiritual foundation."

He gets the feeling that Yu Han got a dirty look from Sheng Xing, given the way the young man yelped. "Either way, my brother found a way to send a request for my aid and I answered it." Wei Wuxian meets Sheng Xing's gaze.

"And what about us?! Besides, why should anyone believe you or your claims! Your just a spirit beast!" Yu Han snaps angrily, pretty much standing to Lan Wangji's left, clearly feeling bolder being near the imposing Second Jade of Lan, who's likely got his hand upon his sword.

Wei Wuxian can't help but feel offended on Sheng Xing's behalf, after all, the black furred immortal fox had the right of it in regards to Sheng Feng's situation. The unhealthy look of the crimson spirit beast is plain to see and then there's the matter of the various defensive arrays that had once surrounded the Source Tree. Even the purpose of the bindings that had once been wrapped about the Source Tree gave truth to the fact that Sheng Feng had not want to be a part of whatever it is that had happened to him.

And people will do their best to make things easy for themselves. Wei Wuxian mentally admits. Siphoning away spirit power from a sealed up spiritual being likely does sound very appealing.

Sheng Xing turns his gaze from his and he moves to get a better look at the transform fox's pose. There's a brittle smile on the fox's face, he's seen similar and sported similar as Sheng Xing addresses Yu Han. "And what makes humans so special that they can set themselves above all, hm?"

"Possessing thumbs, generally seems to be the most defining character trait that humans have." Sheng Xing cuts Yu Han off before the other could give a biting reply. "Thumbs are great, you know? But then, you likely don't recall ever lacking them, so sad really, but it happens, you know? People taking things for granted without really thinking about it." There's a sharp tone by the end there.

Sheng Xing is begins to walk towards the still sleeping red furred immortal fox, moving to the other side, away from Yu Han. His gaze follows Sheng Xing as he does so, it's not long before Lan Wangji moves to stand at his side, also keeping a fix gaze upon the transformed fox. Wei Wuxian isn't sure how to explain the emotions that are whirling within his chest.

"Ah, just to clarify things, but, well, how is it we... met?" Wei Wuxian inquires. Even he can tell it's a rather weak tone.

"Given you were just a soul at the time, I'm not surprised you have memory trouble." Remarks Sheng Xing and he is gently run his fingers through the crimson fur of his brother. "I'd expect it's difficult to fully recall them as well, given that your view of the world at the time doesn't mesh well with how a body remembers memories."

"Your in league with him?! With them ?!" Yu Han snaps before gulping at the glares that earned him. The man stumbles a few steps away from them, looking rather pale while his eyes flicker between Lan Wangji and Sheng Xing, who likely are very good at sporting said look.

"Would Xing-gege mind giving a time frame of when we met?" Wei Wuxian asks sweetly upon turning to look back at Sheng Xing, clamping his hands behind his back. Lan Wangji gives a slight nod that he notices out of the corner of his eye.

"Let's see, it's been, well, close to four years since you left, so about fourteen years when you arrived at my mountain top home." Recalls Sheng Xing and he blinks in surprise, which means that for almost ten years out of the thirteen years he spent dead, he'd been in Sheng Xing's company. "I recall how weak you'd been, heck you didn't even recall what sleep was." There's a fond smile upon Sheng Xing's face.

"Still recall how you woke me up that first time..." Wei Wuxian finds himself flushing from embarrassment, even if he doesn't recall the event in question. "You found other things to do while I slept, pretty much claimed my library."

"Which reminds me, Ying-didi, I have collected and stored your notes and your drawings." Wei Wuxian is rather surprised on hear that. "I'm willing to give them to you and would like to know where it is I should deliver them to, once I have done what I can to make my brother comfortable back at my home." He's unsure just what to make of the offer but a glance at Lan Wangji shows that he's also interest in whatever it was he'd been able to write down, it also sounds like he hadn't been conscripted into serving Sheng Xing, after all, the immortal fox is likely something of a minor God.

"The Cloud Recesses as I'm living with with my husband's sect, Gusu Lan!" Then it dawns on him that he hadn't introduce Lan Wangji to Sheng Xing. "This is him, Lan Zhan, courtesy name Lan Wangji."

The immortal fox glances between them with a look of being a touch stunned, sapphire eyes switching between Lan Wangji and Wei Wuxian before recovering and acceptance with a minor shrug. "I'll be sure to include something suitable as a wedding gift then, Ying-didi." And then Sheng Xing is once more a nine tailed black furred fox about the size of a donkey.

Sheng Feng leans on his brother and they watch as the pair vanish in a swirl of white and gold. Staring at the spot, Wei Wuxian feels a surge of affection and fondness towards Sheng Xing. "Looks like I ended up with another relative." Who's an immortal fox.

- = [{ H t H] } - =

Eight months later since their encounter with Sheng Xing and his brother, Sheng Feng, is when a package arrives viva a spectral fox, who's body is far too thin and long to be an actual fox. Upon placing the package into his hands, the spectral fox bows before fading from existence. While Wei Wuxian would have loved to open it up right then and there, they didn't.

Taking the package into the Cloud Recessess, heading for a certain tower, Wei Wuxian is the one to place it in an array so that they can check it over. After a few hours, of which Wei Wuxian does his best to find someway to be productive, does the Elder of the Lan Sect announce they can't find anything wrong with the package or its contents. With a grin, he is next to the package, more then eager to open it and begin reading the notes and looking over the drawings he'd done while living under Sheng Xing's roof.

With Lan Wangji and their adopted son, Lan Sizhui near, Wei Wuxian pulls the ribbon and if unravels. With ease, the wrapping falls away to reveal a beautiful chest that's not only carved but painted. There's only a simple plain circle at the front of the chest and it only unlocks when Wei Wuxian places a finger upon the surface, it glows white then green before opening the lid slightly. Within are neatly stack books along with stacks of pages with individual strings about each, the writing does resemble his own and skimming over the top pages only makes him all the more eager to untie them so he can read them.

The books are what interest both Lan Wangji and their son, getting a look at the covers, he suspects that the books were ones he's used to reference in the past and likely why he's got them, so he can continue on with his research. Then he comes upon the drawings bundle and realize that they are fairly strange. Or perhaps they only look strange, when viewed with eyes of a body. Wei Wuxian muses to himself.

Once everything is out does that leave another package at the bottom with a letter. Taking the letter, Wei Wuxian reads out loud, "Ying-didi, I hope this package finds both yourself and your husband in good health! I went through your various notes and realizing which among my books you clearly been using as references, I decided to include copies of said books so you may continue forward with your projects."

That drew interest from the remaining Sect Elders within the chamber. "As for the gift, well, I had trouble thinking of the perfect one, particularly given how you are both men." Wei Wuxian finds it rather odd Sheng Xing would bring it up, after all, foxes are commonly known for taking the form of women...

"So, my brother snapped at me while I'd been mopping about the subject and reminded me of a few things, which lead to me doing some research and after testing this out on various same sex pairing. All the offspring turned out healthy and as long as you follow the instructions contained with in, you will have a health kid or two as a result." He stiffens, looking at Lan Wangji, not sure if he can believe what it is that Sheng Xing is implying but feeling his heart racing all the same. "I've included already prepared spiritually charge items that are ready to begin the process, it just needs to be set up and for the two of you to decided on who's to be the father and who's to be the mother. Hard to explain why this is important but, well, context would help, I guess."

"When I run two females through this, the resulting offspring or offsprings is always female but when run with two males, the offspring or offsprings can be either gender." Wei Wuxian kind of wonders why that is but figures that it's hardly important, not when compared to what Sheng Xing's gift actually means for both his husband and himself. It's clear that from the way Lan Wangji is gripping the table that he's not the only one effected while there's a strangled sound coming from at least one of the Elders who are still within the chamber.

"I'll be an older brother sooner then later?" Lan Sizhui murmurs with a slightly stunned expression and he's certain that his ear tips are red. "Seems like." He manages to say and Lan Wangji looks up then straight at him, eyes slightly wide, he gives his husband a smile.

"Human babies take roughly ten months before coming into the world, so, the resulting large seed will take about the same amount of time. Again, caring instructions are within the actual package and I hope the two of you will use this when you feel that you are ready to be parents." Wei Wuxian reads out. "From your Older Brother, Sheng Xing."

Lan Qiren stalks over and Wei Wuxian offers the letter to his Uncle-in-law while more of the Elders approach the table. Not that Wei Wuxian is in the right state of mind to care, after all, what Sheng Xing's gift means, implies, it's rather overwhelming. After all, it's clear that somehow, in some way, Sheng Xing honestly does care about him, even if having known him for such a short amount of time, after all, the black furred fox is an immortal fox. So much so that he'd created, from scratch, a way for same sex couples can have a kid or two.

Epilogue

Carrying Lan Lim on his back, she's so tired from having walked for a bit, Wei Wuxian look towards the strange stone house. He could have flown all the way to it but his daughter had far too much energy and wanted to walk for a bit. So, Lan Wangji carried onto the house with their sons, Lan Ling and Lan Ming.

Raising three five year olds isn't easy, particularly when their daughter takes after Wei Wuxian. Still, they had planned to visit Sheng Xing, to personally thank him for his gift and just to pay the immortal fox a visit. Bringing their kids along, well, they did want to meet their Uncle Xing, who's an immortal fox in possession of nine tails.

Drawing near, Wei Wuxian spies a horse size black fox laying on the ground. Once he's close enough, Wei Wuxian smiles at the sight of both A-Ling and A-Ming nestled among the mass of tails. "Your husband is inside." Sheng Xing informs him with clear amusement glinting in those sapphire blue eyes.

"Xing-gege." Wei Wuxian says as a greeting before he gently begins to rousing his daughter. It takes her a minute to wake and then she freezes at the sight of Sheng Xing.

Chuckling, he crouches and lets her slide down his back before standing once more. Lan Lim moves and grips his cloths as she is now very shy in the presence of her Uncle Xing. "And who might you be, little one?" Sheng Xing gently inquires, doing his best to look non-threatening.

"Lan Lim." His daughter says shyly and he ruffles her hair gently, finding it adorable that she's so shy all of a sudden. "Your dad's elder brother? Sheng Xing?"

"Ying-didi, really? I'm so hurt! I thought you wanted me as your older brother?!" Sheng Xing remarks in a clear exaggerated manner and he plays along.

"Maybe you should change your clan name, Xing-gege, so nobody would make that mistake." Wei Wuxian remarks, acting as though about nine years haven't passed since they met face to face. "Wei Xing has a nice ring to it, right, daughter?"

This works in helping to sooth whatever nerves his daughter has about being confronted with a powerful spirit beast that he likely ranks as a minor god. "Or maybe dad should be Sheng Wuxian." His daughter exclaims and as he acts out raged, she runs up and gives Sheng Xing a hug about the neck before proceeding to petting Sheng Xing's black coat of fur.

They mock verbal spar for Lan Lim's entertainment for a bit before Wei Wuxian heads into the house to find his husband. The place seems to be familiar and as he moves about the main floor, finds his husband in the kitchen, looking a touch lost. It takes him a few seconds to remember how things worked in the kitchen and reassures Lan Wangji, "It's all powered by spirit arrays, watch and sense how I do it."

It's easy, turning on the oven, adjusting how hot the one element will be. Wei Wuxian talks about the kitchen as memories of his time here as a soul begin to line up within his head. Wei Wuxian relates various stories of kitchen mishaps along with recalling details about the various arrays. He pauses to ask what it is that Lan Wangji wants to make and once he hears, he helps collect the various ingredients from where they are kept, timeless arrays preserving their freshness the moment they are place within them along with showing how to use the sink to get water along with which knob will give cold water and which does hot, along with mixing them to get warm water to wash their hands with.

Soon enough, they have various pots on the oven with each sporting their own temperatures. Giving the kitchen a look, he grabs his husband by the hand and grab their various packs, leading him up the stairs. It doesn't take long to place their things in the room that Shen Xing created for him to use, not that he had much use of it as he doesn't sleep and most of what he'd been working on remained in the library. "One more place I want to show you before we head back to the kitchen."

With a grin, he leads Lan Wangji down the stairs once more and then towards the basement stairs, being sure to activate the lighting arrays he dimly recalls Sheng Xing using. With soft light, Wei Wuxian walks down the steps and grins at the sight of the hot spring. "It's got different levels to it, so we can bring the kids down as well, we just need to keep them in the more shallow part of the pool, which is easy to see, given how clear the water is."

"Towels should be in that room over there and there's a... he calls them, showers, that way, which can spray cold water or warm." Wei Wuxian gestures to each. "Down that hallway is the laundry room, there's a washer and a drier plus cloth lines." Again, he dimly recalls what a washer and a drier are but then, he hadn't needed to wear cloths.

He hears Lan Wangji hum and watches as his husband walks over to the hot spring, crouching, checks the temperature. Wei Wuxian admires his husband as he does so and can already imagine what they can do alone down here as long as Sheng Xing is willing to watch their kids for a bit. "Shameless."

Chuckling, it's clear his husband caught sight of his intentions upon his face but merely grins widely at his now approaching husband. They head back up stairs and he is sure to turn off the light array of the basement. They return to the kitchen after making a detour to check on their kids, it seems that their daughter is sitting next to Sheng Xing's head and scratching behind the immortal fox's ear.

His only regret is that Lan Sizhui couldn't be with them for this visit but is determined to bring him along on their next visit.

The End

Cultivators OnLine: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation!

/ | (= ^ _ ^ =) | **

The sights and sounds are rather jarring never mind the feeling of the gentle wind across his face along with him feeling so... Closing his eyes, the man retraces his memories that lead to this. Arrived home, turned on the computer, started the prep for Ascending Immortal Dragons, changed cloths, was still debating between signing in as Wei Wuxian or Shu Ting . . .

Looking down at his cloths, he finds the general shades of grey robes that sport trims of bright red with hints of black, meaning that he must have picked his third game account, Wei Wuxian, also the infamous [Yiling Patriarch] . It's been nearly thirteen years since he's played Ascending Immortal Dragons using Wei Wuxian, he'd played an additional two years on his fourth account, a woman avatar he'd named Shu Ting and her build was an Alchemist , he'd had some fun with that character but he'd found himself getting far too pressed with real life and feeling a need to recharge from the game, he quit playing it along with putting his various note books on the shelf and putting his digital documents onto a flash drive before deleting it all off of his computer to make room for more memory.

Wei Wuxian again takes a look around and notices the banners of on display and winces, after all, he expected to log on at his purchase property that's nestled in the [Burial Mounds] . He'd bought huge stretches of it for dirt cheap and even had everything needed to begin building a Settlement that can be surrounded by farms, heck, he even had the blue prints to build a [Silk Worm Barn] ! A simple house that sported a kitchen, a bedroom, a dinner/living room, and a study/library. In the back of the house had been the where he'd put the chest filled to the brim with everything needed to begin building a Settlement , even enough to advance it a good five stages . . .

So, yes, he is rather shocked at the sight of purple banners of the [Yunmeng Jiang Sect] . It's the major sect that he'd join before giving Wei Wuxian his Courtesy Name, the character's name at the time had been Wei Ying. He'd even participated in the Sect War under the purple banner, which is usually called the [Sunshot Campaign] , it was during that war that he managed the trick of using [Resentful Energy] to mimic a Zombie Apocalypse in game. Sure, he quit the sect afterwards, Wei Wuxian's popularity among both the Players and the NPCs was at a low point, few if any NPCs could stand to be around his character, not that he'd let that stop him from . . .

"You have some nerve." Startling slightly, Wei Wuxian finds a trio of Cultivators of the Jiang Sect before him. It seems while he'd been trying to organize his thoughts and disbelieving his current situation, he's getting arrested. "'Blessed of Heaven' Wei Wuxian ." Spats the man who's likely very important and the clear leader of the trio.

He chuckles in embarrassment while a hand goes to settle on his waist and the other to his head. "Yes, I guess it seems like that, doesn't it?" His voice is both alien and familiar, he does his best to ignore that sensation of a headache and the feeling of Knowing who this person is.

The seemingly twenty year old glowers at him before gesturing for the pair to move. "You're under arrest, you demon." The man snaps. "Blessed of Heaven or not, you're got some nerve appearing before here."

There's a crowd of people around, he notices the Player marker above various people's heads seemingly fading in and out of existence. As he is man handled, Wei Wuxian doesn't fight against them, after all, he's got a migraine and spending time in a cell should give him a chance to think without all these bright distractions.

C (o _ o) D

In the end, napping in hopes of fending off his migraine only led to dreams, dreams of things he's done with his character in the first person perspective. Just laying on the crappy pile of hay covered in a thin sheet of cloth, Wei Wuxian finally bites the bullet and speaks a few commands to bring up something, his Character Menu or his Inventory, only to find neither working, although he does get an error prompt, so, he's kind of on the right track. Without any more ideas, he finds himself humming while his hands are settled on his midsection, a finger tapping away impatiently.

His brain pounds but he does his best to recall information concerning Wei Wuxian's Spiritual Abilities, trying to figure out if he can use any of it. Sitting up, he sits cross legged and tries to recall old text information that he'd read years before, during his decision of 'playing' like an actual young Cultivator, which entailed reading various books and treaties concerning how to cultivate a Gold Core. Which also led to him creating actual notes in game that he'd been able to copy the data of and store on his computer to review out of the game, which ended up on that flash drive . . .

Which means that I should be able to read those notes, once I am out of here and make my way back to that house. The currently displaced Player, who's now his character, Wei Wuxian. In the end, the day ends and his migraine is still pounding in his brain, there's no delivery of food or drink but there's also nobody demanding answers to question concerning his motives of being in Yunmeng either.

Sighing, Wei Wuxian returns to settling down on the straw bed and does his best to fall asleep. Hoping that tomorrow will allow him to access his Character Menu or, at the very least, the Settings.

C (o _ o) D

"Get up!" A feminine voice hisses, which startles Wei Wuxian awake. "Wei Wuxian."

It's been a good four days since he found himself inserted into Wei Wuxian's skin along into the game of Ascending Immortal Dragons. Since then, the most pointed change he's experienced is accessing a slim downed Character Menu, it seems being [Imprisoned] is blocking the rest of his information. Oh, and his migraine has tamed down, although he's dreaming dream from first person perspective.

"Do I know you?" He asks, eyes flickering above the two's head for a Player mark but both are bare. What was up with it flickering like that anyway? Wei Wuxian wonders in an off handed manner as he walks over to the door.

Once he's standing before the bars of the cell, the woman scowls as she studies him. "Young Master Wei Wuxian..." A masculine voice stammers out as the other cloaked Cultivator bows low at him. "Blessed Wei Wuxian." There's a hint of awe and unease in the tone of the second.

"The hinges." The woman snaps and it startles the man, who's quick to use a brush that gleams in what little light there is on said hinges. He hums in approval, given that this seems to be a rescue slash escape.

Soon enough, the woman unlocks the lock on the door and swings the door towards her, the oil does its job. Stepping out, a sword is thrust at his chest along with a folded cloak that Feels familiar, looking at the two cloaks that his rescuers are wearing, they have a similar Feel . As quick as he can, he puts on the cloak and puts the sword into his belt, managing to keep silent, which seems to earn him the approval of the woman of the pair.

"Later." Is all she states in such a way that demands that Wei Wuxian to obey. Giving her a nod, after all, he's rather hungry and thirsty along with bore. The displayed man falls into step behind her as she takes the lead, the man waits for him to walk before him before falling into step behind him.

It's the middle of the night as they exit out of the underground prison and it takes them a few minutes to slip pass the courtyard of the prison. Once they are outside of the walls of the above ground guard post, the woman takes out three [Disposable Recall Talisman] . Without any reason not to trust the woman, Wei Wuxian takes the offered one and waits for the signal to activate it. Thankfully, something clicks when it comes to activating the talisman, teleporting him away from [Yunmeng Jiang Sect] .

The arrival point is Feels so Familiar and yet, Wei Wuxian Knows it isn't, after all, he's only arrived in this world roughly five days ago. Five days ago, I was nearly forty year old, US civilian working the standard nine to five job five days a week. He reminds himself as he takes a look around.

It's a village, a village that's been built upon the land of the Burial Mound. No, this is a Settlement . Wei Wuxian realizes, after all, hadn't he bought large track of land at said location? Hadn't he expected to build a Settlement there? "How?" This house... It's gotten bigger, hasn't it?

"You left the plans and the building material, what, you didn't expect us to use them?" Snaps the woman, causing him to stiffen as it dawns on him just who might be the builders of this Settlement . "Come, I want to examine you after this disappearing stunt of yours."

"Might I have your names at the very least?" Wei Wuxian inquires politely, although his stomach clenches as he can't help but have an inkling of what their last names will likely be. The young man fidgets and stammers as an introduction, "Young Master Wei... I'm Wen Ning, Courtesy Name Wen Qionglin."

Called it. The displaced man think while doing his best to give the nervous Wen Qionglin an encouraging smile. "Nice to meet you, Wen Qionglin."

"And I'm Wen Qing. Now, into the house." Snaps the now named woman, Wen Qing. Wen Qionglin seems a touch mortified by Wen Qing's manner but he does as instructed.

The cloaks come off once within the house, as they move further into the house, Wen Qing taking the lead, a young voice calls out, "Auntie?" Wen Qing pauses and turns to the youth that's standing by the kitchen's archway. "A-Yuan... You should be in bed." Wen Qing states in a far gentler voice then Wei Wuxian has heard her in their short association.

"A-Xian?" The youth startles at catching sight of him and he can't help but blink at the nickname that Wen Yuan blurts out, as if it's normal for it to be spoken. Giving the youth a gentle yet warm smile and wonder how it is that the teen seems to know him on sight, it's just another question he files away. "Hello, A-Yuan." He returns and this causes Wen Yuan to blink before coming in close, then giving him a hug. "A-Xian's awake!"

Not being a heartless monster, Wei Wuxian returns the hug, he mentally moves this question up on the list, after all, this is rather bizarre kind of welcome, strange, but not unwelcome, really. Something about the youth seems very familiar, so very familiar and gives him a sense of home that he finds he likes. Actually, they both seem kind of familiar as well . . . He glances at Wen Qing as that thought crosses his mind.

"Bed, A-Yuan." Wen Qing states in a firmer voice and can tell that she is sporting a fond expression. "Best listen to your aunt, A-Yuan." He adds after a few seconds.

"Ok..." Murmurs Wen Yuan and Wei Wuxian gives the teen once last back pat before releasing him. Wen Yuan studies his face, eyes shimmering with tears upon letting go. "Night Auntie. A-Ning."

With that, Wen Yuan pulls away and heads for the stair, likely heading for his room that he assumes is on the second level of the house. Wen Qing studies him, it's clear she's not sure of how to ask. "He seems... familiar? Both of you do too, honestly, now that I give it some thought." He is sure to look at them both.

A look flashes across Wen Qing's face and some of her tension seems to loosen from her pose. "Well, I have been your personal doctor these pass thirteen years." Then ushers them onward, into a rather large room that kind of gives off the Aura of a Shrine with a rather large bed sporting soft pillows and blankets. He notices Chenqing resting upon a fancy black bamboo holder and there's a space under the dizi that likely held his sword, Suibian, which is likely the sword that he'd been given now that he recalls it's on his person.

"So... How is it that I had a doctor for nearly fourteen years? I am Blessed of Heaven, our bodies vanish when we are hibernating." Wei Wuxian inquires upon settling on the bed and offering Wen Qing his wrist so she can take a look at his Meridians.

"It is an interesting case, but then, your practice of Cultivating Resentful Energy seems to keep your mortal shell upon this plane of existence during your hibernation." Well, damn. He thinks upon hearing Wen Qing state that. "You can only imagine the reaction it caused us when we learnt that our Revered Benefactor's mortal shell continues to dwell upon this Mortal Realm while his Spirit was away and concern over how we can repay you for what you've done for us."

Oh yea, I did pretty much went around collecting remnants of the Wens back then, huh? It had caused a lot of debate about what happened to the remaining members of the Wen clan. Then again, what conditions he found at those work camps . . . Well, none of the NPCs tried very hard to stop him and he hadn't a plan concerning them besides send them to the site of his future Settlement .

"The plans for your Settlement along with the materials... Well, is it any wonder we set about building it?" Wen Qing remarks, likely reading his thoughts upon his face.

"No, I suppose not." Wei Wuxian admits, feeling very much an idiot, never mind that he'd caused the disappearance of the surviving Wen clan. "I had not thought much about my actions in regards to you and your clan mates these pass thirteen years." There's really no lie he can think to tell and he feels guilty that he'd pretty much conscripted a group of actual people to live at such a hard place.

Guilt settles in his midsection and then Wen Qionglin exclaims, "Your actions saved us from the Jin Sect and their Work Camps! You guided us to a place where we can build a new home! You even supplied us with all we needed to do so!" Wei Wuxian stares at the man with wide eyes. "You didn't ask for anything in return, either! Young Master Wei did not need to go so far for the kin of his former enemies!"

He's taken back by Wen Qionglin's statement and Wen Qing snorts softly. "You save us when you had your own interests to look out for." She remarks while Wen Qionglin seems to realize what he'd said and withered into a state of embarrassment.

In the end, Wei Wuxian doesn't really know how to continue the discussion concerning the Wen clan and his own relationship over these pass thirteen years. It's clear, just by the state of his room, that he's become a rather important figure to the Wen who not only settled at his Settlement but seem to view it as him giving them a chance at life. And, looking at it like that, remembering world history he'd learnt growing up, it's likely his actions very well likely saved them from the 'tender' mercies of the Great Sects, who'd been recovering from the [Sunshot Campaign] .

The thoughts of what happened in the wake of the first World War . . . Yes, there had been plenty of people who'd had a bone to pick with the surviving 'Wen-Dogs'. People were still people after all.

C (o _ o) D

"So, what do you think so far, A-Yuan?" Wei Wuxian inquires to Wen Sizhui, he'd been the one to pick the Courtesy Name for Wen Yuan, but for now, well, he's agreed to answer to Wei Sizhui. It's been decided to keep the secret concerning the fact that the Wen clan and them living at Luanzang Wei Settlement.

It's been over three months since he'd arrive in this world as Wei Wuxian and dealing with the fact that it's looking like there's no way to reverse what's been done to him along with dealing with the changes within himself, which went beyond just possessing a Golden Core and ability to use Resentful Energy, but to changes to his personality and his memories of the world of Ascending Immortal Dragons. He's been able to distract himself with re-reading his library of book and old notes, familiarizing new abilities and skills, getting introduced to the rest of the Wen clan, and just enjoying the company of Granny Wen, Qing, Ning, and Yuan, who share his home.

"It's so different, Senior Wei!" The teen states, his grip on his Yat-sen, which is a bamboo fan turned into a spiritual tool and weapon if used right. Given the scarcity of metal at Luanzang Wei Settlement , those Wens who are learning to be Cultivators have been forced to make do with unconventional weapons, fans are very common among them. "There's so many different people . . ."

"Yes, there are . . ." Wei Wuxian agrees and sighs at the sight of the very faint Player marks that hover over certain members among the throngs of people. His heart sinks at the sight of them, so faint and see through, it makes him feel dreadful at the very thought of asking any of them any pointed questions concerning what happened that day, over three months ago that landed him in Wei Wuxian's body and in this former world that he'd thought of as an online game.

The few people they encountered on the road have made mention of the strange behavior of the Blessed of Heaven, there's much gossip about the reasons for why they're more tied in the Mortal Realm then before and given what little he recalls from before this became all too real, Wei Wuxian recalls that there had been a free massive expansion to Ascending Immortal Dragons and centered around access to a whole new world with new monsters and resources. It's hard for him to remember the details, honestly, as he gets a headache trying to think about the End of an Era expansion and he's pretty sure there's some detail that's evading him or, perhaps more accurate, he's not allowed to recall.

It's from various travelers that they learnt about a [Night Hunt] that's located at Dafan Mountain. The number of Cultivators milling the village is slight cause of concern given it took them a week to arrive and Wei Wuxian frowns slightly, after all, he'd expected to arrive at the tail end of a [Night Hunt] not in the mist of an active investigation! "How are you feeling, A-Yuan?" He asks the teen, suddenly aware that the youth might be feeling overwhelmed by all of these people about.

"I'm ok." Assures Wen Sizhui and Wei Wuxian studies the teenager for a few seconds, wanting to be sure of the truth of that statement. Wen Sizhui does seem like he's not overly whelmed as of yet, so, in the end, Wei Wuxian decides to trust the young Cultivator to know his limits along with voicing them.

"Just be sure to inform me when you aren't, A-Yuan." Wei Wuxian informs the youth in a gentle and firm tone. The teen gives him a smile and it's clear that the youth is touched by his concern, which is how Wei Wuxian's expression morphs into a fond smile before sobering up to regard the crowds about them, he spies a group of white wearing Cultivators, the forehead ribbons gracing their heads mark them as coming from the [Gusu Lan Sect] .

"It's the infamous Hanguang-Jun!" The gossip gets swept into focusing on Hanguang-Jun while the crowds turn to look at the leader of the group of Lan Cultivators, Wei Wuxian's own gaze lands on said infamous Hanguang-Jun. "Lan Wangji! The Second Jade!"

Various sentences get swapped as the group led by Lan Wangji moves towards the local blacksmith shop, the topic of the gossip ignoring the attention he has attracted. Second Jade huh? That, kind of sounds familiar . . . Ah well, best get on with gathering information about the situation. Wei Wuxian thinks to himself.

"Time to do some fact checking, Sizhui!" He states as he takes a moment to center himself. After all, something is off concerning this [Night Hunt] if it's been going on for over a week now, perhaps they'll be the ones to solve this puzzle, which will be good start to Wen Sizhui's involvement in the wider world.

C (o _ o) D

So, it turns out that the thing consuming souls wasn't some monster or spirit but a natural statue that'd been worshiped as a deity, a Goddess. Joy. Wei Wuxian thinks as he continues to play Chenqing, directing the various ghosts and raised corpses to attack the moving and empowered statue.

I wish there had been some 'natural occurring' Ferocious Corpses milling about instead of post-burial bodies and listless ghosts. The statue deity bats the few corpses he'd raised away while ignoring the ghosts trying to herd the statue away from its intended prey, who happens to be a teen younger then Wen Sizhui by a few years and a member of the Lin Sect, given the attire.

Fucking rock for brains bitch! Wei Wuxian gives up on feeding the ghosts and raised corpses energy, switching to a sound attack that's to be fueled using [Resentful Energy] instead of [Spiritual Energy] , after all, given the nature of the target, the typical energy won't deal much in the way of damage, not unless the Cultivator is at a higher stage in pursuit of ascension. There's a good chance it won't work, he's only become comfortable with having said powers at his command but he refuses to let the kid die without him trying something!

Feeling the heaviness that is filled with resentment and regret pool at the back of his throat, Wei Wuxian blows it out as he breaths out, Chenqing sounds out while his fingers dance about the holes along its body. Two of the statue's left side arms get shattered into shards and into dust, the sudden vanishing of the weight causes the rock deity to tip onto the right. "Run, god damn it, RUN!" Wei Wuxian bellows at the kid, who comes out of his shock to obey.

Wei Wuxian can't help but thank god as the kid vanishes into the surrounding forest as the statue fueled by faith and wishes focuses on him with something that might be akin to fear and anger. It's hard to say, given it's face is hard to see given their distance between them. That attack is something he's recovering from but that doesn't keep Wei Wuxian from smirks darkly at the statue, he can feel [Resentful Energy] emanating from his body and his eye sight being more keen, which likely means that they are glowing red. It's effects are more for intimidation then anything, he's not sure if the statue will call his bluff but at the very least, Wei Wuxian will be the focus on its attention and next attack.

"Bring it, you stone bitch." Wei Wuxian states as he brings Chenqing back to his lips, feeling his ability to use [Resentful Energy] returning. The statue's crimson eyes widen then narrow and its mouth opens wide, no sound comes from the statue as it raises itself up. As it charges at him, it gets attack by another sound attack, only this time, the energy fueling it is spiritual in nature instead of resentful.

This attack shatters the waist and the legs of the statue become segmented blocks and the upper body falls forward as the arms move to catch it from falling flat on the ground. With a feral grin that is filled with teeth, Wei Wuxian focuses on the head and once more, lets loose a sound attack, this time, it's far more focus and with lower amount of energy empowering it. The head breaks into shards and the rest of its body break apart.

Taking a moment to savor this victory, Wei Wuxian begins to control the shroud of energy that's emanating from himself as he turns to see who it is that stopped the charge. Golden eyes are the first thing that Wei Wuxian notices and then the forehead ribbon. Ah, a Lan... It's, what did they call him? Wei Wuxian does his best to remember the title. Hanguang-Jun.

"Many thanks, Hanguang-Jun!" Wei Wuxian chirps in a light way upon the other turning to look his way. Turning his gaze away from the Lan Cultivator, he walks over to the statue, curious if there's anything for him to collect from the remains of the deity statue, putting Chenqing onto his belt as he does so.

Feeling the weight of the Lan's eyes upon his back, Wei Wuxian finds that nothing pops up once he reaches the remains. So, that's gone as well. The transmigrated Player thinks to himself.

"Hanguang-Jun?" He turns his head at hearing Wen Sizhui's voice and is glad that the teen is alright. "Senior Wei!" There's clear happiness and relief in the youth's tone, so much so that he can't help but smile softly in Wen Sizhui's direction.

"Sizhui! I'm glad that you found some companions to watch your back." There seems to be another teen in Wen Sizhui's company, another Lan it seems.

The younger Lan seems to be blinking owlishly at him while Wen Sizhui is already making his way to Wei Wuxian's side. It's clear that both teens are well and unharmed since the revealing of the culprit at that cave temple. Which brought out thoughts concerning what became of those other, former Players, fellow Blessed of Heaven, who'd died confronting the stone deity, wondering if they'd died for good but found himself doubting they had.

Yes, he's being very rude in ignoring Hanguang-Jun and not exchanging introductions with either of them, but it's something he couldn't care about right now besides checking Wen Sizhui is alright, after all, he rather not have Wen Qing angry with him over the statue of her young 'nephew'. Never mind how Wen Ning would fuss over the situation. Wei Wuxian muses to himself.

"This is Lan Jingyi," Wen Sizhui says only to look back to find that the other teen hadn't approached with him. "Ah..." It's clear that Wen Sizhui is puzzled about the lack of the other following after him.

"He must be skittish about meeting me." He says soothingly and that seems to ruffle the kid's feathers enough to startle him out of his mood. Lan Jingyi marches over with his features set in a determination cast and tension in his pose.

"I'm not skittish!" The kid says in a mulish and childish way, although the Lan youth does come to a stop about a foot behind Wen Sizhui. It's clear that his companion isn't sure what to make of the change within Lan Jingyi.

Most of the Wens don't react much to the aftermath of my shroud or lingering eye effect. Wei Wuxian muses and feels like something, a link, is there about that reaction but puts it away for now. "I'm Wei Wuxian, yes, that Wei Wuxian and yes, I'm the Blessed of Heaven's infamous [Yiling Patriarch] ."

The eyes go wide and the teen goes a touch more pale before taking a step back, looking widely around until his eyes land on Hanguang-Jun. Wei Wuxian's own gaze also lands on the man a few seconds after Lan Jingyi's own gaze. The older Lan Cultivator's gaze is hard to pick apart never mind the face being could be pass as having been carved stone then mere flesh and blood.

"And you're his student?" Lan Jingyi asks Wen Sizhui, clearly not sure what to make of this development. His gaze returns to the pair of teens before him.

"He's my traveling companion, Lan Jingyi. His teachers trusted him to my care." He states as he reaches over to ruffle the youth's hair, Wen Sizhui ducks his head slightly in embarrassment, cheeks tinted red.

Then the Lan youth's face grows confused and takes a moment to study Wei Wuxian before doing the same to Wen Sizhui. "Wei... Didn't you say your name is Wei Sizhui?" And then it's like a look of dawning understanding of something chases away Lan Jingyi's confusion.

Wen Sizhui looks at him in hopes of clarifying this realization that the young Cultivator seems to have while Wei Wuxian begins to figure out just what kind of conclusion the other teen has drawn concerning Wen Sizhui and his relationship. After all, he did speak the truth about having Wen Sizhui's teachers entrusting the youth's safety to him. It's not that he gets very far in narrowing down the conclusion of Lan Jingyi's thoughts though, not with the sound of crackling lightning and Hanguang-Jun beginning to walk closer, the man's eyes fixated at something.

Nope, someone. Wei Wuxian realizes as he turns to notice a vaguely familiar man in purple robes of the [Yunmeng Jiang Sect] and holding a whip that sports purple lightning. Then he notices that boy, who's a member of the [Lanling Lin Sect] and the kid he'd saved earlier, the one he shouted at to run away. "That whip..."

"Hanguang-Jun, I see you found my escaped prisoner." Remarks the Cultivator with the whip and Wei Wuxian actually rolls his eyes at the comment. Oh yea, like that's something to brag about.

"Oh yes, what a crime I committed, just standing in a middle of a crowded market place. Why, I must have breathed in the wrong direction to earn that arrest." Wei Wuxian shanks with a sneer as he crosses his arms over his chest, not at all impressed with the man's weight throwing.

He feels everyone's gazes upon him, the Jiang Cultivator's face gets such an angry cast while the Lin youth looks rather startled at Wei Wuxian's disrespectful tone. "You just said your the [Yiling Patriarch] ! The man who can command ghosts and wandering corpses! The man who made off with the remainder of the Wen clan for his own use!" Lan Jingyi exclaims.

"And I wasn't doing anything when I was arrested." Wei Wuxian states simply. "Getting arrested for things I've done years ago... It's like someone deciding to punish you five years after you broke one of those thousand rule of your Sect."

"I mean, what crime have I done in recent years?" He asks curiously, glancing between the grown men. "It's been, what, over thirteen years since my last appearance? Are you telling me that there haven't been others who has done far greater crimes, who can be granted the role of villain during these recent years?"

Wei Wuxian wonders what Wen Sizhui makes of all of this, not that it matters as something seems to ripple through the air. His hands rests on Chenqing while settling his gaze upon a pouch that is on Hanguang-Jun's person. Something within it is moving, straining to get out. "Is that the..."

"Ah, yea. I guess it is." Lan Jingyi replies to Wen Sizhui's question. "Uncle?" A younger voice inquires, uncertainty coloring the youngest boy's tone.

"What's in that [Qiankun Bag] , Lan Wangji?" Demands the Cultivator holding the whip. Ah . . .

"Where'd you get it?" Wei Wuxian inquires curiously as he notices how filled with resentment the contained item is. "What's its form?" Taking a few steps towards the dignified Lan.

The man is already beginning to play a song upon his guqin, it takes him a few seconds to realize that it's [Rest] . It's not really working though . . . Wei Wuxian realizes and he begins to wonder at what could be the cause of the agitation.

It couldn't have been due to me from then or it would have started acting up back then. Wei Wuxian reason. "What kind of mischief did it cause?" He inquires to Lan Jingyi, noticing how pale the teen has grown and having moved to put Wei Wuxian between himself and Lan Wangji.

"Just devoured the arm of the person before killing them." The young Cultivator admits and that causes him to glance at the remains of the deity statue. Humming, he brings Chenqing up to his lips and calls upon his own [Spiritual Energy] and plays [Rest] as well.

It doesn't work at first but when he played off key to Lan Wangji, he Felt something, a very slight something but a something all the same. So, Wei Wuxian played [Rest] off key to Lan Wangji. The arm within the bag calms down with their combined efforts after a good five minutes of playing their almost duet and in those minutes, more people started to arrive.

"You best get back from the remains, Hanguang-Jun! The energy hanging around the remains must have rousted it!" Wei Wuxian chirps once he's lowered Chenqing from his lips.

He's awarded with a thoughtful hum before graced with a look of appraisal. There's whispers and Wei Wuxian glances around, it seems that the Jiang Cultivator no longer has that whip out and sports a sour look. Among those gathered, none sport that ghost of a Player's mark, not that it's that surprising, given his few attempts at interacting with other Players wasn't what he'd expected. In fact, it wasn't unlike dealing with NPCs . . . Back when I was playing the game at least.

It's clear that some kind of mental fuckery happened to them and that's kind of troubling, yet it also explains why people are so worried about the Blessed of Heaven. It might also explain why few of them really think of me as being the [Yiling Patriarch] as well. Wei Wuxian muses to himself.

"So, the [Night Hunt] is over with, right? What with the mystery solved and the Goddess pretty much shattered into ruin." He muses and few seem willing to dispute his statement. "So! We best be off then, Sizhui!"

"Yes Senior Wei." Wen Sizhui agrees and none seem incline to stop them, as they walk away from the remains of the statue. Murmurs break out at their backs but Wei Wuxian keeps on walking no matter what's said behind his back.

Once they are away, Wei Wuxian turns and speaks with Wen Sizhui. "You did great, A-Yuan." He informs the youth in a firm yet gentle tone.

Wen Sizhui worries his bottom lip, clearly looking unconvinced with his statement. "People... A-Xian, the Goddess just..." Wei Wuxian takes a few steps and then pulls the teen into a hug, gently rubbing his back.

"It's the risk we face on [Night Hunt] s, A-Yuan." I promised to do my best to be there for you. "If we don't gamble with our lives to stop such tragedies that such beings can cause, then only more will lose their lives when they don't have to."

C (o _ o) D

"So, you are the lunatic cut-sleeve, huh?" Wei Wuxian inquires upon coming face to face with the solo survivor of the Mo Family, one Mo Xuanyu, former member of the [Lanling Lin Sect] and bastard son of the previous Sect Leader . What none could explain is the Feel of [Resentful Energy] that he's been picking up from the young man, it clings to him like wet cloths but it's not a part of him like it is with Wei Wuxian.

There's a look of resentment but also fear that crosses about Mo Xuanyu's face before apathy settles in the young man's eyes and a bitter, broken smile upon the face. "Yea, I guess I am. Why? Come to gawk at me for a bit?" The tone is rather bitter and angry.

"Actually, I'm curious about the arm that the Lan Sect picked up here." Wei Wuxian explains. "And then I noticed the energy clinging to you, which only brought up another set of questions to put before you." He adds lightly and the shorter man stiffens, eyes widening.

"Wei Wuxian, a Blessed of Heaven, and commonly known as the [Yiling Patriarch] ." Wei Wuxian introduces himself and Mo Xuanyu's mouth opens up wide with muscles tensing, it's clear that the flight or fight response is fighting for dominance within the young man's mind. "And this is my traveling companion, Wei Sizhui."

That startles Mo Xuanyu slightly that the man's attention moves from Wei Wuxian himself to Wen Sizhui. "So... You mind coming with us for a cup of tea? I'm paying!" He congratulates himself as they leave the shed that seems to be where Mo Xuanyu lives, it seems that the man isn't comfortable moving into his new property or it hasn't sunk in that being the last member of the Mo Family means he's the new owner.

It's surprising how passive aggressive Mo Xuanyu is about following him but they do end up at a tea house and ordered a simple green tea for the three of them, inquiring if Wen Sizhui wants any of the pastries the place sells. "Your acting different." Blurts out Mo Xuanyu once the waitress takes Wen Sizhui's pastry order.

"For a Blessed of Heaven, I mean." The other man admits and, sadly, Wei Wuxian does know what Mo Xuanyu means by that. "Why?"

"Oddly enough, it's likely due to my Cultivation of [Resentful Energy] ." The dimension-ally displaced man admits after studying Mo Xuanyu for a few seconds, watching the other squirm. "It's interfering with my usual capabilities as a Blessed of Heaven but I'm also more... here then them, I guess." His Character Menu is still so lacking and he doesn't seem to have a Level nor can Wei Wuxian spy the Level of those around him with the use of the [Observation] feature, be it used on monsters or humans. It seems to be working differently, giving me some kind of impression of their relative power.

Mo Xuanyu's expression is of wonder and worry, there's clear interest though, on learning more. "Has this happen to you before?" Asks the man across from him, it's then that Wei Wuxian notices that Mo Xuanyu is wearing make up for the first time.

"Not until the Descent Day." Wei Wuxian states calmly as he begins to take in the state of Mo Xuanyu. Everything changed that day and here isn't a place I wish to discuss personal matters.

"So, what method have you come up with in order to use [Resentful Energy] ?" Who's been toying around with the concept these pass decade? Wei Wuxian inquires curiously, though the answer to his thought should be pretty obvious, really.

The young man gets rather nervous and self conscious but, after a bit of silence in which their tea order arrives and Wen Suzhui pours the cups, it seems as though Mo Xuanyu comes into some inner peace over how this conversation is going to go. After downing the first cup after a few sips, Mo Xuanyu begins by giving an over view on the topic of [Spirit Array] s, the theory concerning their nature and use. Wei Wuxian is reminded of discussions of among Players about if the arrays couldn't be based off of Naruto's seals or computer programs as Mo Xuanyu speaks, making him wonder if he wasn't the only one to create in game books concerning in game content.

Or maybe the locals over heard discussions between Players and wrote it down instead? Wei Wuxian wonders, noticing how intense Wen Suzhui is about listening, it's also clear that the youth wants to interject but is holding himself back, for now at least. "So, you learnt which characters resonated with [Resentful Energy] and began using that as a power source for arrays."

Mo Xuanyu blushes rather cutely, nodding. "Yes, but just finding the characters doesn't help as [Resentful Energy] doesn't act like [Spiritual Energy] ." The clearly not a lunatic states. "Which means finding how to get it moving in the array."

"While I think on your words, would you mind answering any questions my companion, A-Yuan, has concerning [Spirit Array] s?" Wei Wuxian asks and Mo Xuanyu blinks before turning to look at the third member at the table. The younger man nods while Wen Suzhui looks a touch embarrass but also with thanks for his request.

So, the pair converse over the topic as Wei Wuxian considers what to do. After all, the news concerning that arm should be making rounds by now in Cultivation Circles, meaning that Mo Xuanyu's safety in this village is running out, along with his life. What a shitty trope of a situation! Wei Wuxian mentally laments. Fuck my new life . . .

It's really a question of how to get Mo Xuanyu to leave with them, really. Wei Wuxian isn't sure of much concerning Mo Xuanyu's life before they met but given people have been slandering him with accusations of being a lunatic and his sexual orientation, of which only the latter is likely true, then Mo Xuanyu's trust in others is likely at an all time low. But then, most people do still trust those called Blessed of Heaven, perhaps he'll be a touch more incline to trust me?

It's a gamble Wei Wuxian knows he'll be making regardless, after all, he's been gone from the game for a good thirteen years and then four months since Descent Day. There's been changes to the politics of the Cultivation Sects and then the waiting winds of change that are to come concerning that expansion. It's his hope that no matter what knowledge Mo Xuanyu has about the political climate, it's bound to be greater then his own at this particular moment.

"Senior Wei?" Blinking and coming out of his thoughts, Wei Wuxian hums in acknowledgement while resting his gaze upon Wen Sizhui.

"It there any more we need to discuss with Senior Mo?" There's a slight cough upon hearing the title that Wen Sizhui calls him.

Humming thoughtfully, he turns his gaze upon Mo Xuanyu, there's no more tea to drink nor any pastries to eat. "Mo Xuanyu, upon the [Night Hunt] at Dafan Mountain there was an arm in the possession of the Lan's Hanguang-Jun." Wei Wuxian notices how the tension returns to Mo Xuanyu's shoulders. "It acted up but with a duet of [Rest] it was subdued."

"Lan Jingyi mentioned that they captured the arm here during a routine wander corpse elimination." He continues as Mo Xuanyu looks down at the empty tea cup, the hands moving to the lap. "I am sure you are aware of what that means for your future within this village." You have none.

"Which is why I wish to help you out of this situation." Wei Wuxian adds after a moment of watching Mo Xuanyu tremble slightly. "I have founded a Settlement and I wish to extent an offer to you, Mo Xuanyu, former student of [Lanling Jin Sect] to make your home there instead of continuing to live here, in this village."

Wide eyes of Mo Xuanyu stare at his face once he finishes making the offer, the mouth is opening and closing, no sound coming out. "So, how about it? You mind placing yourself under this infamous Blessed of Heaven? This one commonly known and feared as the [Yiling Patriarch] ?" Wei Wuxian asks with a devil may care grin and projecting an aura of confidence and, of course, power. I offer you . . . life.

Shirou finally lets himself fall fully asleep at this point, after all, there's nothing really keeping him awake and this is likely a dream anyway. He'll wake at the apartment he shares with Rin at the Clock Tower.

Shirou fully wakes to find himself in a cell and finds his mouth dry upon trying to swallow. Closing his eyes, he takes his time to focus on countering whatever drugs remain within his system and the fluffiness of his thought slowly sharpen and he pushes himself into a sitting position, keeping hold of that sharpness that is helping to fend off the drugs. Opening his eyes, the former Master of Saber takes in the cell and the smell causes a sense of unease.

Unwashed bodies, bodily fluids like blood, chemicals, and the smell of something, something he can't place only that Shirou can't help but find that something should be tinted with said smell. There's little in the way of light within the room, the only light that enters is through a slit in the door. With nothing better to do, the former Master of Saber focuses inward to help purge his system of drugs by focusing on the sharpness within him to steel himself from effects as they withdraw from his system.

Hunger is something he acknowledges along with a pressure of his bladder as the drugs loosen their hold on his senses and body. His mind feels more keen and Shirou comes to be aware of something Not Right with him. Frowning, the former young man finally realizes just how different his view of the cell is from what it should be.

Getting up, he walks over to the door and while the door doesn't have a knob on this side, Shirou can spy where it should be. With lips pressing together in displeasure, the now five or maybe six year old takes a few steps away from the door as he studies his cloths, which are not much, in the end. It's akin to a hospital wear, well, the shirt is given it lacks a back while it seems they put a pair of shorts on him. Although, it's clear the shorts are meant for someone taller, aka older, then he currently is, they are also ready sagging and would be on the ground if not for the draw strings.

Next order of business if looking over his body and he's a bit miffed to find his usual collection scars gone, replaced with needle marks and incision under a section of bandages on his stomach. Something in him burns hot in his chest at the sight of cut upon his stomach, the feeling bubbles into his mind. Who dares?! WHO ?!

It almost shakes his control over himself before he manages to distance himself from that part of himself, but, before he knows it, it goes from boiling to simmering with its 'vapors' soon bridging the gap, causing it to reconnect within his mind. It leaves Shirou rather off kilter, the shear raw emotion... He can't recall feeling an emotion so... Fully? Completely? So, encompassing?

He's not sure how long he stands there, trying to make sense of himself, before deciding to push the matter to the side, it doesn't matter when he needs to move on to checking his ability to use his Magic Circuits. Taking in a deep breath, he is slow to release it until he feels he's more centered in himself. He whispers, "Trace On."

Something is different and though he has an image in his mind for a simple dagger, Shirou finds that a step gets missed and yet, indigo flashes from the palm of his hand with green outline snaps into a shape before indigo fills the outline before vapor of indigo and discharge of green lightning flickers about the air before displaying the simple dagger he wanted to Project. The whole process had been sluggishly slow, feeling rather different from it should, but the end result is a simple dagger that he had plans of.

His eyes drift from the dagger in his small, oh so small, hands towards the door as he evaluates his options. Shirou isn't sure what's going on but figures it's for the best to remain here. Revolved with his course of action, he releases his hold on the simple dagger, it vanishes a half a minute without him touching it or feeding it more energy to keep it around.

He can't smell any Magic hanging around the cell, so he's likely dealing with scientists, mundane scientists of questionable morality but not Magi. Confident in his ability to come out of this without needing to dip into his supernatural abilities. Once out, Shirou will deal with the strangeness concerning his Projection and his age regression.

Looking at the small group of children, Shirou once more curses himself for his previous decision when it came dealing with his new situation along with his conclusion concerning his course of action. His emotions are so hard to ignore, tears of frustration at the sight of the survivors arranged before him while there's heat of the fire at his back. There's only nine kids out of thirty, the bodies of the dead kids ranged from twelve years to toddlers as young as two, never mind that one might die before the night is out due to having been pumped full of questionable drugs.

The group gaze at the fire going on behind him and Shirou isn't that surprised at their fascination with the fire that's slowly consuming anything, everything, burnable within the residence slash illegal, criminal lab. There's still not a lot that he understands about Flames or about how he ended up seemingly a kid again, he is certain that this isn't his birth dimension and he no longer has Magic Circuits, which means that whatever substitute of the Moonlight World, it's likely centered upon Flames and the criminal underbelly.

They called themselves the Estraneo Famiglia . . . His crying comes to a slow until it stops, his mind whirling about how to make use of what little information he has. Knowing he needs more information but also realizing he's tired and would like to have an actual bath, even spending time cleaning a kitchen would help, even if he didn't get to make anything in said kitchen either.

I miss cooking . . . The former Master thinks with a slight sniffle. Shirou is soon wiping his eyes with the back of his hands, sniffling wetly as he tries to breath through his nose at thoughts of him making a warm meal.

"Now what?" The question gets snarled out of one of the three blonds, it's the one carrying the unconscious kid too. Shirou feels their gazes settle upon him and he's blinking rather blankly at them, not really sure why they are looking at him like that.

It takes Shirou a few seconds to realize that instead of looking to the eleven year old, he's assuming the platinum blond is eleven years of age, the eight are looking at him. Looking... to... him... The once again red head finds this to be rather alarming, after all, he's not really sure he's capable of leading this group of broken children, not when he's not even sure if he'd be able to keep himself out of trouble!

"Why are you asking me? He's the oldest!" Shirou deflects with a hint of panic, that he's struggling to contain, gesturing at said platinum blond. Dealing with emotions are so HARD! He mentally concludes and is more aware of how much more he'd lost to the fire then just his memories and his family along with childhood friends.

"You are the last one of the latest bunch they brought in from the streets." Said platinum blond counters and that only helps to fuel his guilt over that issue . There's little change in any of the other survivors' expressions upon hearing that, even if he flinched at the reminder of those others he'd been unable to save.

"I'm not from Italy." Shirou adds to his defense. "I want to return to Japan." He admits to the group.

Japan shouldn't be that different from his home dimension, right? Just thinking about the island nation causes him to feel a large dose of homesick and crave the comfort of a traditional Japanese breakfast. The group of kids seem to straighten upon hearing that and after a second, the preteen blond nods.

"Ok, so, Japan it is." Shirou would like to argue some more only, he feels that it's best that they get moving. It seems that emergency respondents have finally been alerted and likely on their way here.

Without any real destination besides not here, Shirou leads the group elsewhere, being sure to Reinforce his senses so that they avoid trouble with 'concerned' adults. After all, none of them are in any shape to deal with answering questions about what they were put through. Nor does the former Master of the King of Knights wants to encounter other Flame Users and their political shit storm.

As Shirou finishes up putting the panel back in place, Skull, who's a man cursed into the form of a toddler viva a glowing purple stone in the shape of a pacifier, is worrying behind him, clearly unsure if the former Magus knew what he's doing. After all, Shirou does appear to be five, maybe six years old himself and yet, he finish repairing a pump for the curse man's blimp, which no, well street kid, should be able to do. Then again, he wouldn't know where to begin if not for his ability to use his twin Flames to mimic his version of Structural Analysis to pin point what needs to be fixed and which part needs a touch of Reinforcement to keep it going for a few more trips.

"That should do it until you can get it looked at by a professional." The former man turn kid says once he finishes screwing the panel back on. Skull clearly doesn't know if he should trust that Shirou did manage to fix it or not.

"You're really young to know your way around something like this." Skull finally states after glancing between the panel and Shirou who does appear to be a street urchin. Doing his best to not take offense at the clear doubt and concern, Shirou simply smiles.

"Well, you can always give it a go..." He suggests and after a few seconds, Skull seems to decide to do just that, murmuring in Russian a prayer concerning 'Verde being in a good mood to build him another pump system for his blimp'. The seemingly toddler walking into the hold to get to the piloting seat, Shirou does his best not to get overly curious about why that hold is so much bigger on the inside then on the out, knowing that it would likely cause more of a headache, particularly if he reveals his own limited knowledge concerning Dying Will Flames.

Backing up, Shirou's smile becomes more genuine as everything works as it should concerning the blimp. As the blimp lands once more and the engines go out, Skull comes rocketing towards him, clearly joyful about his blimp working as it should. It's a nice feeling, being useful like this, being able to be responsible for someone's good mood by simply doing a minor repair job.

Then comes Skull's attempts to pay him for the repair along with almost jokes about hiring him as his mechanic, which Shirou declines pretty much automatically out of old habit. Just as he manages to get ready to leave Ken and Jina arrive huffing, Ken making use of his Flame to track him down viva his scent while Jina using her own to keep up with the blond, grabbing his arm as she says, "Shirou! It's Mukuro!"

Ken had come to a stop by the hanger entrance, gaze fixated upon the cursed Skull with a look of bewilderment and suspicion. Allowing himself to be pulled away by Jina, Shirou asks in a slightly defeated and exasperated way, "What has he done now?"

Though it's been a few months since they've been out on the streets, the formerly unconscious boy made a recovery from the drugs and the lack of proper medical attention, it's not like Shirou had much incline to learn anything besides first aid nor did he have much talent outside of his brand of magic, which circles around his Origin and Elemental Affinity being Sword. Still, when the kid woke and began to take instruction concerning his Flame, Mukuro proved to sport just indigo color, the kid has been stirring up trouble with pretty much any adult he encounters, using them to home his budding skill with his indigo Flame.

Mukuro's talents in using said Flame seem to lay in sensory illusions and possession of animals or already unconscious people. It's something that does cause Shirou to wonder if their differences lay in his possession of green Flame or if it's just something as simple as individual talents when it comes to him Projecting something with weight . Then again, out of the group, he's the only one to possess a green Flame of any sort.

"He, well, seemed to..." Jina bites her lip as she gazes towards Skull, who seems to be following them towards Ken. Shirou also stares at the transformed man, unsure of what to do about Skull.

"Family trouble?" Asks the cursed man. "Seems so." He replies with an apologetic smile.

"Weren't you worried about running late?" Shirou inquires at Skull as they reach where Ken is standing, coming to a halt. "Eh, what's another hour?" The stone pacifier seems to glow slightly brighter for a few seconds before turning to its normal glow.

Sighing, Shirou hopes that the trouble that Mukuro found is something easy to get Chikusa and him out of. "Just take us there." The former Magus states and Ken gives a sharp nod before taking point, trusting that Jina, Shirou, and Skull will follow.

"What did you do this?" Mukuro merely blinks at Shirou's question while the other's indigo energy is enshrouding someone, he knows it's a someone from using his Structural Analysis, fueled with his hybrid color Flame energy. Yes, he also knows what the other's energy is trying to do to the one nicknamed Dino but Shirou would rather hear it from Mukuro's own mouth.

"Reborn?" Skull is addressing the currently wall trapped presto-toddler in the wall. It's not long before the other to snicker before breaking down laughing while Reborn looks furious but unable to speak for the simple fact that his lower part of his face is stuck in the wall. Shirou wonders who or a pair of whos' are responsible for that but figures what Mukuro's trying to do to be more pressing.

It soon become clear that Mukuro is trying to delay answering him. "Hmm? Shirou, where have you been? And who's your new friend ?"

"Making a friend." He replies as he crosses his arms and calls on his own energy to aid in making him seem imposing, after all, Dino's duress is likely only increasing. "Mukuro." The simple name comes out with a lot of weight to it and the indigo energy dims for a few seconds, wavering before stabilizing, if a touch smaller then before.

"Just helping someone fit their nick name is all." Is the reply and Shirou sighs at the physically older boy before glancing at Chikusa. "Chikusa."

"It seems that one," Chikusa nods towards the shroud of indigo, "Is suppose to be the local... Owner ."

"Ah." And the pressure he'd been exuding goes down while Mukuro huffs, clearly not likely that the blue Flame user just gave up that information oh so easily. With a hum, he walks over and calls upon his own Flame, within seconds, he 'shows' Mukuro how to fully apply the Alteration, although he does notice the orange Flame being oddly sticky but it's also clear he's able to use that to make the Alteration stick for far longer without investing as much energy as normal.

Orange Flame is sticky, I'll be sure to remember that fact to use in the future. Shirou thinks to himself. Although he does note it takes a touch more energy to enforce the Alteration upon the orange Flame user.

"I hope you picked up how I did that." Shirou informs Mukuro, the other nods as their Flames retreat from the now transformed Dino, who's cloths he made sure to affect as well. He's also sure to Alter his own dual colored Flame to get rid of the remaining sticky orange. Glancing at Skull and then towards the one stuck in the wall, he asks Skull, "Is he a friend of yours?"

"No! We're just part of the same group is all." Skull makes a sound of dismissal before stating that. "He's a jerk! So yea, it's pretty funny to see him like this."

Out of the corner of his eye, he notices Dino's examination of himself and it's clear that the local Mafia Don doesn't know what to make of suddenly being de-aged to that of a four year old. Writing off why that age as not important, Shirou gestures for them to leave. "So, you don't mind if we just leave him stuck like that?"

"Oh! Wait, I should take some pictures first! I bet Viper will pay a few thousand for them!" With that, Skull takes out a small cellphone and begins to take pictures and it's clear that Mukuro's not going to be after Skull right now. The other strictly indigo Flame user does seem to be thinking about something though upon moving to stand with Ken with Chikusa.

"Taking pictures..." Mukuro muses as they walk away from the bewildered Dino and enraged Reborn. Shirou remakes, "I'm sure you'll find a way to create some sort of memory memento viva using your Flame as a medium." Your driven enough when it comes to goals. The former Magus thinks to himself.

"Indeed." Mukuro states with all the smugness of a feline. It's times like these when Shirou wonders if he really should be encouraging the strictly indigo Flame user as he's pretty sure the kid is going to grow up to be such a menace to society and people's sanity everywhere but, then, he recalls the fact that this energy is in the hands of pity criminals primarily and his concerns vanish, after all, Mukuro took his words concerning death often times be seen as being a mercy to heart.

As far as Shirou is concerned, as long as Mukuro leaves his victims in alive then it's fine. After all, if these strange colored and oddly concept focus Flame energy can cause alterations to happen to people, it's more then likely able to reverse said changes as well. If they are having trouble reversing them, it's on their own heads for not understanding the nature of the energy they are harnessing. Maybe he spent a little too much time around Rin and Magi in general...

"So... Guess you guys need to skedaddle from this area, huh?" Skull muses, reminding Shirou of his presence. Coming to a halt, he turns to regard the fake toddler for a second.

"Looks like." Jina remarks before he thinks to inquire how involved Skull is in the Mafia, it's kind of hard for Shirou see the owner of the purple stone as a harden criminal. "Hopefully none of the others got caught up in anyone from that guy's group." Ken adds.

"I rather we leave Italy altogether, I'm trying to find a way to get us to Japan." Shirou admits to Skull. "I know my way around that country better and it's... familiar." It's home.

Skull seems to get a look of understanding with a touch of pity. "Got nabbed from home, huh? That must be rough."

"Something alike that. I had been in England before I ended up here in Italy, actually." Shirou admits, knowing he sucks at lying and anyway, it's true, he had been at the Clock Tower before this dimensional mishap occurred. "Waking up in a cell wasn't where I expected to wake up in."

"Oh? OH!" Suddenly Skull seems to eye them all with a look of sympathy. "Well, at least your out of that place, right? You all look like your doing well, all things considered..."

"We're working on acquiring the things we'd need." Shirou states, he's working on Projecting or using Alteration on existing papers for Passports along with figuring out a more honest way of acquiring funds besides using Alteration to turn business cards into bank cards. Which does work, as long as he still has the mental information from having used Structure Analysis on someone's cards, although, he supposes he could just leave an Alteration on one of the business cards with said Structure Analysis stored upon it...

"And thus we should really get going. Wouldn't want the others to wonder if anything happened to us." Mukuro states and he hums, Skull sighs but nods.

"Yea, I really am going to be late as it is." Skull states. "Still worth it, seeing Reborn owned like that!"

They part with simply farewells. Shirou wonders about this world's latest development concerning Reborn and Skull's appearance being almost that of toddlers when they are clearly not meant to be. It doesn't keep him from sleeping at nights but it does cause him to wonder if it's a common theme of this universe, after all, Mukuro did so concerning that Dino Don.

"... to death!" He manages to catch the last two words as he turns the corner to find, surprise surprise, Mukuro in a fight with someone. What does surprise Shirou is that the other one who fell for whatever taunt Mukuro used to rile them up is a kid, one who might be a year or two older then Mukuro himself. Black hair, gray eyes, and features of a typical Japanese kid who's armed with a beloved pair of tonfa make out of common alloy metal, mass produced from a factory.

There's a screech and the former Master and Magus' gaze snaps to the source, that of a brown haired kid who's clinging to Mukuro with wide hazel eyes. There's rips upon the cloths and an over turned bookbag not far, with the contents spread out. The brunette seems to be the same physical as Shirou himself is and what's more, Mukuro seems to have a comforting arm about the younger boy as well, clearly the indigo or 'Mist' is feeling protective over the kid.

As he watches as the tonfa welding boy tries to get pass the shimmering barrier of air between Mukuro and the young boy, Shirou finally notices that there's an older trio of boys and it's not hard to deduce that they are the bullies of the brunette. With a frown, he calls upon his dual colored Flame and Projected rope to bind Tonfa Boy up. The rope grows upon impact and it's not long before the green tinted indigo rope has the hands, legs, and the mouth is stuffed up with said Flame created rope.

Mukuro does his usual laugh at the sight of the Tonfa Boy struggling to get out of the rope before turning to him, already a satisfied smirk fixated upon his face while Shirou strides towards the pair of boys. The Looks he gets from the bullies are filled with a mix of awe and fear while the bound boy's Look upon his face seems to be anger and what might be the beginnings of begrudging respect, perhaps? Not that the former Magus honestly cares, they'll be doing some memory modifying, after all, knowledge of Flames isn't meant for the public and none of them really want to find out just who, or what, reinforces that unwritten rule.

"Why must you cause a scene so soon? We've only been in Namimori for two days." The dual Flame user sighs at Mukuro in Japanese along with a disappointing look upon his face. "I'm sure you could have solved this without using your Flame."

"I wanted to make a grand first impression, Shirou! How can I not use my Flame to do so?" Mukuro states in turn in Italian. "Look at him! He's so... so..." The indigo Flame user takes a step to the side and gestures at the brown haired kid and, well, Shirou gives the kid his fully attention and within a few seconds, uses Structure Analysis upon the kid and it's not long before not only is he frowning but he's angry on Sawada Tsunayoshi's behalf concerning the Flame Seal, which is causing physical and Flame problems directly while indirectly causing the boy to go through emotional abuse by those drawn to his orange Flame. It's more then enough for him to mentally puts the two adults' names onto his mental list of people to avoid at all costs or kill at all costs if they're trying to approach the kids he's become responsible for.

With a click of his tongue, Shirou Projects Rule Breaker and Alters it to deal with the Flame Seal. Tsunayoshi's eyes widen and grow watery while there's a high pitch cry, he feels Tonfa Boy's struggles increase. "Just a minor prick and you'll find your thoughts clearing up along with your balance." Shirou promises and the kid's mouth snaps shut while eyes go wider.

"How?" The orange Flame possessor stammers. "How did you...?"

"My own Flame gave me a way to see what the problem was and who's responsible." Shirou states calmly. "If they show themselves in my presence, I'll do my upmost to kill them so they can't do something like this again." They might as well have just put a bullet into his head, it would have been a quicker death then this Flame Seal.

Once he's standing before Tsunayoshi, Mukuro hovering close, Shirou holds out his hand and waits. After a few minutes, Tsunayoshi finally seems to gather enough courage to place his arm upon his hand. The former Magus doesn't make any sudden moves as he pricks the palm of Tsunayoshi's hand. Orange flame energy sprouts from Tsunayoshi's forehead and the boy's eyes glow orange, there's a icy calm look in those glowing orange eyes as they seem to study Shirou's soul.

"You..." Tsunayoshi trails off as the eyes drift to his chest and the boy takes a step towards him. Before Shirou can speak or use Reinforcement on his being, orange Flame surges into his chest and it's like something clicks into place. It's then that Shirou Knows the location of Saber's famous sheath and he's not sure whether to curse or cry at the fact it was within him this whole time.

There's a voice in his ear but it sounds too mechanical to be human. In fact, it kind of reminds him of that dream... Not that the former Magus has time to remember as it feels like Avalon is Activating and suddenly, someone else arrives.

"Artoria?" He whispers as he recognizes Saber's presence. There's a golden light that's blinding to look upon directly but, slowly, it shrinks and the presence changes, it distorts but also seems to become more... whole? Still, there's soon to be an eight, maybe nine year old looking blond girl with light emerald green eyes wearing old fashion attire.

"Shirou?" The child version of Artoria Pendragon inquires in turn after blinking a few times. Nodding as he doesn't, can't, make use of his voice.

And then Tsunayoshi collapses into Shirou's chest, which ends the touching moment of the two returned Master and Servant. After all, it's about then that Tonfa Boy manages to snap the weaken bindings and goes on to attempt to attack Shirou, although Artoria moves to intercept, he's quick to Alter the dagger in his hand into something more mundane item along with blunting the edges of the blade before tossing it to her. "Here!"

Artoria catches the tossed formerly Projected Rule Breaker with a quick spin and uses the blacken jaded sword to block the tonfa from the former bound boy. As the pair of physically older kids leap back, Mukuro moves to help him move Tsunayoshi to the side, vaguely does Shirou Feels something happening and then settling between the orange and indigo Flame possessors. It's something he'll address later as he's got three bystanders to keep safe from Artoria and Tonfa Boy's fight.

His gut affirming that Mukuro will protect the kid who seems to share Shirou's physical age, the former Master of Saber calls upon his Flame, Reinforcing his body before he moves, darting towards the first of the bullies. A touch on the boy's forehead and the kid falls into a sleep, placing both hands at the boy's temple, he begins to do something concerning the bully's memory of this pass hour. Then, with ease due to his Reinforcement, drags the kid to the mouth of the alley.

It's a touch harder for Shirou to get at the second bully, it seems that Tonfa Boy wants to drag Shirou into the fight but Artoria manages to do a splendid job of intercepting those attempts. He does note that it's clear that Artoria is adapting to welding the jaded black sword to her style and realizes that her arrival in this world isn't that of a Servant either. Although, why he hadn't realized that fact until just then was distracting as he muddles with the memory of the second bully upon putting the kid to sleep.

It's hardly surprising that the Altered Projected Rule Breaker gets destroyed by the time he's finished with the final bully. The jaded sword breaks and then it's shattered remains fade into green and indigo energy before that vanishes. While not surprising, it's timing could have been better but Shirou has a pair of bokken Projected and is defending Artoria from getting hit by a metal tonfa. With a shared glance, the former Magus lets go of one of the bokken, which Artoria takes possession of and as he spins, Projecting a replacement for himself.

Between Artoria and Shirou's combine offensive, Tonfa Boy is becoming worn, the other's stamina running out, not that it matters as someone new arrives upon the scene and it brings Chikusa to the forefront of Shirou's mind. Shirou fairs better then Artoria and Tonfa Boy in the sudden surge of calm, turning, he finds an older man wearing restaurant chief cloths. There's a blue glow in the man's eyes, confirming that the man is in possession of the blue Flame like energy.

"Now, now, let's not be getting too hot blooded." The man states in a jovial tone while his eyes are assessing the three combatants up. "Why don't we just take this business somewhere a touch more private?" There's an easy grin upon the man's face that's at odds with the underlying tone.

"Sounds good." Shirou states with a nod, allowing his Projections to vanish before moving to help Artoria up off the ground. He pauses, blushes a bit, and then Projects something more modern that should cover Artoria's old style cloths. She's clearly dazed from the effect of the blue Flame while it looks like Tonfa Boy is about ready to fall asleep.

Shirou notes that Mukuro and Tsunayoshi weren't in the alley, which means that Mukuro got the orange Flame possessor away to safety.

The meeting with one Yamamoto Tsuyoshi proved to be informative in some regards to a number of things, like Tonfa Boy's name being Hibari Kyoya and that Namimori is something of a retirement community for Flame using Mafia members. Which Shirou finds to be rather sketchy never mind suspicious given Namimori's location being in Japan instead of in Italy, meaning that the retired criminals should belong to Yakuza criminal underground and not Italian criminal underground. Never mind the question of how an Italian Mob Don expects to be able to hold onto said territory given the distance involved between the two countries along with the lack of an official 'office' to manage Namimori either.

There wasn't much that Yamamoto-san spoke about in the end that was really in depth, like why Artoria, Hibari-kun, and himself had been fighting never mind Shirou's bokken Projections or even the coat Projection that Artoria is currently wearing. Then again, perhaps Yamamoto-san thought that Shirou already possessed the likely common knowledge in regards to these colored Flame energies, given how easily the former Magus can use it. Deciding its not worth correcting Yamamoto-san's opinion on the matter, Shirou took the time to figure out if Artoria is also in possession of this energy.

Artoria, it seems, is in possession of orange and it's not as energized as others he's seen. In fact, upon regarding Hibari-kun's mainly purple with hints of indigo, the pair's Flame energy is slowly reacting to each other, although Shirou is rather surprised to find his own dual color already interlocked with Artoria's sluggish orange. He's not sure what to make of this interlocking nor does he feel all that different, but then, the former Magus figures it might be different if her orange was as energized as his own, perhaps then he'll notice something different. Nevermind knowing how to feel concerning the sluggish interaction going on between the pair.

As for Hibari-kun, the kid clearly didn't know this tidbit of information and it's clear that the kid is going to be brooding slash sulking over this information for a while. Something tells him that Hibari-kun will be thinking of someway to counter this Mafia Don's claim to Namimori soon enough. It's just a question of whether Hibari-kun will be able to follow through with whatever course of action he'll need to go through to fully claim Namimori as his own.

He's sure to pay for the meal that was ordered and it's not long before Shirou takes Artoria by the hand to go buy a few things in order to make her some cloths that are more modern, it's not long before he finds himself catching Artoria up on what's been going on with him since the end of the War in bits and pieces, after all, they were out in public so he watched his wording. He found it easy to fall into talking with her even though over a decade had passed since they saw each other, it wasn't as awkward as he thought it should be either.

In a lot of ways, it just felt right to have her by his side again. Sure, they're currently both physically children but given time, that'll change and what happens by the time they're adults again, well, who knows what will happen in the meantime?

And then they arrive at the house to find at least two more faces at the house then expected, yea, he kind of expected to see Sawada Tsunayoshi, but the two local girls? Nope. And it seems they were having the equivalent of a pillow fight going on as well.

Point in fact, a pillow ended up flung at him and if not for the bags he'd been carrying, he'd have stopped it from hitting his face. Although, Artoria snorting then doing a short giggle kind of made him go a touch easier on the kids about the mess they made. Key word being a 'touch'.

Which body? The larger one? The small one? Both response to his wishes! Yet, both don't Feel right enough to be his True body!

Unable to really recall, to really Think , not with Danger approaching in two direction. Both bodies are endanger! Snarling with two voice boxes at the approaching Dangers , claws flex while fingers curl to make fists, teeth are shown to the world as his muscles tense, readying to spring.

A high pitched mindless shout is released from one throat while a bellow from another as both bodies begin charging at their respective Dangers .

Scenery blurs and he's in a room, there's a bed that houses his tiny body while his second is curled tightly around the room. Two view points threaten to overwhelm him, both are true, yet neither is Right . The room decor flickers to a glass walls and liquid filling the area, the bed is more simplistic before the bedroom scene snaps back into place. It flickers between the two locations, both have their appeal yet it's never perfect, for one of the bodies always seems out of place.

I'm dreaming... Yo, short for Tsunayoshi, realizes yet it's not enough to rouse him from his dreaming state. The dream changes, a toddler sporting a red stone sporting an adult crimson tinted shade about him giving him a lecture that are nonsense as Fon's speaking poetry that's ripped right out of a Chinese Cultivator web-novel, it's something that he has recently gotten into reading. A quick glance to the side, Yo notices another presto toddler with a green stone also sporting an adult shade, only this one tinted green stands off to the side, a paint brush in one hand and an actual stone tablet in the other.

Feeling he has some control over his current dream state, Yo causes the dream to change into an arena, it's one of the early ones that lack the higher walls now used in Beast Battles along with shimmering 'force' fields to protect the spectators from any stray ranged attacks. It's not long before a pair of Beasts appear and begin attacking one another, the fighting pair changes to another pair and it continues on like that for a bit, until it's Suna fighting against Bone.

With that, his view of the dream is from Suna's eyes. Without any input from the dreamer, the match plays out like he remembers it, only there's some exaggerations that clue in the actual nature of the situation. Like blood slowly flying through the air and the way the wounds flicker like they are flesh to some underlying frame grid like a computer model, sometimes the two overlap.

As the Beast known as Bone attempts to choke him, the dream snaps out of reach as a blaring noise wakes him. Eyes open and Yo groans before rolling over to turn off the alarm, then tries to snuggle into his pillow to get maybe a few more minutes of shut eye. Not that it works as the teen recalls why the alarm was set and with great reluctance, pushes the blankets off and sits up on the bed.

Taking his time, the Sky exchanges his sleep wear for a black t-shirt, black jeans, and white socks. Before leaving, he's sure to grab the silver chain necklace with white gold done up on one of Suna's teeth as a pendant that he'd been gifted for his thirteenth Birthday by his two fellow Beast Pilots, Wei Rusong and Hua Xin. Once out of the room, instinctively, he checks on his Suna and without pausing as he walks, causes his second body to stretch a bit within the Bio-Pod before fully focusing on being Yo and mentally grumbling about having to depart to visit Namimori.

It's hard for him to feel any kind of emotional connection with the woman who birthed him and his younger brother, Ienobu. As for seeing Ienobu, Yo finds it's a mix bag, after all, even before he'd been kidnapped by the Silver Pelt Yakuza and quickly sold to the Beast Trainer Triad upon a member of said Triad noting a Flame Seal on him, his relationship with Ienobu hadn't been that great. Dame-Tsuna. He mentally pushes that name away, it doesn't Fit him, just as being called Tsuna doesn't sit Right with him, back when he'd been a confused mess that kept flickering between two bodies, controlling both at once or caught between them both.

"Yo A-Yo!" Calls out Ling Mei while Wong Renji gives a simple but firm, "Yo-Kun." Their respective Flames flare up in echoing those greetings.

He nods at the collection of five trainees plus I-Pin, who's busy sipping a drink, but continues forward to collection breakfast for himself. As he sits himself down next to Wen Mobei, a sixteen year old active Rainy Storm, and Wong Renji, a fourteen year old Sunny Lightning. Ling Mei, Shimazu Rika, and Oda Rachel, their respective Flames in the same order, fifteen year old Sun, fourteen year old Lightning Mist, and fifteen year old Sunny Rain, continue to chat away in Italian, good practice given it's one of the major Underworld languages that's used throughout the world.

His fellow Y carriers eat in silence while I-Pin is clearly understanding a word every so often of the conversation. The teenaged double X carriers are talking about the succession crisis of the Vongola Famiglia and speculating about the survival odds of whoever is chosen as their Heir. Three dead sons and the 'bastard' son who nobody has seen or heard from for over half a decade? Yea, it's pretty clear that the Vongola Famiglia is at the edge of falling apart in the eyes of the Underworld, but then, all three of those sons had been over the age to inherit and yet, the Ninth Don refused to hand over the reins of the Famiglia to a younger man. Such actions encouraged questions of what it was that the Don was looking for in the future Tenth Don and just how lacking the three in the old man's eyes.

"So, Yo-kun? What are your thoughts?" Rachel inquires with eyes glimmering with curiosity.

"I think the Ninth needs to get his head checked in regards to keeping my sperm donor around after failing in his duty to aid in protecting the man's three sons." Yo states in Mandarin in a flat tone and that causes his table mates to snicker. I-Pin nods in a sage manner, finally able to get the gist of what had been discussed and Renji's lips slightly turning upwards.

"So, you think Xanxus is going to get tapped?" Mei inquires, keeping to Mandarin. "He's suppose to be the Don's bastard after all."

"Xanxus' facial features don't really match the Don nor his sons, though." Pipes in Rika. "I mean, sure, he could have taken after his mother but..." Rika shrugs after trailing off.

"I've seen pictures of the Second." The Sky admits. "Xanxus could pass as his son or grandson."

"But..." Rachel trails off. With a shrug, Yo answers the unspoken question, "I'd put my money on Xanxus being at least a second cousin in blood relations or further related then him being the Ninth then son or grandson."

"So, anyone know where I can put my money on that?" Renji wonders out loud while Mobei nods, clearly in agreement with the idea of putting money on that.

"I doubt there's a betting pool going about it." Mei muses. "After all, why would a respectable Don like Timoteo Vongola lie about taking in an under-aged Wrath?"

"Yea, I wonder why." Rachel remarks with her tone dripping with sarcasm and she's not the only one to roll their eyes at the Don taking a wayward Sky child into his Famiglia. Skies being rare and thus highly prized in the Criminal Underworld, with Clouds coming in second but also considered far more dangerous of the Dying Will Flames of the Sky set.

He feels each of them, save for I-Pin, as she's inactive, tugging at his Sky Flame and Yo pulls them a touch more into his 'space' for the next few seconds, then they each pull away from him, having enough of being comforted for the time being. It's not long before Mobei bring up training plans for the coming weeks that the table is once more a place of chatter, with I-Pin being a great deal more interested in adding her own two cents.

Yo knows he's going to miss the six of them, he'll be gone from Headquarters for two weeks. He reminds himself that it'll give him time to catch up on his reading and that it's a break from Verde's lesson plans. Besides, half of me is still going to be here. It's not like the distance hampers my ability to slip into Suna's body. It's just Yo who's leaving on vacation. The Sky reminds himself.

Oh yea, I forgot about Hibari-san. Yo thinks upon catching sight of the inactive grandson of Fon's upon his collecting of his bags. There's a Feeling of Displeasure emanating from the soon to be seventeen year old, which is rather odd, given Hibari-san only gets to that point by the end of his visit.

Still, the inactive Misty Cloud doesn't approach him but before leaving, it's clear as day to Yo that he's going to be getting a visit from the other within the next twenty-four hours. Has something happened with Ienobu? His brother does possess some degree of Sky Flame, although it also seems to lean towards Sun while reaching for Storm, not as strongly as it does for the Sun though. He can't really get a clear picture in his mind of his younger twin's Flames as the other isn't active and Sky Flame is very good at hiding in the background, from what he's noted when encountering inactive Skies.

It's a few seconds after getting to the doors with his bags that Yo gets a clue as to what's been riling up the Cloud Prefect. The sight of a presto toddler with a yellow stone also signals that his vacation isn't going to go as planned. Not with Reborn hanging out in Namimori for some reason and he'll have to inform Fon and Verde about this development when he's exercising Suna.

Maybe he's here as a bodyguard? The thirteen year old muses as he takes a bit to study the woman to gave birth to him. The woman who's looks he inherited introduces Reborn as Ienobu's Home Tutor before she begins to chat about how much more out going his younger brother's been since Reborn arrived.

Well, fucking damn it. Is a thought that flashes through his mind as he causes Suna's tail to thud against the glass of the Bio-Pod along which is followed upon with him shifting about within the Bio-Pod.

He's agitated as he mentally connects the dots. He really doesn't like the idea that the Vongola Famiglia have suddenly remembered that his younger brother and himself exist, it's a question if this is their attempt at decoying their actual choice of Heir or if the old Don just wants to 'reward' their sperm donor for all his 'hard' work.

He retreats a great deal out of Yo and settles more into Suna, doing his best to calm himself. "Suna? What's wrong?" Verde's voice inquires within the Bio-Pod as his human body leaves through the doors in the company of Reborn and Sawada Nana.

"Reborn." Suna Harmonizes with the comms within the Bio-Pod. "He's in Namimori. Suppose to be Ienobu's Home Tutor."

"So, the Don finally made a choice, huh?" He hears Rusong mutter in the background while Verde swears colorfully in French.

He doesn't like the considering looks the Sun is giving Yo. He can Feel the gears turning in that hitman's mind, more then likely comparing him with his twin. Suna isn't happy, not one bit at this development, after all, given the number of intermarriages of previous Dons' daughters, legit or not, along with spare sons, legit or not, it's not like there's no Skies in Italy that lack blood connection to the Second Don of the Vongola Famiglia.

"Why the fuck go for a teen?! There should be an already at age Sky who'd be trained up in less time then a former inactive civilian Sky!" Suna states, a dark mood already descending.

"Why indeed." Verde states in agreement, there's murmurs echoing that sentiment. "It would be great if he'd just stop eyeing Yo as a slab of meat too!"

Oh, how he feels so dirty just by getting looked at by that slimy git of a man whore. Yo is so going to end up in the shower once they arrive at the house. Suna keeps his eyes firmly close, focusing on directing Yo without putting too much of himself into the smaller, far more defenseless body.

Disconnecting from the comms, the Sky in possession of two bodies is forced to be patient and not commit justified murder. The attic should still have those Sky Wards, right? Suna wonders to himself.

There's no way he's going to be occupying one of the rooms, not when Reborn has had free rein of the house for who knows how long to set up whatever the tiny, cursed adult wanted to have set up.

Tsuna's home. Is the first thought that enters into Ienobu's mind at the sight of the brunette on the couch. It doesn't take him long to do the math to realize how the last month had flown by, it had been so eventful and at times, it felt like years instead of the three weeks.

The dyed blond considers the brunette, who's yet to turn to look at him. Eyes glued on the tablet and likely reading some foreign book on it. Looking away from his fraternal twin, he stalks towards the table, more then happy to greet his mother while the trio of teens with him gawk at Tsuna. "Is he a cousin of yours Decimo-sama?"

"No." He states while his mother answers, "Oh my, that's Tsu-kun! Bus-kun's elder twin brother!"

"Tsunayoshi and Ienobu are fraternal twins." Reborn supplies upon seemingly popping out of no where. "He attends a school outside of Namimori."

There's no reaction from Tsuna, but then, it's likely the other teen is listening to music as he can kind of tell ear pieces in his brother's ears. "Ignore him, he'll be gone in two weeks." He states while Reborn gives him a bemused look. "He's nothing but a liability."

He'll be gone until next year. The dyed blond reassures himself. After all, there can only be one of them to be Heir and Reborn had been sent to train Him , not his absentee brother.

Reborn merely hums but doesn't stop the four of them heading up the stairs to do their respect homework. "Just what kind of school does he attend?" Takeshi asks to make small talk as they set about getting their homework out.

"Some school meant to help kids with trauma and mental problems." Ienobu states in a dismissive manner. "He got enrolled after we were eight. He only comes home for two weeks out of a year."

He does his best to push memories of glaring hazel eyes drilling into his own, tight fingers about his throat, claws digging into the skin, and an animistic snarl reaching his ears. "Don't be fooled by his appearance down there. He's damaged goods and it won't take much to get him to show his true colors." He snaps as he forces his eyes to open, he's not sure when he closed them.

"That sucks, Decimo, but we're here to protect you if that happens!" Promises Hayato with Hayashi hums in agreement. Ienobu gives the pair a considering look before feeling some of the tension drain from his shoulders, giving the pair a slight smile.

"So... Which subject? I kind of had trouble following math. And English, like why do they have so many words that sound the same but are spelt differently?" Takeshi interjects and he gives the baseball star a Look . But, in the end, shakes off whatever it is that bothered him as Hayato is quick to verbally dig into the easy going teen about his listening skills.

He decided they'll start on English. Ienobu doing his best to forget that his mentally disturbed elder brother is visiting. Doing his best to ignore the only familiar feelings of Dread that his fraternal brother inspires within him.

Charging through the primordial fantasy of the area, Suna is doing his best to keep pace with Guide, who's pilot is Mu, and is in current possession of the enemy 'flag', which is stone branch with a black leather attached. It's not a fighting match tonight, just a 'friendly' game of Capture the Flag between Beast Companies. Although tonight's is special, it's two Companies verse two opposing Companies, which means that the arena is larger and teamwork can be hit or miss.

The game's rules are to encourage cooperation between the allied Companies, which means that pairs of Beasts are to stick within a certain distance with each other. To go outside of that sphere of influence means that they'll lose their collective team points. There's various ways to earn points besides the obvious objective, like tagging an enemy pair when they're in your territory.

Mu Rupert is a member of Chenqing Company and Guide is a brute of a Beast, not unlike a combo of a gorilla and rhino with coloring being fantastical as well, blue with hints of red with a dark grey under tone. His job is to run interference, to be the one to get touched by enemy forces as it'll mean they'll earn points for this attempt, otherwise, it was just a waste of a play. Which is why when he notices Spur of Rigger Corp Company, Suna is already moving to place himself between the spindly yellow with white Beast and Guide.

It's not Spur who tags him but Spur's partner, Black Sugar of Ravnica Company. Black Sugar is an oddly designed Beast with six legs and four tentacles on the back with hooked pads. According to Verde, Black Sugar is modeled off of a magical beast from Dungeons and Dragons called a Displacer Beast along with second generation of Beast. The base likely being a jaguar instead of a leopard, he can see the dark red spots hidden in the black thin fur coat. As the flag gets collected from Guide to be put back at one of the two locations, Suna lets out of breathy sigh and moves to settle down to wait for a rescue.

His current party writes in the dirt a capital g and a j. Nodding thanks, he uses a claw to write a u and a two. The Rain settles Guide down for a long wait, not comms allowed, so they all had to find other ways to communicate with one another, typically writing upon the ground. There's a limited use of Flames as well, although given that unlike his situation, most Beasts aren't really an extension of their pilots and thus, Beasts don't make good channels for Flames.

Not that it won't change in the future. Suna muses thoughtfully as he watches his surroundings. Second generation Beasts are beginning to yield information on the matter of whether or not that can change. After all, second generation Beasts are allowing pilots more immersion with between pilot and Beast, which means that the pilot doesn't need to be within the previous command range of fifty feet along with pilots able to connect with a Beast's senses, mostly sight and hearing but it's better progress then what was happening with first generation Beasts. It's also granting better motor control and finesse with movement.

Not that Suna needs such, given Suna is as much him as Yo is, he's a soul in possession of two bodies, more then capable of switching between them without the usual equipment. It's also due to such a complete merger that he's able to use his Flame easily as Suna, it might not come as quickly as with Yo but then, there's more to Suna to begin with, mass wise. Then again, it could be a different issue then mass, after all, Suna's been studied for how many years by Verde?

Then there's a slight feeling going down his spine and it doesn't takes Suna long to realize it's not within the arena but from the Sky Wards on the attic where Yo is relaxing in. Reborn. He mentally huffs while flexing his claws.

The hitman just aggravates him, sure, he doesn't like the Curse that clings to Fon and Verde's Flames but it wasn't the Curse that's the cause. Is it because he's working for the Ninth Don? Suna muses and that does seem to Feel right, not the primary reason though.

After pondering it for a bit, it feels like the answer is so close but it's gone the moment he tries to reach out to claim it, Suna mentally shoves said train of thought out of his mind as best as he can. There's a match going on and although he's currently idle, it doesn't excuse him losing focus on his surroundings. It's not long before a rescue pair comes their way, the pair managing to do some impressive moves to evade getting tapped by the pursuing pair.

Chenqing Company's Peerless is the one to reach him, as Peerless, engineered to appear as a raptor dinosaur with only some vibrant feathers, spins, their stiff tail smacks him in the side of his shoulder. He explodes into action as does Guide. They race back to their side of the arena, once safe, Xin in Reign, the Beast's genetic coding is based off of tiger, clearly taking an interest to ensure both Suna and Guide are doing well.

The game continues until the three hour timer finally ends the match. The winners by a single point is the Ravnica and Rigger Corp Companies. In the end, the scenery vanishes while portals open up that leads directly back to their respective Headquarters.

It's not long before they are all snug in their Bio-Pods and, reluctantly, Suna moves to settle into Yo while Suna's gets medical treatment. Opening Yo's eyes, he sighs and is more connected to the Sky Wards then he'd been just moments before. It takes him a few seconds to pin point the location of Reborn in relation of the attic.

Humming, Yo sits up and walks over to the mini fridge, grabbing a tall can, the door closes as he taps on the top with his index finger. Yo sits down on the small couch that's before a flat screen television, with a simple use of his Flame, he's connected to the screen and the modified gaming console. Both turn on and he releases his hold on the screen, waiting for the modified gaming console to finish rebooting so he can surf various streaming sites like YouTube, which is global, or Chinese based ones like Tencent Pictures, which most of members of the Nian Company prefer viewing.

As he settles on re-watching Digimon Tamers, Yo opens the can and takes a sip as the beginning of episode one narrates in his native Japanese. As the opening song ends, his cell phone is vibrating and with a soft sigh, pauses the playing of the episode. Putting the can onto the end table, the Sky gets up off the couch and walks over to the night stand where it's resting and charging.

Taking the charging end from the cell, the caller ID is Khanivore. Shouldn't have let that suggestion pass my lips. Yo thinks as he lets loose a soft, depressing sigh as he answers the incoming call from Hibari-san.

"Hibari-san." Is his simple greeting while he gets a cold, "Omnivore."

In the silence that follows, he can only imagine how the older teen, almost a young man, is struggling to find the right tone along with statement to convey the reason why he's reaching out to Yo. "Fake Baby?" He finally hazards a guess and there's a surprisingly good animistic snarl from Hibari-san, perhaps a tiny, unconscious use of a spark of Mist Flame?

"Given their lack of inclination of bring him more into their Herd by having him move to Italy. I do believe you're going to be having this problem for the next few years." Yo states in a matter of fact way. "Never mind that the Fake Baby likely already wants you for his Pride."

Oh, the snarl upgrades into a very throaty growl that lasts for a good minute before Hibari-san catches himself displaying such emotions. It's hard for him to sympathize with the inactive Cloud in this matter, after all, Hibari-san has always been the largest fish in this lake and has grown use to that fact. It's to the point that there's a great deal of pride within the inactive Cloud surrounding that fact and he's grown use to people falling into line with his wishes, which, is likely why Reborn pretty much keeps ruffling Hibari-san's feathers with not bothering to notice the line and is typically a mile pass the line, as it were.

Which is why he's so glad that he'll be leaving Namimori in four days time, regardless of whatever plan Reborn has to try and keep him around. Namimori isn't home, hasn't been his home for years nor has Nana been much of a supportive mother for either of them, not that Ienobu likely knows that... It's still a sore point, even after so many years.

"And neither can Shizun be able to talk with him into falling into line, Hibari-san." Yo states. "This is a job for the Fake Baby and the Fake Baby's pride is on the line." He explains, not that he ultimately cares about Reborn or the man's pride, but it should at least give Hibari-san some idea of why the cursed Sun is acting the way he is and likely why he won't just leave Namimori.

"Either you figure out how to evict Ienobu from the whole of Namimori or you learn to live with the Fake Baby's antics and a future concerning you getting uprooted from Namimori in the future." Yo states after a bit. "If any of them follow, you'll just have to let them, too." He thinks to add, after all, Ienobu might have already been gathering others to his Sky and thus would likely follow him out of Namimori.

That Rain might not. Yo mentally admits when he reviews the number of people Ienobu has visiting him or coming home with him. Something happened to cause the Rain to be disenchanted with Ienobu. Which seems rather odd, given how long the two seem to have been Courting and it must be something big if the Rain couldn't find it in him to smooth the issue over. It's also a very recent issue, one that might not have come up before too.

Hibari-san scuffs in reply to his suggestion but Yo suspects that when Hibari-san get the chance to think a touch more clearly, he'll see why that particular suggestion to his issue with Reborn has merit and likely to work at getting Reborn out of his Territory. He's yet to meet many Clouds, pure or mutt, besides Hibari-san and Skull but they are said to have a mulish outlook when it comes to their respective Territory to varying degrees. It likely doesn't help that Hibari-san also possesses Mist as a secondary Flame and Mists... Mists get possessive of people and it's clear that it's not just the physical location of Namimori that Hibari-san lay claims to, it's also going to be used against him in this instance.

The call ends on Hibari-san's end and Yo stares at the screen for half a minute before swiping the calling app away. Walking back to his couch, he can only shake his head a bit at the stubbornness of the inactive Cloud but also knows that, in the end, it's not like he's involved. He's not Hibari-san's Sky nor is that likely ever going to change, not with Namimori being Hibari-san's primary concern and Territory.

He knows he's damaged goods, he's got two bodies that Feel fine but neither are truly Right . The Flame Seal is only part of the reason why, the rest has to do with how experimental the idea of Beast Pilots was in the first place. He's been kicked out of the Famiglia his ancestor founded with a Flame Seal slowly killing him, stolen from his only 'dependable' parent and indifferent twin, and sold to a Traid group trying to make it big in a big way.

It's kind of the reason why the name of the Company is Nian, it's translation of Twined. Most among the sub-culture of the Flame community think the Company's name is about two of the World's Strongest coming together to found the Beast Circuit. The truth has more to do with a warning of what can happen if the process between a pilot and a Beast, that a Flame User can be caught between two bodies. Not that anyone knows that about Suna and his solo 'pilot' Yo, most seem to thinking that as a Sky, both are just too Harmonized to accommodate another Beast and/or pilot.

Settling onto the couch until he's comfortable and reaching out to Suna, his emotions soothe themselves along with his train of thought. Forcing his muscles in his upper body to relax and taking deep, calming breaths, Yo allows himself to press himself up on the back of the couch. Once he's got his emotions back to more comfortable levels, Yo picks up the tall can and re-connects to resumes playing Digimon Tamers.

There's tension hanging about the kitchen table as they eat breakfast. Suna isn't all that surprised that the only one who either doesn't notice it or just plain ignores it is the one who prepared and is serving the breakfast. His instincts are a buzz and he's itching to take a swing at Reborn, the source of the approaching irritation that's going to be unleashed. It's the reason why he's so much more in Suna since Yo came down the stairs then in Yo.

Yes, he knows that his other body will be returning to China today, leaving after breakfast to head to the station, at which point he'll be using a Sky Path to arrive at the Bio-Pod that houses Suna. Yo will be Home and Safe from the scheming hitman and the fucked up succession crisis of the Vongola Famiglia. Which Doesn't involve HIM at ALL , thank you very much. For fucking my life up with that Flame Seal, you saggy shit bag Don and fuck scum of a sperm donor money bags.

Anger curls in Suna's belly as he flexes not just his tail but his Sky Flame. He's been itching to try a new Flame technique and his instincts purr at the thought of how Surprised the scheming snake of a Sun will be when he uses it on said hitman. He can almost feel the presto baby's blood on the palms of his hand...

There's a slight cough that causes him to turn Yo's head to regard Ienobu, pausing in bringing up food in his chopsticks, which has the effect of causing the dyed blond to mutter excuses before attempting to flee the table. Reborn chides something about Mafia Dons and being scared, which makes him give the fake toddler a flat look. After all, it's clear that Ienobu's Hyper Intuition is warning him about the approaching blood bath.

And, frankly, Ienobu has every reason to be scared of him after that near death by choking that happened when one of their sperm donor's men thought it was a good idea to steal him away during a shopping trip with Fon while when they visited in Japan, both to find out if he's been reported along with giving him a familiarity with his surroundings. The fucker knocked might have knocked out the tinier version of him to return him to his 'home'. Then, making things even worse was the fucker thinking it safe to be using their Mist Flame to 'ease' his trauma of his kidnapping and then the experimentation that resulted in his having two bodies, which didn't help a goddamn thing as it only served to confuse and rile him up more.

So, when Ienobu thought it a good idea to taunt him for missing school and threaten to tell Hibari Kyoya about his return, working his way up into what bribe to keep that from happening... Well, yea, he'd been in a right state by that point along with recalling what Hibari-san was generally like... He freaked out then got angry, an idea of how to keep that from happening and, well, he proceeded to follow through with his violent impulse.

If not for Hibari-san showing up... Suna has Yo shift his head away from his younger brother and returns to eating. So many fucking problems caused by having the 'best' intentions at heart... Hell is truly paved with good intentions, isn't it? He muses, not giving Reborn the opening he's looking for.

That scar healed up nicely, didn't even see a faint impression of it during out spar when I ruined his shirt. Suna recalls as he has Yo pause to take a sip from his glass. Still hazy down I managed to create a sword out of leaves or why it had been able to cut through stone so easy... Yea, that fountain got sliced up pretty bad.

Not that Ienobu was awake to see the destruction Hibari-san, that 'extreme' Sun, and himself caused to that park. He's not even sure when that Sun joined the fight nor does he know why the boy retreated from the fight either. It was just as well, his Sky Flame was reacting to that kid's Sun Flame, which caused some strange things to happen to the various plants of the park. So, while he'd focus on battling Hibari-san physically, he'd mostly battled with that 'extreme' Sun viva Flames, they both were Active and very stubborn.

His only memory of that 'extreme' Sun was wearing light brown bark with yellow leaves as armor, which covered the shoes, legs, body, arms, hands, and head. Actually, that might be why I haven't figured out how to recreated that leaf sword. He reflects. I wonder if Hibari-san ever learnt the identity of who that Sun was?

His instincts snap at him, bringing him out of his musings. Breakfast is done and that tension is something he acknowledges once more. The embers of that anger flare up once again as Suna uses Yo to fixates the presto baby with an impassive look before getting up to clear away his dishes.

Ignoring the woman's protests, he puts them in the sink before heading for the door, to where his bags await him. Suna's mentally debating the merits of just creating a Sky Path there and then so he can get Yo back to Nian Company Headquarters faster. At this point, Nana's continued ignorance in regards to Mafia and Dying Will Flames of the Sky is her being willful in wanting to be ignorant then her not having the chance at coming to grips with reality of the situation that Ienobu is being toss into head first and with a lifeguard who's a firm believer in sink or swim mentality towards life.

"There isn't a school." The way in which the presto baby says that makes it sound like he's repeated that before, which, well, he might have. The hitman likely has been trying to get a reaction out of him since his mind when down memory lane concerning how he almost choked Ienobu to death. "I've check."

"Congrats on knowing how to read Japanese then." He has Yo states in a bland tone. "But then, that's hardly an accomplishment when you've been in Japanese for how long?"

He turns to regard the fake toddler, knowing his eyes are flaring with his Flame color. "Keep this up and you might be able to pick up some manners during your time here, Sun Arcobaleno." Yo's tone is biting as he gives the hitman a knowing smirk while titling the head just so.

"I'd be lying if I said Fon and Verde sends their regards." It's said in a light, teasing tone. Reborn's reaction is easy to see as the infamous poker face settles on that face along with the tilting of the head to use the hat to hide his eyes.

Ienobu murmurs the word Arcobaleno while keeping his distance. "Haven't told him, huh? About yourself? About the timer that's ticking away." He states as he settles more into Yo. "Tick. Tock. Tick. Tock. The time on the clock is running out, hitman."

The Sun's reaction only feed his anger but he holds back from continuing. "What do you mean? What clock? And how do you..."

Ienobu questions, he can tell that the other wants to demand answers but, well, fear concerning the two of them keeps him from doing so.

"Got kidnapped by a Yakuza, sold to a Triad, and experimented on by said Triad." He sums up. "Fon's the Storm Arcobaleno, he's my Shizun, and the one who put an end to the experiments of said Triad." By putting an end to them.

"Sperm donor never put much thought into security around us." He remarks. "He likely doesn't put much thought into securing anything, really, what with three dead Heirs staining his hands."

"And here Reborn is." Yo states lightly. "A weight of his fate about his neck and a contract that he stakes his pride on. To pick one of the civilian sons of the Outsider Advisor to train as a future Don."

"Of course the two wastes of flesh failed to mention a critical bit of information, you know?" He states after reading Reborn's pose and Flame. "They already kicked out the eldest son from line of succession when he was Five ."

"When the Famiglia had three Heirs to their name and vying for the position of future Don. When they had four Skies wearing the name Vongola." He continues as he feels Ienobu's Flames flinch. "Flame Sealed at Five , which basically means I was toss out of the Family our respected ancestor founded for the simply crime of becoming Active."

"Same would have happened to you," His eyes flicker towards his brother, "if you'd become Active during their visit."

"The old shit bag of a Don should get his head examined and that adopted son of his should be given regency over the Famiglia, to do some spring cleaning." He states with a snort as his gaze returns to Reborn. "So many potential heirs skipped over simply because the decaying, altered minded soon to be a corpse himself, who sits upon a hill of bones covered in blood sporting a rotting corpse throne wants someone with Giotto's blood to succeed him."

"I pity the sons for having such a cock sucking shit stain for a father." He remarks pausing before continuing with a great deal more control over his emotions. "But it's not any of my business, in the end. After all, I was toss out of the Famiglia, a Flame Seal branded on my Soul ."

With that, he begins picking up his bags and with a final look starting from Nana, who's busying washing the kitchen counters, doing her best to not hear anything, to Ienobu, who's eyes are wide and is very pale, so many questions waiting to be spoken while Knowing he won't like the answers to them, and to Reborn, who clearly don't like how disrespectful he is to his contractor and burns with many more questions. Touching the front door, he reaches into himself and Harmonizes the door with a storage closet door that is where Suna's Bio-Pod is.

His Sky Flame engulfs the door and the door frame for a solid minute, he feels the Sky Path snap into place. "Hope to see you next year, little brother." He states before twisting the knob and opening the door, he walks through it, being sure to close it and then the Sky Path between the two doors.

Exhaustion grips him but he walks towards Suna's Bio-Pod, taking comfort from his other body. "I'm home." He states softly as he touches the glass and the tail moves to touch the opposite side of the glass.

He can see a tired smile on Yo's face while he sees Suna's dull orange eyes open enough to view Yo.

Might be continued . . . Might not be as well!

Time in the Digital Realm: Digimon

I don't own Digimon and this is a bit inspired by Waiting for You Online!

{ - 0 - }

Cyber Realm , it's the revamp and updated title of the previous Data Adventures , the max level is now set at 200, from the previous 100 it had been for the past five years, and they added a number of new Races where previously, the Races had been Human, Elf, and Demi-Human, which are humans but with animal features. The four new Races are Orc, Mer-Folk, Centaur, and Angelic-Blooded, which is just Human with a Racial Wing Feature that unlocks at level 2 and it's duration is for a minute, every two levels, the duration increases by a minute. Players being people did want people do best, they complain about how which of the Races they should have allowed Players to use.

Hazardous merely sighs and his ears flicker back while he carries his in game Wife StarLight through the Capital City of Scarlatina, Rainbow Ring. They do gather a few looks, after all, StarLight is considered rather famous back when this was Data Adventures due to her playing 'solo' all the time and, of course, her level. There's still a number of... glitches since the previous Data Adventures went into the VMMT, short for Virtual Mind Meld Technology, market about ten years ago, when he'd been eight while StarLight had been nine.

There had been a random option for creating Characters back then, and by random, it was Random . If not for a pair of friends, unofficial leaks of a limited time promotion, and minor rumors surrounding said the option, he'd likely just go with Human for his first and, really, only Character, Hazardous . But since he followed through with their badgering, Hazardous ' Race ended up being fairly... odd but then, not as odd as what other Players ended up with as their Race back then.

People posted selfies of their Characters during those three weeks on various forums, some Players ended up with Characters of not just the enemy Races within the game but also Characters who's Races were Animals and Plants, a few ended up as Animated Items, well, that's what some people claimed but the developers claim those to be false. Those with Animal Characters started as young examples of the animal, once the Character reached the unknown max level for the Animal, the Character's Avatar would update to be an adult version.

Feeling a pat on his neck, he comes to a stop before moving to the side of the street. "Maybe they'll have it?" StarLight muses and he snorts, whispering to her, 'I won't hold my breathe.'

"I'll be back." Letting her down, StarLight heads into the Auction House. He gets up from his bow and glances around the street, there's more then a few Players watching him.

"I thought mounts are suppose to vanish?" A Mer-Folk, the Avatar appears to be female, muses to her companions. "The rider must have been StarLight ." Comments one of the two Angelic-Blooded. "Really?! That's who she was? Do you think she'd pose for a selfie with me?" The other Angelic-Blooded Player.

Yea, Hazardous ' Race is an Animal, a Horse, which upgraded to a Stallion when the Husbandry System engendered all of the in game Animals, and it's both a bemusing curse along with an annoying blessing, after all, he doesn't have hands so he can't use weapons. He's got problems communicating with other Players, it's only when he's in a Party does it work and, later, when the Marriage System was added, did they find out that he can use the new feature of the game called Whisper. It allows the married couple to talk to each other regardless of distance.

They also found a number of other hidden features concerning the Marriage System that they come across over the years since the system became a thing, nobody has made threads about, like the fact that when they are within a kilometer of each other, the game treats them as though they are already in a Party, which means they share EXP and can Roll for items of rare and higher quality. It's commonly known that there are Hidden Events and weekly Quests only available to married Players. What most of the Players don't known is that there seems to be something more to said events and Quests, after all, in the years that they've been playing and doing said Events and Quests, they've noticed a steady increase in what they gain from them, for example, it seems that every eight weeks they saw the EXP increase and changes in what rewards they receive, often in number or it changes to something better or something new gets handed out as well.

Although, there's a glitch that seemed to have not been fixed in regards to said Marriage System , it seems that due to his Race, StarLight 's Character Information doesn't list Hazardous as her Husband. Further, it doesn't read as Married or Single, that space is blank. Which has lead to another reason why Players look up to StarLight , many believing she's Single and is a Solo Player.

Due to his lack of ability with weapons, it meant that Hazardous was limited in what he can be spec into. So, he went the magic route, namely pursuing White Magic, aka Healing Magic, for as far as he could before spreading out to learn other kinds of magic, which were Black Magic, aka Debuff Magic, Blue Magic, aka Self Argumentation Magic, Brown Magic, aka Shield/Ward Magic, Green Magic, aka Buffing Others Magic, and Yellow Magic, aka Area Effect Magic. With the revamping of the game, there's now Purple Magic, which is Shield/Ward Breaking Magic, Orange Magic, which is a magic for crafting Magical Items, and Gray Magic, which is for Transformation Magic.

As for what StarLight is looking in the Auction House for is a Beginner Tome of Gray Magic. It's been a week since Cyber Realm has been out and, as usual, there's plenty of rumors going around concerning the three new Magics. There's hope that with Gray Magic, he'll be able to have Hazardous transform into a form that sports hands, sure, the duration of said Transformation wouldn't be for long but it would allow him to enter certain areas that are rather tight for his Character's Avatar body.

StarLight arrives out of the building, turning to focus on her a great deal better, it looks like she's more nervous then disappointed. "I bought something, it's not the Tome but it's something that should work, it's got four charges." She explains once she's at his shoulder, an arm about his neck.

'That's better then nothing.' He admits in a happy tone. 'Random form?' Hazardous inquires as he bends down, 'picking' StarLight up.

"Seems like it." She agrees as she settles onto his back with her facing forward. With a hum, Hazardous gets into a trot, they'll head out of Rainbow Ring to further discuss things.

University isn't what she expected it to be, yet, in the end, Kari finds relief from her studying to be a teacher where she can, be it along side her 'husband' in the revamped Cyber Realm as StarLight to enjoying meet ups with old friends or family when they can find the time. Which is why she's got dinner plans with Tai for tonight, although he might be bringing along his room mate, Matt, at least, that's what his latest text to her seem to imply. She's met Matt a few times since the two became room mates and Kari finds him to be nice enough, a touch aloof but decent kind of guy.

She gives a brief thought towards Takato, who's her 'husband' Hazardous and wonders about how he's parents are doing. Smiling slightly at the thought of her self adopted younger brother, she's never really talked about what she gets up to in Data Adventures , the now Cyber Realm with her older brother. In fact, she doubts he even knows her only Character's name but that's not that surprising as Tai's not one for RP type video games, his tastes tend more towards the popular shooters and beat em' ups.

In a lot of ways, Takato's her longest standing friendship, who's also her first male friend, and is someone who's more like a little brother then just a friend she plays the game with. They've met a few times in RL and it's rather startling to realize they kind of resemble each other some what, with both of them sporting red hazel eyes and are brunettes. So the few time they meet up, a lot of people mistake them to be cousins or siblings due to similar coloring.

Pushing that out of her mind, she closes the door behind her, locking it and then continuing down the hallway to the stairs, she'll use the elevator when she returns to the apartment. She arrives with ten minutes to spare when it comes to the time they said they'd met up at. Once within the restaurant, Kari finds that there's an extra person sitting at the table with her older brother and his room mate, who might be a relative of Matt's given how they share similar features, although he looks kind of on the gloomy side.

Tai waves at her, beckoning her over while Matt and third member of the table look up at her. With a better look at the third's features, the resemblance to Matt is a touch more strong which means this might be a brother. Does he have a sibling? Kari wonders as she greets the three with a slightly forced smile.

"This is Matt's little brother, Takaishi Takeru, he'll answer to TK though." Tai informs her with a playful grin while Matt gets this put upon look while TK says a rather meek hello. "Nice to meet you, TK. I'm Tai's sister, Hikari, but I'll answer to Kari too."

That gets her a smile and TK seems to relax a touch. She lips into the seat next to Tai, who moves over to give her more room. "He needed to get out of his room." Explains Matt. "Bad break up."

"Which happened two months ago." Pipes in her brother while TK just seems set to endure the discussion of his break up, likely for the nth time since it happened. Not that she can relate, given her experience had only been at best, two dates with the same guy. She's never been in a serious relationship, well, being married in a video game hardly counts as dating, generally and even then, they spent two years playing together before the game update brought in the Marriage System.

"I can't really relate to that, but from how my friends act, I'm sure, given time, it won't be as raw?" She isn't sure if that's much of a comfort, yet TK gives her a slight smile and a hum. Matt and Tai have the menus up and going through it.

A waiter arrives to take their drink orders as TK and her take a look through their own menus. Conversation is mostly on the typical small talk, circling around school, popular series and music, and Matt bring up the recent revamping and updated of Cyber Realm . "So, Data Adventures is now Cyber Realm , have you heard of it, Kari?"

"I've been playing it with the same Character for over ten years now." She admits and all three of the guys at the table seem rather surprised to hear that. "How about you three?" Kari asks in turn. "Or have you just gotten into it recently?"

"Been playing for about three years." Matt replies. "I've been bugging Tai into giving it a try and he finally did two days ago."

"I played for two years with my brother but, well, I haven't played for over five years." TK admits. She decides not to pry while Tai's emotions are circulating through various emotions about this bit of information.

"To play that long... Is there someone special?" Matt inquires with a touch of deviousness, after all, he knows perfectly well how Tai is when it comes to her and guys.

"More like a younger brother." She admits. "He's a year younger and we've met in real life."

"This... wait? Younger... I don't recall..." Tai is clearly stumped about this development.

"His name is Matsuki Takato and a lot of people think we're either cousins or siblings, due to our similar coloring." Kari tells them. "And yea, our Characters are married in game."

Their food arrives while Tai clearly doesn't know what to make of this revelation while the other pair of siblings chat about how their respective parent is doing, it seems that their parents are divorced and they'd each gone to live one either their father or mother. It seems that TK was raised by their mother with Matt with their father. She politely listens but is glad when the topic changes to a few times until they return to the game, by this point, Tai looks like he's got his feet back under him, emotionally and mentally speaking that is.

"So... What's your Character's name?" Tai asks after Matt shares a story about his latest dungeon crawl with his guild-mates in Smoking Mirror Caverns, it's for levels 65 to 70 and it's one of those that's been altered with the game's update.

Kari pauses as she considers Tai's request but, in the end, sighs, " StarLight of Fourth Musket Server." There's a slight widening of eyes from Matt while confusion flickers on TK's face and Tai's confusion blooms into surprise.

"But, I thought that StarLight wasn't married?" Tai states, glancing towards Matt. The blond in question kind of nods in agreement.

"Takato did the Random challenge and ended up with his Character being a Horse, the game still has glitches when it comes to Player with Animal Characters." She admits and it's clear that the others find it amusing. " Hazardous is his Character's name, you won't find it on the Ranking Lists either."

"How does one manage to actually play an Animal Character?" TK inquires, beating Matt to the punch. "I seem to recall forums complaining about how weak they were at level 1 and problems with interaction with the environment along with other Players."

"Yea, most of those Characters have been sold to the company for in game currency." Matt adds and she hums, before saying after taking a few bites, "Yes, they can't hold weapons but they can learn magic, Hazardous use to focus on only White Magic but he's branched out due. The game doesn't hinder him becoming a Magical Generalist like the official Races but that could be a balancing things out given the lack of hands or it's not registering his Character correctly."

"Isn't there a new color of Magic that needs hands due to crafting?" Matt muses and Kari hums before stating simply, "Orange and we've found something to work around that."

She ignores that Tai is busy on his phone, likely looking up both Character's names and mentally wishes her brother luck trying to find anything on Hazardous . As TK had said, most of those who ended up with Animal Characters grew frustrated with trying to play them and it's the rare Player who kept said Character for either novelty or as a status symbol. Given that Grey Magic is centered around transformation, who knows what the game developers actually did with those bought Characters. Then again, they might not have done anything given the still awkward interfacing Takato has with Hazardous , even if it often works in their favor at times.

They've managed to buy the beginner tome and Takato's been working hard to grind this ability in said branch. Beginner level means that he's only able to effect tiny changes that are superficial in nature in regard to appearances. Hazardous ' coat, mane, and tail has changes into a lot of different colors and now Takato's figuring out how to do patterns with his current ability. The final spells of beginner allow for minor physical changes, like antlers, cat's eyes, or feathers to a Character, they only last for an hour but it's progress and the next stage in the magic likely allows for permanency with those changes.

Yes, given time, Hazardous can look like a unicorn but on the other hand, he might even kirin, although that would involve figuring something out for the hooves. The options that Takato has, will have, would be only limited by his imagination. The transformation items he'd been using doesn't alter Takato's Hazardous ' Race nor affect his stats but it does allow him to use of hands, which had been the biggest hindrance when it came to casting certain spells which requires a hand gesture.

We did find out that his Equipment does stay bound to him once the transformation is gone though. Kari muses as she shares some of her early mishaps with Takato. She still has screen shots of Hazardous as a colt, which are very adorable and she has a few of them on her phone, which she shows to the other three.

Before they part after they pay for their dinner, TK asks for the server again, mentioning that he's interested in getting back into the game. She does make a suggestion that if he does make a Character on the same server that he sends the Friend Request to Hazardous and she'll then get his Character's name from him to send an invite back.

It's hardly surprising that she gets a text from Tai asking to met Takato later that night, having checked her phone's battery before turning in for the night. Sighing, she replies with a simply, maybe.

It's been so long since he'd played that TK had forgotten his Password to his Data Adventures Account. It was easily solved with re-verifying his information and email, then putting in a new one. Then it was a matter of finding the server that Tai's sister was on. It had taken him two weeks to work up the nerve to follow through with actually making a new Character, in that time, he did try to slip back into the game but, well, it's been so long since he played and the changes...

So, when he did do it, make a new Character that is, after all, what was the point of spending actual money to transfer one of this three Characters to this server when he decided he wanted something of a fresh start? Then, seeing the new Playable Races and having checked out the new updates to the older ones, in the end, TK decides to pick Angelic-Blooded for his new Character's Race and after trying a number of different names, all of which just didn't feel right to already in use, it's when he puts in SparkingMoutain that his Character gets a name.

It's an embarrassing name but it does its job. Once within the game and goes through the Game Tutorial, he's able to bring up the Friend List and it takes a few seconds to remember the name. It seems that Hazardous is online and within a minute, accepts the request and within another minute, he gets a request from StarLight . It takes him a few seconds before accepting the request, it's kind of strange to look at the list and notice how there's not the normal profile picture next to Hazardous ' name, but then, it must be normal thing.

It's not very long before he gets a message from Hazardous about meeting them at Glacier Coast Harbor so they can hook up. He sends a reply back agreeing, although he does warn it might take him a while, given his current level is 3. Hazardous replies back that it's fine, that StarLight and him are still got some collecting to do, which is going to take a while.

While tempted to inquire about what they are collecting, he re-frames and, after checking his World Map , heads out in that direction. It takes him nearly an hour to travel there on foot, doing his best to deal with the Mob of Monsters and getting use to flying with his Racial Feature. He messages Hazardous that he's arrived and gets a reply saying that they're almost done, then another saying they'll be there in about fifteen minutes.

He gets a Party Invite from StarLight , which means that they're within a mile of the harbor. Accepting, he finds it's just StarLight and him as members then, a minute later, Hazardous gets added and then promoted to Party Leader a few minutes later. 'Sorry, I was trying to talk to you but it seems you couldn't hear me. So we decided to see if you could if I were the leader of the party.'

It's a whisper, given how way the voice sounds, it's soft, gently even and yet, glancing around shows that neither Hazardous or StarLight are within sight of him. "Can you hear me?... Can, ah, StarLight hear me?" He inquires curiously.

'I hear you just fine.' Then a few seconds later, Hazardous replies with a hint of bemusement, 'She hadn't so, no, she can't. Huh, good to know.'

"Where did you want to meet?" He asks, it's rather strange to be talking with Hazardous when the other Player isn't in sight. He considers where to go or, maybe, give a description of SparkingMoutain . Then again, Hazardous is a Horse, which makes it hard to miss given that most Players prefer more exotic for their mounts theses days, like woolly rhinos and gigantic felines.

'We're turning in the Quest at the Wine Cellar of the Toad's Spawn Inn. It's the orange and green building, hard to miss given generally all of the buildings around here are all creams and browns.' Hazardous explains and with a leap into the air, his wings spread and he flaps a bit until he gets a better view of the various buildings and, hums upon spotting how close he is to said inn. "I see it."

It doesn't take long before his duration on his wings expires but he's not that far from the ground. He arrives in the building and it takes him a bit of exploring to find the way into the Wine Cellar, it's stairs door is hidden by the stairs leading to the next floor. It takes him some effort to move the sliding door just enough to get his hands in between, then he uses his body weight to help move it. "Well done."

Startled, he finds StarLight , who's an Elf, and a man who does sport human features, like a five o'clock shadow but the ears seem to be pointed like an elf's. The hair is a dark red with streaks of gold while the eyes point to a clearly non-human feature given they are a warm amber yellow. The man is sturdy in frame, really sturdy with broad shoulders and the man's height seems to be almost seven feet, which is beyond the limit for humans, elves, demi-humans, and, hence, the Anglic-Blooded as well.

" Hazardous ." The man says as way of introduction and it takes him a few seconds to realize that, yes, that does sound a little like the whispering voice from before. "I didn't expect you to figure out where the door was." The other Player admits with a easy smile.

"Yea, we found a way for him to enter into buildings." StarLight says, helping him to realize what he's actually seeing is what he's seeing. "Orange Magic, for now, at least until he gets more skilled in Grey Magic."

Nodding, he offers a hand to the both of them, introducing his current Character, " SparkingMountain and it's nice to meet you both and thanks for letting me join with you, in here, you know, for today." StarLight takes his hand first and then it's Hazardous .

"Not problem." StarLight says with a smile, her attire is that of a front line fighter and it's clear she hadn't bothered to edit any of it to form fit her Character's Avatar, which costs in game currency and it binds the equipped armor to the Player, so it can't be sold at the Auction House. "We don't have a lot of people who know , you know?"

It takes him a few seconds to realize that its about Hazardous ' Race or about the marriage, likely both actually. "Ah, so, just, down?" He stumbles with his words, Hazardous humming positive and StarLight nodding.

He walks down the stairs, keeping a hand on the railing as he does so, light foot steps are next before heavier ones bring up the rear. The Wine Cellar turns out to be rather spacious, with huge barrels on various racks and the room is lit up with a very rare item, which are hard to find as drops never mind purchasing from the Auction House, Amulets of Haunting Light hanging in the air.

"Wires." Oh, yea . Squinting, he can see the wires the necklaces are hung on.

"Aren't those... Well, I know it's been some years but..." He trails off and StarLight answers his question, "Yes, they are still hard to find item, although creating them using Orange Magic is likely going to be happening soon, once people get around to experimenting with Orange Magic outside of the usual recipes and spells."

There's a table at the center space and a Demi-Human sporting feathers, with a name floating above the head, it's clear that he's an NPC. Courting Gentleman Joe White , he's pretty sure it's a reference to something but he doesn't know to what off the top of his head. Hazardous strides forward once he comes to the table, StarLight moving to stand to his left. "Did you bring my request, my good sir?"

"A hundred pink roses and two thornless white roses." States Hazardous and he raises his eye brows at the shear amount of roses, never mind the comment about thornless ones. A trade screen pops up between the NPC and Player. "Excellent work, my good sir." The trade screen closes only, suddenly, the NPC turns to congratulate him on his marriage.

"Huh?" A second later, fake confederacy explodes as he gets a pop up message 'Congratulation concerning Players Hazardous and SparkingMountain on their recent marriage', he gets a sinking feeling that this wasn't something that should be happening. Although, he did just level up thrice...

"What...?" Hazardous seems at a loss about what just happened and suddenly, StarLight snorts before laughing heavily. "You... Another... You... Stud, you!" She gasps and he shares a bewildered look with Hazardous concerning this laughing fit.

Shaking his head, Hazardous ' gazes at something before him, a hand raised up. He blinks a few times before checking his own Character Profile and, huh, yip, it's been updated. "Second Wife ?" Hazardous states in startlement, he glances at the other Player before trying to find that on his profile but, well, there's not anything like that on his.

"Stallion." StarLight seems to have calmed down enough to speak clearly, although she's still sporting a wide smile and he swears there's mischief in those eyes. "Stallions have a herd of mares, or, rather, using human terms, harem of them. So, given your Race and that you have been engendered by the game..."

"That... make some sense..." He admits while Hazardous merely frowns, "But we're not at a Holy Place nor a Court House, never mind having an in game Marriage Certificate that we'd both need to sign."

"Well, you have signed one, so we do, and we were on a Quest for Married Players." She points out. "And animals in game, don't need visit either of those places to... make pair bonds nor are they strictly singular in said bonds."

"So... It's a glitch in both systems?" He suggests while it seems like Hazardous is mentally cursing up a storm, at least it looks like it.

"Let's go with that." StarLight states, "It's not like we have any better idea of how the game came to the conclusion."

"Wait, if that Animal Husbandry system if about animal breeding..." He looks between the two and it takes them both a minute to realize what he's implying. "Nope, never happened and never will. We do our best to stay clear of Barnyard Barns just to be on the safe side of that." States Hazardous , StarLight nodding in agreement.

The mood slowly become awkward as it slowly dawned on him that yes, it seems that he's now considered married to Hazardous. "Ah, divorce?" He inquires curiously.

"That's hard to say but we could try?" Hazardous admits after sharing a look with StarLight. "And if doing so causes us to also divorce?" StarLight inquires in turn.

"..." First day as SparkingMountain and I'm already married. Matt's so going never let up on me about this, is he? TK thinks to himself, they head back the way they came.

Author's Note: I wrote this for FireHedgeHog, who wanted me to write something for Digimon. It had very different take but, well, I found some starting problems before I figured out the angle I wanted to go with.

As for Waiting For You Online, I'm almost done reading what's been translated, it's not yet fully translated but, here's hoping that it will be by winter. Also, been watching Log Horizon, not sure if anything is going to happen because of it though...

It's the playing of a flute that draws TK and his two companions through the woods. Light of a campfire comes into sight and with Christ and Jules trailing behind, they arrive to find a group of people along with the flute player. The man playing the flute looks familiar, not in 'I've met him way' but in the 'I've seen his likeness before'.

"Well, hello there! I'm Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian!" The player says upon noticing their arrival as the song ends, the flute, which is an odd design, gets put on the belt.

"Your the Hero of the Bow?" The blond fourteen year old states in surprise. In the past three months, there's been plenty of stories floating about all of the summoned Heroes, most of those concerning Wuxian are about how much he can drink along with being a necromancer. There's nothing concerning his musical skills, which are fairly good, it seems.

"And you are Takeru, the Spear Hero! You're a lot younger then I'd expect." The Chinese featured man counters with a cheeky grin.

"I prefer to be called TK." He admits and then goes on to introduce his two Party Members, "This is Christ Tales and Jules Elnath."

The cheerful Wuxian nods and introduces the seven members of his own Party, the most notable are a Karma Rabbit named A-Lan, a Wyr named Shuhang, a Filolial named A-Yao, the four humanoids use to be a gang of Demi-Human orphan street gang, Marcus is a Crow Demi-Human, Kimberly is a Cat Demi-Human, Earl is a Rat Demi-Human, and Nova being a Fox Demi-Human. Given what he recalls concerning Demi-Humans, it's more then likely that the four are a lot younger then there appearance would suggest.

The Digidestine of Hope had come to notice that Wuxian seems to lack his Legendary Bow, although his gaze does keep drifting to the odd flute, it's shape is rather strange, to be honest. There's a knowing look in Wuxian's gray eyes while the other Hero is still telling the story of how he came rescue A-Lan from the stew pot of a merchant. He wonders how much of that story is exaggerated for comedic effect but, admits, Wuxian is rather good at weaving stories.

"Curious about my Gu Jian, huh?" Wuxian muses, gesturing to the flute and he nods, admitting, "It's a rather strange shape for a flute, isn't it?"

"It's actually his Bow!" Blurs out Nova while the others giggle at TK and his Party's expression. "It is, it truly is!" Kimberly adds.

"I just figured out how to get it to transform into a flute, it was surprisingly simple!" Wuxian says. "You know how you can unlock other forms when it comes to having your weapon absorb bits of monsters? Well, the same can happen by having it absorb items! I had Gu Jian absorb this flute I bought months ago, it wouldn't let me play it." Wuxian pouts while patting said transformed Bow.

The shape of the flute does look like a bow. TK mentally admits while Jules does what she does best when it comes to a source of information, starts asking questions and memorizing the answers given. Wuxian seems to be delighted to share how he came to conclude that theory, which also involved butchering monsters and having his Gu Jian to absorb different parts of the monsters, which proved to unlock a lot more forms then just having the Legendary Weapon absorb the whole corpse.

He's rather surprise to hear that and knew he's got more experimenting to do. "Have you spent gems or money to upgrade the forms?" He inquires curiously.

"What? You can spend money for upgrades?!" It seems that Wuxian hadn't known that. TK nods and explains how he figured that out, particularly as he's got at least three forms he generally uses, after all, one good turn deserves another.

He's curious about why Wuxian named his Bow, still, he admits as to what they'd been doing out so late, hunting down rumors of a woman luring monster. It seems Wuxian also heard about it and had also been looking for it, only he's been in the area for a week already. "Now though, I think I know what's become of those women." Wuxian's eyes flare a ruby red before fading back into their normal gray.

Looking at both Parties, it seems that they don't know what it is that Wuxian has figured out. Wuxian inquires if he'd mind stopping at a location for him and, well, TK's not unwilling to do the other a favor, not if it leads to stopping whatever it is that's happening concerning those women. They left not long after, although before leaving, he takes out a torch then pokes it in the campfire and then, with it lit, has it absorbed by his Spear, which unlocks the Torch Spear series.

His Spear transforms and Wuxian smiles, nodding a bit as they said their farewells. TK leaves with Christ and Jules.

"Ah! Come on! Just one little bite? Please~?" Tsunayoshi isn't sure what to make of the scene before him.

He's pretty sure the guy sporting the red armor is the Hero of the Sword, one Issei Hyoudou, and wonders why he's begging Vikki for some of the baby Dragon food, she's been making a lot for the pass two hours so they don't run out for the month. It's food for Natsu-Kun, who just hatched out of the egg this morning and is a Water Dragon. The contains in the pot is for feeding Dragons, namely, newly hatched ones. He's pretty sure that Natsu-Kun is still with Lark-Chan, although where Lark-Chan is, he's doesn't know.

Both Kieth and Nicholas seem to be at a loss as well. The three with Issei, one of whom is a Demi-Human, of the canine variety it seems, seem to be a touch embarrassed about their Party Leader's behavior. Issei seems to be fifteen years old from what Tsunayoshi can tell and is the first other Legendary Hero he's met since he's been summoned. Tsunayoshi only just turned thirteen before he ended up getting summoned as the Shield Hero five months ago.

"Oh! Hey, how'd you get two shields? Also, I'm Issei Hyoudou and your Tsunayoshi Sawada, right? The Shield Hero?" Issei pipes in upon noticing him and his companions watching the scene.

"Yes, yes I am. Nice to meet you, Hyoudou-san." Tsunayoshi replies and Issei looks a touch bemused at the -san at the end of his name. "Vikki's currently making baby Dragon food."

Issei blinks and then blinks again while the Sword Hero considers this new information. "I just hatched a Dragon egg this morning and Vikki wanted to make enough food to last Natsu-Kun for a month. He's a Water Dragon." He decides to add.

"..." Issei turns to look at the pot with Vikki standing beside it. "But it smells so good!" The other Hero pretty much whines.

To baby Dragon, maybe. He thinks while his companions walks over to the fire, making sure to move upwind of the cooking pot. Natsu-Kun ate two bowls of it and they almost gave in to give him a third helping, if not for his gut feeling saying it was a bad idea, it's not often he listens to that gut feeling, if he had, he's pretty sure he'd be more trouble then just dealing with the Waves and Monsters, after the first three times he's gone with that feeling, he regretted the results soon afterwards and had to deal with a bunch of politics ramifications then he, a thirteen year old boy should, never mind knowing a single thing about the local politics or the people involved.

"You're human, right?" The teenage Sky inquires curiously, head tilt. Issei sobers up and his mouth opens but then closes as the older teen decides against speaking. A particular look in the Sword Hero's eyes makes him believe that the other is recalling something, a past memory most likely.

"You know, I had someone read my fortune back when I first arrived and he mentioned I had a soul of a Dragon in my left hand." Issei recalls with look of nostalgia upon his face, "Of course, he also went on to say that I was suppose to meet death at the hands of a Fallen Angel only to arise as a Devil before the dawn of the next day. That was all he could read about that future, he claimed that since I'm here, that it was unraveling as it is no longer my future."

"Ok..." Tsunayoshi doesn't know what to make of most of that, then again, Issei did rise his left hand up while speaking. He frowns as he studies it fairly intently, after all, that gut feeling seems to believe what the Sword Hero said about the hand and his previous fate. "Where did you meet him? What was his name?" He asks without even thinking and then, blushes, after all, he hadn't meant to go seeking the man, and yet...

"Curious about your own fortune, Shield-Kun?" Issei asks in a lightly teasing tone and, well, he shrugs, not really sure if he should or not. "Well... Get her to give me a taste and I'll tell yea!"

He sighs in exasperation with Issei's back to him as the other points in the direction of Vikki and the baby Dragon goop that will be put into a tray to cool down into a kind of jello, which will keep fairly well outside of his Shield's storage space. Then blinks to find Issei no longer standing before him but engaged in a fight with Lark-Chan with Natsu-Kun gamely biting the other Hero's left wrist.

The generally ill tempered Filolial's beck is pecking at Issei's forehead. If she'd been a male, he'd name her Skylark-San in honor of Kyoya Hibari, so, he shorten it to Lark-Chan. Given that her temper being what it is, the previous owner had been more then happy to sell her to him, not accepting the full amount for her either, regardless of the fact that her kind generally fetch a larger amount these days due to the Waves. Then again, most mount prices have gone up due to the Waves, as people are looking to evacuate or hide from the Waves.

"Lark-Chan! That's not how we are to treat guests!" He finally recovers enough to scold the Filolial, mentally praying that Issei won't be angry over Lark-Chan behaving, well for her, normally.

In the end, much to the horror and fascination of both Parties, Issei did manage to eat five bowls of Natsu-Kun's steaming stew of baby Dragon food.

{ ^ _ ^ }

"Hard to believe a year has passed since we got summoned, huh?" Issei Hyoudou remarks and Wuxian is the only one among the four Heroes who's opted to actually order and drink a something that isn't a juice or water, there's so many kinds of alcoholic drinks to try, the one he's drinking is wheat based and he's heard of ones made from grapes and potatoes! He's still in the process of figuring out which he prefers, given the wide selection never mind that different Kingdoms have their own brewers who brew differently in regards to creating their product.

"It's kind of hard to believe we haven't gotten together before now." Remarks TK, who's the only one drinking water. It seems that the three all grew up in a similar country of origin, Japan along within about the same Era to boot. They spent a lot of time comparing their respective Japans.

He'd been shocked listening to TK's adventures in another world, a 'Digital' World who's inhabitants were generally called 'Digital Monster' or Digimon for short. It's hard for him to wrap his mind around a bunch of kids saving not just a single world but two. Thankfully, he wasn't the only one amazed by TK's previous adventures and it was pretty clear that the blond Spear Hero missed his friends, particularly his Digimon partner Patamon.

Neither Issei or Tsunayoshi had lived as an exciting childhood as TK though, although Ddraig had plenty of stories to share concerning the secret magical side of Issei's world. He'd been a touch dismayed to learn that Cultivation, and thus Cultivation Sects, weren't a thing, yet again, on that world. The ancient Heavenly Dragon Emperor is still a bit miffed about the owner of the Divine Dividing Sacred Gear hadn't been summoned as a Hero, so that the epic rivalry between the white and red Dragon could continue. The Booster Gear Sacred Gear only became active a month back, which unlocked all of Issei's Dragon Sword series along with explaining that Issei's soul is incline to being Draconic in nature.

Tsunayoshi's likely the only one who life had been 'normal', well, other then the extreme bullying the teen enduring from both peers and teachers, with a lot responsible adults turning a blind eye said bullying as well. The now fourteen year old's odd orange fire hints that there's more to his world then Tsunayoshi thought there was and according to various experts, it's properties is akin to a glue and allows Tsunayoshi to be more in-tune to, well, anything he wants to be in-tuned with. It's also seems to be the source of much headache to the kid as it keeps trying to put the teen into dangerous situations, regardless if Tsunayoshi and his Party's wishes on the matter.

He'd been rather reluctant to share his own life story but, well, Wuxian can feel his worries about sharing it fade away with each cup of beer and a shot of whiskey. "Well, we all did meet up individually." Remarks Tsunayoshi, who then glances at him with a concern look, which makes him wonder if the other's picking up on his getting ready to share about his life.

Giving the youngest member of the Legendary Heroes a reassuring smile, he takes a steadying breath, which draws the attention of the Shield Hero and Spear Hero. Something on his face must be what gives away that he's ready to share the story of his life, including how it ended. His, unlike TK's, doesn't end on a happy note after all.

3 Barks at Noon found the world a changed place then it had been four centuries ago, when he enter into mediation seclusion while visiting Japan. The shine he'd settled in to mediate at is in such disrepair that the wooden structure pretty much gone with wild flowers and grass growing from the decomposed wooden floor. The six hundred year old Immortal Cultivator, maybe it should be thousand year old one now, finds himself rather unsure what to make of the state of the shrine that housed him for those four hundred years.

With a soft sigh, 3 Barks checks what he has one him. His Dizi named Kunrao (Haunting) is still hanging from his belt while his Jian named Feng Saole (Wind Swept) is sheathed next to it. Next is his iron quankun ring and its contains, finding everything within in order, the blue eyed Chinese man with a twenty something appearance studies his own cloths before setting his shoulders straight and holding his head high, fully ready to face the world once more.

Once out of the ramshackle building that housed his stone covered body during his mediation, the Cultivator's only reaction is to blink once at the sight that is before him. Still very much sporting the usual untouched immortal mask upon his face, 3 Barks finds himself at a loss how to react to the buildings that stand across from the abandoned shrine. So very much taller then he's seen before and he expands his senses to notice something slightly off with the mortals that are around him. The difference is tiny but there, glaringly there.

Sensing a mortal passing overhead, 3 Barks turns his gaze in that direction to find a mortal with the guise of a monster! And yes, to his senses, that woman is Not a monster but a mortal person. Wearing cloths that are very scandalous in nature to boot!

The tips of his ears burn as he mentally recovers from the woman's choice in cloths and the fact she sports a two sets of wings that are not unlike a wasp or fly. He can't fully tell as he feels scandalized at continuing to scrutinizing her. It takes the Daoist a full minute to find the courage to continue venturing forth, into the clearly much changed world.

"Give me that flute!" Snaps the man sporting pink and green hair along with black spines crowning the forehead, a more advance pistol being held in the left hand while the right hand it extended for him to hand over something. 3 Barks finds himself feeling rather worn at this point and pretty much done with this strange mortal world, where mortals have the traits of non-humans and/or powers that weren't very spiritual in nature. The man's manner is clearly hostile and there's a slight intent to kill to get his way.

"Leave me be." He states in his limited Japanese and then does his best to ignore the mortal. In the end, the rude mortal tries to grab Kunrao from his belt.

Patience gone, 3 Barks deals with the mortal with a simply thrust of his hand, palm up and out, knocked the wind out of the rude man's lungs along with sending the man back four feet onto the ground. The pistol lands not far from the man, who is now clinching his midsection with both arms, clearly coughing and trying to recover from the fairly gentle blow that 3 Barks could manage.

Given the previous issues concerning wearing weapons out in the open, 3 Barks had done a trick to keep the mortals from noticing Feng Saole. Giving the rude man the respect he deserves, which is none, the Cultivator continues on with wandering the shop to get a glimpse of what's new and what's been updated from what he's known before he went into his seclusion. As he finishes stating his curiosity while restraining himself from merely sending whatever caught his attention into his quankun ring or opening the container to examine it in greater detail. His fingers itch to play around with the numerous devices that exist in the world now.

He knows better then to simply take things that weren't his, not when he can acquire them once he has the resources to do so. 3 Barks knows he needs to get into contact with another Daoist, it's just that he's unsure if any of his former students are alive, he taught five students, having taken them as his personal disciplines having decided to teach upon reaching a hundred and thirty years of age. His last student had earned her second the Daoist name, Crimson Stripes Over a Leopard's Forehead, generally called Crimson Stripes for short.

As 3 Barks contemplates his dilemma about who he should try to get in touch with as he heads to exit out of the shop, he gets stopped by a pair of mortals wearing a uniform. The one to his left sports green scales along his forehead and the one to his right seems rather normal. "Did you knock out the robber, sir?" The one with scales demands, 3 Barks takes note how hostile this mortal's body language is along with how different accent along with how the words sound.

He's spoken with older Immortals before and had noticed their own accents, he can only assume that the spoken language is one of those things that can change over the centuries. 3 Barks laments his choice of picking a foreign nation to enter into a seclusion meditation as it's clear that his shaky Japanese isn't going to help him. His grasp of the written versions are far better, although there seems to be a new written variety to learn to read.

"Sir?" The one to the right's tone sounds more gentle to his ears but it's the scaled one that keep his attention as there's impatience growing and the angry expression is becoming fixed upon that one's face. "Please answer my partner's question."

"This humble Daoist don't understand what your saying." He states simply in Cantonese. "This Master wishes to exit this building." 3 Barks informs the two, the scaled one sports a sneer now and makes to grab his left arm, he moves it ever so slightly so that the mortal can't grab it when he reaches for it.

"He's not hostile, Ryo! And he doesn't seem to speak Japanese!" Hiss the one to the right sharply at the one with scales, who's only grown angry with not being able to snatch his arm.

"So what, Kenshin? If he doesn't know the Japanese then he shouldn't have come to Japan!" Snaps the scaled mortal. "He obviously resisting arrest to boot!"

The scaled mortal continues to try to grab him, getting angrier and angrier. The one to the right seems to be at a loss and sports a defeated manner, not that 3 Barks is overly concerned with that one, not when it's clear the mortal isn't moving to support the other in trying to grab at him. Then the mortal snarls in a beastly manner and goes for the pistol that's on his belt.

"Ryo, don't!" Snaps the one to the right but 3 Barks finally decides to put an end to this encounter between them. Again, a single palm thrust and the scaled mortal gets the wind knocked out of his lungs along with being forced back a few feet on the ground, arms clinching the midsection.

Doing his best to keep his look of indifference, 3 Barks begins walking for the door that will allow him out onto the street. There seems to be a horseless carriage before the door, it's rather unique in coloration and he spies the previous hostile mortal sitting in the back of it. Turning away, the Cultivator heads in an northern direction, heading for the coast. He'll look for a boat heading back to his home land, hopefully he'll be able to hunt down one of his former students and get caught up on what he's missed.

After some minutes of walking in a leisurely manner, 3 Barks finds him confronted by a mortal sporting red skin and bright orange hair that moves not unlike a flame. Adjusting his walking, he moves around the... woman, it seems, but she seems intent on blocking his progress. The cloths are indecent and he does his best not to Look at her.

"Hold it there, your under-arrest!" The woman shouts with a hand held up. "I'm the Flickering Hero, Emberlight!"

3 Barks speeds up on his walking and it's not long before he's away from her, again, his ear tips are burning. "Hey! Stop! I'm arresting you!" The woman's cries are becoming faint.

He's not sure how that mortal woman can have such a thick face. Then again, it's him who's wearing cloths that are centuries out of date. It's still indecent! Showing off that much skin! Wearing so few layers of cloth... 3 Barks thinks to himself, noticing that there's another oddly dressed person intent on confronting him.

As he moves around the city, it's like a maze in its own way, but 3 Barks knows which direction is north so does his best to navigate the best of his abilities along with doing his best to ignore the shameless dressed mortals that seem intent on following in his wake. 3 Barks also got his first glimpse of a air traveling vehicle and paused to stare at it for a few minutes, only to recover before those trying to hinder him catching up, so he did his level best in ignoring said air traveling vehicle, even though he'd love to take one of them apart just to find out how it works.

Resist, Noon, resist. Just buy one later, then you'll have all the time you want to take it apart to learn how it functions. 3 Barks reminds himself as he does his best to keep his face impassive and his fingers from twitching.

"Little Print! Little Print! Our former teacher is on the news!" Grave Dirt's Paw Print groans upon answering his cell phone to hear his elder 11 Roaring River Cats.

"Master 3 Barks at Noon?" Paw Print inquires and his senior martial sister, River Cats, states, "I don't recall either of us sharing any other Cultivation teacher."

Feeling more awake, he finally rolls onto his back. "Have you gotten a hold of White Stalker Among Autumn Forests? To tell her of this?" The last student that their shared teacher had taught.

He's at his computer now, the screen is powering up as the tower's fan comes to life with a hum. "Are they streaming this online?" River Cats gives him the name of the station.

"As for White Stalker, I think she's tending to her garden, has been for the last year." Which means her phone's battery is likely dead. Paw Print reasons.

All too soon, 3 Barks at Noon's 'rampage' in Japan is playing on his computer screen and with a click, the steam takes up the whole screen. "Teacher..." Paw Print says with a sigh, a fond smile settles on his face as his heart feels like it's over flowing with joy at the sight of his father figure being alive and awake.

"Is Lord Yellow Mountain back from his vacation?" Inquires River Cats and he sighs, his head shaking. "No, but I can reach out to Benevolence Cultivator to find out who to contact about this."

"I'll visit our youngest martial sibling about his return." River Cats states and with a quick farewell, they end their call. Paw Print wonders how long it'll be until 3 Barks at Noon finally decides enough is enough, after all, he can see that his former teacher is in possession of both his Dizi and Jian when the station switching to a different camera and angle.

\ { o _ o } /

Chu Chu, she's here representing one Song Shuhang, it seems that one of his former students had approached the woman's master in regards to his emergence. 3 Barks knows that he owes favors for the aid he's receiving and wonders if they won't be cashed in the very near future. He hopes that once this is cleared up, he'll be on his way back to China and catching up on what he's missed in these pass centuries.

"You expect us to believe that some Villain messed with his memories and that another one teleported him to Japan?" Snarls the balding Japanese man sporting very sharp looking teeth. "That we're just suppose to just let him go! After he knocked out twenty of our Pro Heroes without breaking a sweat?!"

"Yes." Chen Mao states, 3 Barks notices how confident and yet bored the young Priest sounds. The conversation is one he can't follow besides noting body language and tone of voice, he does his best to keep up the usual look of an Immortal Master.

The balding mortal's face goes slack in a very subtle way before the mortal tries to spear 3 Barks with his eyes, which doesn't work out given the man lacks spiritual power. As the mortal gathers up his emotions, the door of the room opens and he finds himself rather interested in one of the incoming mortals, after all, the creature clearly isn't a Cultivator, nor because he lacks the ability but more from lack of training. Which actually does cause him to wonder what became of the Shinto Priests, Monks, and Priestesses?

3 Barks recalls the state of the shrine, yes, it had been rather small one back then but it did have a Priest caretaker and it had housed a weak Spirit, he can't recall the of what type but then, it likely no longer dwelling at the ruined shrine. He highly doubts he's the only one who's interested in the creature that just walked into the room but he's the likely the only one among the three of them that had can get away with being impolite in regards to staring at the white furred creature with spiritual potential. After all, he's supposedly had his mind messed with by a 'Quirk' and thus, this should help 'sell' that.

Still, after a time, his gaze wonders at the three that accompanied the spiritually inclined creature and finds them each fairly typical mortals he's encountered since coming out of his meditative state, although why one of them seems to think sporting a beard of fire is beyond him, after all, it's not like it's helping the man in any fashion, but, he could suppose, it's a display to demonstrate his control over the element... How he is it that he hasn't set his shirt on fire?

Still, in the end, he's transferred to Japan, it seems. It seems that the white furred creature has noticed that they were Cultivators, even if the creature isn't formally trained, the white being's raw talent allowed him to pick up on something being different from them compared to the mortals in the room and likely then what he's experienced before. 3 Barks isn't sure what to make of this turn of events, after all, they were suppose to get him out of this country, not... transferred.

He'll have to learn to respond to Shan Xing, it seems, for the foreseeable future along with his Hero name being Qiaopi Feng (Playful Wind) and, if asked for his 'Quirk', that is it called Wind Pulse, it's to explain how he's able to send people flying when he's not bulky with muscle. He'll be assigned a translator to help him learn the current spoken Japanese language. 3 Barks wonders if this wind theme is all due to the simple name he gave his Jian.

Xing studies the drawing that he'd absentmindedly drew while he'd been going through the messages he exchanged with his former pupils, the group chat is titled Walking Grave Forest by River at Noon. A green and black hare or rabbit sporting closed eyes as it is cowering, almost trembling really. There had only been five previous times he's drawn something so life like and not long after, he ended up with a student.

Putting the colored pencils away, Xing stands while pocketing his cellphone. He walks out of the office of he'd been lent to fill out his latest paperwork concerning his recent undercover assignment. Before leaving, he checks his pockets to be sure he has his wallet and house keys. Finding he does, Xing walks out of the office and once on the street outside of the building, closes his eyes for a brief moment, the wind brushing across his skin and tugging his long hair, done in a, practically scandalous, simple high ponytail that shows off his neck.

It's been near eleven years since Xing woke to find himself in Japan and he's found himself in a bemusing position of being the only Cultivator in Japan along with finding himself picking up the vacant post of keeping the native deities, spirits, and monsters of Japan from overly preying on the much in denial masses of people of Japan, even those who still had the ability to see the being of their forefather's myths and legends tend to cling to the simple belief that what they are seeing are just fellow Quirked mortals. Which tends to piss off said beings to no end but, due to that self same attitude, the beings powers tend to be rather temporary but strong or weak but stable.

He's not very good with handling said beings nor do they really like him but as he's the only spiritual incline human they can interact with reliably, both parties put up with the other. Being Chinese and a Daoist Cultivator means that his way of handling them isn't how the Shinto Priests would have. It's not like he hasn't tried to teach a few of those with the natural ability to see the beings clearly, it's like having a Quirk seems to keep them from fully believing in the beings and thus, keeps them from being able to utilize the native created talismans and spell incantations of the Shinto spiritualists of Japan used to defend themselves from their deities, spirits, and monsters.

Then there's the fact that he's suppose to be an Underground Hero and yet, due to his ethereal good looks, he's ranked as the second Hero. He's thankful that he's figured out a mental trick to get people to overlook his appearance or else he'd be recognized where ever he goes, whether he's undercover or just wandering about Japan. Xing had also learnt to moderate his strides and overcome his up bringing to keep from forever feeling shame and being scandalized by, well, how people act with their same gender to the opposite one.

Unlike his fellow Cultivators, he's always exposed to this era due to his job as an Underground Hero and it's hard to get a long enough break to take a moment to reflect on the changes concerning himself and to properly work on progressing his Cultivation. For all that this era claims to have things so much more easy then previous eras, he finds that to be a bold face lie! They are always keeping track of the clock and always making plans upon plans! If the littlest thing comes up that throws that schedule off track they panic! The shear WORRY over every single little detail! It's beyond his belief!

Still, as the wind tugs at his cloths and his pony tail, Xing takes deep, calming breathes, doing his best to ignore the smell of man made creations. Some of the tension of his shoulders fades as does his reflections concerning his current position of Cultivator, Underground Hero, and post as middleman between the local mortals and the ageless spirit beings of Japan. Xing finds himself allowing the wind to direct where he should go and, sensing this, tugs and pushes at him with greater force.

So, he goes for a walk, being sure to hide from the eyes of mortals as he goes. Xing walks for days, traveling on foot with the wind as his guide, eyes kept close, navigating using his other senses to keep himself from harm or causing harm. Then the wind that lead him seems to recede and the blue eye Cultivator opens his eyes to find himself before a clinic. With a thoughtful hum, he walks up to and then through the doors, finding a spot, sits down and takes out his cell phone.

There's a number of alerts and messages on it, it seems he's been walking for a good five days. With a slight huff, Xing begins the task of reading them. About an hour since he arrived, a woman and child walk into the clinic, both sporting green hair but it's the child, almost five and with hints of black among that green hair that grabs his attention. His eye brow raises as he notices the lack of that distinct feel in the boy's spiritual presence.

The few adults he's met without that were Quirkless, even the number one Pro Hero lacks that minor twitch in his spiritual presence, which is only mildly interesting given that All Might does indeed possess a Quirk, just not one he was born with. The number of those mortals born Quirkless are rather tiny in this day and era, never mind finding one just the right age to be taught Cultivation... The boy could learn, sure, it's not great potential but it's untainted compared to most of the children being born.

A glance at the names of the doctors of this clinic and he's doing a search, he's got a hunch as to why the pair would be at this clinic. Xing hums at realizing he's correct and what this clinic specializes in. Putting his phone away, the Cultivator studies the child, who's clutching an All Might figurine. After minutes, the pair go into the doctor's office and Xing expands his hearing range.

It's heart breaking news for the pair, with the mother seemingly taking the blame for the lack of Quirk to be her own personal fault. Before following after the pair out, he pays the doctor a visit and does a few other things, after all, his future discipline can't have it on his record of being Quirkless when clearly he has one. Xing gets the name of his future student and finds it rather bemusing and yet fitting name, Midoriya Izuku.

He grabs something to eat and to drink before he pays the pair a visit, he's already has something in mind on how to get the mother to agree, it's more about his approach to the child in question that is his concern. He needs to get an idea of what kind of person his future student is to know how best to start him on the path of Cultivation, the boy's the optimal age to begin creating his foundation after all. Children before eight years of age generally are.

Three days and it's a simple confrontation in a park that has him approaching Izuku-kun. A blond eyed boy with the ability to cause explosions attempts to push a younger girl to the ground for the crime of bumping into him. Izuku-kun intervenes and he approaches as he notices how hostile intent from the young blond spikes up and begins to hold steady at a certain level. He is at the side of the about to be an illegal action by the blond, who's clearly getting ready to use his Quirk on his future student.

"Children, is something the matter?" He inquires, which startles the group of five, two children had come to have the blond's back just seconds ago. The children are quick to deny and four of the five scatter, the only one remaining is Izuku-kun.

Crouching down, he notices tears of frustration leaking down the boy's face. "Shan Xing." He introduces himself, which clearly startles the boy, who looks up with wide eyes.

He allows his mental technique to go concerning Izuku-kun and is rewarded with a gasp along with awe plus adoration within those green eyes. "The Trickster Hero, Playful Wind!" The boy exclaims, the tears stop flowing.

"I wish for you to answer a question of mine." Izuku-kun blinks before shyly nodding for him to go on. "Why did you step between that boy and girl? It looked like that boy was gearing up to use his Quirk on you by the end there."

"Kacchan wouldn't do that! He wants to be a hero!" Izuku-kun states, clearly offended on the blond's behalf. The child rambles on about how awesome and cool Kacchan is along with the blond's Quirk.

Which leads him to realize just how observant the boy is for his age, but also that the child seems to already develop blind spots in certain regards. Which is something he'll have to correct as the child's teacher. Izuku-kun seems to trail off as the boy realizes just how long he'd been talking for.

"You didn't really answer my question, though." He gently points out and this causes Izuku-kun to blink at him a few times. "Why did you step between them."

"Why wouldn't I?" The boy finally answers and Xing just knows he's going to have a very troublesome and worry causing discipline in the future. "Ah, sir?"

"How would you like to become my personal student?" The Cultivator asks the boy before him. Izuku-kun's eyes widen and his mouth drops open, excitement brimming only to die seconds later when the boy mutters something very softly under his breath, he hears him but asks for the boy to repeat it a touch louder.

"You shouldn't cause I'm Quirkless." Izuku mutters and he hums. "I know you are, which is why I want you to agree to be my discipline in the Ancient and Secret Art of Cultivation."

"Cultivation?" The boy inquires with a frown after being stunned that he had known about his lack of a Quirk but had asked him anyway. "What's that?"

"You want to find out? I assure you that you are capable of learning and at your age, you'll be able to harness your potential to the fullest. The best age to learn is before nine years of age." He holds out a hand and Izuku-kun doesn't take it right away, looking between the hand and Xing's face, clearly conflicted.

"I am an Immortal Daoist who's over a thousand years old and am Quirkless myself, same with all my previous students." He adds and understanding seems to flash across the boy's face after the kid digests this information. Izuku-kun does take his hand, it's clear that he has his doubts about the offer but Xing knows that the child wants to be someone special, someone that isn't worthless in the eyes of the public.

"Let's go talk with your mother about this, ok? We best get this down on paper." He says as he moves to stand up, the child keeping a grip on his hand, which he gently wraps his own hand about.

Xing does his best to ensure that Izuku-kun at his side as they walk, him slightly slumped as they go hand in hand towards the mother, who's busy chatting with another mother, who seems to remind him of the blond. "Mama! Guess what!" Izuku-kun launches himself at this mother and now it's time to get Midoriya Inko on board with his course of action in regards to her son.

[^ _ ^]

"Your brat just caused lightning to hit in a dome full of Villains." Xing merely hums at his discipline's home room teacher over the cell. Not really paying the complaining much mind from his fellow Underground Hero.

"Just... How?!" Aizawa Shota wonders and it's clear there's frustration and a touch of awe.

"He commanded it most likely." He says in a drool tone and Eraserhead just groans, "I'm pretty sure his Quirk shouldn't function like. He used some sort of mathematical formula, didn't he?"

Spell Arrays is what they settled on when it came to cover story about how to explain off Izuku's Cultivation abilities. Though, to be fair, the teen is very talented in regards to them and it'll also explain away why Izuku likes to carry around note books and pencils everywhere he goes. Izuku's running speed, he's got special arrays written on the underside of the sole insert. Izuku being able to carry far more then his frame would suggest, special arrays lining the inside of his jacket or sweat bands on his wrist.

"You owe me a shot of whiskey for putting up the your brat, Shan." Aizawa snaps and he can practically hear the man rubbing his temple with his other hand. "Sure, sure. I owe you another shot of whiskey."

The call comes to an end after arranging a time and place for said purchase. Moving the cell phone before him, he can't help the smile that's on his face as he clicks to read the message his student sent, given the previous phone call, he can guess what it's about.

Ending it Here!

What a Strange Shop: Harry Potter

I don't own Harry Potter.

\ { - o - } /

Ryo sits behind the counter the store front is rather small with metal tablets resting on the counters. Each tablet is connected to the inventory of the store and upon getting touched by someone with magic, bit it an external magic user or internal magic user, or commonly called Witches or Wizards, based on gender being more external magic users with Squib generally being internal magic users. Although, it seems, few realize that Squibs do have innate magical abilities and thus the Squibs aren't ever tested nor trained to harness said abilities.

It's been a fairly lazy summer and given the location of his shop, he tends not to get the external magic users as customers and most of the customers he does get hear about him viva word of mouth, which is fine with him. After all, he prefers to avoid the Magical Society, finding the lot of external magic users to be self-centered and clearly short sighted in regards of what kind of lives they can actually live instead of what they seem to be living. It's why his prices are all in pounds, what use does he have of the popular currency of the Magical Society when it doesn't have anything he wishes to buy?

The gentle chiming of the door draws the owner's attention to it and Ryo finds a fairly young looking preteen with bright green eyes and messy hair. Although with a slightly more probing look with a touch of internal change to his eyes, adult notices how magic flows about the preteen, which marks him as an external magic users, although the thing on the boy's forehead is of foreign origin and is leaching a portion of magic that the kid is pulling into himself from the world, altering it enough to be 'claimed' and stored within the kid for future use.

And someone thought they had talent for Blood Magic... Fucking idiots. Ryo thinks, after all, Blood Magic being the realm of internal magical ability, what the whole point of Blood Magic is the use of the user being able to charge the fluids of their body with magic. It's generally coupled with Written Spells, which is a magical style that can be used by both kinds of magic users, the difference being how the writings are charged with magic by the user.

Allowing his eye alteration to fade back to its basic abilities, the owner nods a greeting at the boy upon the preteen look towards him after taking a look at the various metal tablets sitting out on tables and chairs. In someways, it's not unlike a cafe, although there's only four tables with four chairs, each table sports four metal tablets. "Ms Hammett said you only accept pounds..."

"I do, I don't have any reason to venture into so called Magical World." The adult explains. "Which Year are you in?"

"..." It's clear that the kid doesn't fully understand the question. I think your reaction answers that.

"Which school are going to be attending come September?" Ryo inquires lightly and the kid replies, "Hogwarts, sir."

"Ah, that one, huh? So, what bring you to my corner shop, young sir?" He rests his head on his closed hand, leaning on the counter, clearly looking rather interested and unprofessional.

"I don't suppose you have something to... to speed up my ability to learn? Sir." The preteen says and he's slowly getting an idea of what kind of history this kid has.

"Speed up learning... Got a lot of different things that could help, but they only really work if the user puts the effort into learning the material, you get me, kiddo?" Ryo informs the kid with a slight smirk. "Otherwise, you might need to hunt down a Memory Merchant, if the UK still has one lingering about. One of them can give you the copied memories of a former Hogwarts student's book readings."

"You can sell memories?" The kid seems rather startled by the very idea and Ryo merely hums in a positive manner. "Magic is capable of a lot of things, kiddo, it's ultimately up to the user and their ethics that determine how it's used along with what it's limited to."

"Some people are naturally more talented in some area and on the flip side, there's areas people can be weak in. Given the right investment and effort to put in, you can cover those weak points in various ways. Can't say you'll ever get rid of them, but you can, at least, know what they are and it's up to you to keep them in mind when it comes to living your life along with dealing with them as they come up." He adds with a bit of a smirk.

"And that said, schools aren't tailored suited to the individual student, they're meant to force students into a kind of mold that some just never fit into." Ryo explains to the kid with a slightly sad smile. "Schools aren't for everyone but in this day and age, kids having difficulty in schools tend to get bullied by their peers and the not all teachers are willing to put in the effort to find out what a student is having trouble with. And from the number of teachers at Hogwarts..."

He shakes his head, he doesn't get why there's so few teachers compared to students, never mind the lack of having more then one professor per subject. "Those teachers get run ragged so I doubt you'll be able to approach them for any real help." The owner can see that the kid seems to be rather nervous about the subject and yet, a little resigned about it as well.

"Don't really know why they doesn't hire more teachers, heck, they got a ghost teaching the History class, so they should be able to afford another teacher, given the fact that ghosts don't really need money." Ryo admits with a sigh. "Let's just say that Hogwarts has a number of things I can ramble on about for hours." With a dismissive way of his other hand.

"Oh... But I thought it was number one in the world..." Murmurs the kid and he sighs.

"Living here in the UK, I hear a lot of talk about Hogwarts, namely from the... err... Muggleborn?" He isn't sure, he doesn't particularly care about those useless categories ultimately. If you possessed the inherit ability to use magic, your lineage rarely means anything as such generally doesn't effect said ability in any way. It just so happens that external and internal have the ability to 'herd' or 'gather' magic from their surroundings into their bodies so that it collect it into a personal 'pool' or reserve, getting slightly altered in the process.

"I'd offer them jobs but not many accept." Ryo admits with a easy shrug. "Most of them are rather bitter about the lack of work after Hogwarts that keeps them in the Magical Society."

The kid blinks but is clearly getting overwhelmed with information. "Sorry but I'm pretty opinionated when it comes down to the current Magical Society and very much bias when it comes to how they generally regard magic and their approach to it." He admits freely.

The kid slowly nods, there's still a gazed look in those green eyes. "Anyway, the tablets are connected to the store's inventory and will show if it's in stock or not." He gestures towards on of the tables and the kid's gaze falls on one of the tables.

"It's easy to use and given this is your first time, how about a free bubble tea? Or would chocolate milk be more to your likening?" Ryo's pretty sure the kid hasn't a clue what bubble tea is, which is fine, if the kid ever comes back, maybe he'll give it a try.

"I couldn't possibly..." The kid tries to decline and he snorts lightly as he moves to stand up. "You've been patient with listening to my ramblings, it's the least I can offer for being such a willing listener, you know, kiddo?"

He walks over to the fridge that's stocked with all kinds of cold drinks along with a Temporal Pause to keep everything from going bad. Next to the double door and enchanted fridge is a counter with various drink machines and magical up devices for creating various kinds of drinks, from hot coffee and tea to cold milk shakes and ice cream dishes. Under the counter, in the cupboard, are stored most of the dried ingredients for said drinks. Touching one of the devices, a large cup gets created and once it's created, he take it and opens the fridge, placing it under the jug of milk, he twists the jug's sprout and milk pours into the conjured glass.

Once it's nearly full, he twists the sprout back and waits about ten seconds before moving the glass away. Closing the door with his hip, Ryo places the glass on the counter, near the magical device for infusing something into a liquid. He crouches down as he opens the cupboard door, once he spies the container with prepared and dried coco beans, its out from its spot and is putting a cup of the bean into the magical infusion chamber. It takes a few seconds for the device to start up. He closes the lid and puts it back on its shelf before closing the door of the cupboard.

Then, a hint of brown begins to erupt in the white milk then it begins to swirl as more of the coco bean gets infused into the milk. When the device is done, the swirling of the milk dies down. Humming, Ryo picks up the glass and walks back to the counter, the kid clearly been doing his best to watch what he'd been doing. There's a look of awe and wide eyes clearly shining with curiosity at having seen magic at work.

"Here you go! One fresh chocolate milk." He puts it down on the counter, sliding the glass over to where the kid is. "Enjoy, kiddo!" Ryo gives the preteen a bright and easy going smile.

After hasting and trying to get him to accept money, which he declines, with a shake of his head, the kid finally takes the glass from the counter and walks over to one of the tables. Ryo N. Usui is pleased at the look of surprise the kid has upon tasting the chocolate milk and returns to his show, it begins to play once more in his field of vision.

{ - _ - }

He hadn't known what to expect upon entering into Aether's Child but found it hard to be disappointed as he does find it easy to use the metal tablet. The chocolate milk has long since been drunk yet, he's list of what he would like to buy has only grown! Harry had been looking for something to speed up his ability to learn magic but he just wanted to... Well, be out of that house and to get familiar with magic being, well, real.

His thoughts do often drift over the information that the man ranted about and tries to reconcile his brief visit to Diagon Alley plus bank with this store. It's hard to say which of the two he prefers but then, if the man behind the counter, who's likely the owner, is to be believed, he doesn't have much connect with the Wizarding World, or, as the man calls it, the Magical Society. After all, the man hadn't tried to shake his hand or reacted to his scar, didn't say, "It's Harry Potter!", just referred to him as kiddo and seem to generally treat him normally.

Harry glances at the glass, kind of wishing he'd drank it a bit more slowly then he actually had but it had been hard to restrain himself as it tasted unbelievable! He's also rather hungry and having gone through the food and drink menu hadn't helped either... Glancing towards the man behind the counter, who appears to be watching and listening to something only he can see and hear, he sighs as he returns to looking at the tablet and what it's displaying.

With a sigh, he notices the time, he's been in the shop for over two hours now. Harry flips back to the drink and food menu, looking through the opinions yet again, he puts in an order of fish and chips along with another large chocolate milk. He goes to the Check Out and then, it asks him to insert his money into the glowing space that suddenly appeared that seems to float between him and the tablet. Blinking a few times, after all, this is unexpected and yet, maybe it made a kind of sense?

Still, it's magic on display before him and checking the amount, he pulls out his small bundle of bills that he'd gotten before leaving Gringotts with Hagrid. He'd been thinking he could buy things on the sly, without his aunt or uncle knowing, namely food. Taking out the right number of bills, he puts it into the space, which accepts then it changes color and his change fills the space. Harry takes the change and out of the corner of his eye, notices that the man gets slightly startled before touching something in the air as he turns to head into the back.

He gets up and takes the glass over to the counter, along with curiosity over how he'll get his meal. The glass does vanish after resting on the counter for a half a minute while Harry watches as the man heads for a different fridge and pulls out a few containers before walking over to the counter near this fridge that sports a large device that seems similar to a microwave but given it's got wood in its make up, he doubts that it's one now. A plate gets created with a device that matches the one that created the glass from before. The containers get opened and it's not long before at least five strips of previous deep fried fish onto the plate, it's interesting to watch each of them floating between the man's fingers and thumb, not touching the skin at all.

The man takes out a pair of tongs and brings out a large amount of french fries, the portion is rather a lot. "Want gravy with your fries?" He is startled by the way the man's voice sounds so close.

"It's free. Also, if you want something other then tartar sauce for your fish, just tell me." The man states.

"Yes please and tartar sauce is fine." He says and he gets the feeling the man is smiling but does fetch another container from that fridge upon returning the two containers. A plastic ladle gets used to scoop up some of the contains of this third, smaller container. A great helping of a rich brown is placed over top of the fries and then the plate is put into the microwave device, after a minute, the plate comes out and the man brings it over with a rolled up napkin about a fork and knife for him to use.

"Here's your meal, I'll get your chocolate milk now." The man promises and he nods, gingerly touching the plate with a finger tip, he finds it's not that hot to his bare hands. Hovering a hand over the two portions of food finds that they are steaming hot. He picks up the wrapped up utensils, he walks over to the table with the plate. By the time he returns to the counter, there's a large glass of chocolate milk.

Still... "What was that? I heard you pretty clear when you weren't even near the counter." He inquires and the man as a lazy smile while his hazel yellow eyes seem to glint in amusement at the question.

"It's a foreign taught Written Spell from China. The original version is a mental network between magic users and had a range of two kilometers, it's been modified since then." He blinks at the mention of it coming from China but, it makes sense, that the UK can't be the only place where Witches and Wizards are born, right?

"Oh... I guess that makes sense..." He admits and the man sighs.

"Don't worry over it, your world view is still trying to accommodate that magic exists, right?" He nods. "Just remember to keep always have an open mind when your attending Hogwarts, that your talents in magic might lay outside of what they teach."

He admits that's something very good advice and that he should keep that in mind. "I'll try to keep that in mind." Harry promises.

"Do or do not, there is no try." The way the man says that, it sounds like a quote and it seems that his expression causes a chuckle. "Star Wars quote." The man explains and he blinks a bit as he lets out an "Oh."

Ducking his head, he takes the glass and walks back to the table, it seems that there's more reason for considering the devices that would allow him to watch TV and released Movies. Still, I'm going with the Dream Classroom Amulet. It's a single owner item and it comes along with a permanent hiding charm on it to keep those who aren't the owner from seeing it, which, if his experiences with his cousin and his gang taught him, is something he'd like to have so it doesn't get stolen from him.

Taking time to eat, he finds its nice and warm, so different then what scarps he's usually given. He's pretty fully midway through eating the chips and after eating two strips of fish. Stopping for a bit, Harry returns to the tablet and the list of magical items and devices with their prices to the right, which all get added together at the bottom, which is far more then he has on him.

With a soft sigh, he cancels all but three, of the three, one of which is the amulet he decided on. The other two... the bracelet is a eye corrective which also sports a feature to grant the wearer low light vision by twisting the little wooden disk to an image of a star, it's disguise is that of a watch, it also functions as a wrist watch with an illusion over the disk and its covering. The final item is a collar that's a defense against emotional altering potions, it comes in a variety of metals along with a disguise enchantment on it, so he can hide it or make it appear like a tattoo even.

He's only got enough for two... "Something wrong?" The man behind the counter, he guesses the man is a Wizard.

"Just trying to decided between something, that's all." He admits and the man hums, his eyes suddenly feel rather heavy upon him once again.

"If it helps... Some idiots dabbled in Blood Magic in regards to you, trying to protect you from that leaching anchor that's lingering viva that scar on your forehead." And that startles him, a hand reaches towards the scar on his forehead. "What?"

"Blood Magic is not generally a talent that... Witches and Wizard get or, perhaps I should say, they don't get it right." The man explains and he's all ears, after all, he's willing to talk about magic with an eleven year old who's yet to attend Hogwarts. "Most people think any blood will work but true workers of it know it's their own blood that works the best, heck, any of their bodily fluid could work with the right understanding, as long as it's of them."

Harry feels his face redden as a sudden image flickers into his mind, causing him to duck his head while doing his best to shove it out of his mind. "Due to you being closely related to one of the idiot dabblers, the... enchantment is feeding from your reserves to keep it going. The other's intentions seem to be what keeps it from dispensing, which is why it's been eating at your reserves, which in turn, means you're reserve is larger then a kid your age should have."

"The leach is more then easy enough to get rid of now, has been for years actually, that's what the original intent seems to be concerning the enchantment. Keeping it from devouring your young mind and turning you into a copy of the thing that's been butchering its last remaining humanity." Remarks the man and Harry suddenly recalls the story Hagrid told him.

"I could remove it now but then the enchantment will likely mutate as it won't dispense with it gone." The thought of having some connection to his parents murderer, that it's leaching something from him... But then, it'll get rid of something his parents set up on him, but would I need it if the thing was gone?

He's conflicted but, well... "Is either threatening my health?" The man takes a few moments before answering, "Your about to head into a magic heavy area and excising your magic ability. The enchantment's going to be stretching for a bit before focusing fully on you and it's not much of a defense, really. It's only aim is to keep you safe from the thing that put the leach on you."

"The leach on the other hand, it'll be able to grow stronger in said environment and given it's likely a fucked up Horcrux... Your mind is at risk by the thing that made it and you will met it as long as you have a direct connection to it." He blinks before inquiring, "I thought he was a Wizard..."

"Ah, yes, the thing might have been, when it cut up half of it's 'soul' but once that portion then got sliced in half, the man stopped being considered human. You can possess half of a human 'soul' but once you get below one fourth of one?" The man sighs, shaking his head. "The thing likely made sure to have the other Horcux are in magic rich environment, given how scared the thing once was as a man, it put up a lot of defenses to secure those too."

"Oh..." So, Voldiemort, if he's still alive, can't be classified as a man. Harry thinks to himself. "Is he still..."

"Alive? Given how tiny that leach is, even if the thing likely didn't expect to part with that bit... It still exists." The man behind the counter admits. "Doubt it'll exist for a full century though... Not if it splintered what little of its portion so easily and without any perpetration."

"How much would that cost? To get rid of it?" He asks and the owner of Aether's Child replies, "Free, it won't take more then five minutes to get the thing out of that scar, it'll take a bit longer to get rid of the faulty Blood Magic."

Just as he's about to ask about the cost for the removal, the man states, "Given there won't be any rush to rush it's removal... How does three pounds sound? What we'll use will be a wooden ring, you can toss it in the fireplace when it's done its job or let it rot away on its own, if you like."

"Deal, though, could you, ah... Well..." He tries to figure out how to ask for help about deciding between the two items, the device that's disguised as a wrist watch and the metal collar. When he does, the man seems to be rather bemused.

"Well, you can always visit the bank to get more money." Remarks the man. "You don't have to walk out of the shop with the whole order either."

"You noticed how you paid for your food order?" Harry nods slowly. "I'll send you off with a specially enchanted cardboard box with a similar enchantment, only, upon paying the amount, the item will appear in the box upon the insertion of the correction funds."

"That sounds fantastically brilliant!" He exclaims, realizing that he could likely get those other items as well, although it would take him a while to get around to paying to receive them though. The owner gives him a smile as he says, "Glad you think so. It been a hassle finding someone willing to trust such a system."

"I'm Harry, Harry Potter." He introduces himself and the owner returns it, without reacting like any of the Witches and Wizards had done before. "Ryo Usui."

{ - _ - }

Lounging in the magical created hot spring, Ryo enjoys time in his alternate form. His ears are now long and narrower along with sporting large scales of a light blue color with hints of jade green and his hair sports a rich blue shine to it. Due to his youth, he's arms and back sport the same blue scales only the jade green is more noticeable, lingering at the pointed tips of his blue scales going down his arms and along his back. In time, the scales covering his more human appearing body will vanish to give him a more human look at those areas.

His human portion of his body is a bit over five feet with a good eight feet of snake tail. His belly scales are a creamy white while the top of his back sports jade green markings that are in a simple V pattern. The longest a fully grown member of his breed could grow to be, from head to tail tip, is twenty feet long. Generally fully grown examples will also sport far more intricate patterns on their scales and there's a maximum of three additional colors besides the basic and belly color.

There's a lot of names used for his modified breed, Naga being most common to be used, even though there's a number of other modified bloodlines that sport similar snake traits that also get that heading. Although, Greater Naga seems to be used given their alternate appearance does come closer to the classical idea of what a Naga should look like when they are compared to those other breeds. Although, unlike those other modified breeds, they don't naturally speak Parseltongue, not that it's common knowledge about that little fact and the enchantment for that ability can be etched into any kind of item be it a cheap plastic earring to they can carry in a pocket, like a wooden coin.

It's not that they have any blood connections to, if they actually existed, the Naga race it's just that an ancestor found she/he liked a certain body look and decided that her/his descendants should be born in that body shape or able to take it as easily as breathing. For all that Ryo looks like he should be cold blooded, he's as warm blooded as any other human, which also explains their lack of natural ability for Parseltongue. It's just that due to size, he can get cold more easily due to how much of his body surface is exposed. He'd been born looking perfectly human, his mother had been a non-modified human after all, he only showed his father's traits breed true three days after when he transformed into a rather fat and short snake sporting white scales.

As infants of his modified breed, they come in either are black scales or in white, it's only when they reach four that their base color will begin to overtake as the dominate color. Between ages ten and thirteen, they'll undergo a metamorphosis concerning their snake body, the head altering to be more akin to a humans with shoulders along with arms finally forming. Between ages eighteen and twenty, their heads will become pretty much clear of scales, save for the ears, and hair will begin to grow. By the time one of his breed is forty-five to fifty years of age, they'll lack scales on their human portion and actually have scaleless pointed ears.

Ryo's is thirty-four now, thus he's still got some scales covering his human portion, he's pretty confident that by the time he's forty-six or forty-seven it'll be clear of scales. Not that it bothers him, after all, he's capable of changing into a non-modified human. Which is just as well, given the general attitude of the local Magical Societies of this parallel world. They'd think him as something lesser due to his natural magical ability to assume his current appearance, it wouldn't matter that it's due to this ability that he's naturally talented at internal magical use or that he's just as capable of using magic in an external manner with the right magical conduit.

He'd arrive in this dimension at twenty years of age and spent two years traveling around before picking to settle in an island country that this world calls the United Kingdom. Even before leaving his home dimension for this parallel world, he had created a pocket dimension apartment for himself that he can live in. A simple anchor array set up and he can vanish into it without anyone able to reach him. It had taken him four years to do so as any error in expanding it forced him to start from scratch once more, which could be highly frustrating but the end result is so worth all of that hard work and of being at his wits end for days at a time.

With this pocket dimension, he's still got an easy connection to his home dimension, which is how he continues to keep up to date with events at home along with any new developments, in magical research or if some other world notices the non-native dimensional immigrants and follow how relations develop from there. News concerning his family isn't overly important as the clan he belongs to encourages independence in any members belonging to it, be it from getting adopted into it or staying registered in it once those born to members of the clan become adults.

Clan Usui membership is wide ranging, from non-modified humans to half-humans and modified breeds of humans. Most non-humans make up their own nations or have long since migrated into isolation on empty parallel worlds. In the past, countries/nations or corporations had put forth plans concerning terraforming other planets but only about five dozen ever got around to being terraformed to support life from Earth due to the usual reasons and wars almost happened over who had the rights to which planet for such and such a reason.

Then someone did recalled some old charm and went about not just recreating it but altering it to fit the current social climate where space was a very pressing issue. Space Enlargement Charm became the solution to the space problem and it also went on to solve the issue of food. In time, more people played around with the Space Enlargement until someone figured out how to create pocket dimension that are keyed to a single person and then trying to create ones that could be anchored to a community of people instead of relying on a single individual, they discovered alternate dimensions and the ability to travel there and back.

And so, terraforming planets finally peppered out and those planets settlers were free to develop their own governing systems without pressure from outside forces from their ancestor's original planet. Terraforming is still practiced, just on a much smaller scale and isn't so much a job as just a part of how people live their life. Most teens wanting to prove themselves to be capable adults create their own space, be it in the form of a cabinet or a large crate with a version of the Space Enlargement Charm etched into the wood or they work their asses off in creating a permanent pocket dimension that only they can access.

Finding himself becoming rather restless, Ryo dives down into the water before heading to the edge of the spring, getting out of the water as he shakes his head back and forth, sending his wet hair about as he slithers to grab a towel, trying his hair as he curls his lower snake portion under him and around him. Once done, he heads out of the Japanese style, man mad hot spring and into his bedroom, being sure to grab his computer lap top to so he can play some games.

And then, there's a ripple coming from his anchor. It happens a few more time and with a sigh, he does a save point in his game and closes the lap top. It's late, he checks the clock and it shows that in the dimension he's operating in, it's almost one am.

As he comes to the exit of his pocket dimension, Ryo assumes his non-modified human form, being sure to touch the device by the doorway to conjure cloths upon his body. Walking through the doorway, he finds that there is a ringing going on at his back door, which is rather close to where his anchor is.

He opens the door and finds a very nervous looking preteen, it's the green eyes that brings to mind the youth's name. "Harry?" Ryo inquires and there's a deer in headlights look on the preteen, before nodding and swallowing heavily.

"Can I spend the night?" The youth blurts out and he just blinks as the youth begins to ramble on and on about how he blew up his aunt, who is his uncle's sister and there's no blood connection between them. About him pretty much running away from said house with his things, which includes a snowy owl, and his adventure on the Knight Bus. The youth kind of trails off, it's clear the Wizard before him is on the edge of emotional episode and is likely going to be the source of a lot of accidental magic if not calmed down.

He opens the door and allows the youth to enter, which he does while bringing in the caged owl and trunk. Locking the door, Ryo leads the emotionally charged youth up the stairs, he does have rooms for personal visitors. Twisting the knob, he gives the youth a nod and before leaving, says, "We'll talk in the morning. Just... calm down and get some rest, ok?"

Harry nods, clearly overwhelmed by his kind gesture and once in the room, he closes the door. Taking a few steps away, Ryo tries to figure out just what the fuck could have caused such an emotional reaction that Harry's magic run-amuck. What did this 'aunt' do? He wonders but forces himself to head back down stairs, returning to his pocket dimension to try and take his own advice.

{ - _ - }

Morning comes and Harry finds it hard to figure out where he is, but slowly he remembers where he is and feels so embarrassed about imposing on the owner of Aether's Child . What was I thinking? Coming straight here... I should have gone to the Leaky Cauldron .

Still, he gets up out of the nice bed and begins to change out of his current cloths for another set, not that they are any better. He also is surprised to find that there's a bathroom attached to this room and decides to have a shower before going down to speak with Mr Usui about... Well, he's not really sure what he really wants to talk to the man about anything that happened. After all, they are hardly close, after all...

But a treacherous voice in the back of his head whispers just why he came to Aether's Child , that in the end, Mr Usui wasn't someone who seems aware or care about his title as the Boy-Who-Lived nor has the man been anything but professional with him. Somehow, he found himself coming to like Mr Usui and think of the man as someone he can trust. That a lot of what Mr Usui had once ranted about during his very first visit ended up having a lot of truth to it, which actually help him not feel so betrayed when his hopes for Hogwarts withers due to the bullying from his potion teacher, lack of aid from the other teachers, treatment by his fellow students, and when his own House Head doesn't believe him when he went to her for help concerning a certain stone.

He hadn't liked the fact that the Headmaster seems to think he's safe at his aunt's house for the summer. Harry hadn't wanted to return to that house, but he had no other option that year as he hadn't really thought of to pursue find another option. Not that coming up with an alternative place kept me from returning this year. The soon to be thirteen year old thinks sourly to himself.

Still, his stomach is so empty and the lure of food finally gets him out of the room, he's sure to pack up his belongings once again. Walking out of the room, he heads down stairs and takes a moment to figure out which room Mr Usui is in. He finds the man in what appears to be an almost cozy dinner room. Taking a moment to look at the door, it reads Staff Room.

"Morning Harry." Mr Usui greets him and he blinks as his attention returns to the adult once again. The owner of the shop is looking at him and gestures towards the table while the gaze shifts to his luggage and Hedwig. "You could have left your owl and trunk in the room."

"I was thinking of getting a room at the Leaky Cauldron , actually." Harry admits as he does enter into the staff room. "For the rest of the summer, likely."

He notices that there's some waffles along with sliced up fruit plus syrup bottle on the table. The waffles look likely they have something added to the mix as he focuses on them. Chocolate chips? He thinks as he settles his trunk on the floor, walking forward to the table to eat the breakfast provided by Mr Usui.

"Not sure if I approve of that plan, I'd suggest looking to get a passport and leave the country as a proper vacation. North America is an English speaking country." Mr Usui remarks and he blinks at the suggestion. "Or maybe visit Ireland? That's closer to home and with that shade of eyes... A simple dye job, get rid of those glasses..."

He doesn't know what to say, so he just blinks while look at the man with a touch of bemusement but there's a warmth in his chest as Mr Usui continues to muse on and on about alteration to his appearance that could be had to throw people off his trail so he can have a proper vacation. Mr Usui walks over and joins him at the table, he waits for his host to begin putting food on his plate and begin eating. The man's musings dies and they eat in silence.

Harry finds himself thinking over the musings and, well, it seemed like a good idea. "Doesn't it take a time to get a passport?" He asks as he feels filled.

"If you go official mundane channels. Getting a magical one... Well, I assume there's various ways to get them." Admits Mr Usui. "I traveled some years ago having created my own passport, making it look like an official mundane one."

"Isn't that illegal?!" He blurts out with wide eyes and Mr Usui seems to shrug, admitting, "It likely is but then, isn't it illegal for people to get away with child abuse?" There's a clearly knowing look in the owner's eyes, he's not sure which caused him to flinch, the fact that Mr Usui just accused his aunt and uncle of child abuse or that look in the man's eyes.

"Don't kid yourself kiddo, magic was more then likely the reason they got away with treating you the way they did." The man states in a matter of fact way, which causes him to stiffen but found he couldn't counter that. "And the current government in regards to magic is more like an auction house then an actual governing legal institution."

Auction house? Harry doesn't get it and it must have shown on his face. "Anything can be bought as long as the price is high enough or right ."

"People are humans, humans are selfish beings, and selfish beings general aims are in their self interest." Add Mr Usui. "Money is the general standard but, well, there's always connections viva friend and family that can be used if the person won't take the... carrot, they'll try resort to other methods. Threats are generally called the stick and they aren't always on the individual that's having the conversation."

"The latest English Dark Lord? He owned the government through his slaves, you see. But I figured it wasn't taking over the government that was the actual goal, he just liked killing people, in the end. Torturing them before killing them even. It wasn't about politics with that one, it was about killing and the fact he got away with it, that nobody could force him to stop." Mr Usui states and he blinks but, well, given what he's heard concerning Draco's family, maybe there's truth to that.

"It was Voldemort who's anchor you removed." He states and the owner blinks before a look of dawning seems to settle on his face. "Ah, that might explain that a bit more about how that rampage seem to linger for so long."

No, 'so, your that Harry Potter'. Just... Harry isn't sure what to make of the lack of change in attitude. "Any listing of who owns it's surviving slaves? Or did they all get imprisoned?"

"Why are you calling his... its followers slaves?" He asks curiously. For some reason, calling Voldemort an it... That seems to... It's hard to really say why he's got mixed feelings about it really.

"They sold themselves to it at a price and were branded with an ownership mark by it." The way the man says that as if it were the simplest fact... "Slavery is illegal."

"Since when has that ever stopped anyone from doing anything?" Mr Usui remarks with a slight tilt of his head and a bemused smirk. "We were originally on the topic of how the local magical government is an auction house and mentioned how various members of said government all have a price tag. That's not unlike slavery in its own way."

Some part of him particularly whispers, Like you weren't a slave in all but name to your aunt and her family... He reaches for the water and takes a sip as his mind whirls.

"Legality... I think one of the oldest rules is, it's not illegal as long as you aren't caught." Admits the man.

"How are you not ruling the world?" He blunts out, because he's pretty sure that the man in front of him could succeed in doing just that. His question has Mr Usui giving him an owlish blink before snorting then laughing in a gut bursting way, which actually makes him think that Mr Usui is younger then should be.

"Well, ultimately, the person I swore to answer to is my Clan Head." Mr Usui states after a considering look settles on the man's face for about a minute. "As for the world conquest... It's because I love not being chained to a desk, dealing with children in the disguise of adults looking, forever, for both attention and praise." Admits the owner after recovering, a small fit of giggling breaks out, likely at the look upon his face. "I have far more freedom as a store owner and without hordes of people eyeing my back to knife it or trying to figure out why my price tag is."

"Clan Head? Shouldn't it be..." He doesn't really know how to say it.

"Laws? Local government?" Remarks Mr Usui and he nods.

"Laws... Laws are made by governments and governments... Well, I think we are looping back to what I was kind of ranting about earlier." The man remarks and he can kind of get it but...

"Have you been asked to vote for the current Minister? Did you elect the... do towns still have mayors?" He shakes his head at the first while shrugging concerning the second.

"Other then being born in this country... do you feel invested in this country? In its laws?" It's an odd way to think.

"It's not like I have a choice." He admits and the man snorts. "Of course you do, you can not be a selfish prick to other people and not get imprisoned or you can just do whatever you want and get imprisoned."

"And the reason why they can imprison you? It's that age old excuse of Might equals Right." Mr Usui states. "Anyway, can you guess what kind of Might you have to bare? One that is a rather multi-factional tool?"

"Magic." He replies and feels a bit uncomfortable in giving that answer. "Correct. And given the usual human attitude, if you commit crimes against those without magic, do you think you'll be tossed into a cell to wait a trial?"

Harry sighs as he realizes that he almost replied, he wouldn't and it takes him a few seconds to realize that it's unlikely he's going to get expelled from Hogwarts either. "Oh bloody hell..." How could he forget? He's their bloody Boy-Who-Lived and they needed him as their symbol.

"Oh? Something dawn on you?" Mr Usui inquires as he feels like a load has been taken off.

"No letter showed up, for me I mean, did it?" He asks and the owner shakes his head. "No owls have been flying about."

After a few minutes of silence, he decides to ask, "How much for an item to not only make me immune to mental influences but also record who it was and for what behavior?" Some things have started to click in his mind and, looking back, realizes that he might have defended again one angle of attack but left himself open from other directions.

"You'll still want that amulet to work... I can create a weekly list of items approved to interact mentally with you. You'd have to register the items weekly, they'll be examined to ensure no outside tampering."

And Harry finds himself nodding in agreement, he finds himself feeling rather relieved about the short rant the owner went on or else, he might not have been reminded of the simple fact that, he's not just the usual Hogwarts student, he's the famous Boy-Who-Lived and regardless of his feelings on the matter, it ultimately means, what with Voldemort's trying to return, he's got a lot of ley-way within the Wizarding World and unwanted special treatment. He might as well make use of it while he had it, if his past year had taught him anything, Witches and Wizards are very fickle minded people.

{ - _ - }

Leaning against the door frame, Ryo takes in the sight of masked group and the thing that they sold themselves to. They are here for his renter slash apprentice, just two hours ago had been midnight, which signals that it's July thirty-first. It's Harry's seventeenth Birthday, which is suppose to be the day the teen is considered an adult. Due to certain shitty events concerning Harry while he'd been attending Hogwarts, the teen became a legal adult at fourteen years of age, due to being forced to participate in some dumb ass tournament with an age limit of seventeen for the participants.

Harry's fourth year became his last year and the teen then approached him concerning his continued education. Since that summer before the teen's third year, Harry's been renting a room from him during the summer, getting away from the poisonous family that raised him. After all, there's no true love between the four, heck, the teen didn't even attend their funeral when they'd been killed by that 'rogue' dementor wandered onto Privet Drive of Whinging, which is located in Surrey.

He's rather bored, after all, they can't approach the shop nor will are their wands much use in attacking the wards of his home and business. They've been going at trying to get pass his protections for the past hour and he only showed himself in about forty-five minutes since they began as he founds it hard to return to sleep with the ripples of their attempts at getting pass, which doesn't work, and which means they have been trying to rid of his wards. They seem to get excited upon his arrival, their efforts increased, ignoring the previous pace only for him to continue to look less then impressed and even yawned more then a few times at their efforts, which only made them mad.

Letting his eyes close and leaving them closed, ignoring the demands from the thing and its slaves, Ryo wishes they'd just stop so he can actually go to sleep tonight. "Mr Usui?" With a sigh, he moves to stand up and open his eyes, turning his back on the group, he regards the now seventeen year old.

"Getting noisy aren't they?" He remarks, stifling another yawn. The teen's lips are pressed in a thin line as green eyes move pass his body and face, looking out of the door at the group of slaves and their master.

"You'd think they'd figure out that their efforts aren't working by now." Remarks Harry and he merely hums after doing a lips closed yawn. "If they are still here by dawn, then it's their death."

There's a slight blinking from Harry before the other seems to recall the lesson concerning general symbolism and concepts in regards to how to use them in your magic. Day break and sun set are two of the most common events that happen daily that people have grown to take for granted. In the current case, black clothed, which can symbolize night and darkness, and the wearing of a skull mask are symbolic symbols of the grave and death. Then with dawn being the event that symbolizes new life and light conquering darkness, well... Why wouldn't he use it as one of the triggers for threat elimination?

"Oh!" Harry's eyes take a hard glint with a bit of a smirk upon his face. "So... I should go make some fresh popcorn for when it happens?"

"We've got plenty of time until that happens." Ryo assures his renter, he hardly thinks of himself as Harry's Master as a lot of what he's teaching can be pieced together from reading enough books that the local Magical Society has on their shelves, be it legally or viva their black-market. He mostly just helps by handing over highlighted texts on bookmarked pages for Harry to go over and think on, helping the process by gently asking him leading questions. "Dawn is still some hours away."

"Hot chocolate?" Suggests the teen and after giving it some thought, Ryo nods. The door closes behind them as they head for the staff room for it, it's what serves as a common kitchen between the two of them. Harry's altered his space to include a kitchen along with a small counter where he can eat his meals while he has a kitchen in his dimensional pocket.

Before he'd closed his store, a group of magical locals showed up and tried to talk Harry into leaving his property before midnight. He hadn't really paid them much mind once he finished examining them and noting the various magical compulsions influencing their personalities and behaviors. They were pretty much per-programed flesh dolls, only difference is that they did originally have minds and personalities of their own that show up under that mental conditioning.

In the end, Harry didn't leave and the teen tricked them into taking a fairly strong mundane sleep aid. The group was then transformed into mice and hamsters then placed in a conjured enchanted cage. Said cage is resting on the table and the group have yet to wake up, which goes to show how modern mundane chemicals can affect a group of people who have never been overly exposed nor had their parents and so forth. It's a question how the one 'muggle' born in the group was as effected by it as the rest though, which makes him wonder if it might have something to do with the magical mental conditioning playing a part as well.

Not that he's got any plans to research this, no point along with the fact that getting them to sign a waver for said research would be child's play. That's without using any magic to urge them to sign, he's pretty sure that he'd be able to talk them into not only signing it but that they wouldn't even read what it is they are signing. In their current state, they are so gullible and can be easily influenced if you know how to go about doing it.

The only defense he has concerning the transformation into animals is that they weren't capable of leaving due to their clearly illegal mental tampering. Ryo had finished creating the report and sending it, after all, he can't say that they were unwelcome given they had been allowed into the building, so they weren't trespassers so he didn't have any grounds on that front. The current assault on his residence though... well, them dying is more of a clear case of self defense, particularly as he's long since submitted what wards he has on his place of both business and anchoring point. He even got a visitation from his second cousin Shinso Tendo, as representation of the Jade Sun Empire, a third party ward master, and an Usui Clan ward master and got their seal of approval upon completion of an investigation concerning the local dangers and whether his measures were within reason.

He only did it to cover his bases, really. It means that if anything happens, he can reach out towards his birth universe for aid if things grow far out of his ability to handle things safely. He's pretty much the only one from his universe settled on this world and it's both liberating and frightening. Ryo knows he'd be lonely and homesick if he hadn't the 'direct' connection to his home dimension that his pocket dimension offers, he'd be dependent on waiting for the right alignments that would bring the two universes close together, making contact so much easier and reliable.

Harry, well, there hasn't been any reason to really share information about where he's actually from. Oh, the teen has caught him in his alternate form, not long after the teen became a permanent resident under his shops roof. Harry hadn't given much thought over the idea of using magic to modify his body, to sculpted it to look a certain way or that others had, it had been an amazing concept for the teen but the novelty did wear off after the teen got use to seeing him in that form along with realizing just how common body modification is, even if it wasn't magical in nature.

Ryo notices the small black feathers that pepper around Harry's right ear. It's only a temporary modification and it's a rather subtle one as the feathers coloring blends well with the teen's hair. He recalls other temporary modifications Harry's done over these pass few years along with researching ways to fully transform into a wide range of animals, putting effort into creating a few items to that effect. There's reasons why wolf or fox belts feature in stories featuring people transforming into said animals or the story about a Goddess' feathered cloak allowing her to transform into the form of a bird of prey. Enchanted items of that nature tend to be easy to create, given that it generally need some part of said animal they want to turn into.

"So, it's the one that's pale and without a nose, right?" Ryo asks after minutes have ticked by and having finished drinking his cup of hot chocolate. Harry seems startled awake and is blinking rapidly as the teen recovers from almost drifting off to sleep.

The teen hums a positive, he can still feel them trying to get in, only now they are pacing themselves. He wonders how long until reinforcements are brought in or if they'll try involve non-human beings in breaking into the building. "You want something stronger?" He inquires.

"No thanks." Harry says with a yawn between the no and thanks. Shaking his head before stretching his upper body, clearly doing his best to wake himself up.

Humming, Ryo gets up to get them refills on their hot chocolate, placing both on the table before leaving to fetch a few things from his pocket dimension. With a duplicated copy of a manga he'd been reading before bed and then the plate of cookies he baked a few days prior. Returning to the staff room, he finds Harry with his head on his crossed arms and looking into that conjured cage with those transformed people.

Placing the plate on the table and sitting back on the chair, he flips through the book until he reaches where he left off. "Official Heaven's Blessing?" Murmurs Harry, given that it's written in the written language of the Jade Sun Empire, it's rather surprising until he notices the ring on the teen's finger.

"It's a romance story between a thrice ascended god and a ghost who became a demonic ghost king." He explains. "Both are men."

"Men?" Harry looks puzzled. "How does that even work?"

"What do you know about sex? About pleasuring your bed partner?" He inquires, putting a finger between the pages before closing the duplicated manga.

It seems that Harry knows next to nothing about dating and what it leads to as the minutes tick by as Harry is clearly uncomfortable with relating what little he knows on the topic. "I would have thought you'd know more then that... I'll see about correcting that." He says with a sigh.

"How?" Harry asks, both bewildered and yet eager. He blinks before saying, "It'll be along that amulet you bought for studying, you'll get lessons in a realistic dream with the option to participate in the lessons, which will be the faster way compared to observing what they do."

Harry seems rather relieved upon hearing the method. "Seems helpful... Will it... I mean, between two men?"

"Do you want to know how two men would go about it?" Ryo asks in turn and there's a kind of torn look on the teen's face. It's not like he's one to judge, he might not find men attractive but that doesn't mean he hadn't been curious about the how of two men doing it was himself.

"I'll include that information but seal it so you have to want to access it." He informs Harry. "I can't help with the dating portion, though. Too many factors to take in account. You'll just have to go out and learn through trail and error."

Harry nods, face rather red and takes a cookie, biting it while deciding not to look at him or at the transformed people in the cage. Once silence reigns for a good few minutes, he returns to his manga. The ripples continue to happen, the timing changes over the passing of hours and Harry clearly falls asleep by his third cup of hot chocolate while he does head back to his pocket dimension to get update the magical duplicate with the next book when he's done reading the last five chapters.

Upon feeling the warmth slowly engulfing the air around him does he realize it's getting close to dawn. With a hum, he makes a mental note of where he left off and closes the book. Then he gets up and gently wakes Harry up. "It's almost dawn." He gently says and it takes Harry seconds before he remembers what that means.

Returning to the front of the store and opening it, the numbers had increased along with goblins and dementors lending aide, be it through threats or because they had thrown their lot in with the thing. He notices that there aren't any werewolves, but that's not that surprising, given most can't use wands as magical foci. They can't contribute to bringing down the wards nor could giants and trolls. Seeing the dementors, he just knows that what's about to happen will be far more spectacular then it would without them.

Slowly the night takes on the predawn grays and he feels the wards warm up in sympathy with the coming dawn. As the light of dawn finally break, the air within the building becomes filled with the lively colors of bright fire, golden yellows and vibrant oranges with scarlet reds and sparks of silvery blue and silvery white swirl about within. Then, it all just pulses and the magical energy surges out of the building, through the very walls and glass, sweeping through the air and all those who were trying to break in are seemingly washed away as their forms take on the likeness of living shadows with skeletal white faces.

Gone like shadows before fire light or flashlight. There's no resistance or residue to be had, not even from the goblins or dementors. Seconds later and the wards return to their usual state with the area clear of their would be tormentors and murders. The only evidence they had been had to be the magical items that lay on the ground.

"That was... fast. And... well, merciful, I mean, they didn't even cry out." Harry remarks and he explains, "It was the dementors that ultimately caused it to be like we witnessed, cold and cloaked in black, that's almost like night itself."

He walks out of the shop, towards the magical items. Harry follows in his wake a few seconds later. They collect the magical items from the street, a number of them had already been used up while the others had been in the process of being used and the others getting set up to be used. "Nice of them to drop off some birthday presents, huh?"

Harry snorts before chuckling. "If your sure..." The seventeen year old trails off.

"I don't need them and you can make a study of them." Is all Ryo says as they pause at the bottom of the stairs. With a hum, Harry begins walking up the stairs and Ryo falls in behind him.

The End

Author's Note: Inspired by a picture a picture of Naga!LuoBinghe and Shen Qingqui. The story with said picture is called Snakebite Love by Blackberreh, the story can be found on Archive of Our Own.

Reincarnation? Or is it Transmigration?

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn or High School DxD!

Faolan O Hicidhe... The name echos in his mind, which is ringing. His body is wet and his limbs barely move.

I'm alive...? He finds himself thinking as his vision comes into focus and he realizes that being in pain means he's not yet dead. In the end, the blond sporting amber hazel eyes causes his fingers to curl and tests his arms to push himself off of his stomach, to maybe get into a seated position.

It's hard as it seems he's got a few new additions to watch out for, namely a bright yellow scale covered tail and how his legs seem to be rather altered. There's very little remaining of his cloths and it gives him a view of his body, he's got a patch of bright white scales around his belly button with another patch upon his left breast, around the nipple and looking more like a slash moving in a slant towards his belly in truth. His finger nails are clearly sharp with them looking far thicker then they should and far longer then he expects them to be.

Just rubbing his finger tips over the back of his finger nails, he finds them surprisingly smooth to the touch. The tips don't bend as he expects nails of this length should and it confuses him. He finds it hard to recall what happened to him, after all, he's got memories of going to bed in a very soft bed to falling from a great height, seeing the some winged person with a sword glinting with blood on it...

He remembers refusing to accept death in one of those memories while the other privately welcomed it. Faolan, great grandson of the dragon who named himself Cabhan, although he's more commonly known as the Green Dragon, due to his brand of magic in regards to plants. Often prayed to and offered tribute to ensure bountiful crops.

Grandmother had been the product of a bride tribute during a particularly rough number of years.

Yet, Tsunayoshi, or Tsuna, didn't know the names of either grandparents, being a blood descendant to one Giotto from Italy. The man did something... Caused something? Or was he just a famous bandit? A highly successful one?

It's all jumbled in his head and sporting bright yellow scales along with noting his hair is blond kind of means Faolan is the name he should consider his primary, after all, Tsuna had been a brunet along with possessing hair that's naturally spiky. And yet, with just a want, an orange energy flickers around his hands, moving in a way the would remind one of fire. He feels warm as it dances around his hands and there's no uncomfortable pressure nor heat with using his Sky Flame.

He has it vanish, sure, it help warm him up along with bring order to his mind but it was also tiring him out. The youth would rather not fall asleep, he needs to sort himself out, he can rest when he's not out in the open like this. After all, that... well, from Tsuna's memories, that man's appearance would mark him a devil. The black bat like wings and sinister aura...

Faolan has never heard of devils before but then, from Tsuna's memories, dragons were considered supernatural and fictional. Yet, from Faolan, he recalls meeting his great grandfather in his true appearance. Dark green scales that in darkness might as well be black, crimson eyes with black horns, spines, and talons. Belly scales being more a light gray then some shade of white.

Which means that there is a Bible Parthenon, likely made up of angels and devils under the authority of a singular God. Tsuna never became Catholic, not that any of the other Dons seem to realize that or if they suspected, they never pressed the issue. And Dons were... kind of like Kings? No, wait, Skies were considered Kings and called Knights to their side... But not every Don was a Sky, so they didn't count as their own Kingdoms...

Groaning, he rubs his temples as his headache starts up again as he tries to untangle the whole Mafia thing from what he knows about Kings and Knights. As his pounding headache subsides, he is kind of noting the difference that there's something about Tsuna's memories that make them tinted, almost dreamlike. Seen through a filtered lens.

Still, they flow to the forefront of his mind far easier then Faolan's does right now. Which could mean that their not overly tied to his physical body and that's why they're easier for him to recall. Which means... what? Is Faolan O Hicidhe the reincarnation of Tsunayoshi Sawada? If so, why is he getting a previous incarnation's memories? It's not like that the injuries he got as Faolan overly affect his soul to any real degree... Right?

Sighing, Faolan moves to stand, it takes him a few tries, between the tail and how different his legs are kind of screw it up for him. It's clear he hadn't sported such traits before he woke. He mourns the lack of cloths to fully cover him as he does his best to ignore the issue, after all, his legs might be bend and altered in a clearly non-human manner but there isn't any hint of scales. The backs of his toes sport a scattering of yellow scales with the toe nails looking more like thick talons, the same white color as his finger nails.

Just standing is an odd experience as it seems like he's doing it wrong. The feel of his tail twitching and moving is rather novel. He takes a step forward and ends up using his tail as a third leg to steady himself from collapsing forward. Shuffling towards a tree is easier then trying to walk and once he's got a hand on the trunk, he gets use to walking, all the while keeping a hand on the trunk and walking in a circle around the tree.

Once he gets his confidence built about how he should be walking, he pushes off from the tree and walks a few steps away from the tree. Now that he's able to do something as simple as walk and he's now standing, he takes in the area where he landed. There's a stain of blood where he'd woken up from upon the grass which causes him to rub the scales on his chest. His mind still drawing a blank on how he ended up falling from the sky or how he ended up on his belly.

With a sigh as he runs a hand through his blond hair, he finds there's a few braids in it. "How long until my memories settle?" He wonders to himself out loud.

It's like he's a stranger to himself, that he's got a lot of things to discover. Faolan isn't sure if he's annoyed about the issue or he's angry with himself for getting into this position in the first place. There's not much to jog his memory at this location and nothing to recover, so, taking in his surroundings, he can only hope that he'll find something to cover himself with before he encounters anyone.

He heads south, once he figures out which direction that is. Doing his best to keep an eye out for something he can use as a make shift weapon. He doesn't think he's able to really defend himself with his bare-hands at this moment. Not when his body is aching and seems to alien to him.

With his Sky Flame humming about his being, Faolan is left undisturbed by the various people on the street. It had taken him ten years to finally track down the devil who'd been the source of rousing his draconic lineage but also wounding his very soul, ripping a part of it loose. He hadn't realized why he always felt a tug leading to the south east this pass decade but he now knew that it generally means that the devil who entrapped a part of his soul, fueling the magic of his sword, is in the mortal world.

He can honestly say he doesn't care about about the devil's name nor reasons, well, the reasons seem kind of easy to guess at, when one considers his mother's lineage. Dragons are powerful beings, so what luck must that devil thought he had upon stumbling upon a human who's got a great grandfather as a dragon? A fifteen year old virgin at that? What better way to blood a freshly made and enchanted blade then with the life blood of someone who recently awoke their draconic blood?

Too bad for the devil that Faolan not only survived the awaking of that lineage but also the wounding of his very soul. It's why he'd reached for anything to help keep him alive, any kind of power would have worked and there was a power that echoed with that wish to defy death. So, an old incarnation was unsealed and with those memories came the power that he'd wanted to starve off death itself.

Those old memories hold a lot of interesting knowledge, to be sure, but they also don't help him much, after all, what's the point of knowing how to use a computer when there isn't one for him to use? Or a microwave? Not all of the knowledge he inherits from that life is of any use but that which is, is invaluable.

He does his best to get a feel of where in the building across from where he's standing the devil is viva the sword. The land is what Tsunayoshi knows of as Egypt, which have their own Pantheon of Gods and Goddesses that generally sport the heads of animals, like a falcon head or black furred jackal. He's also fairly sure that the building is what is called a brothel.

So, after a decent period of time, Faolan crosses the street, he's careful when he does, memories of fast moving cars playing out within his mind's eye. Most of the traffic is on foot but there's a few carts loitering on the street. Once in the building, he catches sight of a minor statue of what could be one of the local Deities with a food offering before it.

His gaze flickers around as he moves away from the door, none of the patrons or workers notice him. With a nod to himself, the blond ghosts up the stairs, following the tug at his soul. He transforms his left hand, yellow scales grow around the root of his finger nails, spreading down to his elbow while his fingers thicken along with his finger nails growing white along with longer and thicker.

Finding the right room, he slips in and comes up behind the devil, who's topping and rather occupied with the human woman under him. With ease, the head goes flying and then wetly thunks as it smacks the wall. Grabbing the body with the same hand, pulls the body off the woman, who's eyes are wide and it's clear she's beginning to realize just what happened to her client. He ignores the woman as he tosses the body backwards as he gets a look on the bed.

Finding that the sword is indeed on the bed, laying next to the woman, Faolan reaches for it with his right hand. Once in his grasp, he calls upon his Sky Flames and melts the sword. The woman finds her voice and screams while pushing herself away from where he stands.

With the sword nothing but melted metal, the bit of soul is free and with his Sky Flame, an ache that he'd learn to live with finally begins to fade. Faolan can't help but become relaxed as his Sky Flame speeds up the mending between that bit of torn soul and the rest of his soul. It also feels like something else is getting fixed along with feeling more connected to this world as well. It's an empowering feeling and it's likely why he forgets that this isn't the time nor the place to ravel in said feeling.

He's soon not the only one standing in the room and there's another man taking in the sight before rushing at him with a sword raised. He blocks the incoming slash with his left arm, the man's eyes widen as the sword glazes off the yellow scales. He counters with a punch to the man's jaw, which staggers the man back a bit while there's weeping and whimpering with the occasional begging in a totally alien language to his ears. It's the local language, he knows but it's not one that he knows from the limited number Tsunayoshi had been forced to learn to speak and understand.

Bat wings come from the other male's back, marking him as a devil and eyes glowing bright with both magic and rage. "You bastard!" Snarls the devil and this time tries to stab him with the pointy end of the sword.

"You think I'm the bastard? I just killed a thief and my almost murderer." Faolan easily reads the devil's body language and since he doesn't have scales on the palm of his hand, uses the back of his hand to stop the attempted stab. "He's lucky to die so quickly, given what he did to me a decade ago."

The devil clearly doesn't care and continues to attack him, getting angrier with each deflection and evasion, he slides into the devil's arms and lands a blow in the stomach viva his elbow before hooking a leg behind one of the devil's. The devil falls to the ground and he's quick to place his left foot on the wrist that holds the sword. "I suggest you surrender, devil. I only came for that one and what he stole from me. I rather not kill another if I don't need to."

The devil glares up at him, spite and hate join that rage but there's clearly not much this devil can do. It's fairly clear to him that this devil hasn't had any training in regards to using magic. The way the devil always attacked with the sword also suggested that the male hasn't been trained in hand to hand combat, or perhaps what's more likely, wasn't confident in his unarmed combat skills.

Sure, Faolan hadn't been able to use magic but that hadn't stopped him from taking lessons on it, after all, how else can he learn to defend himself against it? Or identify it when he comes across it? The tell tale signs he or someone else had been Cursed?

Something about the way he feels more connected to the world seems to hint that something has changed in that regard. Given the year it took to travel beyond his country of origin, he might as well take the time to find other teachers to learn magic from. Each Pantheon of Deities have their own traditions when it comes to magic, right? Seems like a reasonable hypothesis at least. I'll just have to find out if that theory is right or not. It's not like I'm in a rush to return home after all.

After what feels like two minutes, he snorts and walks out of the room, turning his left arm back into that of a human. Faolan continues to walk out of the building, the feeling of that devil's hateful gaze fixated upon his back as he leaves. The various people are sure to keep their distance, not wanting to get close and yet refusing to leave the same room.

Once out on the streets, he transforms fully into a dragon. He's not that big, not yet, but he's the size of a draft horse though. He's pretty sure that he is, it's not like he can stand next to one while in his dragon form. Bright yellow scales, white horns along with the occasional white spine littering his body. His talons are just as white.

Putting his weight on his back legs, he readies himself. All bunched up, his body tenses and he springs into the air. Wings snap open and within a few mighty beats, he's flying through the air.

He's not sure what possessed him to visit the location where Albion and Ddraig are slumbering, having been tricked by the Pantheon headed by God of Hebrews, more recently of Christians and his heavenly host, fallen angels lead by Azazel, and the devils lead by the corrupted fallen angel Lucifer but here Faolan is, nearly a decade since they'd been put under this mountain. The pair are known as the Heavenly Dragons, their fights against one another are the stuff of hushed warnings and ruined countries who's only crime seems to be their location, well, most of the time. Even he is wary of getting close to either of them and yet, here Faolan finds himself visiting their mountain prison.

"Here to pay your respects, oh Great and Benign Realm Wanderer?" It doesn't take much for Faolan to spy the human form of the Crescent Circle. "Crom."

"Faolan." The evil dragon returns with a smirk, he'd been a slave of the God Balor. Just by looks alone, Crom stirs Tsunayoshi's memories of Mukuro, what with both having two different colors when it comes to their eyes. Take in the account of mind control and...

"Are you?" He inquires in a mild tone. He doesn't want to dive into Tsunayoshi's memories, not when he's in the company of others.

Crom snorts and turns to face the mountain, not giving his inquiry a reply. Both of them consider Ireland their birth place, but, it's doubtful that Crom has overly fond memories of that country. He'd come here for the sake of memories of a pair of frenemies then out of any true feelings concerning Albion and Ddraig. Their rivalry and the consequences of their fights never fail to bring to mind Kyoya Hibari and Mukuro Rokudo from when he'd been Tsunayoshi.

He doesn't know either of the powerful Emperors personality, Faolan never tried to get to know them as he rather not get pulled into their fights, he wouldn't likely survive the experience, even with his ability to weld Sky Flames. Closing his eyes, he remembers the story concerning Merlin and these two dragons, which causes him to wonder how events will play out in the future? Myths and legends that Tsunayoshi knew of... He's been around to see or hear them play out in this world.

Never mind Tsunayoshi's recollection of historic events, although, Faolan suspect that the dates are subject to changes along with any number of other minor alterations. The rise of the Roman Empire... It's decline... The rise of the power the Christian Pope...

His heart clenches at the thought of the future of the lands that are likely to be known as the Americas along with the fate of the native populations, both of humans and the supernatural beings that live there. Faolan isn't sure what he's going to do about any of it, only he knows he can't live with himself by just being an observer. It's more of figuring out in what way he can try and help, after all, what right does he have to trample on the rights of other, free thinking beings?

Free will... It's something to be valued, it's something that Tsunayoshi was robbed of by a contradictory old man and the man who didn't see his son but a toy to keep his wife entertained while he was away. He's seen enough to know that history won't play out exactly as Tsunayoshi memories show, just that there is a general out line or guide line that history seems to be following, it's still in the hands of those living it to see it made.

Free will... He wonders if anyone realizes that it is a frail and even when broken, it is never truly gone. There's always choices to be had, it's just that they weren't always the ones that lead to the kind of future the possessor wants. Sometimes, all you can do is pick the time and place.

That's what Tsunayoshi did, although it took him a decade to finally figure out his way out of being a Mafia Don. It wasn't a spectacular ending either, but then, if it had then those with good intentions would have found a way to keep the worn Sky alive against his private wishes. Tsunayoshi died without an heir, the ability of which to produce said heir had been robbed from him by an unknowing hitman and who knows the number of Dying Will bullets. He also never got around to looking for one either, after all, the Ninth never bothered to look into his actual family tree for someone closer to home and already aware of that world...

Was that spiteful? Why yes, yes it was. There's a reason why Mukuro and him kept becoming Flame Bonded for short periods of time, it just that it hardly ever stuck due to the Flame Seal and the Flame Filter that Reborn unknowingly installed in those holes he'd made when creating holes in that Flame Seal.

Both of them suffered at the hands of Mafia Dons, both were viewed as things, and both couldn't escape from the Mafia and the criminal underworld, just that the ties binding them were different. At least there isn't any hint of Flames in this universe, well, besides myself. Faolan thinks to himself.

And I wasn't suppose to get lost in my own thoughts, damn it. He mentally curses and opens his eyes. Crom stands before him with a slightly raised eyebrow but he doesn't think that the other dragon had spoken to him, not approached him in a threatening manner nor does the manner in which Crom regards him seems overly hostile.

They study each other silently for a bit. Crom's face twists into a wicked expression before musing, "I wonder how they'll reward the so called Three Factions for this little nap-time? They're going to be furious when they finally wake."

"Given they'll likely be rudely awaken..." He trails off, frowning as he considers the matter. "I won't be at all surprised that they'll attack that Pantheon once they recovered from their nap, either together or alone. It'll be a matter of pride." And bruised egos.

"Oh? You so sure about that?" Crom remarks as the evil dragon regards him with a calculating look. "They can easily wake on their own, they are the Heavenly Dragon Emperors after all. They rank just under the Dragon of Dragons and the Dragon God."

"Do you want to make a wager, Crom?" He asks easily, after all, what little back story there is concerning Merlin, he's responsible for discovering the source of why that lord can't build his castle at this location. Which means that, Merlin is the one to play a part in their waking and release from this prison under this mountain. He can feel he's right about that.

His confidence must have shown as the black dragon in humanoid form's face goes slightly blank. Faolan is fairly sure that the other's brain is going into over drive, weighing the pros and cons. "And what, pray tell, would we be wagering?"

"Well, that's really up in the air, isn't it? What, exactly, could we want from one another?" He muses and Crom frowns while the head tilts to look at the ground instead of at his face. It seems that Crom is now lost in thought.

He looks over the other dragon's shoulder and regards the mountain once more. It's not like Crom and himself have any songs or stories about their interactions, it's not like he hates Crom for almost killing his great grandfather as the Crescent Circle Dragon hadn't been in control of himself nor did Crom ultimately think that Cabhan was worthy of being killed by him, once he'd been free from that God's control. Most of their encounters, save for when he arrived to save his ancestor, had been verbal in nature. More a clash of words and exchange of opinions then physical in nature, even though Crom seem to regard him as someone worth getting into a physical fight with.

He's not a dragon that features in myths and legends, the few accounts told are only among the supernatural folk and are hardly exaggerated, if anything, they try to down play him simply because he'd been born human. Only being able to awaken his supernatural potential due to that devil. There's still a lot of different versions of that encounter between himself and that devil, who's name he refuses to learn, but since he never spoke of it and that devil is dead, it's just conjecture these days.

Big surprise that the devils try to portray that one as the victim but it doesn't work. It's likely due to their actions during this war with the God of the Christian and Hebrew and his angels in regards to treatment of humans along with other supernatural beings. Given Lucifer's stance, anyone that isn't either an angel or devil are scum to be trampled on or tricked into being of use. The angels do share that kind of sentiments, only to a far lesser degree while thinking of humans as young children who need a guiding hand.

Shocking how that doesn't win the various factions of said Pantheon any friends or allies, huh? The Biblical Pantheon is often called the Three Factions due to the fact that, some other angels have indulged in a vice or in multiple, which is why they are called fallen angels. The oldest among that third group is Azazel, at least, that's how it seems to be, given that those fallen angels do fall in line with that one's leadership.

Hearing a hum from Crom, his attention shifts back to the dragon who is far more well known in their shared island then he. "How about... a favor, one that can only fall within the realms of possibility of the loser?" Both gold and black eyes glint as they return to staring back into his own.

"That's surprising fair." He admits. "I accept."

"I say they'll free themselves without outside help and you say they'll have outside help." Crom states and he nods. "Then we have an accord."

Early dawn makes itself known and Faolan wonders where the time went, but figures it hardly matters. Crom calls upon his wings, the cloths on the back shifting to make room for them while he calls upon a teleportation circle. He vanishes from the location once Crom takes to the air, arriving at his nearest lair, of which he has three.

One lair is in Ireland, which is where he teleported to, his second is in what will one day be called Japan, and his final one is in an abandoned plane, it once housed a Pantheon but it's long gone without human believers to fuel their existence. He's been working on making it habitable location for baby and preteen dragons, after all, the world is getting to be fairly hostile for his species, never mind that one day, humans will have weapons that can devastate countries, which will be ruinous to the wildlife, upon which the younger members should be feeding off of.

- } F_o_T { -

Faolan doesn't his best to ignore the whelps that seem to have decided his back is a good place to have a play fight upon. He's trying to nap while the whelps are intent on having their fun. Why on my back? Why not among the field of flowers over there?

In the end, the whelps seem to stop upon the approaching figure. Lazily opening an eye, he notices the black and blond hair. Letting out a breathy sigh, he raises his head at the approach of the evil dragon.

The whelps slide down his sides and attempt to bury themselves into him. While doubtful that Crom will harm the whelps, he moves his tail, curling it near he can feel the eight whelps while the ninth seems to decided the safe place was near his front 'paws'. Faolan hadn't seen the black dragon since they made that wager.

"You win." Is said sourly and it's clear the other wasn't pleased with having lost said wager. The whelp that's settled on his 'paws' makes a sound of inquiring, not a loud one, more of a growl honestly.

"I see." The yellow dragon admits simply. "Do I need to collect right now?"

"You want to make me wait?" The other inquires, clearly not liking the idea of this favor being hung over his head, like at all. "How about waiting until I've had a peaceful sleep? These nine seem intent on keeping me from having a sunny nap."

"That sounds like a you problem." There's a bemused smirk as the other glances down at the dragon whelp that's settled on his 'paws'. "You pretty must volunteered to be the ultimate babysitter."

Faolan lets out a breathy sigh, after all, he hadn't thought that the whelps would prefer to hang around him instead of pursuing their independents. The whelps come from different breeds, even one being the daughter of Tiamat, he can't remember which one of the four that is and suspects that's the point. Humming, he gives a calculating look at the currently transformed black dragon, it's not like he has anything he really wants in regards of Crom...

"Well, how about becoming the protector of this realm, how's that for my use of that favor?" He smirks while Crom's face twitches, clearly not use what to make of that. "Keeping watch for intruders... Having to deal with wanna be heroes looking to carve their path to fame in the bodies of young dragons?"

"Your delirious." The Crescent Circle Dragon states in a deadly calm voice. "Clearly sleep deprived if you think to use that as your favor..."

He can't help but chuckle at the clear derision coming from Crom from the very idea of being called upon to join him in being a babysitter. "Oh, I don't know, maybe you'll come to enjoy it? I mean, there's no humans and plenty of room... I made sure to find and cultivate various plants that a lot of our fellows like..."

"I'm no babysitter." Snaps Crom with a bit more heat and balled fists, both eyes daring him to argue with him. "While true... That doesn't mean it has to be party of your duties. This realm was abandoned, up for grabs when I found it. You never know who else might stumble upon it or what they'd do when they do."

With a look that should be able to kill him, Crom teleports away, a sign that the other would rather not be consider an enabler to his current plan in regards to making a safe haven for baby through preteen dragons. "Now I really want to make it the official favor." He murmurs while the whelp on his 'paws' chirps in a smug way.

A bit after, the other eight dragon whelps get over the visit from Crom and come charging at the little one that's settled on his 'paws'. Soon enough, they are playing by trying to push the others off of his 'paws' while being the only one to remain on him. So... no nap anytime soon it seems. Faolan mentally muses, watching the nine play around.

- } F_o_T { -

There are times when he figures he's projecting identities of people Tsunayoshi knew upon people he encounters or knows. Right now, Crom very much reminds him ever more strongly of Mukuro, all that the other needs to complete the resemblance is a personal weapon, a staff or spear, maybe even a halberd? Something along those lines and it would only cement the idea of the evil dragon as Mukuro's reincarnation.

He'd also need to develop a similar laugh, but it's not really needed... Faolan notes as he watches as the black dragon in humanoid form fight in a free for all with the current possessors of the Booster Gear and Divine Dividing. The current owner of the Booster Gear is a half Chinese woman by the name of Song Meiying and the current owner of the Divine Dividing is a Dutchman by the name of David Gross.

He'd noticed a barrier and decided to investigate it, which is how Faolan arrived to witness Mr Gross join the fight, it seems that it started out with Crom wanting to test Ms Song. It's an odd location for a fight between the two owners of Sacred Gears, given this is India. He's also pretty sure that this area is part of a shrine to one of the native Deities, not that he can figure out which one as he doesn't move closer to said shrine, rather hoping that it'll be left undisturbed but the odds of that happening is pretty much dust in the wind as a blast from Ms Meiying lands near one of the decorated walls and then explodes.

This really isn't my problem. Faolan reminds him as he forces himself to turn his back on the fight. They're adults, over nineteen years of age. They are not children, even if they are acting like it.

So, he walks out of the barrier, doing his best to ignore the itch of being responsible for that fight, which he isn't responsible for! The only one among those five he knows personality is Crom Cruach but knows that the evil dragon is merely toying with first Ms Meiying and now Mr Gross. He curses his previous incarnation for how his martyr complex had been nurtured by the Mafia, another leash around the Don-to-be's neck, something to be exploited for the betterment of the Vongola Famiglia.

What happens between those five, two of whom are spectators, not his problem. Neither Mr Gross or Ms Meiying have met him and he doubts they have heard of him. Given how proud people those that generally inherit those two Sacred Gears, the two wouldn't want his aid anyway, resent him at best, swear a vendetta at the worst.

He rather not have another one sworn on him, thank you very much, not when that one devil had found death in the current civil war going on among the Devil Faction. With the death of their primary God, that Pantheon has withdrawn from their epic war, the angels keeping to Heaven and working with the Catholic Church. As for the fallen angels seem to be doing a lot of random things but then, their leadership had been altered or maybe it's just that without the war going on, those other leaders are able to pursue other agendas?

"Father?" He pauses in his steps and it takes him a few seconds to find the source of that voice. "Arwia?"

There's at least one horn on display along with brown scales under each eye, although the way they are displayed isn't uniform. This is hardly the first time he's been called Father by unrelated young dragons, those nine whelps had been the ones to do so and it seems that the habit has been picked up by those that came after them, even those that weren't of the Western stock. A number of females have laid clutches in that realm he claimed, some leaving once the eggs have hatched while others stick around until their children are teenagers.

Given how times have been turning against dragons, it's not that surprising that some of those mothers end up clutching alone. Generally, if the dragon pair are still together, they generally protect and raise the clutch together, until their children are preteens. Perhaps that's why those that grow up in the realm think of him as their Father, he's the only adult male dragon they are in contact with.

Arwia shifts uncomfortable and it takes him a moment to realize her condition. "The father?" He inquires gently.

"He doesn't know. He can't know." She states, arms moving to cover front.

He steps forward, making gentle soothing sounds, soon enough, she flings herself into him. Arwia's arms hug him and he returns the hug, rubbing her back. "I just wanted... But he couldn't, so I..."

"You don't need to say anything more." He assures her, now isn't the time to press for information about the father. This is about comforting Arwia, who's clearly emotional and barely keeping it together.

It doesn't take long to convince her to spend the rest of the pregnancy back at the realm of her childhood. Arwia refuses to transform out of her human form, convince that it'll cause harm on the child. Faolan doesn't know if she's right but, well, it's not long until Arwia's mother, Tiamat, arrives once he'd gotten her to rest on a conjured bed.

Watching the Dragon King assume the form of a naked human woman isn't something he wanted to see. "My foolish girl... Really? You picked an angel?" The transformed Chaos Karma Dragon murmurs.

Ah, that... explains a few things. "Do I want to know how...? I mean, I doubt the other party fell." Faolan remarks, deciding that he's better off not transforming out of his dragon form.

His elder dragon seems to be rather bemused, it takes his imagination to lead him through a number of options but, well, what he knows about getting pregnant without sex comes from Tsunayoshi's memories. "I never thought they were allowed to masturbate..." It's the most likely way for Arwia to get a sample without crossing a certain line.

"Well, now you know." Tiamat says in a catty fashion. "I'll look after her."

Noting the dismissal for what it is, Faolan does so. After all, Tiamat is also known as the Mother of all Dragons for a reason. It's unlikely she'll allow her daughter to miscarry, it's rare for the Dragon King to have children since the death of her husband. Those few she does have she treasures, it's just that people are idiots and tend to act on possibilities of the future then leaving well enough alone. Far too many target the children of those legends, thinking said children are nothing but future disasters waiting to be unleashed upon the world.

Crom arrives to find him moping before a waterfall. "Tiamat?" The other inquires and he rumbles a positive.

"Arwia's going to have a half-angel child." He states as he turns to regard the black dragon. Crom pauses and blinks a few times, clearly taking time to think on that before snorting.

"I'll be sure to congratulate her on having a grandchild then." The black states while moving fairly close before settling down on the ground next to him. The other gives him a challenging look at invading his personal space so easily and Faolan gives the other a bland look before snorting with a slight shake of his head.

"Don't you want to know who won?" Crom inquires after a period of silence between them. He replies, "I'm going to assume it got interrupted by a... fourth party, I seem to recall an attack ruining part of that shrine."

Crom lets loose a laugh while he watches the other out of the corner of his eye. Few know that they have a friendship of a sort, those aware of Crom almost killing his great grandfather generally think he's holding a grudge and is plotting to kill Crom, all the while Crom finds his murder plot to be far too interesting to feel offended. Only one other knows that Faolan had almost killed the infamous Crescent Circle Dragon on their first meeting and his ancestor never spoke up because nobody would believe him, dismissing it for any number of reasons, after all, for all that he's a dragon, has been for centuries now, the fact he'd been born as a simple human causes derision within the supernatural circles. That his draconic blood had been awaken by an external factor makes him even weaker then if he'd done it on purpose.

It had been pity for the position Crom had been in that kept him from finishing off the slave. With an application of Sky Flame, he lodged the beginnings of a weak spot in that control Balor had over the other dragon. After all, dragons grow powerful with age while the time of the Irish Pantheon was destined to be on the decline, either Crom Cruach will free himself or another will finish the job.

Thoughts of having used his Sky Flame upon Crom causes him to consider a few things in regards to their relationship before deciding that it hardly mattered as it likely would have come about one way or another as long as he hadn't killed the black dragon that day. It's not as if any of his Sky Flame remains clinging to the other dragon and he's never felt a tug on his Sky Flame while in the other's company either. The evil dragon's positive regard for him is one that Crom nurtured without much influence on his part, after all, the other might have developed a negative impression of him and things might have devolved into a bitter rivalry.

Dragons are generally prideful and possession of plenty of self confidences. Killing an adult dragon is difficult and if they aren't actually dead, it could prove deadly for the children of that wanna be Dragon Slayer. "I don't understand why they keep entitling the possessors the those two Sacred Gears Dragon Emperors." He remarks as the other finishes laughing and seems to be waiting on him to speak.

"It does make them seem more... threatening. More important." Crom notes. "But they only have their sealed abilities to draw from. I have yet to hear about a welder of the Booster Gear in possession of that all consuming fire that Ddraig sealed away."

"Would the welders be immune to that fire though?" The yellow dragon counters. "Other then Ddraig himself, none could survive an encounter with it. It's why the red ended up so focused on Albion, the white was the first beside himself to prove immune to it."

"Same goes for the white's sealed ability." Crom agrees. "Makes you wonder why their souls are still trapped in those gears."

"Forgetfulness? Pride?" He remarks and the black seems to find those worth considering.

"The challenge?" Adds Crom and he adds. "Companionship?"

A few more comments get toss out about the reason for why the pair of Heavenly Emperors haven't escape their current soul containers that's under the Heaven's give-humans-supernatural-weaponry distribution system. He wishes that the God of Christians and Hebrews hadn't bothered to do so, it only gave humans another thing to bitch about and pretty much baiting the rest of the supernatural world on focusing on those poor souls who are born with said weaponry unknowing about them until somebody catches wind of them possessing one and the person is tossed head first into the supernatural world. Not all of those Scared Gears come with a built in mentor, after all.

As silence descends between them, they both rest their heads on their respective forelimbs. Even though he's relaxing, he doesn't fall asleep. It's sometime later that he realizes that Crom had done just that, much to his bewilderment, after all, Faolan isn't sure it's due to the black's trust in him or if it's to how just how harmless the other regards him to be right then and there.

After a while, he allows himself to fall asleep in turn, deciding to have Crom share in his confusion over why he'd done so.

- } F_o_T { -

Hearing giggling from Arwia's daughter, named Arariel, called Ariel for short, who's rather unique in being an angel and dragon hybrid, he looks up to find that she's gently getting tossed in the air by Crom. Her silver feathered wings flapping uselessly when she's in the air. The girl is only eight and is growing like a weed when compared to those whelps that hatched around the same time she'd been born.

This time, he's actually babysitting as both mother and grandmother wanted to spend time away from this realm. He suspects that Arwia's wanted to spy on Ariel's father while Tiamat wanted to find a mortal to share a bed with. They've been gone for a month already, he suspects that they'll be gone for another two before returning.

He must have become rather absorbed with his transcribing of an abandoned divine magic system. He's unsure as to why it had been abandoned but he has theories like the Pantheon likely faded or that the believers switch to a different one, likely reassigning certain Deities to fit with it. Only reason Faolan decided to examine it in more depth has to due with having run out of other abandon realms to gently pull into merging with this one, expanding the size and resources, in both number and quality.

"Crom." He states in greeting once the pair walk in his direction. The sight of Ariel being on Crom's humanoid shoulders is kind of odd, honestly, like there's something he's either missing or that the other is trying to provoke him in some way.

"Faolan." The black dragon returns, there's something about that smirk that makes him want to frown in thought but figures he's projecting memories of Mukuro onto Crom again. "Anything important?" The other's eyes flicker down at the leather bound journal that he'd been writing in.

"Not really. Just documenting an abandoned divine magic system." He admits, watching as Ariel slides down Crom's back upon him coming to sit not that far from his right.

Ariel is quick to fetch the stuffed canine he made for her, he can't really tell what he'd been trying for when making it, it could have been a wolf or a fox, but it doesn't have the socks that a fox has while the head sports ears too large. She returns and settles on his lap with the stuff toy clutched to her chest, her wings wrapping forward as he puts an arm to help steady her. All the while, the two adult dragons are content to let silence hang between them.

There's something different concerning the black dragon. He concludes as Ariel settles a bit more comfortably against his body, her head tipping forward onto her chest. "You seem to be in quiet the mood today."

"Oh? What gave me away?" There's a certain glint in the other's eyes.

He raises an eyebrow, the manner is rather... With a slight press of his lips, he calls upon his Sky Flame and takes in his environment. He stiffens as he feels something he only knows from Tsunayoshi's memories.

It's Crom's turn to rise an eyebrow while Mist Flames slowly float closer to him. Feeling Ariel react to his body's reaction, he does his best to relax his muscles even as the Mist Flame brushes up against his receptive Sky Flame. A look of surprise flash across the other's face and it almost seems like someone what's to let out a chuckle while the Mist Flame slowly and gently weaves into his Sky Flame, which is a very strange sensation, particularly given how he'd been studying his environment with said Flame.

"Mukuro." Faolan whispers and that does cause a familiar laugh to come from the black dragon. "Tsuna." The other purrs out a few seconds later, after giving that oh so familiar laugh.

"What happened?" He asks softly, he knows how it happened for him and he wouldn't want anyone else to go through it. It's so odd, feeling how his Sky Flame and the Mist Flame just seem to... settle, like it's only natural for them to forever be intermingled. Like it should have done during that life...

"Might have went back to pick a fight with a certain Hindu Deity." Crom doles out. "Might have almost had my soul ripped out of my body."

"I see." And he kind of does. "Got a bit of my soul torn out by a devil looking to blood his sword."

"Oh? Is that the reason you killed that one? I don't seem to recall what became of that sword..." Remarks Crom, who's likely more Mukuro then his current incarnation.

He's been through that, he's confident that Crom will come to terms with access with both, memories of a previous incarnation and Mist Flames. "Melted it using my Sky Flame after I killed the guy." The story about what happened in that brothel is old news, although few likely knew the bit about a portion of his soul having been stolen and stored in that sword. Few understood why he named that one a thief, after all, that sword had been commissioned, some had wondered if he'd been implying about the blood that got soaked on it.

Either way, it hardly matters and he rather not someone try to replicate what might have been an accident within the enchantment upon said sword. It's fairly satisfying that few ever gave the sword a thought. For the best.

"So, you've recalled being the Tenth Don since our very first meeting..." Crom muses and he merely inclines his head slightly. "To possess Sky Flames even then..."

"I did use a bit to wedge a crack into Balor's control over you." Faolan admits. "I don't possess the same degree of intuition from when I was Tsunayoshi and I've never found myself in a situation that I didn't want to be in either."

Hyper Intuition... It was something tied into Giotto's bloodline, part of an agreement when the man had been gifted the rings likely, and it wouldn't surprise him that it wasn't geared to helping the welder but on the benefiting that curse filled system that the Vongola Rings were one of third of. Not that he remembers its name, after all, he's really not suppose to remember who he once was so the fact that there are some details like names or dates concerning special events escape him is natural and to be expected.

"But..." Trails off Crom and he snorts while looking away from the other. "For some centuries, I've been drawing a lot of conclusion between Mukuro Rokudo and Crom Cruach, mostly due to the eyes and when it comes to both having grown up in an environment that controlled them in some way." He admits after a bit.

"I would like to point out that I also drew parallels concerning the relationship between Albion and Ddraig with Kyoya and Mukuro." He adds as he notices the smug smirk on Crom when he returns to looking at the other's face. "So, don't think I have some sixth sense about realizing if Mukuro was your previous incarnation, Crom. Or that I can find Kyoya Hibari's current incarnation for you to troll."

A familiar chuckle erupts from Crom but the other seems to be pleased, regardless of what he said. "Oh, I don't know, after all, dear Nagi~ Or should I say, Chrome darling has already found her way to you... to us." Crom states and deliberately lowers his gaze onto Ariel, who's fast asleep in his arms and on his lap.

He finds himself stiffening as he recalls how two weeks ago, Ariel had collapse while running a fever. There had been a lot of whimpering and non-sense spoken but he wrote that off as her being feverish. There had been an odd pressure in the air and the smell of water but, given who her grandmother was, put it down as Ariel inheriting Tiamat's connection to water.

They could have been twins... Faolan thinks to himself as he recalls the closeness between Chrome and Mukuro. There had been a bond between the two Mists, one that lead to Mukuro saving her life while allowing Mukuro some sense of freedom while his body had been imprisoned.

"Two weeks ago..." He trails off as he looks down at the child, his mind trying to wrap itself around this turn of events. "You two renewed your connection."

After all, it's not like Crom has ever shown any interest concerning Ariel nor in Arwia herself. In fact, he hadn't seen Crom since that encounter at the waterfall, when Arwia had arrived in the realm and he'd been dismissed from her side by Tiamat herself. He still recalls the closeness the black dragon had shown that time, too.

"Well, here's hoping it's just the pair of you then." He decides. "I am not Tsunayoshi, after all. I am Faolan O Hicidhe, great grandson of the Green Dragon, Cabhan."

Channeling the Mist he'd been in a past life, Crom Cruach give him a smirk, saying, "Who knows, my Sky, who knows..." Then he gives that familiar chuckle while the yellow dragon gives him a flat, unamused look.

"So... Are there any truth to the rumors of you being the Yellow Emperor from Chinese Legends? The Emperor who ascended into a dragon?" The other asks after nearly an hour of silence.

Reincarnation it is then!: DxD

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn or High School DxD!

For as long as he can remember, Issei felt this feeling of being trapped. That something is smothering him, pressing on him, trying to steer him into behaving in a certain fashion. It only got worse when he became an adolescent, when he experienced what most boys on the way of becoming men find waking up on morning.

From there, he began to experience black outs at times and returning to himself only when he's on the receiving end of a furious girls beating on him for being perverted. Fear gripped him when he realized that those black outs were happening for longer periods of time, he didn't know what's going on with him and then he'd been out of it for a total of three days... The sight of those magazines that he didn't recall buying.

Issei broke down into hysterics that devolved into sobs, he didn't know what's happening to him. It was like he's getting replaced within his own skin and he's unable to defend himself! Give him a name! A face! Just... give him some reason why?!

What did he ever do to deserve this?! Why him?! Was this karma from some previous life?!

Waking to the sight of a spear of light coming at him, Issei feels his rage boil within. "I won't... I Won't Die Here! Not like this!" Issei bellows both in his mind and out loud.

He punches the spear before it lands, his fist ablaze in purple fire with hints of green. Issei finds himself feeling... lighter then he's ever felt before as he stares at the left fist, watching as black bindings get devoured by the flame. Once gone, his hand and upper arm are transformed, a green gemstone with crimson red with dull gold spines.

His heart is pounding in his chest as it feels like more bindings snap, falling away. It's like he can finally experience the world, like something had been filtering the world through something, muffling it. It's the sound that really causes him to snap his gaze at the woman sporting black wings and leaving barely anything to the imagination.

Watching her summon more of those spears causes him to narrow his eyes, this... this... Fake Carnivore DARES?! It's child's play to dodge the incoming spears even with a surge of memories threatening to pull him under. "Fake Carnivore! For the crime of attempted murder! You! Shall! Be! Bitten! To! Death!" He bellows as he leaps right at her, his whole body is now cloaked in that purple flame with hints of green and now indigo.

His left fist lands in her stomach while his right upon her jaw. Before he knows it, he's clutching a pair of tonfas in both hands and he's using them to Bite this fake carnivore to Death! Even upon the ground, the winged fake carnivore takes a lot of damage and has yet to go unconscious.

When the final Cloud empowered blow slams upon the forehead, Issei finds himself unable to remain conscious. As he faints upon the ground, the tonfas vanish in a burst of Mist Flames while the crimson gantlet vanishes from his left arm. Memories of one Hibari Kyoya pull him under and Issei is more then happy to fall under their sway, after all, he might just find the answers he's been praying for.

- } F_o_T { -

Coming too, Issei isn't sure what to make of his situation concerning recalling a past life. Then again, he's got a situation to deal with right now. After all, he'd been in a park when he passed out, having been overwhelmed with the memories that came along with his Dying Will Flames.

And so, calling upon his memories from having been Kyoya, the proud Demon Prefect of Namimori and former official Cloud Guardian of the Tenth Don of the Vongola Famiglia, the teen takes stock of his situation. He begins with listening, slowly doing his best to guess what each sound is before cracking open an eye, taking in the sights. Mentally taking in what he sees, he begins to form a picture about the person who stumbled upon him and took him from the park.

Most of the decor is Western and very expensive, given who Kyoya had ended up working for... With, yea, with... Issei can tell just by looks of the it that they have money, old money at that. A touch of Cloud Flame to enhance his hearing and he catches a muffled conversation going on in another room. Feeling secure for the moment, he sits up and takes stock of his body, besides a touch sore on his chest, which is odd, after all, he hadn't been hit at all, he's fine.

Memories of how fit Kyoya's body had been at this age flickers through his mind and Issei begins to remind himself that he's not the feared head of the disciplinary committee and later appointed Cloud Guardian of a Mafia Don. And that's fine, after all, I'm fine with being Issei. He assures himself, it's all he ever wanted to be once those black outs started after all.

It's not like he'd had a chance to be Hyoudou Issei, not when those bindings had been on him, restraining him. So, he gets off the bed and begins to take stock of what he can find within the various drawers and testing the window. Focusing on his current situation, reminding himself that he can have an identity crisis when he's in the safety of his room.

The window seems to be an illusion or it's sealed through some unknown means, so he returns to finding something, anything, as a weapon. After all, he's still feeling kind of drained from causing a previous incarnation's memories to wake along with that incarnation's ability to use Dying Will Flames. So yea, he should have concluded he wouldn't find anything of use and that they'd return before he figured out how to escape.

Staring at the red head and beyond her, one with black hair. Both of them seem familiar but his mind is blanking on their names. All three of them seem to be studying each other, surprise giving way to unease on his part while the two young women seem to become cautious, yet there's hints of aggression. Aggression that likely comes from them feeling like they have some upper hand, which, hey, he's only just survived a murder attempt, thank you very much.

He might be weaker then his previous incarnation that he now recalls fairly clearly, but he now has access to not just Cloud Flames but also Lightning and Mist, although the Lightning is the odd one... Issei pushes that trail of thought away. Now is not the time to ponder why he'd possessed Cloud and Lightning Flames before his memories as Kyoya finally pushed through, adding Mist to the mix.

"Hyoudou-kun, your awake." The black haired young woman states the obvious in a coying tone that he's not sure how to react to. "My, my, are you looking for a souvenir already?"

While he does react by stiffening, his mind gets thrown for a few seconds before it races as he moves away from the dresser he'd been searching through. Yes, he'd found cloths, cloths of the feminine persuasion but he'd had no inclination of taking any of it. There's anger curling within him midsection at the reminder of those previous times of coming to when getting beaten up for peeping on the gentler gender, of actions he never recalls doing and yet, that budding personality must have.

Reigning himself in, Issei draws on his Mist Flame, Kyoya might have hated having it as a secondary but he might as well use it here, to cause misdirection in the conversation, to get information that the pair likely won't give if not for an external force. Let's see find out just what it is they want from me.

For some reason, Faolan finds himself accompanying Crom to Kuoh Town in checking a rumor concerning a dragon egg having been transported there. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that Crom knows it's getting transported there viva him keeping track of Rizevim Lucifer and his group bend on flooding the world with evil dragons in fulfilling the Khaos Brigade's mandate of causing wide spread war among the Supernatural World. The idiot offended the black dragon by simply appealing to the fact that he's an evil dragon, thus, Crom should be interested in doing meaningless, petty evil on a world wide scale.

Yea, the idiot didn't get that Crom preferred to do unspeakable evil on a select few who have wronged him deeply, so deeply that he didn't want them just dead but ruined in every way that matters before granting them the mercy that death would be by that point. The Crescent Circle Dragon would like the world at large to acknowledge he has this thing called standards. He muses to himself with a slight bemused smile on his face.

Yet, within being in Kuoh Town, someone has laid claim to it. Oh, he's heard that the younger sisters of two of the current four leaders of the devils are in residence and are co-owners, but it seems that someone with Dying Will Flames is challenging their claim, not that the pair are even aware of that fact. "Cloud with Lightning and Mist." He murmurs after examining the nearest 'spray' point and turning his Sky Flame into a receiver, in his previous life, most used their Flames in a sonar like fashion when it came to examining the areas, Tsunayoshi had picked up that habit but he'd already been bred with a natural inclination of being a receiver of environmental signals commonly known as Hyper Intuition.

"Cloud and Mist..." He hears Crom muse over and that combination was familiar, after all, they both knew the same Demon Prefect once upon a time. His thoughts circle around that combination as he returns his Sky Flame to it's usual passive state, he rather not attract the owner of those Flames, he wasn't here for that right now. Once the egg is safe, then we can investigate who it is that remembers their previous life. Faolan thinks to himself.

"Human." Crom tosses out and he replies, "Dragon Sacred Gear welder."

"Hmm, damn, you're likely right." The black states with a slight sigh. "How about... which one?" He suggests.

"Can't be Albion." Crom states and that's pretty obvious, given that the current welder of the Divine Dividing is known to the Supernatural World, well, for the most part. "You want the Booster Gear? I'm incline to go with one of Vritra's Sacred Gears." He recalls Kyoya's personality and how reckless the Cloud had been.

Crom chuckles before countering, "How about I bet on one of Vritra's and you take the Booster Gear? I remember him just as well as you do."

He sighs, but gives the other a nod, after all, it's kind of trying always winning these little bets between them. "Sounds fair." With that, their minor bet is sealed and they move on from the lamp post.

They both attract attention from the residences, from the women due to their respective looks and from the men due to the fact that they are attracting the attention of the women, although a few seem to be of that orientation themselves. It's not like they are wearing anything expensive, both of them avoid business suits and stupidly expensive brand names like its the plague and for the same reasons, more then likely as well. That also included rings and metal chain necklaces, well, pretty much anything that reminded them of their previous incarnation's time belonging to a Mafia Famiglia it comes to cloths and accessories.

They're dragons, when all is said and done, they really didn't care about what's trendy among the current era, although a lot of it was familiar in the end. For all that this world seemed to be guided along similar paths as that old world that the recall from their previous incarnations, it doesn't mean he's incapable in affect history. Like he'd noticed centuries ago, some minor details are different but over all, the same major points in history happen. Which made it some what easier to work around those seemingly fated points, like, having a number of unknown cities or tribes vanishing either before they encounter Europeans or after a brief encounter with them. There's plenty of cause to write off those cities and tribes, first being discounted as stories and the other by introduced diseases or territorial pushes from neighboring tribes.

"Is it here yet?" He inquires as they wander the town. "Hm... The Territory is interfering with the trace I placed on it."

"Which means that it's been found by him." He realizes and the black dragon doesn't discount his use of gender, after all, both of them have already come to the same conclusion when it comes to the previous life that's been recalled. It's a question about how alike the current incarnation is to the one who served as the Tenth Don's Cloud Guardian.

With a soft sigh, Faolan takes a few minutes to use his a hybrid spell between his magic and Sky Flame to pick out which part of the town seems to possess the highest concentration of Flames hanging around. That's the property of Mist Flame or more like an after effect, it's capacity to hang around instead of dispersing away. It's likely why the indigo colored Flame was ever given the name Mist in the first place, it's so much like the weather it's named off of. Besides Sky Flames, it's the next one to leave enduring traces of itself after it's been used.

"The Cloud attends that academy that's in the devil's pocket but I have pin point two other locations, one seems to be a training area and the other his residence." He informs Crom. They could split up to check out the two spots or they can remain together.

"Residence." Crom states after a bit, just like him, weighing the pros and cons of their opinions. "Likely living with his parents, could get in easier through them."

With a slight hum, he takes the lead and it takes time to get to said home. What they're doing is fairly rude but they rather not alert either the local devils or the agents of that Qlippoth subgroup. Never mind agents from the Japanese Pantheon and from the other two factions of the Biblical's Three Factions. Not only do they arrive at there but the egg is most definitely here as well.

It's now just a question of how to go about their approach, after all, it's fairly late, what with it being pass ten pm local time. The odds are high that there's going to be a fight of some kind, they notice the watchers but due to their use of Flames haven't been noticed by those watchers. "It's safe enough." He decides because, ultimately, it's because of his desire to ensure the egg's safety that they were here in the first place.

With ease, both of them set up their own alarming spells, after all, it's unlikely they won't be back in the future and they won't always be together. With that, they head for a decent hotel, he's the one to be seen renting the room that they'll share. Once within the room, they secure it through only Flames before they both transform into miniature versions of their dragon forms, which are about the size of the average house cat, which gives them both enough space on the bed to sleep upon.

There's something different about this day compared to the day before. Its a feeling that takes Issei a while to recognize within himself while he's going over the protections upon the dragon egg that he'd wrestled out from under the two devil heiresses so called secure location and protection. If the two haven't realized they're looking after a fake, that's not his problem.

"Issei... Be careful." Ddraig advises as he leaves his room, he's got school today and neither of his parents want to miss out on it. It's aggravating, attending that school.

"You don't have to tell me that... I can tell that something's changed." He mentally sends to the ancient dragon that's kind of forced into haunting that gauntlet that's located on his left arm.

It's not until he's out the door that Ddraig lets out a long, drawn out sigh. By the time he's a block away, he gets fed up and inquires, "You have an idea about what's different. Mind sharing it?"

"Crom Cruach paid a visit last night, near as I can tell." The crimson dragon states. "Either there's a tag a long or he'd been followed here. Whoever they'd been, also set up alert spells."

He mentally repeats the name as he does his best to recall what research he did concerning dragons mentioned in myths and legend. "Irish... He is or was, big in Ireland, right?" The few images that he'd seen had the dragon more akin to a Eastern dragon, a serpentine body and without any limbs. "Wyrm, right?"

"Oh, if only... No, he's a 'proper' black Western dragon. Crescent Circle Dragon is a common title for him and he's a former slave to Balor, who was an evil god." Explains Ddraig. "There was an encounter between him and a previous holder, which got interrupted by the white bastard's own welder and a bit later by a Hindu God, don't recall which, it happened too fast honestly but did end the fight."

Another dragon in Kuoh Town... It's like he can't catch a break, like, at all. Issei would wonder what it was he did in a previous life that caused so much karma to be dumping upon his head only, he knows, doesn't he? Kyoya...

Oh, it's one thing to blame Tsuna about some of his previous incarnation's troubles but Kyoya would have run into trouble one way or another from how Issei recounts from Kyoya's memories. The Cloud had been so... so... unbending in so many ways and to an unreasonable extent as well. He's more of a people person then his previous incarnation, after all, and that's how reincarnation is suppose to work, too.

He's not going to be the second coming of the Demon Prefect of Namimori, he honestly doesn't want to be either. There's something lonely about how Kyoya had lived his life and recalls how clearly the Cloud was never fully satisfied. For all that Kyoya was suppose to be Tsuna's Cloud Guardian, there never seemed to be a connection between them, at times, Issei wonders if Kyoya hadn't been somehow tricked into the position... But that's hard to swallow, given his intimate knowledge of Kyoya's personality and how contrary the other had a tendency to behave when pressed in a situation.

The day is fairly normal, Asia is as bubbly as ever and still human. Which is rather important as Rais had extended an offer to join her peerage to the former Holy Maiden and the younger teen has trouble saying no. He's not sure who's living within Kuoh Town that's connected to the Grigori, only there is and whoever they are, is with whom Asia is living with as she seemed intent on attending Kuoh Academy along side him, to keep him from falling back into the clutches of lust.

Even now, people don't fully trust his supposed turning of a new leaf. He has long since vowed to kill the party who put those mental bindings on him, no mercy, straight decapitation with a dull edge weapon, might be Enchanted to ensure that the pain they feel as that dull edge goes through their neck is felt in triplicate before death takes them. He doesn't care if it starts a war or the political implications, they crossed a line that should never, ever, should be crossed and if people want to defend their actions, then onto the chopping block they go, too.

Wrenching himself mentally from the promise of messy deaths, he checks his phone's map. It's then that he feels his eyebrow rise up at the sight of indigo and orange upon the map. "I'm not alone..." He murmurs out loud, a touch of disbelief while relief also floods through him.

Mist and Sky... There's other Dying Will Flame users, which means that maybe, just maybe, there is a secret society of Flame users. In the end, he closes the map app on his phone as it's getting close to the end of lunch.

He can't wait for school to end so he can track down the pair.

It's been a while since Vali visited Kuoh Town, not since that issue concerning the Excalibur Sword Fragments which resulted in the capture of Kokabiel and his accomplices. It had also been his first encounter with the current Red Dragon Emperor, Issei Hyoudou. Even he found it hard to explain where those chains came from, after all, the teen in question shouldn't be capable of such a high tier magic in the short time he's became aware of the Supernatural side of the world.

He's sure that it's just a trick of the light that he thought he saw an indigo flare up before those chains appeared. If so, then how did it even connect with Conjuring those chains? That's not how Elemental Magic works. Vali thinks as he wanders around listlessly through the street where most of the restaurants are.

It's through a window of a cafe that he spies the pair, they are both sitting across from one another, with one keeping his hood up to hide his ears. It takes a second to realizes that he recognizes the two of them and he finds himself both curious as to why the two dragons are here and excited at the idea of why they are here, after all, he's heard about Crom Cruach and the fight in India from Albion. Given what he knows his grandfather is up to, perhaps the Crescent Circle Dragon is here for that?

His gaze goes to the blond that's sitting across from Crom, he's only seen portraits of Faolan and Albion doesn't know much about the so called Realm Wanderer. Most of what he knows comes from accounts from devils, which makes sense as the devils are more interested in the yellow dragon, well, more interested in a sword that is rumored to be in the yellow dragon's horde, which is called Discord Striker. It's said that a cut from said sword could mess with not just the wounded being's magic but also body. Nobody knows how it was that the sword got its Enchantment to cause havoc so easily as the sword's creation process was fairly standard for an Enchanted blade at the time.

It takes him seconds to slip somewhere he can hide to wait for them to leave the cafe. So, as he hides in the shadows, he mentally reviews reasons for why the Crescent Circle Dragon would bring the yellow dragon. Another train of thought is that the yellow dragon trailed after the black dragon as well. It's hard to say what kind of relationship the pair ultimately have, some say the two are lovers while most believe that the black has this plan revolving the yellow with the ultimate end game being killing the other in the most horrendous fashion. What history there is between the two, it began concerning the yellow's grandfather, a green dragon, it's said that Balor wanted said green dragon dead only for the yellow to intervene and, well, the black spared the green's life because of the yellow.

None know what bargain the yellow offered to the black, hence why it's hard to rule out the lover angle of their relationship. The idea of two male dragon doing that... Well, with Balor out of the picture, there's just the two to question really. After all, none really believe the account of said blood relative claiming that the yellow won against the black. The green dragon clearly just trying to puff up his reputation with that claim, that a member of his family was capable of not just matching the Dark Dragon of the Crescent Moon, particularly a dragon who started out as human who's only claim to the supernatural was through said green dragon.

He's not sure when he became so wrapped up in his own thoughts that when the two finally do leave, for a second, there is another pair of adults standing in the place of the two dragons. One is a adult sporting a pineapple hair style that glints blue while wearing an expensive business suit, for some reason, he gave said individual a trident that's casually resting on the shoulder, it's gently tapping on said shoulder as the man walks. The eyes... one red and the other is a shade of blue. This image is super imposed upon Crom Cruach's form.

On the blond though, it's a short brunette with spiked up hair that's defying gravity. Another expensive business suit and there's odd gloves, almost gauntlet like, on the hands that sport a large gem. The eyes for a second are hazel brown and then the next, they are a burnt orange.

Everything seems to freeze, his heart clenches at the vision of the super imposed forms in place of the blond and blue eyed Irish man that is the yellow dragon's human form and the dual color haired with gold and black eyes of Crom Cruach's almost human form. There's a haze of purple, indigo, and green about his vision and as he rubs his eyes, it fades along with the pair of images. Time unfreezes and the pair of dragons turn to join the crowds on the streets.

He can't take his eyes off of the yellow dragon as his emotions are all over the place all of a sudden. Vali wants to catch up to the yellow, place a hand on the shoulder, get the other to stop walking away, to turn to look at him so he can... So I can what? Apologize? What do I have to apologize for? The half-devil wonders as he clenches his fist.

Envy surges and he finds himself glaring daggers at the black dragon's back. Why he's envious, he doesn't know, only that he is so overwhelmingly envious of the evil dragon all of a sudden. It doesn't make any sense as to why though. After all, this is the first time he's seen the two in real life.

He's left shaken, disjointed mentally, and feeling so many emotions that it's like he's getting tossed around in an ocean during a storm or he's being left out in the rain while everyone else is inside of the house. Vali Lucifer is at a loss of what's going on, it's worst then those two nights after witnessing the Red Dragon Emperor Conjuring those chains. Those unremembered dreams that left echos of emotions that he didn't fully know the reason behind.

=] C_o_V_P [=

It's not long after he's changing out of his school uniform that the door bell rings. Issei hears his mother answer the door as he hurries to finish changing as a pair of supernatural beings enter into his home. He manages to reach the stairs just as his mother is giving the pair, a blond, blue eyed stranger and a dual hair color sporting two different colors for eyes permission to go up them.

"Crom Cruach." Ddraig comments, the dragon within the Booster Gear is awake now it seems. "Which one?" He inquires as the two seem to study him in turn.

"The one with two colors for hair and eyes." Replies the ancient Dragon Emperor. "I guess the other with blond is likely Faolan, he's a dragon of interest to devils. Something about killed a devil over a sword, I think? Claimed the devil was a thief before killing him."

Over a sword? Must have been some sword. He thinks to himself, but then, if the sword had originally been Faolan's, it's seems likely. "Hello." He greets the pair and watches as the two share a Look of some sort.

"Greetings, I'm O Hicidhe Faolan and this is Cruach Crom. We're here to speak with you about a plaster replicated egg that came into your possession? It's this wide and this long." Said dragon gives the size of the dragon egg that he claimed.

"Right, the replicated egg... Ah, why? Why are you interested in it?" He inquires, he knows someone wanted it and he's unsure as to why though.

"We want to check to see if there a treasure hidden within it and if so, we wish to ensure it's place in a safe and secure location, even if we can't return it to its original owner." Explains the current blond dragon in a honest tone. He blinks as he's torn between leading the pair to it to lying about no longer having it.

A second later, he decides to check the two over with his Flame, as his Flame touches both, his eyes widen at the fact that both of them are the Flame users his map showed him earlier. The Sky is the blond and the Mist is the black dragon, the evil dragon. The two were also Flame Bonded, it's clear that Crom Cruach is Faolan's Mist Guardian, not just a Mist that calls the Sky home but the actual position that denotes that the Mist is an active Protector of this Sky. Which puts a new spin on why the two adult dragons seem to be comfortable in each other's company.

The pair seem to sport looks of bemusement and he hurries to withdraw his Flame from the two. "You can check to see if it has the treasure, I guess." Doing his best to ignore the fact that there doesn't seem to be any other Flame Bonds between the Sky and other Flame users or how familiar the two Flames seem to be.

This new bit of information does change things, though. After all, Dying Will Flames were meant to be for humans, right? What were two dragons doing with them? Weren't dragons overpowered enough as it was? Issei wonders to himself.

Then again, I have a dragon based Sacred Gear... He mentally admits to himself as he leads the two into his room, Faolan moves to sit down next to the nest of blankets that have been Enchanted viva his Mist to hold at a comfortable and healthy temperature for the egg. Issei notices that Crom is drifting around the room, studying the walls, which causes his heckles to rise and he manages to bite back a sniping comment concerning the other's current appearance, after all, the hood is still kind of up, covering part of Crom's head.

"Crom... Stop teasing him." Faolan calls out as he struggles to keep himself from sniping at the black dragon. Crom lets out a dramatic sigh but instead of walking to Faolan's side, moves to the door, taking up position by leaning against the door frame.

For some reason, he can't help but think he hears a comment from the black dragon. Something along the lines of 'But he makes it so easy.' Yet Crom hasn't said a word, in fact, the only one who's spoken at all between the pair is the Sky.

"So... Flames?" He finally comments and he feels both eyes of the two dragons on him while he's looking at the dragon egg. "You have them too." It's not a question, he didn't mean it to be one at least.

"I woke mine during my teens, the reason for it waking has to do with a devil forcing my draconic heritage to wake up." Faolan admits. "Not sure if Ddraig mentioned anything about me or about what I did to said devil."

"It was the devil you killed who cause you to start on converting?" Ddraig inquires. "Then why did you kill him?"

"I killed him because he stole more then just some blood and almost ended my life. He tore a bit of my own soul out and it got stuck in that sword of his." The voice is rather cold and there's a seriously icy calm look in those blue eyes. "He should be happy I killed him so quickly when I found him, given what he stole."

"Who..." He trails off and the eyes soften while a tired sigh escapes. "Sawada Tsunayoshi."

His everything tenses up and he can feel Crom's eyes go into predatory mode. Issei finds it hard to breath for a few seconds as he tries to absorb that revelation. "And I, recall being Rokudo Mukuro." Crom states just as he manages to breath.

Ok, he's not sure when he spun around to face the black dragon, nor does he recall when he gripped the front of Crom's cloths, glaring at the Mist's face, who seems to sport a knowing look in his two colored eyes. "Good to see you too... Kyoya." Remarks Crom.

Then there's something soothing him and it feels like he's once more in control over his emotions. Letting go of the front of Crom's cloths, he wants to apologize only his mouth doesn't obey. It seems that he's not fully himself if he can't find it in him to speak such words to Crom.

"You three have history together?" Ddraig inquires politely. "From our previous incarnations? Yea." Faolan admits.

He isn't sure what to make of Faolan, there's just... Tsuna has always been a mix issue for Kyoya, particularly as details about why the Sky died were brought to light and the following collapse of not just the Famiglia but also the Tri-Ni-Sette as it turns out, Tsuna's Sky Flame hadn't been able to be recorded within it due to the Seal and then there's the fact that the Sky never named anyone his Heir. One bitter realization had been that the Sky never recovered from having been Sealed so young, never could recover, he should say, as they found the Flame Seal still holding on even a week after the Don's death.

The fact that Reborn hadn't destroyed the Flame Seal like they all believed and then there was evidence of something even covering those holes within the Seal, not long after those holes getting created... Well, it explained a lot, in the end, concerning the lack of Flame Bonding between Tsuna and the rest of the Tenth Generation along with why Tsuna began to 'dim'. It was enough for Dino to under go a Flame examination and low and behold, it seems that there was evidence of something similar within Dino's Flame and patchy remains of a Seal.

And thus did Sun Flames went on record as another Flame capable of causing brainwashing or installing condition behavior into another person. The first, of course, being Mist, second Sky, and third had been Rain. Not that it ultimately mattered, given the Tri-Ni-Sette self destructing and then the literal flood of Dying Will Flame that came six months after that fact. It wasn't just Dying Will of the Sky Flames that got woke in civilians, as it was, for every civilian that woke to the Sky Flame Set, three woke to the Earth Flame Set.

For ten years, the world was a chaotic place and yet, contrary to everything they've been told, life didn't end nor did Dying Will Flames vanish. It took them a few years afterward to also realize it wasn't just humans that can use Dying Will Flames but also animals, not every animal but enough could. The world entered into a new era and Dying Will Flames were never again just something that exist among criminals but by everyone.

Kyoya had hated the chaos following the destruction of the Tri-Ni-Sette while Issei can review that time and note that the Tri-Ni-Sette's actual purpose wasn't what Kawahira said it was or what the True Earthling thought it did. In fact, given what happened after its destruction, it was more of a selection system of deciding who should possess Dying Will Flames, after all, a number of those who once used said Flames couldn't during those six months while others found it easier to use in fact, he recalls how more mellow Kyoya felt when using both of his Flames, how less irritated the Cloud had been towards most of the other Guardians and hadn't felt overly crowded when he'd been in a room full of people that he knew.

Hayato lost his split of Sky Flames but woke as a Swamp Flame user once the Flame Flood started. Issei recalls. A number of individuals had that happen, not all of them but enough of them to make one wonder if that wasn't another one of the Tri-Ni-Sette's purposes, the blocking of Earth Flame Set along with the selection of who should be allow to access the Sky Flame Set.

All of that wouldn't have happened if Tsuna had picked an heir upon learning he couldn't have kids, started training said heir to pick up the Vongola Rings when he died, it's doubtful that anyone would have let Tsuna retire when he hadn't even been Don for very long, he'd been more like twenty when the Ninth finally passed along the reigns of the Famiglia after all. Is it any wonder that things could have gone a different route if Tsuna had decided to not decide to fuck his responsibility in that respect? In was pretty clear that it had been spite that kept Tsuna from doing the proper thing upon learning about his upcoming death, a big 'fuck you' to the Vongola Famiglia in particular.

Memories of all the times Tsuna saying he didn't want to be a Mafia Don play out in his mind as he turns to regard the dragon egg. It's clear that, in the end, Tsunayoshi found a way to make his true wishes felt. It's something that Kyoya had found able to respect, the blame for putting the former civilian on that path to becoming a Mafia Don hadn't cared at all about the young Sky, not really or the Ninth would have had Tsuna brought to Italy to remove said Flame Seal or found an other excuse to visit the Sawada household to remove it along with hiring actual tutors instead of a hitman who did extra tutoring lessons while Dino was attending that Mafia School.

"I think I'm going to lay down." He murmurs. He feels exhausted just thinking on such things, so much so that he's pretty sure he's not sure if he's standing level any more.

"You want to come see where the egg is going to end up? Or should we just leave right now with it?" Inquires Faolan and he pauses as he sits on the bed.

He blinks, Issei would like to see it, if only to assure himself that the egg is in a safe place but there's the matter of does he trust either of them? Just because they all remember a previous incarnation and weld the same power set doesn't mean they are trust worthy.
"Where are you planning to take the egg?" Ddraig asks in his stead.

"The Nesting Realm." Pipes in Crom. "Faolan's merged a number of abandoned realms together, a great many of them had been divine once upon a time when he create it. It's secure enough that Tiamat entrusted a whelp to grow up there."

"Oh? Ho! You must be rather powerful to do that." Ddraig remarks while he snorts automatically, after all, Sky Flames had been called Spirit Glue once.

"I'm a Sky, Ddraig. It was just a matter of finding the frequency needed to pull those former Pantheons into my own." Comments Faolan in a somewhat dry and droll tone.

"So... Are the two of you actually lovers?" Ddraig inquires upon Crom's soft snort upon Faolan saying that. And now he's got them both staring at him, one giving him a look of bewilderment and the other frank look of disbelief.

"The fuck? Why would you ask that?!" He hisses at the original Red Dragon Emperor.

"They think..." "People are spreading..." The two dragon trail off with Faolan shaking his head in disbelief while Crom sports a rather sinister smile while the look in his gold and black eye promises retribution of some kind.

"Can you blame them? They say in order to spare Cabhan, Faolan offered a bargain of sorts to have his great grandfather spared." Ddraig explains.

Faolan rolls his eyes while Crom snorts and laughs heartily on hearing that. "There was no bargain, Faolan spared my life after our fight. He even went so far as to wedge a bit of Sky Flame into Balor's control of my mind, allowing my own power to begin weakening his grip over time." Crom states simply with a fond smile after recovering from laughing.

"Wait, you actually lost?" Ddraig exclaims. "He was a puppet, it was easy to see what attack he was being told to do before he did it. I didn't even need to my Sky Flame to disrupt said strings to win, the whole fight might as well have been a joke." Faolan states with a look of contentment on his face at remembering that fight.

"So, Cabhan is telling the truth about it? You won in a fight against the Crescent Circle Dragon?" Ddraig presses.

"It's not really that impressive when you recall that he was enslaved to a God throughout that fight." Faolan points out in a matter of fact way. "It would have been different if he'd been master of his own person. His moves would have been more fluid and less mechanical, he would have reacted to what I was doing instead of just following through a set pattern of attack."

"Hmm, I guess I'll have to take your word for that, after all, I never had the chance to fight Crom during that time." Remarks Ddraig and he had come to a decision. "I guess it couldn't hurt. A visit to this Nesting Realm."

Faolan gives a nod as he gets off the bed while the Sky easily takes the egg into his arms, a portal shimmers into existence, courtesy of Crom. Faolan steps through without any pause and he follows behind by a few seconds. "Wow..." He exclaims at the sight before him.

"Wow indeed." Remarks Ddraig. They arrive near a cliff face that grants a great view of a river along with a group of young dragons that range about the size of ponies to the size of cats. Among the... what does one call a group of dragons anyway? Either way, there's Western style mixing with Eastern style, coloring is rather wide along a few other details like how the horns are set to how board or narrow wings are.

Although, his gaze soon finds itself on the adult dragon that's resting not that far from where the whelps and young dragons are goofing off. She, and Issei knows the adult is female, sports feathers upon her wings, silvery white. There's feathers about her head as well, again, a silvery white while the rest of the body's coloring is more of a light gray while opal white belly scales. Shiny golden horns not unlike stag antlers crown her head, and it's not unlike a crown hovering over her head at that. The eyes are emerald green and her claws appear to be a far darker gray compared to the rest of the body.

"Who's that?" Ddraig inquires. "Arariel, or Ariel for short. She's Tiamat's granddaughter." The voice is far deeper and seems to come from higher up.

Turning, he finds a yellow scaled Western style dragon sitting behind him, blue eyes are not unlike sapphires. "Arwia has yet to share who the father is, then again, I doubt he's aware of her existence either." Faolan comments. He notices the whiteness of the claws, horns, and the spattering of spines, all the while the belly sports a different shade of yellow instead of going white like one would expect.

"Is she...?" Ddraig trails off and he swears there's a touch of a smile upon Faolan's muzzle or is it snout? "The father is an angel, still of Heaven even."

"How?!" He exclaims before Ddraig does. "Funny enough, I wondered the same when I heard that too. It seems that angels are allowed to masturbate, I highly doubt Arwia would go about it any other way."

"She's also Chrome's current incarnation." Faolan shares and he turns to look back at Ariel with new eyes. "So it's due to the dragon theme after all..." He murmurs as it seems to be the only conclusion he can reach in regards to who can awaken their Dying Will Flame along with their previous incarnation memories.

Ddraig seems to find this all to be rather amusing, given that he's chuckling. "Well, well, well... I wish we can be there to witness a meeting between one of Heaven's Angels and Tiamat's granddaughter. That should be a very note worthy encounter." Remarks the ancient dragon.

"Come along, I'll show you where Crom took the egg." Says the yellow dragon that is both Tsuna's reincarnation and a Sky. The dragon holds out his 'hand' and, well, he climbs into it. Gently, the yellow dragon moves to stand and with wings out stretched, walks over and then off the cliff. He grips the 'hand' but the other comes to cup him.

It's a strange sensation of being carried in flight and he resorts to the use of his Mist to create a pair of glasses Enchanted to keep the wind from his eyes. And so, he gets a good view of more of the Nesting Realm, there's a great number of various herds grazing about the meadows, bison mostly but there's beasts that might be magical breeds or maybe they are adapted to this Realm after generations of living here.

They arrive at a place near a spring that feeds into the river from before. There's a nest and relaxing next to said nest is a black dragon sporting one gold eye and a black one. The landing is a bit bumpy but once Faolan has settled on the ground, he's allowed to get off. He studies Crom's dragon form, comparing it to both Ariel and Faolan, noting just how different all three clearly are and yet, are all under the category of Western Dragon.

He approaches the nest and there's a good nine other eggs besides the one he'd secured from the devils. Each egg is different, which Issei concludes means that they must be from different breeds. He recalls how the egg was that of a Spectre Dragon, one of the high level dragon lineages according to Ddraig. Seeing the egg among the nest, next to other dragon eggs, he knows that it's safe here and that when it hatches, the hatchling will most likely have plenty of company along with adults who'll be around to ensure the hatchling is well taken care off.

"How many of these are rescues?" Inquires Ddraig, there's a underling serious tone to that question. "All but the original three, the ones at the center." Crom answers, the voice has its differences from before but, yes, it's still familiar enough to recognize to the previous form's own.

"There's a plan of using the Sephiroth Graal to create an army of evil dragons." Crom remarks casually, it's rather familiar in its own way and Faolan sighs while Ddraig merely grunts. "The remaining child of the original Lucifer is the one heading this... project." Continues Crom.

"He'd sweet talked a number of my fellow evil dragons into helping that plan. They're also looking to revive who they can while modifying the unhatched." Crom reveals. "I've been keeping track of their activities and so far, I've collected each egg they manage to get their filthy, grubby hands on."

"They'll be switching course soon." Crom adds. "Given the current possessor of the Sephiroth Graal, they'll likely use vampires."

"Along with using her to revive those dead." Faolan remarks thoughtfully. "She likely won't live long, they'd likely look into transferring the Sacred Gear into someone else, I doubt they want to lose the use of it."

"Doesn't that... Oh..." He trails off, he recalls the plans the fallen angels had concerning Asia, both her Sacred Gear and her dead body. He never did wonder where they'd get a device like that.

"Who's the current welder of the Sephiroth Graal?" Inquires Ddraig. "A dhampir by the name of Valerie Tepes. She's might yet still be the current Queen of the Tepes Faction, I haven't seen anything that suggest she's been grabbed as of yet."

"So... Sacred Gears can end up being born to half humans?" Issei asks and Faolan hums a positive while Crom informs him, "The current possessor of the Divine Dividing is a half devil, grandson of the head of this evil dragon project in fact."

"Oh?" Ddraig seems to perk up and it takes him a second to realize that they're talking about his 'destined' rival. "Vali Lucifer."

"You mean that guy from that night is the White Dragon Emperor?!" He remembers that guy, who collected the chained up Kokabiel. "Wait, doesn't that make him half fallen angel? I mean, the original Lucifer was an angel, right?"

"Well... Lucifer went beyond just fallen, there's rumors that he yanked out his own black feathered wings at one point and fashioned himself a new set either out of them or out of whatever poor race he claimed leadership of and then corrupted or created the devils out of." Faolan admits. "Weren't devils just humans that got experimented on?" He asks.

"No, Lucifer wouldn't want to have humans among his army, he wouldn't even want to sleep with one either. Couldn't stand them given how the God of that Pantheon favored them, only good human would be a dead one in that one's books." Crom explains and Ddraig snorts but doesn't offer a comment.

"Which is likely why Vali's father isn't among the living any more." Faolan remarks. "I'm rather surprised that Rizevim Lucifer hadn't just killed the kid's... well, young man's mother."

"Oh, I think I have an idea of why he hadn't." Remarks Crom. "It wouldn't surprise me that he going to get Vali to do it one of these days, either by directly ordering him to or indirectly giving him the right kind of push to do so."

"That's depressing!" He exclaims, feeling kind of sad for Vali, sure, the guy had rubbed him the wrong way but he figured it had to do with parallels he was drawing by comparing Kyoya to the guy. "But... well, I guess there's a reason devils aren't considered good beings..." He admits with a sigh, after all, with some help from Ddraig, he had managed to find out the cause of his former black outs, just not the party behind it. He's also got a suspension of which supernatural group to start his investigate into it as well, hearing something like this, it only makes him feel more certain that his suspension is more correct then not.

"They call that reincarnation system the Evil Pieces." States Crom in an exasperated tone. "Those things are fucking buggy as freaking plate of shattered glass. That system is all cooky cutter with the odd random element popping up every so often but even then, it's riddled with issues after all, if it weren't then the reincarnated stray devils wouldn't mutant that quickly when abandoned or claim their freedom by killing the so called King."

It suddenly strikes him that he's currently in the company of two dragon in their truest forms, pretty much calmly talking about a lot of different topics, straying from the issue of what they're going to do about this project of Rizevim Lucifer all the while standing next to a dragon nest in a different Realm all together, and that he's getting along with Mukuro's current incarnation. Never mind that the current incarnation of Tsuna is a member of one of the strongest races around, even though he started off born as a relatively normal human, who just happened to have a dragon in the family tree and might have killed a devil without being remorseful over it. Never mind that he's yet to actually introduce himself to another fellow being who remembers her previous incarnation, Chrome had been someone Kyoya respected after all, despite her relationship with Mukuro.

In the end, he's not alone in dealing with the burden of memories from a previous life, even though he's the youngest one to be dealing wit it. Issei wonders when he'll end up converting to a dragon and wonders if he'll end up with the crimson scales of Ddraig and befitting the bearer of the title Red Dragon Emperor or if he'll have scales that will be something more uniquely suited to himself? Which left the question of what will become of the Booster Gear when that happens...

Reincarnators Anonymous, Anyone?: DxD

I don't own Kateyou Hitman Reborn or High School DxD!

The plan concerning the brat didn't succeed, fine, they were gambled and lost the current welder of the Booster Gear from joining their side as a reincarnated devil. The only plus is that the brat hadn't thrown his lot in with the church and thus Heaven or with the Grigori and their collection of Sacred Gear welders. Other plans are in motion and there's always the chance that the brat will still end up joining either Heiresses Peerages as a reincarnated devil.

"Any word concerning the welder of the Sephiroth Graal?" He murmurs out loud as he goes through various in Pillar politics concerning the Satans' attempts at reaching out to the angels and fallen angels for a Peace Conference. He's aware of Rizevim Lucifer's intentions concerning that dhampir.

"We are unable to ascertain her current where abouts nor can we say when she was taken." Reports the spy within Rizevim's staff. His hands still while he frowns at the revelation concerning the missing Sephiroth Graal welder.

"Any hints on which party pulled it off?" He asks calmly after a minute of silence. "No, my King."

"Well, given time, the party will reveal themselves." He decides and focuses on another matter.

=] C_o_V_P [=

His eyes open and Faolan shifts his bulk and tail. Seems like Issei pulled it off. The yellow dragon muses to himself.

It has only been two weeks since their meeting with the current incarnation of Kyoya and already the trio, aka Ariel, Crom, and Issei, have not just come up with plans but are already carrying out said plans. The fact that their current actions involved kidnapping the dhampir Valerie and current possessor of the Sephiroth Graal? It could be considered a rescue in a way, getting the Queen of the Tepes vampire faction away from those looking at her as a mere tool is in her best interests along with the added bonus of causing various parties to subtlety start pointing fingers at each other, of causing them to come into conflict far sooner then any of them expected.

His tail flickers as the yellow considers if he really wants to involve himself in what the trio are doing right now or later down the road. While he is concerned concerning Issei's youth and current position as the welder of the Booster Gear, it's not like Issei is without an unknown card in his hand, two if one considered his memories of being Hibari Kyoya. He's not Kyoya though, he's just a teen that's the various predators are starting to circle around. Faolan reminds himself.

Many of whom have vast resources at their disposal along with meat shields. He thinks, knowing he'd been very fortunate when it came to reclaiming that portion of his Soul. That the devil went to visit that brothel instead of the camp followers along with taking only one subordinate along.

Then he hums as he considers his abilities and a sly look settles upon his face and within his eyes, they glint with mischief at the Challenge of the undertaking he's slowly beginning to find himself motivated into taking. Akasha... is the Sanskrit word for aether, sky, or atmosphere. Aether or Ether, a primordial deity of the 'upper sky' among the Greeks mythos, and then there's the more common use of it as a name in regards to magical energy. Never mind that it's also called quintessence, which has so many different and delightful theories connected to it.

They might not have asked or decided to include me in their plans but that doesn't mean I can't offer my support. Faolan decides as he lifts his head, turning his head so he can look upon the eggs resting in the nest to his right. He's careful of the numerous smaller bodies pressed around him and on him as he does so.

It wasn't even that hard to chose who to start with, after all, wasn't there already a group who's very name is just begging to be shown its true potential? A group that's far too organized for its name? It wouldn't even be that hard to weave the actual concept into that name and then just let things take their course in regards to that group... But that target is far to easy and it's already in the sights of others now.

But there's plenty of others I can work against. Faolan muses as he recalls that devil he just spied upon. There's a lot of background weavers that few, if any, ever track down. Plenty of plump spiders that wove those webs and it would be interesting to see how they'd react to my plucking of their webs.

It'll be interesting to actually see those abandon magic systems in action too. The yellow admits. I wonder if any of them would be able to track down any sources I would use?

But are there any sources for them to track down? It wouldn't be overly fair if there isn't anything for them to find... Faolan muses and ponders if he should try to find said leads first. He returns his head back upon his arms, closing his eyes as he chews on said thoughts and ideas. His body slowly relaxes over the next few minutes, the sleeping bodies around him settle more deeply into their slumber.

=] C_o_V_P [=

Issei isn't sure the hows of it but, well, it seems he's been kicked out of his room, by his 'hostage', his self proclaimed girlfriend, and one of his fellow kidnappers. "Congratulations seem to be in order." Comments Ddraig.

"For what? Getting kicked out of my Own Room?" He asks as he finally recovers enough mental footing to head for his living room. To be honest, he's doing his best to not react a great deal concerning Asia's declaration. He's not certain of his feelings concerning the matter of girls, to be honest.

"Sure, let's go with that." Ddraig states and he knows that the ancient dragon doesn't mean it like that. The teen suspects that it might have more to do with whatever conversation the three had before he'd been kicked out.

He gets to the kitchen and mills around within there for some minutes, mindlessly going over the contains of the kitchen, fridge, and freezer. "Couldn't see put up more of a fight?" Issei muses as his thoughts return to the whole kidnapping of Valerie, being a dhampir means she's a touch more capable of fending off attackers, right? Plus, she had to have been taught how to fight?

Regardless, they successfully kidnapped the Queen of the Tepes Faction five days ago and it's only yesterday night that the Mist clone got discovered, when Rizevim made his move to grab her. While Ariel sticks around to help keep Valerie from getting into contact with anyone, Crom seemed to have decided to stick around among the vampire factions, watching how things play out, likely hoping to smoke out more then just Rizevim and the Khaos Brigade's interest in Valerie and her Sacred Gear. Which, given what the Sephiroth Graal's capabilities are, what they can mean in the long term, you'd think there's plenty of people who'd want that for their own goals.

But there's a cost to it, though. Then again, that's only when using it to revive the dead, right? Issei muses as he comes to a stop by the door of the house. Blinking, he glances towards the stairs before letting out a sigh, he might as well head off to his practice spot to work through things in a semi-physical manner.

Once he's switched to his out door runners, Issei takes off at a jog, heading for a spot where nobody could see him easily. Once he finds a location like that, he flares his Flame to create a worm tunnel between said point to the interior of the warehouse he's claimed as his private training spot. Mist being the fracture of focus with Cloud and Lightning holding it stable. It takes only five minutes to reach the other end of the worm tunnel he created and once out of it, allows it to close up, done so in a slow fashion, an exercise of Flame control.

Soon enough, he's empowered the Enchanted dummies to float and dart around, not hovering above five feet off the ground though.

=] C_o_V_P [=

Where ever he goes around Kuoh Town, Vali finds his vision tainted by purple, green, and indigo. Some spots, it hangs more heavily then others and the only connection between those spots has to do with the current Red Dragon Emperor. There's three locations where it's as heavy as fog, Kuoh Academy, the teen's home, and in the warehouse district.

Each of those locations seem to have their differences when it comes to how the colors are set up, Kuoh Academy is primarily featuring purple and the other two colors seem to arrange in drawings and simple sentences. The warehouse district is covered primarily in indigo while purple and green just seem to play within the indigo, green moving about the indigo in a manner like lightning does while the purple keeps high above the ground, just drifting in the cloud formation, which strikes something in him that's just out of reach. As for the home, green is the primary there while the green seems to be infused with the walls of the house while the purple can be seen reflected in the windows and indigo seems to lurk in the shadows within the house.

The White Dragon Emperor finds himself very much disincline to approach the residence compared to Kuoh Academy and the warehouse district. He gets the feeling that the house is a far more secure location out of the three while which ever warehouse the Red Dragon Emperor visits is the most elusive to find out of the three. As for the school... it's just seems that the colors are more akin to graffiti, that his fellow Dragon Emperor is mocking the two heiresses claim to the location then anything.

In the weeks he's been in Kuoh Town, he hasn't seen either Faolan or Crom Cruach nor does it seem that the two co-owners were aware of the two visiting dragons. Then again, the two hadn't realized that someone had swapped that dragon egg out with a fake when a pair of lesser known dragons attempted to reclaim it, the Cursed One, Curlebre and the Child-Napper, Drac. The pair of evil dragons weren't well known and were rather young, they did get through the security the co-owners had placed about the fake egg and with Curblebre almost ripping off one of Gremory Heiress's Queen's legs while Drac almost claimed the Sitri's Heiress's eyes.

Nothing the two Peerages did stopped the two dragons from leaving upon the revelation of the egg being fake and from the sounds of things, they likely bothered the former Holy Maiden to heal their injuries. It's hardly the first time the devils have taken advantage of the girl's gentle nature, it's rather surprising that she's been able to decline Gremory's offer of becoming a member of her Peerage. Then again, it's clear that... well, the girl has a crush on his fellow Dragon Emperor, so where ever that teen goes, she's bound to follow.

So, as he's wandering through the warehouse district, toying with the idea of using his Divine Dividing on the colors, to see what effect his Sacred Gear would have on this phenomenon, not for the first time either. Vali had even inquired Albion notices the coloring and the trapped dragon hadn't noticed anything off. The trapped dragon hadn't pressed him about if he noticed anything though, but Vali gets the feeling that the white dragon is patient and is paying more attention to him since he inquired.

Then, something changes in the district, he's not sure what has changed but there is one. So, he leaps into the air, his Sacred Gear's wings out. Minutes pass and that change is gone but he searches over the roofs. He notices a large bang and heads in that direction. It happens again, he alters his course.

Minutes tick by and with a growl, he does use his Divine Dividing. It takes a good five tries before it seems to find something to effect and then, as he absorbs a portion, he finds himself veering in the air as images of a stern young man welding a pair of tonfas surge forth. "VALI!" Albion shouts in alarm.

He can't hold onto the portion but it hardly matters as it sparks something from deep within his very Soul. His vision swims with blue but also hints of red and yellow. Takashi... No, I'm Vali, Vail Lucifer. He reminds himself as it seems like he's standing before a mirror sporting blue frame with hints of pulsing red and yellow moving among the blue, flaring and dimming while the blue shimmers as though it's pouring downwards.

The image is that of a darkish gray hair young man sporting light blue eyes, attire is generally stylish Gothic punk. Then the mirror would ripple and in those ripples, another image gets hinted at, eyes of light hazel and black short hair while the features of a Japanese adult in a business suit or young man in rather casual cloths. The rippling dies down upon only it's not Vali Lucifer staring back at him. Yamamoto Takashi, supposed Rain Guardian of Sawada Tsunayoshi...

"Hahaha, so, I guess your the new me?" The adult Rain remarks with an enigmatic smile and Vali jerks his head on hearing that voice. The reflection's mouth hadn't moved, not one bit and yet...

"Get out of my head." Vali snaps but the adult in the mirror only tilts his head slightly to the side, there's a look in those hazel brown eyes that seems to akin to pity. "Kind of can't, I think, not after you tried to absorb some of Kyoya's Flames, and isn't that rather funny, we're older then Kyoya's reincarnation!"

That word... Vali stiffens, oh, he knows his religions, one kind of gets around to reading up on all sorts of them, after all, the Gods and Goddesses are still around, still getting worshiped, still playing politics. "Yea, your my current incarnation, just as I'm one of your previous ones."

"Why You?" Vali snaps and Takashi gets a thoughtful look, he can hear the humming. "Well, it might be because of the fact you did try to absorb Dying Will Flames of the Sky. Seems like your going to be in possession of not just Rain Flame but also Storm and Sun, kind of how Kyoya's incarnation added Lightning to his previous dual Flame." Remarks the adult in the mirror.

His stills at the terms used, Vali remembers how the green and purple colors had acted while he'd wandered around the warehouse district. "Indigo?" He asks.

"Mist, or Fog, kind of how some people called the green Thunder instead of Lightning, which is rather odd, you know? You can't see Thunder after all, you hear it though." Takashi muses with a bemuse look upon the face.

"Maybe I don't want these... Flames ." He states and that look of sympathy enters into those light brown eyes. "Can't help it now, Kyoya's Flame set off the spark that ignited the fuel that's been starting to develop as it were. It was only a matter of time this happened, after all. You've been wandering and sleeping in a Cloud Flame rich environment, not sure what that means for the future residence of Kuoh Town, I wasn't really interested in that kind of stuff, you know?"

Neither speak, Vali doesn't like the idea of submitting to his previous incarnation nor does he feel like he has any need to possess these Dying Will Flames. Minutes tick by and suddenly, Takashi chuckles, "It's funny, you know? You're so much like Kyoya! I wonder how that happened? You got a rival? A Mukruo to your Kyoya?"

A white screen suddenly appears to his left and a memory plays out, it's the one where Faolan and Crom Cruach exit out of that cafe. "Tsuna..." Takashi's voice is filled with longing, guilty, and regret. The memory focuses on the brunette form around the usual blond human born dragon.

Then it focuses on the trident welding man with a red eye and blue eye. "Mukuro found him, huh? Kind of makes sense... He did go through something once that let him remember his previous incarnations, well, supposed incarnations..." There's a hint of envy and wistfulness.

Tsuna was a Sky. Mukuro a Mist. The knowledge seeps into his mind. Kyoya's incarnation has Cloud, Lightning, and Mist Flames, he might even have Kyoya's memories...

More information comes to him, information concerning Flame Bonds and what each of the seven colors of the Dying Will Flames of the Sky were capable of. His mind considers the relationship between Crom Cruach and Faolan, a new insight gained along with another suspicion concerning the pair of dragons. Some where along the lines, it feels like he's gently been pulled down towards the ground.

Tranquility coats him as remembering his previous incarnation Activates within him while his resistance towards merging, of healing gets Disintegrated. When he wakes, Vali finds himself on a roof and he feels the Divine Dividing is still out and it seems that it's covering him. His head does pound while his front aches from the rough landing. For a few seconds he lays there, trying to remember why he thought that Takashi would overwhelm him, overwrite his existence...

That's not what happened, I just... became more myself, I guess? Vali muses. There's changes, of course there was going to be changes but there's also this feeling of completion too.

Finally deciding to move, Vali pushes himself up off the roof and then into a sitting position. "Vali?" Albion inquires.

"I'm going to be fine." He murmurs to the trapped dragon upon being reminded that he's not alone in this life. That he's never going to be alone until someone either kills him or if someone manages to extract the Divine Dividing from his body.

Closing his eyes, he reaches out to his Flame and it answers him with ease. Soon enough, he directs the Sun of his Flame to help get rid of the aches while deciding to see if he can't use his Storm to get rid of the dust on his cloths. It shouldn't be too different from using magic. Vali reasons with himself.

He finds himself tiring rather quickly though, but that shouldn't be too surprising, given he not only just got a life times worth of memories but also using a power that's fairly new to him, even if he has memories of having used it before. There's a different feel of his Flame compared to Takashi's as well, then again, Takashi had been a straight Rain while he on the other hand sport Storm and Sun in addition to Rain. As he stops using his Flame, he takes a moment to examine himself and his cloths, it's both reassuring but also disconcerting, particularly looking at his right hand and there's no Rain Ring of Vongola Famiglia upon his finger.

"What are you doing here?" Vali stiffens upon hearing the voice, he hadn't noticed Issei arrival upon the roof. Turning his head to the right, he finds Kyoya's reincarnation and the current Red Dragon Emperor Hyoudou Issei standing there, studying him with a guarded expression and yet, the Booster Gear isn't out on display.

"..." He's unsure what to say. So he lets out a simple disinterested grunt as he pushes himself off the roof, having his Divine Dividing move to a resting position on his back.

It's hard for him to not notice the differences and yet, similarities between Issei and Kyoya. The proud Cloud from his memories would be threatening him, as Kyoya was never one for patience. Letting a bit of his own Flame out, it's then that he notices the presence of two Mist Flames, again, both are rather familiar feel to them. "How's Chrome and Mukuro?" His mouth moves, seemingly, on its own.

Eyes widen and purple flares in the eyes, Issei uses his Flame to get a feel of him in turn. "Chrome is at the house, she's doing girl talk with Asia." Issei admits as some of the tension bleeds out of the other Dragon Emperor's body. "Mukuro's doing his own thing."

He racks through his memories to try and figure out Chrome's current incarnation could be. "Her name?" He asks after a minute of silence, he already knows Crom Cruach as Mukuro's and Faolan is Tsuna's.

"Doubt you've heard of her, she's Arariel, daughter of Arwia, granddaughter of Tiamat." His first thought is about the fact that there's a surviving child of Tiamat and that said daughter went on to have a daughter herself. "Another dragon..." He murmurs.

"Yea." Issei seems to be puzzled how'd he'd known. Vali doesn't see the point in mentioning how he knows.

He wants to ask after Faolan, maybe pass along a warning about... Well, if Crom is Faolan's Mist Guardian, then, anyone plotting anything against the yellow dragon isn't going to get very far or close to said dragon. Vali finds himself with a jumble of emotions and desires. "Dragon themed Sacred Gears..." He hears Issei softly sigh out and finds himself snorting in agreement after realizing the connection going on.

Right now, he's simply exhausted on two levels, emotional and mental. He merely wishes to leave and just sleep it off with the hopes that some of it will have sorted itself out. And yet, he doesn't want to leave, doesn't want to be... alone.

Yet, as he moves the Divine Dividing, feels it weight upon his back, he's reminded that he's not alone, not any more. Finally finding it within himself to turn his back on his fellow Dragon Emperor, he takes to the air. "I'll let the others know... Takashi." Issei says and he gives a slight nod, fairly sure that the other notices.

With that, Vali heads out of the warehouse district and upon finding a spot to land, dismisses the wings his Sacred Gear gives him. "Takashi..." Albion's tone is curious and it's clear the trapped dragon would like some answers.

"A previous incarnation was named Yamamoto Takashi. I... now have access to both the power he had and his memories." He admits to the ancient dragon.

"Takashi and Kyoya... Issei's previous incarnation, had a working relationship, at first, they became friends, I guess, as time went on." Vali continues. "Things changed greatly when Tsuna, Faolan's previous incarnation, died at thirty years of age. With his passing, a lot of things came to light about..."

It hurts, even now, that Tsuna hadn't told any of them about his health problems but then, if he had... Could they have helped him? He didn't want that life, he never wanted to be a Mafia Don... Whispers an voice that not unlike Takashi.

Ninth hadn't been around by then for anyone to take out their frustrations on as for Iemitsu... Well, he'd been dead for a month already by the time Tsuna had died due to the Flame Seal and the various complications caused by those Dying Will Bullets. It didn't help that, for a week, everyone had been walking on egg shells around the remaining members of the Tenth Generation thinking that they'd all been Flame Bonded to Tsuna, that they were about a push away from Rampaging or falling into Grief.

It was never about what Tsuna wanted, it had always been about... Vali mentally cuts himself off from that train of thought along with doing his best to mentally distance himself with knowledge that Faolan is fine, despite devils gunning for him, the yellow dragon is alive and well.

"Vali?" Albion inquires, clear worry and concern within it. "It's Takashi's memories..." He admits with a soft sigh as he lets himself run a hand through his hair.

His emotions settle down but they don't vanish. And so, he considers where he wants to be. The thoughts of where he should go are varied but, in the end, his mind kept coming back to the room he has at Azazel's New York condo, for both the view and he just liked the sky rise condo.

Using a simple Teleportation spell, he teleports to said room and once his boots are off along with his jacket, Vali head for the bed and just, lets his exhaustion over take him.

- } F_o_T { -

How...? Vali isn't sure he fully understand what's being implied concerning the Archangel Michael and Arariel, or Ariel for short. It doesn't help that most of the Three Faction Leaders attending this peace talk conference also seem to be lost, after all, everyone would have heard about Michel getting married to a dragon and he most definitely didn't Fall so...

"Your his daughter?! Wait, you mean... Oh!" Issei eyes widen as if remembering something. "Well, Tiamat can't say her daughter didn't have good taste, at least." Remarks Ddraig and that causes more then a few eyes widening upon learning that bit of information.

"Arwia was a... No, wait, that means she's..." Michael seems to be at a loss over the idea that Arwia is not just a dragon but the surviving daughter of Tiamat.

"How?! Just... How?" Rias Gremory voices the thoughts of pretty much the majority of the table.

"Masturbation, apparently." Ddraig states dryly which causes the Archangel Michael to blush while he and others merely blink upon hearing that. "Angels can do that?" Rias' Queen asks bluntly.

"Well, congratulations on having found someone and finding a loop hole, Michael." Azazel says in a friendly way, having moved to put a supportive hand on the current leader of Heaven's shoulder. "Good luck dealing with your love's mother, though."

"What's your name?" Inquires Gabriel and Chrome's current incarnation blinks before introducing herself, "My mother gave me the name Arariel, though Fa... I mean, most people call me Ariel for short." It's a toss up on what she was going to say before she stopped herself, it might have been Faolan, after all, it's highly doubtful that Micheal and her ever met before now, given his reaction.

"Perhaps a short break is in order?" The current Lucifer suggests, even though the meeting had barely started on introductions. After all, Issei only just arrived with Asia, Valerie Tepes, huh so she's here, wonder how that happened , and Ariel and then both Archangels did a double take upon seeing Ariel.

In the end, Ariel and Michael move off to a corner to awkwardly stand around without actually talking while Azazel seems to be in a whispered conversation with Gabriel. The two heiresses are pulled off to another corner by the current holder of the title of Lucifer. "I wonder if she's got a halo?" Albion pipes in.

"Her horns are more akin to stag antlers and they form more of a gold crown then a halo." Comments Ddraig, he hadn't been aware of when Issei walked over to him. "She also has feathers on her wings along with on the back of her head." Adds Issei.

It shouldn't be that surprising, really, but then, while he'd known she'd been granddaughter of Tiamat, Issei never mentioned the part concerning her father being... He considers Issei's reaction to realize, it was the fact that Michael being Ariel's father that was news to him, not that she's half angel. "You knew she was..." Well, what do you call a half angel half dragon hybrid?

"Oh, I didn't mention that back then? When you asked?" Issei remarks, getting a thoughtful look. "Yea, I guess I didn't, then again, you hadn't heard of her so..." His fellow Dragon Emperor and Flame user shrugs.

It's been two weeks since his grandfather's plots of creating an evil dragon army fell through, well, to put it more bluntly, Crom slaughtered Rizevim after the super devil pestered the Crescent Circle Dragon three days straight. So, yea, it pretty much died with him as none of those evil dragons saw much point in belonging to Qlippoth, although some of those dragons did find other positions within the Khaos Brigade though. What he's gathered concerning his grandfather's pestering had to do with getting Crom to hunt down Valerie Tepes and bring her to him after slaughtering the ones who took her.

It's been two months since the welder of the Sephiroth Graal had vanished, though. "When did you see her dragon form?" Vali asks, it seems that Asia and Valerie are having their own whispering conversation.

"Huh... Let's see, today is..." Issei rambles a bit out loud as he does the math and it seems, it was that day that he spotted the two coming out of that cafe. He does notice that Issei is a lot more talkative then Kyoya ever had been, then again, the same in reverse could be said of himself and Takashi.

"So... You've recovered? From the whole memory remembering?" Issei asks after a few seconds of silence between them.

"Clearly." He states, refusing to think about his desire to speak with Faolan. "You know, Faolan was the first to remember, it had to do with that devil sword ripping a bit of his Soul and keeping it." Issei says and he stiffens upon hearing that, his mind blanking at the thought of someone damaging the Sky's Soul...

"Hey, stop, he got it back on destroying the sword!" He blinks, he hadn't known how he ended up by the door only for Issei to stop him from leaving. Vali wasn't sure where he'd been leaving to go to, either. "Yea, beheaded the guy and destroyed the sword to get it! Of course, you would know about the beheading, not sure about the destroying of the sword, though, I mean, the devils seem to be unable to wrap their heads around Faolan just destroying it I guess?"

With this news, he can actually put together how it was that Discord Striker ended up with it's ability. After all, what's the opposite of Harmony? It also explains the thief accusation as well. Still... even though it's been... centuries since then, he can't help but want to check up on Faolan, to ensure he's fine.

"Is he..." Vali almost voices the question but Issei had said he's fine, well, implied he's ok. "He's good, I mean, it's back where it belonged instead of in a chunk of metal and he's a Sky, you know?"

"You want to see him, right? With your own eyes?" Issei seems to realize his desire and he looks off to the left, feeling rather valuable all of a sudden.

"Well, here." Issei grabs his hand and puts a stone carving about the size of a thumb onto the palm of his hand. "It's only got two charges but transport you to him as long as you use your Flame." The stone is green in color and seems to be a wolf sitting down, which fits given what Faolan translates into.

Nodding, he pockets the wolf carving, forcing himself to leave it alone within his pocket. Vali isn't sure when he'll use it, but knows it won't be tonight nor tomorrow, if certain things end up happening. "Not going blame you, just so you know." Issei states after a period of silence and before it dawns on him that Issei Knows about what's planned for tonight, the current Lucifer calls for their attention and for them to restart the meeting.

His fellow Dragon Emperor walks back to where Asia and Valerie is, same with Ariel. It's about then that he realizes that both Kyoya and Mukuro were very good when it came to information gathering and given that both are Mists, although Crom also has magic to couple with that, means that the pair Know that those behind what's about to happen either were pressured or were zealots to the 'cause'. In the end, he heads back to where he'd originally been standing and awkwardly, the meeting picks back up.

- } F_o_T { -

So many things came up since that Three Faction Conference along with a number of various eyes watching him, Vali never did get a chance to use the wolf carving to pay a visit to Faolan. In a way, he's thankful for that, after all, the intense feelings from Yamamoto Takashi's memories no longer feel so pressing nor raw so getting closure with Tsuna's reincarnation falls into the background. Now though, at the sight of Faolan in his full draconic glory along with Sky Flame dying the yellow dragon's horns, spines, and claws orange...

Breath taking... The half devil admits safely behind a magical ward as Faolan along with Ariel and Crom halting the Emperor Beast of Apocalypse, their respective Mist Flame on display in a different manner then Faolan's. In Ariel's case, indigo striping the feathers, glowing and dimming with each breath and in Crom's case, indigo seems to trail behind the black dragon's wings flap, fading within seconds only to be replaced seconds later.

Trihexa, as some have decided to call it, can't shake the bindings of Mist Flames with a coating of Sky Flame cushioning contact between the Apocalyptic Beast's inherit ability to destroy anything it touches and the Mist Bindings. It's a clear example of the Sky's property of Harmony on display, then again, Skies were able to deal with the property of Disintegration connected to Storm's crimson Flame. He also doesn't doubt that there's more going on with those Mist Constructed Bindings.

"How?" It's a whispered cry that comes behind him but the sentiments of that singular word is likely voicing the other bystanders own thoughts as the Emperor Beast of the Apocalypse for the past few minutes. Previously, all attempts hadn't held for longer then a few seconds, so they went for bulk in the way of restraints, even if they didn't last very long in the Dimensional Gap.

He'd heard that the devils, with the subtle back of Heaven and the Grigori, trying to press Faolan for Discord Striker and even when confronted with the simple fact that the sword had long since been destroyed, still seemed to think the yellow dragon was lying concerning the topic of the sword. Upon hearing that bit of news, Vali realized that they seem to be gambling on it's legend concerning it's capabilities having an effect on Trihexa. It's clear that they'd been desperate on thinking of things to try and given that he knows the reason behind the sword's legend...

Well, I wonder if this was some kind of bet... Why else would Faolan be here? He muses as time continues to pass while everyone seems to be in shock over the fact that a trio of dragons are easily keeping the Apocalyptic Beast where it is.

And then, well, someone new joins the trio, wait, two someones... He realizes, the first is clearly Ddraig while the other dragon is much smaller, rather young in truth along with more of an Eastern style dragon. Emerald green eyes while there's an almost black blue for the horns and claws with the main scales of the body being a royal purple with tribal looking stripes of a darker shade of purple about the back of the body that give an impression of flames moving up from the tail tip to the brow ridge. As for the belly scales, Issei's dragon form sports a very dark red, almost black. The glowing trail of primarily purple with green and indigo means the young dragon is Issei. The build is more geared for power then agility, it's clear that when grown, Issei's dragon form will longer then Dragon King Yu-Long but also far more bulky.

"Bastard!" Snarls Albion, which seems to startle the others also standing behind this barrier. It doesn't take him long to figure out the reason behind the emotion and likely resentment as Issei's Flame joins with the Mist Bindings, green and purple seem to cause them to evolve in a fashion as it begins to spread about the projected image he sees that makes up the Trihexa's body.

"Well, might as well join in... If it worked for Ddraig and Issei, it should work us." He reassures the trapped dragon.

"What?! You... That's... That's Issei-kun?!" Exclaims the Gremory's Heiress' Queen in clear disbelief.

"Valerie Tepes is the welder of the Sephiroth Graal." Remarks Azazel in dawning realization.

"Part of my grandfather's scheme had to do with using the possessor of the Sephiroth Graal to revive a number of ancient evil dragons as well as convert others into evil dragons." Vali admits without an ounce of shame or remorse. "It looks like Issei talked her into using it on him to convert into a dragon that matched the nature of his soul." Which is likely he's a young dragon instead of a whelp, adding Kyoya's memories to the mix likely help ensure that he's more at the child stage then whelp stage.

Which should hold true for myself. Vali mentally reasons to himself, he is in possession of Takashi's memories just as Issei is in possession of Kyoya's. He has been itching to join his Flame with the trio of dragons, between the five of them, they have the full set what with him possessing Rain, Storm, and Sun and Issei possessing Cloud and Lightning along with an extra helping of Mist. With Faolan being a Sky and two Mists, that's the whole collection of Dying Will Flames of the Sky.

Before anyone could try and 'reason' with him, he combines the use of his Sun with his Sacred Gear, being sure to keep his target in mind. Within seconds, he's on the back of the Dragon of Dragons, which is surprising in it's own way but it seems that Asia is easily chatting away towards said great and powerful dragon while Valerie seems to more focus on watching what seems to be a Mist Screen that's giving the two his view of what's happening, which explains what Asia is chatting about, she's narrating to the Dragon of Dragons.

"Huh, you know, they figured you'd show not long after Ddraig and Issei get spotted over there." Remarks the dhampir as she notices him. "Want the same treatment?"

"Yes." He states simply and both Asia and the gigantic red dragon give him a look or a simple glance. "Not sure if it'll release Albion like it did Ddraig but then, Faolan did create something that will if Albion isn't released when you convert."

Valerie holds up a simple thumb size crystal that whirls with a small portion of Faolan's Sky Flame. She puts it back into the leather pouch that's hanging about her neck. "Just... stand still." She informs Vali and he does his best as he watches as she approaches, gently taking his right wrist and pulling said arm up.

As he feels something slowly peel back layers of his being, his own Flame begins to flare up until it's enshrouding him. His ability to see, hear, smell, touch, and so many other things he's taken for granted are denied to him for what does and doesn't feel like a twenty four hours. His senses return only there's so much more now as he does indeed sport a pair of wing, which means he's of the Western style when it comes to dragons.

He is covered in sapphire blue scales it seems, as he notices his snout before rising up his left hand to take a look at it. Claws are white in color while his belly scales appear to be a soft yellow shade that might be complimenting his blue scales. "My eyes?" He asks, his voice does sport a similar quality but it sounds slightly off along with young.

"Crimson." Valerie informs him and it makes sense, given what he had seen of Issei's own form. "This... this feels..." There's a sigh of contentment and he turns to find Albion in his full glory.

The White Dragon Emperor moves his limbs and takes pleasure in the simple act of breathing. "It's been far too long..." Albion states and then the Dragon Emperor looks off into the direction of where the others are stalling the Trihexa.

"Lead the way." He commands and Albion gives him a look then a bemused snort. "Sure you're ready to fly?"

"Only way to find out." He counters with a smirk. The white dragon chuckles but he does manage to get into the 'air' as it were and before breaching the barrier, calls upon his Flame. It keeps him warm the moment he is within the Dimensional Gap himself.

He follows after Albion as he learns how this flying works in this new body of his as he also compares it to flying before, in the mortal world. Soon enough, he sees what's happened since he teleported to where Valerie had been stationed. There's Lightning helping to reinforce the Sky's buffering while the entity is pretty much wrapped up, not unlike one would find an Egyptian mummy to be done up like. There's little of the Trihexa to be seen while the Mist pulses with Cloud Flames, highlighting the purple of the Mist.

"Vali!" Chirps Issei and he's struck by how different sounding the other is now. "Issei." He returns in a level fashion, Issei gives him a slight pout for a few seconds before doing a shrug and focusing back on funneling his Flame into Faolan's Sky.

Finding a good view and ignoring the exchange going on between Albion and Ddraig, he begins to do the same. It's a strange feeling Faolan's Sky, it's not unlike Tsuna's but, well, it's... just... more... And then it's also... healthy and uplifting. It's not long before his trio of colors join with the Mist Bindings, Rain blue, Storm red, and Sun yellow.

The Mist Bindings seem to alter, evolve, really as they begin making use of the new aspects. Soon enough, it's like it all just up and crystallizes with all seven Flames each reinforcing different forms of attack. He can't feel what's happening but with each flash of the various colors, it's clear that something is happening within the crystal that seems to be made up of Dying Will Flames of the Sky. Then, after a few minutes, the crystal dims and the steady feeling of his Flames being pulled into Faolan's Sky begin to tamper off.

Then, it's like Faolan's Sky releases a pulse while gently pushing his Flame back at himself. As he stops channeling his Flame besides keeping himself warm, the crystal explodes in a rainbow of seven colors and as the particles vanish, there's no evidence of the Trihexa anywhere in that spot, nor pieces of it. He's a bit disappointed at how quickly it's over but then, it shouldn't surprise him either, given how long the original trio had been holding the Emperor Beast of Apocalypse at bay, giving the two Mists a chance to Construct an understanding of the said Apocalyptic Beast along with creating a way to kill it while Sky Flames acted as a buffer to keep it from noticing what the Mist was doing.

"So... How do we turn back into... well, change into our previous looks?" Issei inquires and Faolan seems to blink before looking between Issei and Vali. "Well... I assume you'll need to spend a bit of time settling into those bodies before anything else. First order should be getting you two something to eat and drink, then a spot to sleep."

"You shouldn't be crashing yet, but give it an hour." Adds the yellow dragon in possession of Sky Flames.

"Nesting Realm?" Issei pipes up and Faolan nods. "I'll take the both of you, Ddraig, mind showing Albion how to get there?" The yellow turns to regard the two Emperors, he turns to find that the two seem to be already at each other's throat, literally.

The crimson dragon hums an acknowledgement while the white dragon merely grunts. "Wow... I wonder how long did it take for them to get to that point?" Issei wonders as the two go back to trying to tear a mouthful out of each other.

He hears Crom chuckle in a very familiar way and it doesn't take him long to realize why the scene before him causes him a case of deja vu. "Kyoya and Mukuro..." He finds himself stating and from what little he sees of Issei's form, the now purple dragon seems to curl a bit in on himself.

"Yes, our previous incarnations really did go at it like cats and dogs, didn't they?" Remarks Crom and then Faolan transports them away from the Dimensional Gap. The change is very noticeable in how he now feels along with what to see.

"I still am incline to say that those two are courting each other." Remarks Ariel upon her arrival a few minutes after Faolan gets both Issei and himself to drink from the river, well, after they admire themselves in the water's reflection. "I think they're more frenemies." Counters Crom.

The two adult dragons settle down and Faolan takes off to hunt them something to eat, leaving them to listen to the minor exchange of opinions between the evil and holy dragons.

=] C_o_V_P [=

"Well... I don't know about any of you but I'm not going to look a gifted horse, or in this case, dragon, in the mouth." Remarks Azazel while the two newly released Dragon Emperors continue their... well, wrestling match. "I, for one, do believe it's high time for your Faction to let the matter go concerning that sword." The leader of the Grigori adds as he gives the current four Satans a slightly flat look.

"I looked into the event and Faolan did destroy the sword after he killed the guy." Adds Odin. "It seemed that the blade took a bit more then just a bit of blood when it was first blooded, when your devil attacked and almost killed the yellow back then."

He does his best not to react to the news but, well, that news would have been great to know before they started pressing said dragon for said blade. "Given what we just witnessed, it's likely best to keep our end of the deal, in both spirit and word." Suggests Micheal, but then, the current leader of Heaven hadn't wanted to pursue the issue of Discord Striker in the first place. It had been with great reluctance that the Archangel did so, more due to the pressure of his fellow Archangels at that.

"It's also for the best that whatever plans people had concerning Hyoudou-kun be scrapped as well. After all, it's clear there's a connection between Faolan and the former welder of the Booster Gear." Never mind that there's one between Faolan and Vali, how can both of them have a connection to either of those three to begin with? He mentally wonders. "We now have to deal with two, newly freed Dragon Emperors, who might be carrying over any number of... grudges or ill feelings over any number of reasons."

"Well, once they get tired of their current wrestling match." Pipes in Odin. "Although, I do believe I am agreeing with Ariel concerning the kind of tension that's between them."

Ok, all leaders of the Three Factions turn to look at Odin. Yes, they had noticed a conversation going on between Ariel and Crom Cruach before the pair vanish in indigo flashes, but they didn't know the details. "You know what they were discussing?" Gabriel asks.

"They were discussing the actual relationship between Albion and Ddraig." Odin explains. "Crom says they're frenemies while Ariel maintains that they're courting, that it's unresolved sexual tension."

His gaze drifts towards the wrestling dragons and, well, he can't stop seeing Ariel's point of view. But then , Azazel mentally admits. I also thought the same between Crom Cruach and Faolan, only it's clear there's something more intense going on between Ariel and Crom Cruach then either of them have with Faolan.

"I don't suppose them both being males is going to stop those rumors?" The current Lucifer wonders. "Never stopped people from gossiping about Crom Cruach and Faolan being fuck buddies." States Akeno, reminding them all of the fact that both Serafall Leviathan and Sirzech Lucifer brought their respective younger siblings to witness this... gambling happenings that concerned a sword that's no in existence any more.

Rias Gremory seems mortified by what her Queen just said while various people react in their own way about the curd language. "Am I the only one that noticed the strange phenomenon concerning those colors and what they mean? It wasn't elemental magic." Remarks Serafall's younger sister, Sona Sitri.

Recalling the blue sporting red and yellow trail that followed after the latest young dragon to that battle... That dragon being Vali Lucifer... It did strike him as odd but at the same time... Azazel mentally shakes his head. He'll get answers later and hopefully they'll be honest ones.

"That, I think, is a matter for another day." Ajuka Beelzebub states in a simple but firm tone. He echos that sentiment and soon enough, they depart from the Dimensional Gap.

The End

Author's Head-Canon:

So, reason why I went the way I did concerning the Tri-Ni-Sette, about it's primary function not being what we're told from both Anime and Manga is simple. Humans have built up cultures and various religions around ensuring the survival of the world as they know it. Take the most famous example, the Aztecs use to rip out beating hearts from various defeated enemies each day to ensure that the sun would return the next day along with many other reasons. We know that's not how it works through science but to those Aztecs? It was a fact, the sun continues on its course because they offer up the hearts of their enemies each day.

I see the True Earthlings as a Flame culture of human who stumbled upon a method of delaying aging, of keeping themselves from dying viva old age. Like all humans, they grew to view themselves as better then their neighbors and their view concerning their place in the world, taking it to it's 'logical' conclusion that they were the only ones 'privileged' and 'capable' of understanding what became called Dying Will Flames of the Sky. Which led to the usual course of actions for anyone who view themselves as superior and more deserving, they tried to figure out how to keep that power form others. I also make note of the Sky as I think that Earth Flames did co-exist along side Sky Flames until said group of likely majority of Sky Flame Users led a purge against their Earth Flame Users, considering them Other, giving any kind of reason and thus did Earth Flames get hated on.

I think, when those seven stones were found and how easily they responded to Sky Flames, the True Earthlings began laying the foundations of a Flame Dam, first aimed against Earth Flame Users world wide then, later, they wanted to be the only ones capable of using Sky Flames. Given how many Wills they could call upon and who were likely better trained and educated in regards to Sky Flame use, it wasn't hard for their plans to come to fruition and thus, their hubris began to turn inwards once more.

I believe that, again, like regular humans, that in time, power plays began to crop up and slowly plans for mutual destruction became a thing. Politics divided them along with social classes, likely there was contempt for those who had only a single Flame or maybe multiple. Given that nobody was dying of old age, I can see how the age to be regarded as an adult went up and let's go with, someone had to be alive until the age of fifty to be considered an adult. I also see people doing breeding experiments to give them and their future descendants advantages besides Flame Use, which could have lead to Foresight that we see with Luce and her daughter and granddaughter.

I doubt it was normal humans that caused the destruction of the True Earthlings, I would suspect that someone somewhere within their civilization didn't act soon enough and it resulted in those hidden plans of mutual destruction getting triggered. Blame gets put on their neighbors, the short lived primitives when in truth they were innocent as in, they likely didn't know they even had neighbors, given the True Earthlings would have set up Mist Territories to hide their cities, towns, and farms from said neighbors.

And so, the True Earthlings began to die off, knowledge got lost, destroyed really, in the ensuring chaos and when it was settled, those seven stones' function began to wane, what with there being fewer people connected to it, for it to channel the Flames safely. There's a trickle of not just Sky Flames finding hosts but also a tiny portion of Earth Flames make a return as well. Now, the truth concerning those seven stones lost and given generations of lies about their function, we get the survivors trying to keep the stones functional but, a last, the Flame Dam needs to release Dying Will Flames and so, they begin to noticed those short lived, inferior versions of themselves can all upon Flames, idea happens and, well, the stones are sliced up, two sets of rings and stone pacifiers happen, the rest is the history of KHR.

Different Rant:

Another reason why I think this is a believible concept has to do with the fact that those seven stones get, well, grinded up. I'm not sure if anyone is familiar with the D&D Module the Apocalypse Stone but, well, if those seven stones were really needed to keep life on earth, well, alive, then cutting and grinding them into different shapes kind of destroyed their identity and left flakes of discarded material around, too. I also think that the Blood Seal on the Vongola Rings shows that it wouldn't have functioned for long either, given that it was crippling the time axis' ability to function right before we being in the whole tainted by the Curse originating from the Arcobaleno Pacifiers.

Bloodlines die off but in the case concerning Tsuna inheriting, the Ninth Don clearly skipped a number of Heirs closer to home as I'd imagine that daughters married out of the Vongola Famiglia before along with legitimizing bastards also likely getting used for political marriages. Meaning that there's a number of third, maybe fourth cousins that should have closer ties to the main Family then Tsuna's bloodline, after all, I'd imagine that the Mafia had, at one point, been marrying second cousins, meaning that since the Main Family are descendants of the Second, until there were no viable Sky blood relations to the Second living in Italy, Tsuna shouldn't be the fourth heir in the first place and, well, he did get kicked out of the Famiglia as I'd imagine using a Flame Seal on a Flame User is something of a death sentence and something akin to shunning in a social manner too.

Only reason why Tsuna was in the Ranking had everything to do with the resources that the Ninth had at his disposal in regards to enforcing his will be done and even in decline, the Vongola Famiglia had a lot of pull. I'd imagine a lot of Dons didn't mind the idea of a former civilian being given the reigns either, seeing him as an outsider and given his young age, a clear puppet for them to use. I think, in the end, he was ultimately a puppet and that Flames had been used in regards to 'change' Tsuna's mind, after all, he'd have sported a Flame Seal for a good eight years, if he had been Flame Sealed at that age, and he'd also been a social parish due to the fact that Sky Attraction was on going but with his Flames behind a Flame Seal.

He had be, unknowingly, driving everyone crazy when they couldn't connect with his Sky Flame, which is likely why even adults were behind on the bullying scene. They were punishing Tsuna for his, supposed, deception or baiting them. He'd been ripe for the indoctrination and with most of his Will behind that Flame Seal, he, of course, was at a disadvantage when it came to enforce his Will to not be Don of a Mafia Famiglia. Reborn hadn't been told that he'd been Active when he'd been Flame Sealed, if he had, I do believe his approached would have been far different or, at the very least, he'd call in Shamal Trident a lot sooner to have the doctor examine Tsuna to ensure that his health wasn't in any danger when re-introducing Sky Flames to Tsuna's body.

So, yea, given Dying Will Flames of the Sky are... well, there's something that, in the hands of a highly imaginative person, highly danger and capable of impossible things, I've kind of did show some of what I believe they are capable of in that Trading One Life for Another unfinished story.

"Rest well, Gege." Hua Cheng murmurs at the sleeping teen, he so wishes he can reach out to touch his love's cheek under the eye bandage.

The yet to be twenty year old incarnation of his beloved Prince sleeps on. He'd been drawn to this room hours ago, the world he finds himself on, it's clearly not his own. And yet, this bright soul continues to be a beacon, calling the Devastation Class Demon to his side.

And yet, Hua Cheng can't say for certain if the young man resting is his Prince reincarnation or if a previous one. After all, while the foundation of the soul is the same, it's lacking a certain feature, one that takes the Ghost King a handful of seconds to realize.

It's the lack of Divinity but, like Cultivators, he suspects that the soul is getting ready to house it or will house it again. Which ever the case maybe, he's certain that his beloved Prince will once more ascend to his rightful place in the Heavens.

Still... Crimson Rain Reaching Toward a Flower muses. "This does offend me so."

His features shift and his cloths alter in style while calling up his signature Silver Spirit Butterflies. Eming rattles in its sheath in excitement at what's to come. His finger tips gently glide about Eming's hilt before the Ghost King, one of the Four Great Calamities, a Devastation Class Demon, the infamous Crimson Rain Reaching Toward a Flower, Hua Cheng, fondly referred to as San Lang by his beloved Prince readies himself for hunting down the one who stole his future or past beloved's eye.

The Spirit Butterflies flutter off as Hua Cheng with all the grace of a hunting cat stalks out of the room. Before he re-enters the Void of Realms, he will have the head of the one who dared take his Prince's incarnation's eye .

"Who...?" Xander trails off, he's so tired and for the first time in a very long while, he's some place warm and secure.

"Hush, you're find San Lang. Sleep for now." A man's voice says in comfort, the petting of his hair is rather soothing.

Xander tries to suppress a yawn, wanting to murmur that's not his name. Yet, in the end, the touch of this man seems to be so right and some deep part of him refuses to let him speak.

And so, under the comforting strokes of the former Crown Prince of Xian Le, also known as Flower Crown Martial God, Xie Lian, also sneered as the God of Trash and Lost Things behind his back watches as his beloved husband's incarnation rests, his hand gently going through the young teen's black hair that's matted with both blood and sweat.

"So young, San Lang... And just how did you getting so lost that you wind up here?" Wonders the God.

While he's got plenty of question to inquire about, for now, Xian Le is content to have his husband with him once more. Yes, the former Ghost King is once more alive but it's also so heart breaking that his San Lang ended up here of all places, in his domain of the toss aside, the forgotten, the broken, or to summarize, what people consider Trash .

For now, he'll remember his San Lang and treasure those memories, for in the future he'll deal with the teen that holds his beloved's soul, learning about who San Lang is currently and they'll figure out things from there.

Eming rattles sadly in its sheath while Ruoye shifts just so and then gives his shoulder's a comforting squeeze. "Thank you Ruoye. And we'll take things as they come, Eming."

Willow isn't sure how this fell apart, after all, it was just suppose to be a gentle push to get Angel and Buffy to reconcile. Yet, it went wrong, oh so very wrong.

"Which story did you use?" Giles asks, he's not pleased at all.

"The Tale of Elemental Masters and the Black Water Ghost." Willow answers. "I mean, Ming Yi and Shi Qingxuan were lovers!"

The English Watcher gives her a look of supreme disappointment before rubbing the bridge of his nose. "Ming Yi was He Xaun, who was the Black Water Submerging Boats." Giles states slowly. "He spent centuries spying on the Shi brothers, waiting to exact his vengeance on the brothers."

Her heart clutches as she gets a clearer picture of the story but there's something... "Brothers? Isn't Shi Qingxuan called Lady Wind Master in the story? How can she be a he?"

"Gods and Ghosts are able to freely shape-shift, Shi Qingxuan just happens to enjoy switching freely between the two genders."

"That explains the Ghost in Red always looking different." Willow realizes.

The doors open and Xander walks into the library, causing Shi Qingxuan, aka Buffy, to bolt towards the new arrival. "Xie Lian!" Then corrects herself after a few seconds, fanning herself in embarrassment, "Ah, sorry, you seem like someone I know."

"Ok?" Xander clearly is at a loss of what's going on while Black Water, aka Angel, seems to be wary all of a sudden. "Ah, what's up with the get up?"

It's no long before Cordelia storms the library, it seems that Xander and her might have had another argument. One crisis at a time please! Willow mentally begs the higher powers.

Feeling the magical bandages moving about his torso as he approaches the bar counter. Xander's been working at this bar for about a week now so he has an idea of who's who among the regulars, so the Chinese teen wearing white is a very new face. Then as he gets closer, the bandages snake up from where they like to rest to his neck.

"Ruoye?" The seemingly teenager inquires and the bandages wave its ends, clearly not caring about the crowd.

Although, it seems that most people are pointly looking away. "Your's?" He inquires and the teen blinks, looking up at him with a brilliant smile.

"Yes, Ruoye is mine. Thank you for taking care of them." The teen says as the silk bandages snake their way about the fingers before wrapping about the wrist.

"It was my pleasure, they were fairly useful but I'm glad they are back with their owner." Xander says, he'd found them in Ethan's back when they had been clearing out the shop.

"Ah, where are my manners, I'm Xie Lian, wait, I think I should say Lian Xie." Lian introduces himself.

"Xander Harris." He returns the introduction. "How long are you in town for?" Xander inquires politely.

"Nice to meet you" Lian says upon his introduction, it's clear that something about him seems to cause some kind of reaction. "Not for long, my husband should be arriving shortly after he finishes with something."

"Husband?" Ok, yea, that does throw the Scooby member for a loop. Lian smiles in a rather fond manner, "Yes, Hua... Cheng Hua. We've been together for some time now."

It's at this point that he suspects that the Chinese teen is older then his actually appearance would suggest. Getting a good look at Lian's eyes, yea, this wasn't an actual teenager before him, not at all. What Lian was, he didn't know but not human would be a safe bet at this point. Silence hangs between them as Xander marks off what what Lian can't be, which is clearly not a vampire.

"If you don't mind... Just... What do you usual do for a living?" Lian inquires and Xander blinks at the question.

"Well, I did graduate from high school and I never had a job before this one." He states truthfully while finding Lian suddenly rather larger then life.

"Where did you attend high school?" Lian asks and he says truthfully, "Sunnydale High School."

There's a slight widening of eyes before a look of sympathy overcomes the other's features. "Ah, Sunnydale..." Lian no longer seems as threatening as before.

"What about Sunnydale?" The voice comes from behind him. "Hua Cheng!" Lian greets another Chinese man wearing primarily red although there's an image of a silver butterfly on the front while around the neck are tiny butterflies... Wait, that's actually a silver necklace, Xander realizes as it moves as the two hug each other.

"I grew up there." He admits and finds Cheng studying him with crimson eyes, although for some reason, he kind of feels right at home for some reason in this man's presence. "Is that so?"

"Again, thank you for looking after Ruoye." Lian says in the silence that descends between them, there's something akin to approval in Hua Cheng's gaze not long into said silence.

"It wasn't any trouble, they were a great help in the past and I'm happy they are back with whom they belong." Xander states.

Before the pair of husbands leave, Hua Cheng leaves a business card, it's simply red in color while sporting a number of silver butterflies exploding from the center of the card. On the back of it, it's black and there's characters in white. He can only guess at which alphabet the characters come from.

Putting the card into a pocket, Xander notices the time and mourns that he's unable to grab a bite to eat before his shift begins.

The strangest item in the shop seems to be the sword behind colored glass that sports a number of paper talismans along the edge of where the glass box meets the wooden surface. Buffy isn't sure why she feels drawn to the sabre, even with the talismans keeping it sealed, it's clearly magical in nature, doesn't stop her from sensing something coming from the sabre.

"Ah, the young lady perhaps you best get away from that!" The clerk calls from the counter where Willow had made a beeline for. There's a note of distress in that voice.

"What's the history of the weapon?" Buffy can hear Willow ask, the Vampire Slayer's attention is on the clerk, although, out of the corner of her right eye, it almost seems like the metal... rippled.

"I don't know its history, the owner hasn't said anything other then order that it's to be kept under that glass and that I'm to add more paper talismans when needed." The clerk states.

"Do you know anything about it? Anything at all?" Asks Willow while Buffy places her right hand on top of the glass case, the clerk glares at her and she does withdraw it in an innocent fashion.

"Eming... The sabre's supposedly called Eming." The clerk says and turns to hurry them out of the shop.

There's a child in red looking through the window that they walk pass. "You think that sabre is important?" Willow asks her.

"A sabre called Eming? Pff, I doubt it, but we should get Giles to look up the name just in case." She admits, not caring at the feeling of eyes at her back.

Unknown to the pair, the child in red is giving the pair a considering look.

Author's Note: I thought up this crossover during a work shift once, I felt such an urge to write out a number of idea, really, the first image to enter my mind had to do with Xander getting found among the junk of Xie Lian, having toss himself into that gaping mouth that Buffy left as she fled with Angel upon his Soul returning.

Another idea of a crossover would be Xander taking over Shen Qingqui's life and Anya being his System. That would be The Scum Villain's Self-Saving System, it's the first story from the writer of Official Heaven's Blessing and Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation. The only idea I have concerning a Buffy and Grandmaster crossover has to do with the Halloween Episode, so I might write that up under title of Halloween Episode, My Style.

[New as of Aug 20th 2019] Also of note, I am posting this on after I posted Part 3 of the KHR! and HS DxD is finished. I posted this on my DA account on the 19th of Aug. This... might throw off how I update here on ... Maybe, not sure, guess we'll just have to find out, huh? :D

Cultivators OnLine P 2: Grandmaster

I don't own Grandmaster of Demonic Cultivation.

/ | (= ^ _ ^ =) | **

Personally, Wei Wuxian isn't sure how it is that after ensuring that Mo Xuanyu and Wen Sizhui were well on their respective way to Luanzang Wei Settlement, that within almost twenty hours on being alone once more, he encounters Hanguang-Jun, who's alone this time and it's evening as well. If this were still just a game, he'd figure this was a Random Encounter or the beginnings of a troublesome chain of a side Quests. Given it's no longer a game but his new reality, the former American puts on a pleasant smile and decides to wait for said said man to speak, all the while beginning to make a mental file under the heading of Hanguang-Jun.

The Cultivator before him is a touch taller then him, sports golden eyes, seems to have a very good poker face, and seems to be the intense sort of person given how intensely focus the man is staring at Wei Wuxian. The silence between them does wear on him, he shifts his weight a few seconds before he finally breaks the silence hanging between them, giving the other man a beaming grin as he greets him, "Hanguang-Jun! Fancy meeting you here? Did ya miss me?"

There's a slight widening of eyes that are so quick that if he hadn't been waiting for any kind of reaction, Wei Wuxian is certain that he'd have missed it or dismissed it as a trick. "Shameless." States the man in white robes with hints of baby blue.

A touch a mischief more then likely glints in Wei Wuxian's eyes as he remarks in turn, "Well of course I'm shameless, I'm the infamous [Yiling Patriarch] ! The corrupted Blessed of Heaven! Demonic Cultivator extraordinaire! The most diabolic Necromancer ever!"

It's hard to believe but it's like the Cultivator before him did get stiffer and his demeanor chillier. It's enough to make the former Player wonder if it's not some kind of unconscious use of [Spiritual Energy] as the air seems to be a touch colder now as well. Yet there's not a single change upon that handsome face.

His grin only seems to widen a few seconds later and throws his hands behind his head, turning around, Wei Wuxian begins to walk away. After all, this isn't a game and, well, he's got some distance to travel, he could have used Suibian to travel there but wanted to spend time in a wilderness that was lush with color. It's a little while later that he notices that the famous Hanguang-Jun is following behind him.

Wei Wuxian isn't sure what to make of this current situation, he's never really interacted with anyone, be they Cultivators or civilians, before he'd been broken out of that jail cell by Wen Qing and her younger brother, Wen Ning. In the months before leaving with Wen Yuan for company, the former Player had only interacted with the Wens that are the remnants of the [Qishan Wen Sect] , mainly, they were generally the civilian members, they were the ones who did the grunt work in regards to creating talismans and Spiritual tools, although it seems that Wen Qing is considered the foremost expert in regards to Medical Cultivation and in the pass almost fourteen years, Wen Ning had been learning from his elder sister in that field while also helping to teach their nephew to become a Cultivator.

He's also fairly certain the only reason why Mo Xuanyu even agreed to leave his village has to do with learning how to harness [Resentful Energy] along with the fact that the [Yiling Patriarch] himself wanted him alive, as in, Wei Wuxian wasn't going to kill him for the 'crime' of trying to mimic his Demonic Cultivation unlike a certain Sect who's members wear purple. He knew that the younger man had his back against the wall, between a rock and a hard place, so, yea, it was kind of a no brainer once Mo Xuanyu realized he'd been honest about sending him, alive, to Luanzang Wei Settlement to live and to study, after getting cleared by Wen Qing, of course.

The fact that said young man being a Cut-Sleeve didn't really seem to be cause for concern in Wei Wuxian's books, after all, when it came to giving Wei Wuxian character traits, he put down bisexual as one of those.

So, as he journeys unhurriedly through the forest, nothing attacks him, the few Ghosts that linger in this forest avoid him. It's clear that they also seem to be divided over whether the Lan Sect member is with him, so they also don't approach Hanguang-Jun. It brings to mind the fact that the Party function is still something he has access to along with his Friend's List, not that anyone who's Logged In has replied to any of his Private Messages.

Calling up his Character Menu, he, again, notices the lack of Level.

Birth Name: Wei Ying

Title: [Yiling Patriarch]

Gender: Man

Physical Age: 19

Character Traits: Fear of Dogs, Bisexual, Enjoys employing a public persona of reckless, shameless, and disrespectful individual, Curious in regards of Resentful and Spiritual power use in any complicity, and Kind.

Status: Rogue Cultivator

Equipped Spirit Tools: Chinese Sword named Suibian, Chinese Flute named Chenqing, Black Cultivator Robes.

Party Members: None

Not much has changed besides the list of Spirit Tools equipped. He muses to himself. Wei Wuxian relaxes his pose, lowering his arms and does adjust his robes.

It causes his thoughts to wonder, once more, concerning the nature of this world and why it is that he's still able to access certain things in relation to this having once been a game while the rest of the world doesn't behave as though he's a Player Character. It's jarring to have access to things that should mean that he's in a game and yet, nothing outside of those limited function act like he's in a game. There's no Levels to be seen nor does there seem to be floating names above the heads of what should be typical game spawned monsters.

There's a lot about this new life of his that doesn't make much sense to the former Player and there's still this nagging feeling that he's got an answer to the why of it, it's just at the tips of his fingers as it were only, grabbing it doesn't do anything besides make it move away from his hand. Reviewing what little hints he has, it's not hard to realize that it's that game update that is related to his current situation. But it doesn't explain what's been going on with the Blessed of Heaven, even the former NPCs say that there's something wrong with them. Wei Wuxian admits with a frustrated sigh.

Tilting his head up and trusting his ability to sense the two types of energy, the former Player stares up at the stars. Even though he's never made a study of stars, he's fairly confident that the stars over his head were different. Wei Wuxian feels rather lonely, even when he tried Private Messaging those few names that are on his Friend's List but they seem to remain Unread along with the simple fact that the same names seem to always be online.

Man... Is this some kind of gamer hell? He wonders to himself. Feeling depress, the former Player continues to walk through the night without any of the various ghosts lingering within the forest hindering him in any way.

C (o _ o) D

It's been two days since his encounter with the Lan Cultivator and for some reason, Hanguang-Jun seems to be dogging Wei Wuxian's heels. Maybe I should try conversing with him again? The former Player asks himself.

In the time he's spent within the presence, Wei Wuxian noticed the bundled up left arm acting up every so often and how long it took Hanguang-Jun to calm the piece of fierce corpse using the string instrument that took him a while to learn is a guqin. Wei Wuxian had been tempted to play Chenqing to help speed up the process like he had after destroying the Goddess Statue but can't say if his aid would be appreciated. He'd noticed how like stone Hanguang-Jun's expression is and he did hear another title for the man, the Second Jade of Lan as well as a Courtesy Name of Lan Wangji.

Both were added to his mental folder concerning Hanguang-Jun along with how the Cultivator doesn't seem to think to barter when it came to purchasing things, sure, bartering is a touch of a foreign concept to such a modern man that Wei Wuxian had been, he, at least, knew that you could. He'd done it back when this had just been a game, after all and he's managed to knock a bit off the prices he'd paid. Then again, few of them want to offend him once they realize he's the infamous Blessed of Heaven, the [Yiling Patriarch] .

It's noon of the third day with Hanguang-Jun and him seemingly traveling in the same direction. Plopping down across the table of said Cultivator, the man's only reaction is to lower the bowl to the table before staring at him with those lovely golden eyes. "So... It seems we're traveling buddies, Lan-gege! Perhaps you should share the details of this quest we're on?" He is fairly sure that he got the nick name just right, given the slight narrowing of those golden eyes.

"Not traveling together." Finally states Hanguang-Jun in a chilly tone and he merely grins widely. "Really? Cause it seems you've been following me, you know? What are the odds that we're going in the same direction?"

"I mean, I know why I'm traveling into [Qinghe Nie Sect] territory, why are you? And why on foot?" He asks a minute after waiting for Hanguang-Jun. The white clad Cultivator seems to get composed, the hands that had held the bowl slip under the table, likely settling on the lap.

Still, Hanguang-Jun doesn't say anything other keeping a chilly feeling that seems to roll off of him. After he orders a cup of wine tea, Wei Wuxian decides to see if he can't get more words out of Hanguang-Jun. With a course of action that should get an annoyed response from the Lan Cultivator.

So, Wei Wuxian began chatting about the injustice of having been thrown into that jail cell back when he first entered into this world and transmigrated into his Wei Wuxian's Character. Whining about how he'd been so bored, thirsty, and hungry during his short stay in the [Yunmeng Jiang Sect] prison. Still, as his whiny rant winds down, Hanguang-Jun hasn't spoken but had finished drinking his bland soup, it had to be bland given Wei Wuxian had noticed pretty much nothing besides herbs within it.

After getting a refill from the waitress, who also came to take away the now empty bowl. He lets the silence descend as he wracks his brain for another topic before settling on the more recent incident at Defan Mountain, commenting on the various rumors he'd heard concerning that [Night Hunt] , like how someone set up over a hundred nets and suspect which of the sects had the money to spend on such a course of action. Mentioned how overwhelmed Wen Sizhui had been, although he called the teen Wei Sizhui, he's unsure if Hanguang-Jun still possessed a grudge with the surviving Wens over the actions of their more influential and prideful relatives of the [Qishan Wen Sect] , who were mostly the Cultivators while the remnants had been mostly craftsmen with a scattering of low level Cultivators who'd been punished for one reason or another by having their Cultivation crippled.

Still, Hanguang-Jun doesn't respond to his ramblings and the various rumors, some of which he exaggerated while others he made up on the spot. In the end, silence descends between them once more and he pouts. Privately admitting that Second Jade of the Lan is proven to be rather accurate, given his attempts to rile up Hanguang-Jun was as useful as getting a reaction from a stone.

"So... Lan-gege, you're likely wondering where Wei Sizhui is, right?" He muses as he breaks the silence. "Well, not sure if you noticed it when you had met the guy but Mo Xuanyu had a bit of [Resentful Energy] clinging to him, you know? Which is kind of funny, as I thought that given how people demonized me for figuring out a way to harness [Resentful Energy] that all my books on the topic would have been put to the flame, you know?"

"Isn't your sect rather close to the [Lanling Lin Sect] ? Do you know if they're looking into the subject?" He's gambling on that sounding like an accusation.

Hanguang-Jun's eyes seem to blaze in anger before snapping sharply, "Ridiculous." Wei Wuxian can't help the grin that grows on his face at the reaction.

"Oh? I seem to recall something about a guy named Xue Yang? He was a guest Discipline there, for a time and people seem to mention he'd massacred a minor sect?" It had been a talked about in hush tones during the late evenings, after Hanguang-Jun went to bed.

There's conflict of emotion in those golden eyes, which makes him wonder if the topic hit a bit too close to home for Hanguang-Jun. If Hanguang-Jun is the Second Jade then his elder brother must be the First Jade and also the current Sect Leader, who's title is Zewu-Jun. There's something about Zewu-Jun that has to do with the end of the [Sunshot Campaign] but he's got a blank about it, after all, it's been over a decade since that event happened.

"Is there more to the story of concerning Xue Yang?" Wei Wuxian asks curiously. Hanguang-Jun actually inclines his head, to his surprise. "Mind sharing it?" He inquires and there's a slight frown, he's getting the feeling that it might not be because Hanguang-Jun is tight lipped but he's just not comfortable with talking, like, at all. Given that so far, the words spoken had been short and rather blunt.

"Lan-gege... Your not one for talking, are you?" He comments with a bemused smile as he rests his head on his left hand while leaning upon the table. His sitting pose shifting in such a way that almost seems like he's laying on his side. "So... Are you or aren't you headed somewhere in the [Qinghe Nie Sect] ?" Wei Wuxian asks, hoping that this will at least get answered with a simple yes or no.

"Yes." Hanguang-Jun admits simply and with a slight frown. "Ok, so, is it due to finding more pieces of that fierce corpse?" The former Player asks.

The silence is rather telling in its own right as those golden eyes look away before a slight incline of the head. "Do you want help in putting Hum... the guy back together again?" He'd been about to say Humpty Dumpty but figures that would just confuse the other Cultivator as it isn't a local nursery rhythm.

There's a clear look of suspicion, likely do to the quick change mid way through his question but, it's clear that Hanguang-Jun is considering the pros and cons of accepting his help. So, when Hanguang-Jun nods, something highly unexpected happens. To his vision, fireworks go off and a banner unfurls with Congratulations for forming a Party with Lan Zhan and mentions him accepting the Quest entitled [The Puzzle Pieces Collectors] . As it fades from view, he becomes aware of Hanguang-Jun sitting across from him.

There's a look of shock in Hanguang-Jun's golden eyes, it seems what happened hadn't just been seen by him either. "Well, looks like the Heavens have decided to bless our endeavor concerning this course of action." He does his best to say in a light tone, all the while he's anything but calm or collected over this forming of their Party. It's also slightly weird how it feels, then again, this is the first time he's formed a Party since transmigrating into Wei Wuxian. He can only guess at how things will proceed from here, after all, when in a party, not only can you find your party members easily but you can tell how full their HP and SP are.

Physical Age: 19

Character Traits: Fear of Dogs, Bisexual, Enjoys employing a public persona of reckless, shameless, and disrespectful individual, Curious in regards of Resentful and Spiritual power use in any complicity, and Kind.

Status: Rogue Cultivator

Active Quest: [The Puzzle Pieces Collectors]

Equipped Spirit Tools: Chinese Sword named Suibian, Chinese Flute named Chenqing, Black Cultivator Robes.

Party Members: Lan Zhan.

Arriving at the strange castle that's also a crypt, Wei Wuxian can't help but tilt his head in regards to the cut opening, doing his best to ignore the presence of a certain beast. Honestly, what had he been thinking, picking being afraid of dogs as a character trait? Then again, what little he recalls about Wei Wing's background, it seemed like a logical characteristic for former street urchin to have. Something to do with competing with stray dogs for food in back alleys of some small city he recalls.

"This seems familiar..." Murmurs the former Player, there's something he must have read on a game's forum once but he can't be sure he's remembering it right. It's something about the sabres that the [Qinghe Nie Sect] uses instead of the usual Chinese straight sword that the rest of the Cultivator Sects use. It had to do with what was once a real life thing that once happened in China that got carried into the game.

"Well, guess there's only really one way to find them." He states before entering into the hill castle tomb, using [Spiritual Energy] to light up the blade of Suibian, it's more of a gimmick technique, an Easter egg of a sort with the only justification being teaching people how to channel their [Spiritual Energy] into testing to see if the item, generally used on swords, is suitable to be used as a spiritual tool. The lighter the color that the item glows, the better suited it was.

So, Suibian's glowing a bright white and chasing the darkness of the hall back. Tapping Chenqing with his other hand, he slowly enters more into the tomb. Upon finding a coffin, he shares a look with Hanguang-Jun and moves to let the white robed Cultivator said coffin. Once the lid is moved and Suibian's light shines on the sabres within does he remembers more about why this Sect built them. "Sabre tombs... Oh, that's why those corpses wandered out..." Wei Wuxian murmurs with a knowing nod.

Then a canine whine taints his mood, causing him to stiffen and glance from the way they came, the dog didn't enter, much to his relief. Yes, Hanguang-Jun does look at him once more, it shouldn't be long before his current Party Member puts the pieces together concerning his reaction to said dog to realize his mild phobia. Doing his best as though he didn't just stiffen in fear from a mere dog's whine, he glances between both sides of the hallway.

"Lan-gege, I think we might get a clearer direction if you play [Inquiry] ." There's a slight stiffening in Hanguang-Jun's pose, yet again, at him calling the Lan Cultivator said nickname when it's just the two of them. He knows that use of gege means brother, same with didi. He's not overly familiar as to which means older brother and which means younger, never mind the ones that also translates into Martial Brother. He also gets the idea that use also is a mark of closeness between two people as well, kind of like chan and kun in Japanese.

"Not close." Remarks Hanguang-Jun as the other pulls out his guqin from its cloth bundle that had been carried on the back. "We're Party Members, Lan-gege! We're close, close as close can be right now! I can sense you without even trying and I know it's the same for you." Wei Wuxian counters, good to get a confirmation that the use of gege does denounce a close relationship.

It takes about two minutes before Hanguang-Jun's guqin plays due to the owner of the dog answering. They do find the owner within one of the walls, who kind of looks familiar along with being only in his early teens plus sporting the uniform of the [Lanling Jin Sect] . Hanguang-Jun carries the teen out while Wei Wuxian stays within the sabre tomb and he frowns as he does his best to ignore the sounds concerning the dog and the teen, focusing on his thoughts as he reasons out why else they might need to explore deeper into this tomb.

What he knows about the sabres used by [Qinghe Nie Sect] is that they get imprinted with a certain desire along with aligned with yang. The walking corpses are one of the usual enemies Cultivators, it means that the restless sabres likely find some kind of fulfillment with having those kinds of corpses around, perhaps keeping them from wandering the country side looking for them? Which means that there's a kind of spirit balance within this sabre tomb, that it's been disrupted by the would be looters and the leaving of a number of the corpses within the tomb. Which means that the looters never left...

"...me!" Wei Wuxian blinks as he finds said teen before him and looking rather upset, even if rather pale. "I'm sorry, were you talking to me?"

The teen gets rather flustered by that while he look beyond the teen towards Hanguang-Jun. "I think we need to figure out a different approach for this one, Hanguang-Jun. I rather not risk getting stuck in the walls like the looters or what almost happened with the kid here." Reaching out and ruffling the teen's hair, noticing the red dot, which means the kid is related to someone important.

The kid's whole pose stiffens in shock along with gaping at him with wide eyes. It's clear that the kid isn't use to being touched by strangers and he withdraws his hand before gently using both hands to turn the teen then pushes the teen out of the tomb. Let then a foot of getting moved, the teen recovers and slaps at his hands along with moving away from him, within a muttering of murmurs, the teen marches himself out of the tomb.

Doing his best to ignore the dog by focusing on the two fellow humans. "So, kid, what's your name?" The former Player asks curiously as he focuses on the teen.

The teen seems to straighten up to his full height with a clearly puffed out chest. "I'm the heir of [Lanling Jin Sect] , Jin Ling!" The dog does a bark in agreement.

He'd have cooed and ruthlessly teased the teen for puffing up like a bird of some sort if not for the fact that there is a dog standing to Jin Ling's right, from the sound of where the bark came from. "I see, I see. I'm Wei Ying, Courtesy name Wei Wuxian, Blessed of Heaven's [Yiling Patriarch] ." Walking over to where the Lan Cultivator is, he pats Hanguang-Jun on the shoulder as he introduces him, "And this is Hanguang-Jun!"

And if it puts Hanguang-Jun between himself and the dog, well, that's just a happy coincidence. Really, it just was as far as the former Player is concerned. "We better head for the inn together, best check for you for a [Curse Mark] some place private." He adds cheerfully while he pats Hanguang-Jun's shoulders before turning and leading the way back to the local town.

When the dog comes bounding across his path, he only flinches only slightly as the dog moves behind him. A few seconds later, through the Party function, he can tell that Hanguang-Jun is following behind him. Given how the dog keeps appearing to run before him, he's pretty sure that Jin Ling is following behind as well.

They encounter a Nie Sect Cultivator, who Jin Ling seems to know. "Sect Leader Nie!" The apparent Sect Leader's gaze lingers in studying Wei Wuxian and towards the teen trailing behind him, who marches forward with his dog falling in step with the Jin heir. "Lan Wangji. Blessed Wei Wuxian." The sabreless Sect Leader Nie greets politely who uses a fan to cover his lower face while turning his full attention upon the teen.

"Jin Ling, your uncle and his men have been looking for you." Sect Leader Nie addresses Jin Ling. He notices how the teen almost bunches up at the mention of an uncle while the Nie slowly gazes back upon the former Player and then towards Hanguang-Jun.

"Well, best not keep your uncle waiting, eh, A-Ling?" Wei Wuxian comments and the teen's head snaps to give him a heated look, kind of reminding him of a cat, in truth. So prickly... He thinks to himself as the teen seems to remember his manners and thanks the odd Nie Cultivator, who gives directions on where to find Sandu Shengshou.

"A-Ling! Remember to have your uncle check you over for a [Cursed Mark] !" He calls out after Jin Ling is about six feet away. He can only imagine the teen's reaction to his holler as his focus returns to the strangeness that is the current Leader of the Nie Sect.

"So... We have business to discuss in regards to that sabre tomb of yours." Wei Wuxian remarks with a sharp smile and there's only a slight widening of eyes before the fan closes as the Nie Sect Leader plasters a rather friendly look. "Ah, I heard rumors that the [Yiling Patriarch] seems unaffected by what plagues the rest of the Blessed of Heaven. It gives one hope that, given time, the rest should recover as well."

"I hope you don't mind if Hanguang-Jun joins us? We're working together on this investigation and it would be quicker just to include him then to catch him up later." Wei Wuxian states, he rather not be alone with this seemingly harmless man, plus, if he were to guess, Hanguang-Jun and him seem to know each other given how close in age they are.

"Ah, yes, of course." Then the Cultivator bows to him, introducing himself, "I'm Nie Huaisang, Sect Leader of the [Qinghe Nie Sect] , Blessed Wei Wuxian."

"You can drop the Blessed and just call me Wei Wuxian. After all, given the path I created, I doubt anyone considers me anything but a villainous demon these days." He remarks with a self-deprecating smile.

They walk side by side, in the end, heading to get a private room in which to discuss matters. And might be the beginnings of a business partnership. The former Player muses privately to himself.

Ending it here!

It's been eight years since Tsuna came online as a Sentinel. He's not sure if he should be celebrating the anniversary of when he came online, after all, not only had he'd been five but that, according to his mother, his father's family has a history of being Guides of a maximum of third ranking while his mother's few online relatives had been Guides, general ranking of two although his mother is ranking one. With that kind of family history, none expected him to come online as anything but a Guide, a weak one but a Guide.

A tapping on his left hand back alteration snaps him out before he fully Zones into his own mind. A quick tap on the pressure plate across his palms causes his ear bud to blare music while the tapping upon his almost knuckles begins to go into an off rhythm to the music's score. Soon enough, the lights turn and the crossing walk changes, he walks across with a few other students. It's the first of November and it's rather mild when it comes to weather.

The teen switches through his various senses, keeping to his five physical senses as his sixth sense is highly... odd, like how in recent months, he swears he sees chains lurking under the skins certain people sporting various glows with a black outline never mind the feeling of... futility(?) approaching. Just seeing those chains make him uneasy and he's spent many an evening checking his body over to see if HE has chains like that lurking under his own skin but nothing seems to be lurking under his skin besides it's usual orange that pulses to various beats that he can't hear.

The tapping alters on the back of his left hand and he's pulled once more out of his thoughts. Pressing the pressure bar third, the music changes to metal rock. A slight smirk on his face, Tsuna jogs the rest of the way to school, the feeling of his muscles moving and the way air brushes across his face... It makes him feel alive.

It's not that hard to know where Kyoya is upon getting through the school gates and gives a wave in said direction without flickering his eyes in said direction. For some reason, since age eight, he's always been able to sense where Kyoya is within a mile range. The older teen hasn't come online but for some reason, he figured that the Prefect could go in either direction, something to do with the purple with indigo that the chains under his friend's skin seem to suit both.

Doing his best to empty his mind, he enters the special room that are meant for Sentinels. Given his young age when he went online, a lot of his studies had been him alone in a computer room. He'd join his age mates for lunches and gym. Tsuna doesn't get why he couldn't just stay at home for his computer lessons but figured it had to do with keeping him socialized. Given how it's more common for people go online in their late teens through thirties, there hadn't been a special room designed for Sentinels kids and then, when tested for his ranking, it's hard to say if it would have been a wise investment.

There's rare cases of kids between ages of ten to fourteen coming online so there's more suitable rooms designed with Sentinels in mind since he'd turn ten. Although, he'd been the only one to make use of said rooms up a few months ago when Yamamoto Takeshi went online during a baseball game. It's clear that the baseball player is having trouble coming to grips with being a Sentinel, sure, the other is only rating two but senses involved are sight and smell, which relates to the other's taste buds. The other teen had to give up on eating his favorite junk foods along with eating his typical fast food, plus he's been having trouble learning to cook food.

"Hey Tsuna!" Takeshi chirps with a semi-fake smile, which he returns. "Takeshi."

Settling down at his table, he slings his pack off his shoulder and onto the hook next to his seat. There's likely a number of social cues that been skipped between Takeshi and himself but, well, he's found being polite to be near the bottom of his priority list, the last slot on that list is caring about his absentee father. He gets rather impatient with people, it's not about how they are, it's just... within a few minutes he Knows things about the person that he shouldn't or want to know.

It's like how he knows about Takeshi's problems with adjusting without Takeshi mentioning it or about how his progress when it comes to his cooking lessons with the Cooking Club, what little of it there is. Tsuna glances over to where Takeshi is seated, looking rather bored and loose. He's thankful that smell is one of Takeshi's senses or else, he'd have to worry about scented soaps and detergents from the other teen.

Soon enough, their computers power up and as the booting menu finishes, the school bell goes. The first class program loads itself and he unplugs the ear bud along with turning off the notebook phone before taking the mechanical band from his left hand off, putting it on the table top. Putting the plug for the ear bud into the computer's headset jack, he checks to be sure the mouse works before putting in his Student Identity Number and then inserting the Student ID into the card reader, thus begins his first lesson of the day.

It's been three days since Reborn showed up claiming that Tsuna's going to be the next Don of some Mafia Family due to him being descended from the founder of it. It's not going to amount to anything, he knows for certain, the events that lead to him coming online as a Sentinel saw to that. It also seems as though Reborn is very skeptical of him being a Sentinel, something to do with Skies always being Guides, there's mention of him might being in some kind of Hyper state. It hardly matters if Reborn does or does not accept that fact, in fact, it hardly matters what said shrunken man thinks as far as Tsuna is concerned.

The Cursed Man is a rank two Guide along with, well, Cursed, with a capital C and it's a clear case of it destroying him, bit by bit. There's a number of bank accounts along with aliases, some the man remembers and others that he's long since forgotten. The man's loyalties lay in the criminal underworld and he's a Sun. There's a number of titles the man claims ties to but the one that's overtaking his identity is that of Sun Arcobaleno, which is also the source of the Curse that's leaching what it can from the man, mostly the hitman's Dying Will Flame, pretty much every second of the day, every day of the year.

Tsuna finds it hard to even Look at the shrunken man as he can't help but see the effect of the Cursed Stone that's steadily consuming the man. Yes, there's an ironic bit of karma about how this man is dying viva the Curse but at the same time, it would be a fair greater mercy to just rip the man's head off at this point. It's the easiest method of freeing the man from the Curse and it would also get rid of the passive influence that the Curse has on the man's surroundings.

Was Reborn beyond 'redemption', well, not, but the Mafia Hitman isn't looking for redemption. Was the man heartless? No, but that doesn't mean Tsuna is incline to give the man's emotions any consideration. After all, Reborn's only here for one singular reason, one ultimate goal...

That's to do whatever it takes to shape/break/mold Sawada Tsunayoshi into a Mafia Heir, regardless of his opinions or desires on the matter. The man doesn't see Tsuna, thirteen year old Sentinel and youngest one to come online in recorded history. No, the Cursed Man only sees Tsunayoshi 'Dame-Tsuna' Sawada, who's the son of the Young Lion, one Iemitsu Sawada, an Active Sky (and thus an offline Guide), a naive child, and a civilian boy.

It's only a matter of time before the Cursed Man tries something in regards to proving that Tsuna isn't actually a Sentinel, likely by showing off how skilled of a Guide he is, even if he's ranking two. And he's going to let the man try, after all, if the Cursed Guide fried himself, he'll be out of Tsuna's hair for a few months...

It's that intuition blaring that shakes him out of his Zone and he evades the shoot to his head, Reborn had taken and destroyed the poking device by the end of the first day. Over the course of the last two, now three, days since, he's been Zoning Out into his thoughts more and more. Without the device, he can't easily change what's coming to him through his ear bud either, until the replacement arrives, and it's been ordered to Hibari Kyoya's place to keep Reborn from taking and destroying it as well, he's pretty much on his own with trying to keep from Zoning Out, which he has trouble with even with said device.

There's a few more shots that seem oh so slow to him and are so simple to evade without needing to move more then a few inches at most. Doing so always aggravates Reborn, particularly how effortless he makes it seem as the shrunken man prides himself on his accuracy. And just as the next shot it about to come, the Cursed Man does what he'd been waiting for, he doesn't feel anything but his intuition almost seems to snarls in triumph and the feeling of the gun vanishing causes him to turn in the direction, to find that odd lizard trying to get a response from the Cursed Man.

With a snort, Tsuna pulls out his device and puts on We Are the Champions by Queen as he turns away. He heads to school feeling highly pleased at breaking a cherish belief of the prideful Mafia Hitman along with Knowing it'll be some time before Reborn will recover from trying to mentally intruding on a Sentinel that's beyond his ranking. It wouldn't have helped if the Cursed Man used his Sun Flame to go beyond his normal ranking in a temporary manner either. Not when he's considered beyond the current systems ability to assign an accurate rating as a Sentinel, sixth rating Sentinel is pretty much what's put down, after all, there use to be no way that there could be a Sentinel go beyond rating five.

Staring at the gaijin laying on the bed pretty much dead to the world, Kyoya finds himself smirking in dark pleasure at the sight of the Baby Carnivore that's been causing trouble for his Sky, the Omnivore

Sphinx. Arrangements had to be made for this one's recovery and the current condition of this gaijin shared with the Dragon Carnivore, given that the two are Baby Carnivores. It takes him a few seconds to think of how to go about doing the latter.

Taking out his phone, the Cloud takes a few pictures from different angles before taking pictures of the medical report he'd gotten his hands on. Then it was a matter of finding the Dragon's Contact Number and texting the pictures to said number. Walking out of the room, he pockets the cell, it shouldn't be too long for a gaijin or two to show up to deal with his Baby Carnivore, already plans are in motion to send him to another hospital's long term care ward for Guides who 'burnt' themselves trying to reach a Sentinel outside of their ranking.

Given the difference in ranking and rating, the disruptive gaijin will be recovering for over six months, and that's likely with Flames involved to speed up the recovery. After all, his Sky very much didn't care for the fake baby or else the other would have called attention to what happened with said Sun it seconds after it happened. It had been nearly two hours before anyone found said gaijin and called for medical assistance.

Whether or not the Baby Carnivore learnt anything from the encounter with the Sphinx is hardly a problem, given it's going to be a very long while before the prideful Baby Carnivore re-enters his Territory and attempts to Tame his Sky for another goals.

"Have you seen Reborn?" His mother asks as they settle down to eat. There's a few dishes that were clearly meant for said 'tutor'.

"Not since I was walking to school." Tsuna admits with a bit of a shrug. "Maybe his parents finally showed up and dragged him home?"

His mother sighs a disappointed sigh, but seems to accept his suggestion. "It would have been nice if they showed up here to get his belongings before they did so." He raises a slight eyebrow at that comment but decides to not comment as he begins to fill up his plate without a certain pest making comments about him being picky over what he eats and doesn't eat while doing his best to keep said pest from contaminating his food more then the other already likely had.

For the first time in four days, he eats his fill and is relaxing at the table, talking to his mother about his day along with how Takeshi and him had preformed during gym class. His mother slowly talks about her meeting with his school's principal and how it went about trying to get him to attend normal classes with his peers, which, didn't get approved. Tsuna hardly cares, after all, just because Takeshi is getting reintegrated with their peers doesn't mean he's able to and it's only for a single class anyway. Given how common rating one and rating two Sentinels are, they tend to have an easier time finding Guides capable of helping them out of Zoning Out, so much so that they to have a compatible Guide to do so.

Rating three Sentinels are more uncommon but ranking three Guides are still fairly common, so neither need to Bond. It's when it comes to Rating four and five Sentinels that finding the right Guide becomes an issue along with the simple fact that this is where finding such high ranking Guides are more sparse compared to the Sentinels of said rating. It's actually rather odd when one considers the number Guides tend to always out number the number of Sentinels of any given ratings.

"Are you sure your not upset? Your friend might be getting fully integrated next semester." His mother comments in a concerned tone and he gives her a smile.

He knows Takeshi's not going to go for that, not when the other is distancing himself from his old 'friends' and teammates. With Tsuna, Takeshi's been slowly but surely relaxing from the mask persona the other had developed over the years, not that he'd noticed at first, after all, he's hardly had any social interaction with his peers. It had been more of a comment from Reborn that had him evaluating the difference between how Takeshi use to act and how he acts around him these days to realize that the other teen is more relax in his presence and doesn't smile that fake smile when it's just the two of them during school.

"I think the school won't do that due to the fact that it would keep me socially isolated during school." He remarks. "A lot more of my peers spend more time with me when Takeshi and I are together." Plus, they want me to spend more time with someone other then Kyoya for fear I would finally pick up his incline of 'biting people to death'.

His mother seems to consider that. "There should be more Sentinels coming online in the next few years anyhow, so, even if that happens, I won't be alone in class anymore." He adds after a few seconds of silence and that seems to cause his mother to nod, rather firmly, in acceptance.

"And my Tsu-Kun will be there to help them adjust." She says with a bright smile, worry about his isolation clearly beginning to fade from her being without Reborn here to contradict that or strengthen her worry about raising a Sentinel child 'right'. He's gives her a smile upon hearing that, glad to see the self doubt fading from his mother's mind.

There's something... off with the silvery haired teen and it's not about the other's smoking habit or jewelry choice of metal skulls. The teen is the transfer student that's been hinted at last week, a transfer from Italy. Reborn arranged this. Tsuna muses at the teen.

Reborn's been moved to a 'special' hospital in one of the wards of Tokyo, he's unsure of the name but it's located in Setagaya though. He's pretty sure that Kyoya had been sure to be the one to see the Cursed Man out of Namimori. Tsuna didn't care whether or not Reborn recovers, there's no way he'd inheriting anything concerning the Mafia Family, let alone the post of Don.

While Reborn's 'prints' are all on the silver haired teen, it was something arranged before Reborn ever arrived. It's an example of clear confidence that things would go as Reborn had planned. What a ego the man still had, even after getting Cursed, huh? Tsuna mentally muses to himself as he turns away from the teen.

As he stops before entering the classroom, he notices Takeshi frowning down at the keyboard. Knocking on the door frame, the other gets startled before turning to look at him. The fake smile shrinks into a softer one. "Tsuna! Did you... Ah, well..."

"The transfer? Yea, I saw him. I didn't get close." Tsuna admits as he walks over slowly towards where he seats.

Nodding, Takeshi remarks, "He's a smoker... Although there's more... chemicals on him too."

"I'll be sure to say upwind of him then." He promises as his noses wrinkles at the mention of chemicals also clinging to the silver haired teen. His vision alters and he gets a good look at Takashi's blue chains that lurk under the other teen's skin. It fades but Tsuna had stopped moving as he finally recalls that yes, the chains hadn't been under the silver teen's skin, but wrapped over the skin. Yes, there had been other colors but it hardly mattered as the chains hadn't come from within the teen but from without.

"Tsuna? You ok?" There's worry in Takeshi's tone and he blinks, giving the other teen a slight smile.

"Yea, just recalling another detail of the transfer." He admits honestly. "I'm not sure what to make of it."

"Oh? Was it the dress code violation?" The other teases and he snorts in amusement, yes, he's close to Kyoya but he's not overly interested in up holding every little detail of the school rules.

"No, it's... it's about something I Saw when my vision... changed." He admits. "Those chains that are suppose to be under the skin? They weren't with him, they covered him, outside of his skin."

"Huh, that's... strange?" Takeshi asks and he nods. "Most chains I've seen are in the skin or originate from within." He recalls the mess that is Reborn's chains, how they'd erupted out of the skin with flecks of 'skin' clinging to some of those links, how those chains would constrict and relax... Never mind the horror that had been the Cursed Stone's thorny vines and how they try seem to be reaching out to some unknown location.

"And his doesn't?" The other teen reasons and he nods in agreement. "I wasn't close enough to see them in any great detail though." He admits with a slight frown and then, after a few days, shakes his head before heading to his usual table.

Takashi hums before turning to face the computer. Taking out his cell, he opens the Notebook App, typing out a note about the observation. He'll mention it to Kyoya at lunch through a text message too.

- = After - School = -

"What?" Tsuna finds that breathing through his mouth isn't working very well and with how close the young Guide, who's a ranking one, is. He also gets a fair better look at the spiny chains that cover the teen, the spines digging into the skin.

Hayato glares at him with a ugly sneer on the face. "You heard me! You don't deserve to be the Tenth Don of the Vongola Famiglia!" The teen repeats himself, clearly trying to be threatening, which, well, Tsuna's friends with Kyoya, so, yea, it's a pitiful attempt in Tsuna's humble opinion.

"No fighting on school property." He parrots to Hayato. "Be prepared to be bitten to death, by the way." He takes a few steps away so that Kyoya can enter into the teen's view.

"What the hell are you talking about?!" Snaps the silver haired teen and Kyoya is already surging forward. "For attempting to bully a fellow student, you will be bitten to death!"

There's a look of betrayal on the teen's face and parrots out, "Sentinel Students face suspension if they get into a fight with an offline students or lower ranking Guides." If the rating and rank were equal, well, both got into trouble, after all, both were on a level playing field. "Prefect Hibari, I don't feel like filing a report as it is his first day and clearly, he's yet to adapt to his new school."

Hayato evading attempts of Kyoya flatter at the mention of Sentinel and he gets a glare at the mention of filing a report. Not paying full attention on Kyoya, the silver haired teen takes a blow to the right shoulder, which sends the teen to the ground. Kyoya is going rather easy on Hayato, not that it matters as the teen pulls out a stick of something that looks like dynamite.

With a shake of his head, Tsuna steps further away and prepares for the scream of pain that follows. It happens quickly as Kyoya hits the teen's hand, causing the unlit dynamite to fall before the tonfa gets slammed on the teen's forehead with ease. Hayato drops to the ground fully unconscious from the blow.

Kyoya shares a look with him before reaching down and carrying Hayato to the Discipline Office to file a report. Tsuna walks forward and with a wrinkled noses, picks up the stick of dynamite. He does his best to carry it downwind of him as he follows after the older teen. There's a strong smell of cigarette smoke clinging to the stick along with the smells of chemicals used in making it never mind the personal smell of Hayato.

Meeting up with one of the incoming Disciplinary Member, he hands over the stick with a simple, "Evidence from Hibari-sempai's latest... case." The teen nods as he takes it from Tsuna and then heads off, taking the stick else where, leaving Tsuna to head straight for the set of rooms that Kyoya had claimed for his Disciplinary Committee Offices.

It's not overly long before he arrives at the rooms and waits outside, time tick away as he listens to the sounds of nature in his ear bud while the device on the back of his left hand taps in time with water dripping. Kyoya's Second in command arrives, Kusakabe Tetsuya, they study each other before the Guide, ranking four, enters into the office. "Your friend is at the door."

There's a simple grunt and Tetsuya gives him an apologetic look, which he nods, before closing the door. Taking out his cell, he finds something to watch while taking out the other ear bud to put into his ear. It's an old anime called Inu-Yasha and begins watching it as he does hear Hayato wake up, soon enough, he's filtering out anything besides the anime's music and voices. It seems that one of the tropes of the anime is that demon's don't possess Guides and Sentinels, the half-dog demon that's the male lead isn't a Sentinel but the female lead is a Guide though, ranking five at that.

He gets to the fourth episode when there's a tapping on his shoulder. With ease, the playing stops and he takes out one of his ear buds, his senses finally acknowledging Kyoya's presence and filling his senses. So close and he can heart Kyoya's steady heartbeat with the rhythm of breath as the lungs expand and shrink. The scentless soap used on the cloths, the scent of mild mango hand soap that the washrooms offer, and the smoky smell that hints that the young man before him had carried Hayato here like a sack of potatoes. He can see the texture of the school uniform, spying an old stain that had still marks the threads, and which parts of the cloths are getting worn away faster then usual.

Kyoya taps his forehead, bringing him out and he also notices the frantic tapping on the back of his left hand. Blushing, he closes his mouth and wonders what he'd talked about while he'd been Kyoya's presence in. It's not the first time he's blabbered about something he had no way of Knowing. It's why Kyoya compares him to the legendary Sphinx as some of what he says might not make sense when he says it but, given time and review, it becomes clear.

"So... expulsion?" He asks curiously and Kyoya lets out a simple grunt before turning to walk down the hall way. Tsuna follows after Kyoya, they'll be heading to a local field for their spar.

Huh, I would have thought Hayato would have been expelled... Guess Reborn set something up in advance. He muses to himself.

- = Time | Flow = -

It's a month to his fifteenth Birthday and yet the baka of a Cursed Man seems as confident as before the incident upon returning to continue on as his 'tutor' after a year of needing to recover. The only change seemed to be the acceptance that Tsuna is actually a Sentinel and a high rating one at that. The baka Sun still seems to think that he's capable of molding Tsuna into a Mafia Don.

He never was around when his sperm donor is, so Dino is the first Sky he recalls meeting. He's not really listening to the non-sense the two Mafioso as his attention is on the odd cloth that's covering the Mafia Don's 'heart' in the chest. Yes, there's chains within Dino's skin but there's some that are not unlike Hayato, ones that are anchoring themselves viva metal spines. Tsuna's beginning to suspect that the external original spiny chains come from outside sources while the chains lurking under the skin mean that it's internal.

Tsuna's noticed a few that were much like Hayato more often then not, that they are covered in chains and is getting fed Flames, being filled with Flames that's not his own. Not all of those getting fed Flames seem to be able to use them, it's like they're more there to act as Flame reserves then being able to use them for themselves. It's rather off putting, in truth, like they're not really human human , just human .

Still, the cloth around that 'heart' is rather strange. Tsuna mentally admits. It takes him focusing on the cloth to notices a thin thread that snakes out of the cloth and following it, it goes to the jewelry box and then there's a thinner, finer thread that goes out of the house. It's clear that the cloth and thread are... nicer(?), well, they look better then the thorny vines of the Cursed Stone.

Tsuna automatically bats the jewelry box away from him as he tries wonders if he possesses a cloth around his own 'heart' like Dino. Although, he suspects that like the chains, he doesn't, not that he likely won't spend a few hours tonight checking before a mirror to be sure of that. As the jewelry box comes near him once more, he slaps it away once more as he begins to come out of his thoughts concerning the cloth and it's importance to Skies.

"Not mine, don't want it ever, and it won't have Me ." He states flatly and with that, heads for the stairs to go check himself over for thread and cloth. Evading the fired bullet is easily done while ignoring the baka man's commanding tone.

- = After | Midnight = -

He wakes just as the ring is about to touch his skin. Tsuna misses keeping the wrist from letting go but as the ring falls and touches his skin, it jumps, orange sparks across his skin. The ring speeds away from him, the chain snaps easily as the ring attempts to burrow into the brain of his well fare supporter, sperm donor viva the forehead.

The words that come flowing out of his mouth, he doesn't need to understand as he already knows that he's cursing the two supposed adults out on their stupidity and how often they must have been dropped for them to be brain dead. The ring does stop trying to bury itself in the brain of the narcissistic Sky and he's already out of bed and carrying the Mafioso out of his room, down the stairs, and tossing him out of the house viva through the god damn door. "And stay out, you fucking shit stain of a yellow bellied coward!"

"Out!" He snaps at Reborn, pointing at the door while glaring at the fucking baka Sun. " I. Said. Out. " He commands, his words fueled by fury and empowered by his Flame.

It's a battle of wills that the baka Sun loses and out the Cursed Man walks, in a daze. Once out, he walks over to the door frame and within second, the door is repaired and a barrier set up to ensure that neither of those two Mafioso can enter into the house, at all. Noticing Dino, who'd been invited to spend the night, "I am not going to be a Mafia Don. I do not care about the Mafia. I will not be responsible for that ring killing someone over this issue."

With that, he marches back up the stairs and into his room. Once in his bed, he finds himself emotionally drained and does his best to get comfortable. It takes time but in the end, exhaustion finally drags him into thoughtlessness of slumber.

- = Ring | Battles = -

Kyoya's prissy about the location while Takeshi is brooding over the lack of listening to Tsuna and he's no better as he's furious about being forced to attend this mockery. Ignoring the other teens and the one actual kid, Tsuna wants to splatter his sperm donor's brain upon the wall behind them, never mind the desire to crush the baka Sun's tiny throat with his right hand. "What part of I. Can. Not. Be. A. Mafia. Don. Do. You. Fuckers. Not. Understand? " He growls as he glares between Reborn and sperm donor.

Ignoring the comments from what amounts to the peanut gallery, particularly the being blackmailed/threaten members of it, he reaches out to the ring around the sperm donor's neck and channels his Flame around his hand. Soon enough, the both rings begin to act up, the one that's under his hand and the one that's under blackmailed's shirt. Then, the two half ring seem to vanish before a ghostly image of a blond man he kind of resembles appears, the completed ring at the 'heart' of the ghost.

"Explain to these idiots why the ring won't accept me! Explain the details of that deal you made when you accepted that ring too." Tsuna snaps and then glares at the robot. "And somebody get that man to an elderly care facility! He's mentally incapable of continuing to be the Ninth Don given his current medical state! Or put a bullet in his brain as a mercy kill! Which ever! I don't Care, just get him out of that mecha suit!"

When nobody moves, Kyoya proceeds to joyfully rip the robot apart to reveal the cause of all this stupidity. "I wasn't that bad... Was I G?" Murmurs Ghostly Ancestor.

"I'd say you were far worse, actually." This ghost got formed seconds after Kyoya started in on ripping off the metal panels of the mecha suit. "As for the why... It's not just because he was kicked out of the Family as a five year old, is it?"

"What?!" Is the most common sentiment that gets roar from many members of the peanut gallery, which causes Tsuna to glare at them for causing his ears to ring. His Ghostly Ancertor gives him a pitying look while the peanut gallery all chatter among themselves while his only good for money sperm donor tries to snap at blackmailed about the mecha suit/robot thing, not that blackmailed seems to care.

Putting some distance between himself and the others, who are all so interested in speaking at once, which isn't good for his now headache. Rubbing his temples while Takeshi rubs his back, it takes a good hour before people have stopped talking over each other while demanding things from the Ghosts that haunt those rings or deflections from his sperm donor about said disownment. It's only just the two Ghosts that are visible though, but that's due to their rings getting fused as a single one at the moment.

The blond Ghost that is his Ancestor hadn't paid any of them any mind, his attention either on his companion or studying Tsuna and his two friends, there's a clear fond expression on the Ancestor's face upon seeing how close they are. And while the blond was doing that, G, the almost pink haired Ghost that looks a lot like Hayato... Or should that be that Hayato looks a lot like G? Well, G was snapping at various members of the peanut gallery and even got into an argument with both baka Sun and Hayato.

G's argument concerning Reborn seemed to do with the Sun being a Free Lancer thinking he had what it takes to train anyone to be a Vongola Mafia Don and a list of reason why the baka Sun shouldn't have been hired in the first place. The argument with Hayato had to do with Tsuna should never have been appointed as a Heir due to having been kicked out of the Family with sperm donor's approval, which means he's also been disowned by his own sperm donor as the man's son. This a number of other, minor, arguments that mostly didn't offer anything new.

He didn't miss the changes that happen when someone arrives about forty minutes into that hour either. How could he? When those thorny vines of the Cursed Stones go straight to said new arrival? There's stems that come out of the new arrival that lead to the rings and notices that there's no leaf buds or branches coming from the stems. While the stems look... better then the thorny vines, it's clear that the ugliness remains with the stems.

It takes a lot of looking but he does notice something akin to those stems and vines that exit out of the rings, heading off to someplace off in the distance. These look like leaves and flower petals overlapping, the ugliness is back at the level of the thorny vines though. The leaves and petals seem sharp plus rigid, in flexible compared to the vines and stems.

It's the silence that snaps him out of his reviewing of these connections between the Cursed Stones and the rings within sight along with the mentally skimming of conversations. "So... the deal... It's... Well, I'm not naturally a... 'Guide', particularly when I was alive." The Ghostly Ancestor begins, glancing towards sperm donor and Dino upon mentioning that. Blackmailed's eyes narrow at noticing that, which makes sense, given both of them sport cloths and threads leading to that ring.

"I came online, as you call it these days, as a... 'Sentinel'. A rather sensitive one at that." Ghostly Ancestor glances at him, there's a slight pause before continuing. "It was... G couldn't help, he just wasn't capable of reigning me in, he can notice when I start to Drift and snap me out of it before I fully did but... when he wasn't around to..."

Tsuna didn't have to guess overly hard over what that must have been like. "I was... At times I just... I'd speak without realizing I'm doing so or suddenly just Know things about a person or an event... Insight into things I had no right to Know about... Could see things about other people that they didn't... It was blasphemous and yet, oh so helpful, even though it was akin to Witchcraft..."

All things he has experienced and it's clear that those invisible Ghosts seem to be hearing about this for the first time, so it was clearly a secret that was only shared between G and his Ancestor. "So when She came with the ring, it's offer of power, I bargained for something to... dampen my senses or to be changed... Sepria... it took a while to convince her but, well, she agreed. So, she flipped my... status and in doing so, it became half as strong as my previous state."

"Of course, if a descendant of mine fights against the ring, that they'd void the deal and the blessing would be withdrawn, leaving them to their natural status." Ghostly Ancestor states with a sigh. "And Tsunayoshi fought against being Flame Sealed when he'd been five and had just fully gone Active."

Oh look, the sperm donor would be dead seconds ago if looks could actually kill, particularly given that both G and Ghostly Ancestor both glared at the Sky. "Which kick started his... Tsuna going... online as you call it, after recovering from failing to win against getting Sealed. Which, in turn, got rid of the Flame Seal as the blessing was gone and Tsuna was able to access his full potential."

"That's what I've been seeing with Dino and sperm donor? That... 'blessing'?" He inquires but suspects he is already in possession of the information.

"Yes, I figured out how to share the blessing, which allowed me to regain access to my previous status, for a time. They called it a Hyper but the truth is, if not for the blessing, I'd always be in that state." Confirms Ghostly Ancestor. "Which lead to the belief concerning Skies being Guides." Mutters blackmailed.

"Half... so I'm actually a..." Dino's eyes widen as it sinks in that Dino's a rating four Sentinel instead of a ranking two Guide. "The blessing also disentangles Sky Flame from the senses, which was why I seemed to be a Witch." Admits Ghostly Ancestor. "As a lot of problems a Sky... Sentinel gets comes from how their senses mix with their Flame. I'm sure you've all know examples of how those of other Flames influence the senses of either... Guides and Sentinels." His Ancestor glances around at the peanut gallery, particularly at the Storm with a crown and at the baka Sun.

The Storm doesn't seem at all squeamish at the attention while baka Sun merely tilts his head so nobody can see his eyes. "And since Ricardo and Demon decided to tie leadership to the rings... Well, I was more then happy to let them have them, after all, he was my half brother." Ghostly Ancestor admits with a shrug and he snorts, fairly sure that Ghostly Ancestor had known in advance that the rings would be forced out of his control before ever agreeing to the deal.

"And thus, bucked the responsibility of them." Snaps the silver long haired sword welder, who's a rating four Sentinel and Bonded to blackmailed, who's a ranking four Guide. Ghostly Ancestor shrugs, remarking, "The bargain never stated how long they'd be in my possession." There's a slight smug tone in there plus a slight smirk.

"I picked Japan for a reason , after all. It was far from the Vongola and Italy, thus the rings and my direct descends wouldn't be put on the spot on whether they want to feed a broken and unfair system but have tamed senses or refuse but find themselves overwhelmed by the very world around them." Explains Ghostly Ancestor. "Of course, exceptions happen." There's a clear sour and look of disapproval given to sperm donor.

Sperm donor does try to defend himself but Ghostly Ancestor's attention has already moved on. In the end, it's clear that Ghostly Ancestor doesn't support sperm donor's life choices, not at all. "So... the rings are Iemitsu then." He muses and that seems to cause the peanut gallery to give him glares and looks of disbelieves. "Yes, I guess he has." Admits Ghostly Ancestor, which causes a lot of conversations to erupt about why Iemitsu can't become Don.

It's at this point that one of the ghostly observers decide to become visible along with engage in the conversation. It's the blond that kind of shares a kind of look to Kyoya. Another ring fuses together and begins talking in Old French, pretty much giving voice to his thoughts on the matter. It's like the signal was given and the remaining ghostly observers cause the rings to fuse, becoming visible and very vocal about their thoughts.

Although the moment the one that looked like Mukuro appeared caused the blond Kyoya's jaws to clench before pulling out a set of old looking hand cuffs while surging at the Mist, who's likely Demon. "I'm done. I'm off." He tells Takeshi and Kyoya.

"Hmm... ok, I guess we're good, after all, I did put those wireless cameras around here like you asked." He blinks, wondering when he'd asked his friend to do that but recalls the minor incident last week along with what happened with those mini wireless camera had gone. "I can watch it later."

Kyoya huffs and crosses his arms over his chest. It's clear that Kyoya's staying behind and as he nods. With that, Takeshi and Tsuna slip away without his Ghostly Ancestor or G drawing attention to that fact.

Now... Who was it that I entrusted the data storage too? Tsuna wonders as they get off school property.

He hadn't expected any of what's happening on the monitors to ever come to pass. In fact, Byakuran hadn't known anything about this... 'blessing' that Giotto had arranged on the side with Sepira. Nor suspected that Giotto could be that sly! So, that's the secret of the Hyper Mode? That most of the Vongola Skies are Sentinels that are artificially held in the form of Guides? The holder of the Mare Ring muses.

Unknown to the would be Conqorer of the World, this would be the start of him questioning why his so-called parallel-selves hadn't shared that detail with him. Which would lead to his investigation of said parallel worlds and into the Ten Year Territories that the broken system called the Tri-Ni-Sette got tinkered into creating. Which would lead to the end of said system in turn, but that's another story for another time.

"How interesting... You sure you're getting all of this, Ire-kun?" The ranking five Guide asks curiously, he gets an agreeable grunt from the rating one Sentinel. "Excellent!" He states with a wide smile, watching the first generation Cloud and Mist taunt one another in a familiar fashion.

The End

Familiarity Reflected P 1: Naruto

I don't own Naruto or The Scum Villain's Self-Saving System!

_[^ _ ^]_/

It's a strange world, Naruto finds himself in. It's even stranger then the usual Loop when a strange screen pops up and welcomes him to the [Proud Immortal Demon Way] and to the role of Protagonist. The entity called itself a System and informed him that he's currently five years old and his adopted name is Luo Binghe. It hopes he has a good time during his stay in this world and promises they'll get in touch in the future.

With that over and done, the former blond enters into a meditative state to see what he has access to. In the end, he's coming on empty for his usual abilities along with finding his pocket dimension is blocked. There's an energy he can feel flow through him along with noticing another minor blockage, it takes him time to realize it's akin to a Bloodline Seal.

Before leaving his current state, he considers unlocking the Seal before recalling the title of this world and his current role of the Protagonist. It doesn't take much for Naruto to realize what's likely locked behind that seal. Leaving it be, he comes to his senses and begins taking stock of the place he woke in.

He also finds his hair is not only not blond but it's long, longer then it had when he'd Awaken in Hidden Leaf as a child. It takes some time before Naruto gets an idea of what his features are, he still has his blue eyes but there's no whisker marks. Other then the whisker marks, longer hair, and hair color, he looks like he usual does.

Hunger isn't that much of a stranger and so, he walks through the house, it takes him a bit to explore the kitchen. Naruto heads out of the house and begins making a mental map. It's not long before he learns a number of things from the taunts of the kids.

One, 'Luo Binghe' is a foundling babe. Two, his features mark him as a child of a 'mixed' couple. Three, demons do exist. Four, there's Cultivation Sects. Five, the local written language is 'modern' Mandarin. Sixth, 'Luo Binghe' adopted mother is on the low end of the social ladder. And seventh, his luck remained, so far, his gambling luck is still good, which likely means that his whole luck is the same.

It took much of the day to investigate this world. He'd also managed to keep his winnings and noticed how the native power is a double edge sword. Which means he can't treat it like Chakra or magic from the Harry Potter universe. Naruto figures that he's bound to enter into one of the sects of this world if he want to learn to harness it.

Arriving at the house, he hopes that the winnings will help with expenses. Naruto finds himself hasting from entering the tiny house before finding the courage to enter, it's an odd experience, having a parent to welcome him home. "Welcome home, Bing-er." The woman says and he does his best not to wince at the name that comes out.

"Mother." He greets in turn, his emotions are mixed. Looking off to the side, feeling rather shy already.

In the end, the woman approaches and pulls him into a hug. Naruto isn't sure what to make of this but decides to just... go with the flow, for now.

(: - T - :)

It had been hard, oh so hard to keep Luo Tingbao alive. It had been something of an uphill battle to get her to accept the various gambling winnings he's won through various means but she gives in as she began to get sick. The money that had been stored in a box gets used for her medicine and for groceries instead of being saved for his sake. There's plenty to keep the family of two in descent shape for a year, that's without him using his very decent bargaining skills or more gambling earnings.

[Congratulations! Congratulations! Congratulations! Good things must be said three times!]

So, he's a bit startled when the System makes his appearance. "Thanks?" He murmurs and the screen vanishes, he runs a hand through his still black hair and it's longer now. He'd have cut it if not for the fact that long hair is more in style then short hair.

[It is no mean feat, keeping Luo Tingbao alive!]

Oh boy, that's not something I really want to hear. Naruto mentally admits, it's been years since he woke in this world and, honestly, they weren't all that bad. Sure, he'd been viewed with hostility by the local kids and the adults murmur darkly about how he's a drain on his poor adopted mother but that changed, it had been fair easier to change their points of view of him then when he's usually living in Hidden Leaf Village.

Then again, there's a far lower population and the memories of a gigantic ass crimson fox Chakra entity sporting nine tails never haunted their dreams. There's always other things to gossip about and he'd long since proven himself more then capable of defending himself. His odd luck had struck a few times over the years but he'd always been able to return with something to show for it.

[Beginning of the plot have begun. Please make arrangements before leaving by the end of this month to Cang Qiong Mountain Sect to begin the story plot!]

"Story plot?" Naruto repeats with a slight frown as he considers if that's a good thing or not. It's not like he doesn't know that there's an anime and manga based off of his universe, which spawned video games and, in one universe, a massive online role-playing game for a virtual reality game system. That had been one weird fusion universe, replacing Sword Art Online with Shinobi Nations Unleashed. Naruto admits ruefully.

[The story plot of Proud Immortal Demon Way! As the current Protagonist, it is up to you to walk the path of the half demon Luo Binghe!]

Blinking, he sighs as he runs a hand through his hair yet again before rubbing his neck. "So... I go join this sect and I'm guessing that Seal comes undone at the worst possible moment which results in my getting kicked out? Maybe imprisoned for the crime of being a half demon?" He guesses, some stories are rather straight forward like that.

[Protagonist is very wise! ^_^' There is only two story plots that Protagonist can not escape!]

"Oh?" He murmurs, curious about these two inflexible points.

[Protagonist must train to become a Cultivator and Protagonist's Seal will unravel in time for Protagonist to enter the Endless Abyss! This humble System suggests escaping into the Endless Abyss if current Protagonist doesn't wish to be imprisoned!]

"So... I don't need to become a member of... this mountain sect?" Naruto inquires and gets the same smile sweat emoji from before for a few seconds.

"I guess there's no harm in trying to get in..." He admits and he's awarded with a beaming smile emoji.

[Reminder, please leave to journey to Cang Qiong Mountain Sect at the end of this month!]

With that, the System's screen vanishes, leaving Naruto alone once more with a touch more questions about the world he's current in for the Loop then before. Shaking his head as he pulls his hand away from his neck, Naruto considers the plans for the future concerning how to keep Luo Tingbao from working herself to the bear bone while he's gone.

Going to have to inquire about what to expect becoming a Disciple of a Cultivator Sect. Naruto mentally muses. And why this mountain sect in particular?

(: - T - :)

Shen Qingqiu... Is a bit of an asshole. Naruto decides as he does his best to mind his manners as he follows behind the Peak Lord and his newest Sensei. It's clear that the man has issues, having seen a simple exchange between Shen Qingqiu and Yu Qingyuan then how the man treats Ning Yingying.

Given how coldly the man had regarded Naruto, it's clear that he's not going to have change the Peak Lord's low opinion of him with a simple meeting. Which is fine. I'm actually not a teen and I'm not inexperienced with using my words.

The silence between the three is fine, he's doing his best to remember what he can about how to speak formally, going over how to do that within his own mind. Speaking third person... Man, what a drag... Naruto mentally admits to himself.

At least the scenery is nice to look at. The Looper admits to himself as he notices the landscape. It's been years since he's seen the forests of Hidden Leaf or the cliffs that seem to loom over the village.

It's not the first time he wonders about the length of this particular Loop, after all, the longest loop tended to be the Hogwarts one after all, which is more of an eight year Loop then seven year one. Still, the length might have to do with the setting... Naruto admits as he considers what little he knows about Xianxia, which is suppose to be more influenced with Taoism and Buddhism then straight Chinese martial arts that is the Wuxia genre, of which Ranma's world tends to heavily lean into.

What he knows about either genre isn't much nor does he recall anyone ever Looping into a universe based off of a Chinese work before... Well, does Dragon Ball really count? He wonders as he recalls something about the Journey to the West being what Dragon Ball is based off of.

After a while, they seem to arrive to the correct peak viva a interesting bridge, which is called the Rainbow Bridge. "Ning Yingying, this Lord has other business to attend to." States Shen Qingqiu.

"This student shall prepare her shidi for Shifu!" The teenage girl promises bowing and he does the same. The Peak Lord walks away without looking at him at all.

Given he's unsure if he should address the Peak Lord without being addressed first... Either way, his silence could be put down to any number of causes. Not that Naruto had much time before his, maybe, Yingying-shijie excitedly grabs his arm and begins pulling him away from the spot. She's chatting excitedly as she tells him about the dorms, the lessons, about how great Shen Qingqiu is, and how excited she is to be his shijie.

He's taken to the dorms to get a uniform along with getting cleaned up from having dug a hole in the dirt. In all the number of Loops he's experienced, Naruto never thought he'd be tested by his ability to dig a hole. And yet, in this Loop, in this world, he had been and it seems that his efforts was enough to get him pass the first hurdle.

To fully finish getting accepted in, his next task is to make an acceptable pot of tea. Which he's been practicing once he learnt about how this generally goes upon his Intel gathering during the month he had to ensure his adopted mother's taken care of in both house and income while he's away. Looking at himself viva the mirror, he sighs as he tries to recall the few simple hair style's that look ok on him along with recalling if he's ever been able to do them.

In the end, Ning Yingying helps him get it all into a simple high ponytail with only a hint of a braid. If only I can keep my hair short... The Looper thinks to himself in despair.

"Shixiong! Shifu got me a shidi!" Ning Yingying states to the older teen.

"This humble one greets shixiong." Naruto says simply while doing a polite bow, his gaze down in the acceptable manner. He'd noticed the narrowed eyes and the emotion that burns in the older teen's eyes.

"A-Luo! This is just a formality! You're already a member of the sect!" The naive teen states.

"This one doesn't dare make assumptions concerning his acceptance at this time, shijie." He states as humbly as he can, doing his best to keep his emotions off of his face. It's been centuries since he's found himself at the bottom of the pecking order, truly at the bottom with no experience to really fall back on that would allow him to ignore any hostility coming from either teachers and/or older students. Nor can he access his pocket dimension that has any number of resources could rely on to help him in this regard.

He has little knowledge about Cultivation, even less about the world that he's been living in. It's not just demons that prey on humans, nor just demonic beasts but also spirit creatures and, perhaps, deities as well. He's a novice in this regard and he's more then likely got a number of habits that he'll need to break from in order to make full use of what's going to be taught along with harnessing this world's special powers.

Naruto's never read anything that could have prepared him for this Loop and, well, knowing that there is a plot to this whole thing means that there's a series of books that must exist, somewhere, that likely has the information on this world and it's people. Given his two interactions with the System, he's pretty sure that this is getting recorded too. Which, well, he wouldn't mind getting a copy of what's being written, honestly.

The older teen finally finishes studying him and it's from within the bamboo house that the Peak Lord's voice comes from. "This Immortal is waiting for his cup of tea." The older teen seems to startle, getting a touch pale and that's something Naruto files away.

What follows is just shixiong and Naruto entering the house with Ning Yingying getting dismissed. Both bow before the Peak Lord and he is sure to keep his eyes lowered. Soon enough, he's charged with making a pot of tea and he's sure to thank the man for the honor of doing so. Again, it's a toss up on how Shen Qingqiu takes that statement before he heads for the kitchen area.

It takes time as making tea isn't a fully homed skill of his. Still, he remembers the steps and does his best not to rush it. Given the leaves he's working with, Naruto can only hope that his previous experience helps here.

Then again, given the sour look upon Ming Fan, the two had taken to speaking of business and thus he's been able to gather the name of the older teen, he must have done enough right when it came to the making of the tea. As he prepares the tea tray, he muses on which of the two are going to act as he brings the tray to the table. Doing his best, sets up the tea pot and the cup then filling the cup carefully before setting the pot down. With the tea served, Naruto walks to a position opposite of the Cultivator, and then, as best as he can, sits down, just not right at the table though.

Shen Qingqiu takes a sip of the tea and Naruto waits patiently for the man before him to speak. Silence hangs in the room, it's tense but, well, Naruto's experienced such before, although, despite himself, he finds himself feeling invested in whether or not he's been accepted into this mountain sect, as a student of this particular Peak Lord. Another sip of tea does little to dispel the tension but, previous experience continues to help him from displaying his nerves.

It's been sometime since I've met someone able to make me feel like an inexperienced child. Naruto mentally muses. In some ways, Shen Qingqiu does come off as untouchable as the post is said to be, but life experience means he knows otherwise.

This man isn't unfeeling nor as aloof as expected of an Immortal Master. There's a man, a bit spiteful man, but still a man before him. As the third sip comes, it's Ming Fan that begins to fidget along with displaying his own nerves, not that Naruto turns his eyes from Shen Qingqiu to acknowledge that little fact.

He's not sure when this became a battle of wills but it had. In the end, just as he's thinking of lowering his eyes and apologize for his rude staring, the Peak Lord inquires, "And what does this boy think of this Immortal Master?"

"This one sees a man." One in a powerful position. He states honestly and there's a sharp intake of breath from Ming Fan. The fan that had been in the man's hand opens and the Peak Lord begins to fan himself.

"Is that all?" Inquires the Peak Lord and he takes a moment to consider how he's going to respond. "This one hopes his answer did not offend Master Shen."

There's a hum from the man and then there's a change in their conversation, the man drinking more of the tea, the tension lifting. The next topic concerns what he expects from his studying and Naruto's reply is knowledge concerning himself and the world around him, it's both honest and the truth.

There's probing questions from Shen Qingqiu about topics he dimly recounts, doing his best to give an answer within an acceptable amount of time. Yes, a lot of his answers are likely far more blunt and direct then is likely polite but his ability to keep up with this alien polite way of speaking is taking its toll upon him. The cup of tea gets refilled by Ming Fan and another sip taken.

When the probing question touch on his family... "This one doubts Master Shen would like to hear this one prattle on and on about this one's family." While it would be a unique experience to speak fondly on his adopted mother... Even though the mood seems to be more friendly, in the end, he's hear to learn how to Cultivate Immortality and this is an interview with his... boss. His personal life isn't of any importance to Shen Qingqiu in the end and given what he knows about this particular peak, most of the male disciplines come from well off families along with being third or more sons.

"Indeed, this Master would not." Agrees Shen Qingqiu with a clearly approving glint in the eye. Thus ends the interview and the man informs him of how to make a better pot of tea.

He bows as he thanks the Peak Lord for his criticism and swears to get in more practice in the future. Then Shen Qingqiu informs Ming Fan to give him a manual so he can begin cultivating. He's sure to bow in thanks to first Shen Qingqiu and then to Ming Fan, being sure to refer to him as shixiong as they haven't been formally introduced.

As they leave, they both say their farewells to their master and official teacher. It's clear that Ming Fan isn't happy with his acceptance nor did it escape the older teen's notice that he'd left a good impression on their teacher. As they walk away from the house, he does his best to inquire about his sleeping arrangements along with his lesson time table.

Just because he's inexperienced when it comes to cultivation doesn't mean he's a novice in human interaction. So, yes, he can tell when Ming Fan is lying in answering his subtle probing for answers. Given the foul mood of Ming Fan and the slight glee when the other gives him the manual, he suspects foul play concerning said book but easy thanks are spoken. He'll have to seek out a different student to get a new one, it shouldn't be hard as he quickly skims through the book, the things written within won't cut it for his usual modified academy books. Those, at least, had some grains of actual teaching then just meaningless advice or descriptions.

He's to sleep in the wood shed until there's a free room in the dormitories. Naruto merely nods in acceptance, although he suspects there's more to this sleeping arrangement then just that. He'll be sure to look into getting warm blankets for the foreseeable future.

Alone within the wood shed, the System screen pops up with congratulations for becoming a Disciple of Qing Jing Peak. Naruto merely hums as he finds a spot to unroll the bedroll. It's been a tiring experience with Shen Qingqiu and he'll go through the faulty manual for a bit, hopefully its not all garbage, not that he gets his hopes up on that.

After all, fake cultivating manuals can be found throughout this world. The idea of achieving immortality is likely a commonly dreamed dream that many scam artists have profited from. He can only guess how many kids had their dreams ruined by unscrupulous rogue Cultivators as well.

I didn't see anyone I know... Am I the only Looper here? Naruto wonders as he settles down on the bedroll.

It's a very familiar ceiling. There's a highly familiar presence next to him. The thing that bothers Shen Yuan is... it isn't his husband who's sitting next to his bed.

What follows next after addressing Yue Qingyuan is something he hadn't experienced in decades, not since they lived pass the ending of the novel. The System pops up and greets him, welcoming him back to the start of his journey. He's informed that his previous unlocking of the OOC Function will be reinstated in an hour's time but for now, it's active. And so, he takes the fan that's next to him and opens it, questioning his 'friend' about what's happened while he'd been down with a fever.

In the end, Yuan sees the Sect Head off and despite his current looks, he's grieving inside, mourning all that he's achieved and despairs over the thought that his Binghe isn't with him here. That his Binghe will wake to find himself alone, without his husband next to him. By the time the OOC Function has been reinstated, he's not sure if he can stand to see this world's Luo Binghe.

In the end, there's a knock upon the door frame and a voice calls out, "Master Shen? This disciple has brought teacher tea." The voice is... odd and unknown to him.

"Bring it in." He orders once he's in the kitchen. With a fan covering his face, Yuan watches as an unknown teen enters into the house with a tea tray. It's the eyes that catch his attention, their coloring is fetching, it's rare to see a blue of that shade.

As the tray is set down, the unknown student regards him with mild interest. Walking over, Yuan sits down and the teen serves him the tea. "This master wishes to speak with his youngest disciple." Best not use Luo Binghe's name.

"This disciple is wishes to know what Master Shen wishes to speak with him about." And that startles him, although it likely doesn't show. He already triggered a land mine and now he's not sure how to disarm it!

"Does this disciple know of Luo Binghe's current progress?" Cause, fuck it, he might as well ask this stranger straight out about the protagonist. "This one dares not gossip about such a person." Replies the youth, there's a slight glint in those sapphire blue eyes.

"This Master would like to know his student's opinions upon his shixiong's progress." Yuan reaffirms and a smile breaks out across the youth's face. Silent laughter shakes those shoulders and he glares at the teen, not seeing what's so funny.

"I'm currently holding the post of Luo Binghe." States the teen after releasing a snort after taking in his glare, the teen moving to sit across the table. "So... first time Looping or does this have to do with the System?" The teen inquires and he mentally blanks while doing his best to wrap his head around the thought this... youth is suppose to be his Binghe's replacement?!

"Uzumaki Naruto, by the way." The teen admits and once more, he's at a loss of words as he stares at the teen claiming to be one of the most popular characters of Japanese animation. "Looper and yea, let me guess, anime and manga right?"

"So... what happened to the actual Shen Qingqiu? Cause, I'm fairly sure, you're not him." Naruto continues.

"Not sure." Yuan finally admits and Naruto sighs, looking regretful, which is odd, then again, it's clear that the original goods hadn't seemed to perturb the suppose to be blond ninja. "Shen Yuan, husband to Luo Binghe."

"Hmm." Hums Naruto and he shifts a bit. "Looper?"

"Not unlike the groundhog day movie, only, the loop contains years instead of hours." Explains Naruto and he mentally sighs, this sounds like a Fan Fiction story. "There are times when the start of the Loop gets pushed back by some years, so, it's not my first time Waking as a child."

He takes a sip of tea and it's good, not as good as his husband's, of course, but decent until this... Loop ends and they're back together. "So, if you are here, then he's in Hidden Leaf village?" He reasons and Naruto shrugs.

"Don't know, there could be more people swapped around. It happens, sometimes, although generally we keep out first name if not our whole name." Admits Naruto. "I've replaced other main characters, like Ranma and Ichigo. Although, generally, first fusion end up attending Hogwarts in the Harry Potter Universe from beginning of First Year to the end of the Seventh Year."

He guesses that the Ichigo would be the main character from Bleach while Ranma would be from that harem anime about a teenager cursed to change into a girl with cold water and back to a boy with warm/hot water. Again, it's sounding a lot like this story just crossed into Fan Fiction. "So, he's likely attending Hogwarts and learning that system of magic, which is rather straight forward and easy."

"And if not... He's learning to be a ninja." He reasons and Naruto gives a slight incline. "Either way, we won't know until this Loop ends and things get rearranged to how it's suppose to be." The youth admits.

Yuan reasons that everything is going to be fine then. Once things have run their course and thus the Loop ends, he'll be reunited with his husband once more.

And then, the door gets flung open and Shang Qinghua, who's Airplane Shooting Towards the Sky, Airplane for short, begins to blubber on about how Mo Beijun isn't himself. It's clear that Airplane hasn't registered his guest. It's not long before his fan finds a spot upon his shidi's head.

"He's the author of Proud Immortal Demon Way." He explains and Naruto blinks with clear surprise upon his face while Shang finally notices the teen sitting across from him. "..." The author is clearly trying to wrap his mind about this while Naruto just seems content to wait. "Airplane Shooting Towards the Sky but you know him as your shishu Shang Qinghua."

"Bro, who is this?" Asks Shang and Naruto introduces himself, "Uzumaki Naruto, currently taking on the role and post of Luo Binghe."

"So... what's this current Mo Beijun like? Physically I mean?" It's clear that whoever replaced Airplane's husband is likely another Looper and thus, someone Naruto would know.

Airplane shoots him a clear what the fuck look but he just opens his fan back up and fans himself before drinking more tea. In the end,

Airplane gives up the details and Naruto hums, "So, Gaara's here too, huh?"

"We'll have to take your word for it." He sums up and Naruto snorts softly.

"Oh, it's him, by the sounds of it. He's just likely pissed off at being an actual demon more then likely." Naruto explains. "To be honest, I'm not thrilled with being half demon myself." Admitting with a slight shrug, "I'm sure you both can guess why."

Thinking about who the two were and their cannon histories, yes, Yuan can see why neither would like to be demonic in any shape and form. "You've read my work?" Asks Airplane and Naruto states a simple, "Nope, it's a detail the System mentioned. It also mentioned the Endless Abyss and how I should flee into it to avoid imprisonment for when the seal breaks."

"To be honest, I don't know much concerning Wuxia or Chinese novels. Nor am I overly familiar with Xianxia either." Admits the anime character from Japan. "I'm not sure I'm using either of those terms right, either. Most of us have encountered more fusions with worlds based off of Western and Japanese works of fiction and some worlds based off of games then... Well, any other worlds based off of any kind of works of fiction or games. It's likely due to English dubbing honestly."

While honest, it also caused a number of questions to be raised, namely, what changed? And, does this mean that Proud Immortal Demon Way is going to see itself getting fused or cross with other works from now on? Does this mean that they'll be separated from their husbands on a more regular bases? For years at a time?

Meeting up with Gaara had been slightly difficult to arrange but worth while in the end. Naruto got a good look at the changes his fellow jinchuriki, Looper, and friend. In turn, the currently older Looper got an eyeful of the changes to Naruto as well, what with the lack of whisker marks and blond hair, which is now rather long.

He hadn't pressed either Cucumber-bro, Yuan, or Qinghua, Airplane-bro, for plot details as, well, the System only said he had to worry about the Endless Abyss story plot now that he's succeed in learning to become a Cultivator. The world is different due to both Gaara and himself being Loopers, why else would it congratulate him on keeping his adopted mother, Luo Tingbao, alive?

"So... how's life as an Ice Demon?" Naruto asks once they are in a private room in a brothel, it was more secure then a private room at a restaurant or tea house, given the usual activities that happen at a brothel. "How's life as a half demon?" Counters Gaara.

"Not sure, Bloodline Seal." He remarks cheekily and a wide smirk. Gaara scuffs but relaxes a touch, which turns his smirk into a fond grin.

After a few minutes, with the arrival of a jug of wine, Naruto begins talking about his years as Luo Tingbao's adopted son. Gaara listens and shares a bit about his current father, admitting to having a better relationship with an Ice Demon then his usual, surviving parent. As they empty the jug of wine, Gaara's gotten onto ranting about his current uncle, who's his father's younger brother, and the things guy's done in regards to trying to screw with Gaara.

As he gets another jug ordered, Naruto brings up the few situations that had happened during his own childhood and providing for his adopted mother. They both enjoy having another Looper to talk with, the fact that they're good friends is just icing, really. Then he inquires about the Endless Abyss and, well, the Look Gaara gives him clearly means that there's more to that location then just the name.

This time, it's Gaara who orders the next jug, although, he in fact orders two. Well... This is going to be a long night. Naruto realizes as he waits for Gaara to figure out where to begin.

The Loop of the SVSSS World Ends Here.

Author's Comment:

Part 2 will feature Mo Beijun and Luo Binghe at Hogwarts along with meeting other Loopers.

Yea, I'm revisiting Loopers trope here.

Familiarity Reflected P 2: SVSSS

I don't own Harry Potter, Naruto, Ranma 1/2 or The Scum Villain's Self-Saving System!

_[^ _ ^]_/

It's a strange world beyond his eyelids. He'd been sleeping next to his husband and since Luo Binghe opened his eyes, he's no longer an adult nor is his beloved next to him. In fact, he hadn't been laying down when he woke, but sitting and leaning against the glass window.

Sitting across from him is someone who's features seem similar to someone he knows, but it's hard to pin point the who plus rather short hair. Perhaps if we were in a different setting? Binghe muses before it dawns on him to look down at himself.

The cloths were different then the boy sitting across from him. They seem to be a single shirt under a jacket of questionable material. Then he's wearing pants that are clearly worn and light blue in color. The shirt and pants are rather roomy.

Taking in the rest of the small room, he notices chests on a rack above the stranger's head. Getting up, he finds his foot wear to be rather roomy, he wiggles his toes a bit before focusing on checking the rack over his own head for a chest. There is one and as the boy begins to stir, Binghe has the chest down and going through the contains.

The characters on the various covers he can understand, even though he Knows he shouldn't. The titles of the books themselves are strange and yet, he finds other questionable items. So absorbed with searching the contains of the chest, he forgets to keep an eye on the boy across from him.

So he's caught off guard when a stick gets pressed at his throat. "Who are you?" The other demands coldly.

"Luo Binghe." He states and the stick moves a bit before he turns to let the boy get a good look at his features. "Where are we?" The boy finally asks upon moving the stick, that's sporting a carved handle that's reminiscent of snow and ice.

"Mo Beijun?" Binghe inquires and, yes, he can see his second in command and husband of the cowardly Peak Lord in the boyish features. It's clear that, some how, the former Ice Demon has been transformed into a human.

"It seems we've been de-aged, dimensional placed, and transformed into humans." He hadn't thought to check if he had access to his two styles of Cultivation but doubts they had access to it. Or that it's been replaced with... magic.

"It seems we're on our way to a 'school' to be taught magic ." Binghe expands on as he puts most of what's within the chest back, there's a Property of Binghe Luo on the underside of the lid. "Your chest of belongings is on the rack over where you had been seated." While mentally deciding to see if he has his own stick given it must be of some importance, he thought he spied black wood on his left arm.

Once he's put the chest back onto the rack, he has a book of charms for First Year and checking his left arm, finds a hostler plus a ebony wood stick that sports carving of flame upon the handle. Mo Beijun seems to be meditating while holding onto his stick. Opening the book, Binghe begins reading while leaning against the wall while tapping the stick with his index finger.

The door opens and both of them react, although the former Demon Overlord is faster. A jet of force erupts from the point of his stick and a rush of snow flows seconds through the now empty doorway. "What the fuck? I mean, really, the actual fuck?!"

"Really, Sasuke? You just opened the door without any warning, it's only polite to knock before entering a compartment." Another boy's voice remarks, there's a touch of humor while the downed child, who's hair is rather short and reminiscent of a water fowl's butt.

"Shut it, Kiba." Snaps the boy, who's getting up off the ground. His own stick out and within seconds, the melt of the snow vanishes with a simple flick.

"Yo! I'm Kiba Inuzuka and that's Sasuke Uchiha." The boy sports spiked dark hair but the most notable features is the markings on the face. The cloths look more like Binghe's own then Mo Beijun's, in fact, both are dressed more like him then like his second in command.

"Luo Binghe." He introduces himself to the pair while Mo Beijun does the same. "It's Binghe Luo, although given the jun at the end there, that's more of a title then an actual name." Remarks Sasuke as the boy's gaze settles on Mo Beijun, and, well, thinking about it, he realized that the stranger is likely right, not that it had mattered to him before.

"Might want to share your actual name, we're going to be hearing it come the Sorting Ceremony." Pipes in Kiba. "And given we haven't heard anything concerning Naruto or Gaara, guess we're not going to be seeing them this Loop with these two here." Adds the checked marked boy while it seems that Mo Beijun and Sasuke are having a staring contest.

"What do you mean by... Loop?" He asks as he closes his book after making sure to memorize the page number. The two names they mention don't mean anything. It's also about this time that he realizes that they seem to be moving.

The pair share a Look before they enter into the... compartment as it's apparently called. The door gets closed behind Kiba with Sasuke beginning to explain about Time Loops and touches on the likely hood of Naruto and Gaara likely having taken up their lives in their Loop. Binghe doesn't like the idea of someone else marrying his Shizun but then, he tries to comfort himself over the fact that maybe it won't be Shen Yuan that's going to be who his replacement is dealing with but Shen Jiu and, maybe, Shen Yuan is here in this Loop with him, only in his original body.

It's not long before the topic goes to Hogwarts and the fact that they've got almost a decade of magic lessons along with a minor civil war, which may or may not happen. It depends on the local native Looper by the name of Harry Potter. They also get visitations from various people that are from the same universe as Kiba and Sasuke but also from another universe that's typically called Ranma one half, named after the protagonist.

Then again, the universe the ninjas come from is also named after the protagonist, Naruto. Binghe considers the idea of said person living his life and is only really calmed down concerning the fact that Naruto is straight, same with Gaara, not that they out right say so, it's mostly what he gets from listening to stories told about the number of misadventures the... blond has gotten himself into and out of.

Feeling more assured that their replacements aren't gunning for their respective husbands.

(: - T - :)

The ratty old hat sings. Binghe has seen many things in his long life but a singing hat? That's something strange, even in his books it's a little out there.

Then the sorting begins and the hat gets placed onto the heads before it calls out the name of a house. Then an almost familiar name gets called, "Mo An."

Scowling, Mo Beijun stalks up to the stool and after almost a minute, the hat proclaims, "Ravenclaw!" With that the former demon heads for the table that sports blue as a color of the house and its animal is an eagle, even though it's name suggests a black carrion bird.

A few names getting called and them getting sorted before the deputy calls out, "Luo, Binghe." He walks up to the stool and the hat gets placed on his head.

'Well, well, well, another odd case, huh? Hmm...' The voice of the hat murmurs and he can tell that the hat is going through his memories, there's not much he can do to stop it though. 'Hufflepuff and Slytherin would suit you best.' The hat informs him. 'Any preferences between the two?'

Hufflepuff please. I rather not deal with self important brats. Binghe informs the hat. Working hard... It's something people had forgotten was a trait of his, once upon a time. 'And being loyal to that Shizun of yours. I suggest not taking anything Professor Snape overly serious though, even if he does remind you of Shen Jiu.' Then says out loud, "Hufflepuff!"

And so, he walks over to the house that sports yellow as a house color and the animal of a badger. He's greeted warmly by his new house membership and a few more names get called before there's a massive hush when Harry's name is called.

Then, after a few seconds, whispers murmur over the Boy-Who-Lived and he wants to ask about what's up about the title. Then the hat proclaims, "Ravenclaw!"

While most people cheer, he notices the Loopers' reactions along with something getting exchanged. It seems they placed bets on which house Harry was going to be sent to. Noticing the look of a pout on Ron's face, it's clear Ravenclaw isn't the usual house that Harry joins.

The sorting continues until the last person get sorted into Slytherin, then the clearly elderly man in brightly colored cloths stands, says a few things before speaking nonsense, which causes the feast to appear. Binghe wrinkles his nose at the selection as none of it looks appetizing, not even the mention of pumpkin juice. Still, after watching his house mates pick and chose, he picks what is the least offensive, after all, it's been a long train ride and there hadn't been anything to eat during it, he gently refused the strange candies that various fellow Loopers offered him, although Mo Beijun ate a few of the chocolate frogs and a cauldron cake.

He sticks to water and there's lively talk about anything and everything. Binghe does notice a certain man who does bring to mind the Peak Lord who allowed his fellow disciples to bully him. "That's Professor Snape. He's the potion's professor. Be glad you weren't sorted into Gryffindor, he always has a bone to pick with members of that house." Explains one of the older students and he hums, having been warned by the sorting hat already, although there's more context about the reason why.

By the time the feast comes to an end, Binghe is more then ready to turn in for the night. If he hadn't been told about the usual schedule of events that are typical of Hogwarts, he might be incline to check out this forbidden room that the Headmaster makes mention of. He's already making plans to explore the Forbidden Forest and he'll likely bring Mo Beijun along as well.

He walks with his house to their dorms, making sure to memorize the route and taking note of the moving paintings while listening about what to watch out for when it comes to navigating the school. They get told about no boys in the girls dorms and which is which when it comes to the stairs. Reaching his room, it strikes him as odd that he'll be sleeping alone beginning tonight and for the rest of this Loop.

It's depressing but Binghe does his best to remind himself that it's only for a few years, that then he'll be reunion-ed with his beloved after that. Although, I'm sure Shizun would like some souvenirs from my time here... He makes a mental note to inquire of a way to do just that as he lays in his bed, waiting for sleep to come.

It's nearing the end of their summer and beginning of their second year, Binghe's spent far more time of that summer studying various subjects and learning to tolerate various quirks of the other foreign Loopers. He's gotten along with a few of them, coming to enjoy their company while others tend to annoy him to no end. Thankfully, by the end of the second week of summer vacation, the shared manor saw most of the Loopers heading out of the United Kingdom for various reasons besides relaxing vacation.

So, besides Mo Beijun, who's family in universe owned the so called 'Looper Manor' they are living at, Choiji, Hinata, Nabiki, Sai, and Shikamaru. Other then putting up with Sai's 'off colored' jokes, most of the others seem content to keep out of his business along with not trying to spar with him or Mo Beijun nor did they invade his personal space. They did seem to raise a bit of an eyebrow at his wanting to do house hold chores without using any magic, he would have been happy with also being the only cook but he's not the only one who finds cooking relaxing so there's a rotation between Choiji, Hinata, and himself.

He's been an experience being able to learn to make various meals along with discovering just what kind of ingredients there are, given he's been unable to convince the House Elves at Hogwarts to let him use their kitchens. Binghe learnt a lot about how to use the various appliances from watching Choiji and Hinata cooking and recipes that they were willing to share along with how things work in a few other universes they've visited like Star Trek and it's Replicators, which sounds disdainful in Binghe's humble opinion. He'd asked about how various magical beasts and plants get cooked only for them to not know, it seemed that said creatures and material are generally used only for potions or, in the case of hides of certain beasts, cloths.

From Hinata, he learns that there are Acromantula in the Forbidden Forests, a species of magic spiders that aren't native to these lands. Binghe wonders if their spider silk could be turn into cloth. It's also good to know that none of the others are incline to overly care if the population decreases as far to many bad experiences have happened, not that the magical spiders are aware of their previous actions.

There's also other magical species, be it plant or beast, within the forest that interest him, an example is this breed of magical winged horses that can only been seen by those who have seen death called Thestrals. He's been warned of that there are Centaurs, being that sport the upper body of a humaniod and the bottom half that's the body of a horse. that won't take kindly to anyone wandering about. Racial predigest is still a thing and there's far more non-human races to get smeared with discrimination, which is reflected back on humans, although with few avenues to pursue it.

This world is larger then expected. Binghe ruefully admits to himself as he walks through what's called a mall. He's window shopping as it's termed as unlike Mo Beijun, he is still working on creating a dimensional pocket to store souvenirs for his beloved Shizun.

He's wearing a black long sleeve shirt sporting an image of a red sword with a tassel that's creating a circle, it's been transfigured from a bunch of leaves. The pants are dark blue jeans, Binghe only used magic to darken the color of the material. The black with red trim had been a pair of flip flops, which seem to be poor quality sandals. His hair is done in a high pony tail.

The two who accompanied him to the mall are Nabiki and Sai, both had split to go their own way as well, trusting that he's more then capable of fending for himself. Then again, Binghe does still have that cell phone that was given to him at the beginning of summer and is on him, it's Messaging allows for him to contact either if he runs into difficulties plus it's got a GPS, which can lead him to either of their locations viva the Contact List. This world is so different... I wonder if Shizun's original world as like this?

Still, he's out of the house that's seeing the return of the others, which is why he decided to explore the non-magical side of this country. Perhaps next summer, I can't arrange a trip to China? It's suppose to be similar to home. The former half demon muses as he enters into what appears to be a clothing store, he has some money so he can purchase what catches his interest. The amount is two thousand pounds and he's been assured that's more then enough for his first trip, he's also been cautioned that bartering with the cashiers is useless as they aren't responsible for the prices listed.

The styles are not all that different then the examples he's been shown by the others, the difference is in 'brand' and size, never mind color or the 'prints' either ironed on or woven into the cloth. For all that the Wizarding World is supposedly backwards, it's style of dress is a great deal more familiar then the mundane styles, then again, he's been told, if he's looking for cloths in his usual style, he just needs to find the right retailer or find a tailor willing to do a private commission.

After a while, Binghe wanders out of the shop and it's not long before his phone vibrates in his jean's pocket. Pulling it out, he finds a text from Nabiki, it's a group text with Sai along himself, inquiring if they're done. Sai tests back that he's waiting in line. Both happened about five and two minutes ago. It takes him a bit to recall how to bring up the keyboard and taps out a reply of his own, mostly stating he's ready to leave. A few seconds later and he gets directions to where Nabiki suggests they meet up at.

Typing a simple reply, Binghe pockets the phone and takes a few seconds to take a look at the store signs. Once he's got an idea of where he is within the mall and general idea of which direction he needs to head, he does so. Not long before his phone vibrates again in his pocket but he ignores it as he is getting closer to the location.

It's not long before Nabiki is within his sight, she's been sorted into Slytherin and the second Looper to Wake to the Ranma one half time loop. She calls to mind a mature Sha Hualing and from some jabs, it sounds like she'd only been concerned with money. There have been some suggestions of watching or reading the various works that relate to their universes but, other then watching Naruto and up to the cliff hanging episode they had when it came to Naruto Shippuden, they have yet been able to get more episodes for the series.

"Nabiki." He greets the page cut hair girl. "Binghe." The girl returns before her gaze goes back to the phone in her hand.

A few minutes later, Sai arrives while carrying about seven bags, it's hard for him to pick out what the bulk is but then, the bags sport different store logos, which mean that he's visited various shops. "Nabiki. Binghe." Greets the artist ninja, even Binghe admits that the other is talented when it comes to drawing and painting.

"How many more note books and pens plus pencils did you need?" Nabiki inquires curiously, which is a bit ironic given she's running something of a Black Market concerning 'muggle' goods that ranges from selling soda and junk food to novels of various kinds and basic stationary items. He admits, pens and pencils are vary decent compared to brushes and feathered quills, although finding the right amount of pressure to use to write clearly while not snapping the tip or the body of the item.

It's something he's sure that Mo Beijun have been purchasing a lot of to give to Shang Qinghua for the Peak Lord's personal use as the mousy man does have a hobby of writing stories. He'll be spending a lot of money on various book series, that includes the limited selection of fictional books that the Wizarding World have published. Binghe also needs to think of what to bring him for himself, knowing his Shizun, the man would be fussing over him missing this 'opportunity' while worrying over 'this old man'. So far, he hasn't found anything that he considers worth while to bring home with him, he's not sure how many of his newly learnt recipes would be something he could make once he's home.

After a bit of a chat between Nabiki and Sai, which he wasn't really paying his full attention to, they do end up leaving the mall and heading to a secluded spot to use the ability to teleport from one spot to another, it's called... Apparition. Walking before the other two into the alley, he hears a soft meow and curiosity causes him to wander over, he finds a moving bag in a box. The bag stops moving for a bit before a rush of movement happens.

Binghe rips the bag open to find a dirty kitten that looks up at him with two different eye colors, a blue in the left and a green in the right. The kitten blinks up at him and tries to puff up its dirty fur, which causes a slight smile to appear on Binghe's face at the sight. Kitten isn't the right word for the animal as the feline is over the cute, tiny stage and is clearly in the teenage stage, well, for a cat.

Ignoring the clear threat, he reaches down and takes hold of the feline, ignoring, a quick check, the young tom's angry noises. "Shencat." He decides, he recalls his husband mention a Bingpup and the playful threat of getting an actual dog to give that name to. Ignoring the bites and the scratches, he scratches Shencat's throat with his fingers while holding the young tom.

"Rather feral stray you picked up." Comments Sai with a slight interest shining in the other's eyes. Binghe merely hums as Shencat finally settles down under his scratches behind the ear. "Want to find a pet shop to buy it's things?" Sai asks, there's a slight bemusement hinting in that tone and he notices something going on with Nabiki in that she's struggling to not to grin or laugh.

"No, I'll just use magic to create what's needed for Shencat." He decides, he'd noted that none of the others had pets. As Nabiki and Sai exchange loaded looks, Binghe wonders if he honestly cared to inquire about having missed something. Maybe there's an unspoken rule about pets? Besides owls, given that they're mostly used for mail and don't seem to be pet pets.

Well, whatever. He decides as the two finish their unspoken conversation. It's likely that his Shizun will have gotten a dog and named it after him, not right away but certainty once he noticed Naruto and learnt about the Loop, there's no way that Shen Yuan won't be aware, that Luo Binghe is certain of.

With Shencat softly purring, he's carried along with Nabiki's Apparition, they arrive outside the front door. Other then giving the pair a raised eyebrow, Sai moves to open the door with Nabiki hurrying in after he does before Binghe does so. Heading for the bathroom in his room, he does note the looks the other Loopers get upon sighting Shencat but they hold their opinions to themselves.

You'd think I brought home... what's the term? Ah, yes, 'a ticking time bomb'. Binghe thinking to himself by the time he arrives at his room that has sports a bathroom.

Cleaning up Shencat, the tom turns out to be an off white with creamy brown markings in the form of stockings on the front legs and shorter socks on the back ones, the tail's tip is that creamy brown with the ears sporting that on their back. He allows himself to coo at Shencat, who's expression seems to read that he's only putting up with this for the coos and ear scratches.

Ignoring Ranma's glares, it seems that the pig tailed Looper has a hate/fear relationship when it comes to cats and the other Loopers forgot to mention why none of them had pet cats. While it's an odd phobia, Binghe isn't going to be getting rid of Shencat, which means that his interactions with the other to be tainted with hostility. It's fairly... nausea inducing with its familiarity and something that had been missing during his time at Hogwarts.

Although he's taken precaution concerning Shencat's safety in enchanting the collar and the metal bits with protection spells with the name plate sporting a location tag enchantment for him to find the tom if something happens and the feline gets lost or locked out. Binghe's grown attached to the young tom in the few days he rescued the feline from the tied up bag. There's no problem concerning Shencat coming to Hogwarts with him as cats are on the approval list concerning what one can bring as a pet, though he'd been persuaded to get a professional to check over the tom to ensure that Shencat is healthy.

On another note, it seems that Mo Beijun picked up a husband replacement as well, a hamster sporting brown and black. He's yet to hear what name his second in command has for the magical breed of rodent, given where they'd been when the former Ice Demon suddenly had the little beastie, who had been content to perch on Mo Beijun's right shoulder throughout the rest of the trip. Shencat had seemed curious about the little rodent but his interested waned a few minutes later, when the rodent seemed more interested in testing out the fur collar of Mo Beijun's robe. The fact that the little hamster seemed to have more of a back bone then the usual An Ding Peak Lord displays is rather amusing.

So, with Shencat resting on the rack over his head, Luo Binghe has a novel out and is content reading it, the title is called Dune. Sitting next to him is Sai while Ino is sitting across and next to Mo Beijun, who has the little hamster out and it's curled up in the fur collar, again, disregarding the fact that Shencat is in the compartment as well. Ino had been more then happy to coo at the sight, there have been many pictured taken of both the hamster and the owner since Mo Beijun acquired the hamster.

It's clear, given how many people have taken pictures, that most of the Loopers seemed to find it more interesting taking pictures of Mo Beijun and the hamster then Binghe and Shencat. It's fine, given there is something... bemusing in a charming sort of way seeing the hamster perched easily on Mo Beijun's right shoulder without a care in the world. It's something about 'tough and silent guy' having something as cute and charming as a tiny pet that seems to evoke more interest given how at odds it seems to be.

Mo Beijun does have a cage for the hamster along with the needed items to ensure the health of the little beastie, after all, his second likely can't bring his pet to class with him. Given the inner House relations, it's safer to leave the hamster in the Ravenclaw dorms. The same goes with all pets, well, except for the owls but then, it's due to them having their own place to roost and considering they aren't always at Hogwarts, given owls are working animals in the Wizarding World.

Glancing at Ino and then out of the corner of his eye, Sai. The pair have cellphones out and Sai is playing a game along with sending messages, both in game and out of it. Binghe can't see what's going on with Ino but given she's got ear buds in her ears, it might be a movie or music.

A single glance of seeing Mo Beijun with his tablet out, Binghe returns to reading his novel. Well, until there's a loud honking and glancing out of the window he spies Ron driving a flying car with Fred and George waving along with doing some exaggerate mouth movements that sum up as they can't hear anyone and up the volume.

"Huh, no Harry." Remarks Sai from behind him. "I saw him on the final car in a sleeping bag when I went for a tour of the compartments." Pipes in Ino.

"Ginny? Luna?" Asks Sai and Binghe glances over at Mo Beijun, it seems that there's another two Loopers, natives if he were to guess. "I've seen Luna... Ah, there's Ginny." Remarks the blond preteen girl.

Looking back out of the window, there's a red haired girl riding a pedal bike that's flying through the air near the back of the car, about thirty feet from the back of it along with a few feet higher in the air. If he's to guess, Binghe thinks about two feet higher then the top of the car. "So, who's turn with the diary? Given Gaara isn't here for his... time." Ino wonders and this is the first time he's heard of a diary.

"Is it important to the events concerning that... basilisk?" He asks curiously. "Oh, it's got a soul sliver of Voldie, a fairly large portion of it too." Explains Ino and Binghe frowns at the thought of someone dividing up their soul.

"It's one of the man's Horcux." Adds Sai as they watch the car and bike speed up, overtaking the train engine. "Horcux?" He parrots.

As they return to their seats, the pair of ninjas explain about Horcux and the many failings of one Albus Dumbledore in regards to how the Headmaster handles Tom Riddle and his merry band of Death-Munches. Which also gives both former demons a better understanding of what's considered cannoned events. The novel forgotten as Luo Binghe listens attentively to the narrative that the two are revealing, just taking it all in, for now.

Ending it Here!

Dungeons and Their Lords: KHR!

I don't own Katekyo Hitman Reborn!

Third party this week. The Dungeon Lord thinks with a sigh as he observes the party of nine Sinners or to use their self proclaimed title, Adventurers. The maximum party limit is fifteen for Entrance Hall into his Dungeon, which is officially named the Tenth Dungeon of Vongola, not that he has any idea of what a Vongola is, and unofficially now called as The Last Hope. Last Hope of what, he doesn't know but then, he knows his Dungeon is the last in the series of Vongola Dungeons so perhaps the last to fall? It's likely given the increase of Sinners trying to Conquer his Dungeon.

He knows there are other Dungeons, the Dungeon Interface grants him some history concerning the reason why Dungeons exist and that those who venture into them are Sinners, that they run Dungeons as Penance, Conquering it by killing him which destroys the Dungeon and causes the Sinners a step closer to Salvation. There's a lack of information concerning Dungeon Lords nor did the Dungeon Interface hint at where they came from. Nor does it ultimately matter, given that his job is clear, once he has Created a Dungeon, he is then to slowly improve it viva DP, Dungeon Points, which are generated passively daily based on what he has within his Dungeon or earned from his Dungeon killing Sinners venturing into it.

The Sinners revive else where after being killed in his Dungeon, as he's seen familiar faces among the Sinners party many times. Like now, he's noticing a familiar silver haired Sinner tossing explosive potions at his fourth floor inhabitants, Kobolds, the scale coated type not the canine ones. With a thought, he orders the approaching range Kobolds to target any flung potions and having the ambush Kobolds to go to the next room, preparing said room to ambush the approaching party. The bodies of the dead Kobolds fade, leaving behind Loot, not that the party of nine had much time to pick it up as two archer Kobolds slip into the room and begin firing at the nearest two melee fighters while more dart in, rolling to either the right or left of the door before joining the original two in firing at the party, the few potions sent flying viva the Alchemist Sinner are quickly sniped, which causes the Sinner to curse but to use the crossbow that was on the back.

His Kobolds harried the party but can't keep the powerful party from engaging the current Floor Boss, Ire of the Berserking Blade. There hadn't been enough time to grow attach to this Boss, same with the previous ones as well. Thankfully this one got a rare Perk that allows the Boss to get a rather huge boost to hitting the party instead of to damage dealing. He lets out a breath at the sight of a Sinner's death even though they did kill the Boss Kobold, revealing the fifth floor staircase, which leads to a floor that houses two types of monsters instead of just the single type of previous floors.

Leaning back, the Dungeon Lord smiles as the party is shocked at getting attack by two types, Bats and Rats, when the second party of the week had tried to Conquer his Dungeon, the Fifth floor had been home to only a single monster type, Giant Centipedes. Yes, the two new types weren't anything special but once this party is dead, he will use the DP earned from it to begin upgrading the two types. It also means that there's a mid-floor Boss and a final floor Boss. The mid-Boss is a rat named Lots-to-Bite, the size of a medium dog while the final boss is a bat named Screaming Winds, which is the size of normal cat.

Yes, the party did make short work of the various mobs of monsters but by the time they got to Screaming Winds, they seem incline to stop their Conquest of his Dungeon but the Alchemist Sinner refuses and pushing for them to continue on. He watches on, them quiting at this point didn't affect much beyond then a smaller gain in DP really. In the end, the party broke apart and all members are forcefully teleported to the Entrance Hall of his Dungeon.

He withdraws from observing the former party to begin spending his DP to improve the fifth floor. Once his monsters spawn, he upgrades them all before picking a bat for his mid-Boss and a rat for his final Boss, after all, it's best to keep changing it up to keep future parties guessing. The bat mid-Boss is named Taboo Bite and in possessing of a disease Perk while the rat Boss is named Flea Coat and the Perk is pretty much in the name, it'll mostly just cause minor bleed effect on the party whenever they attack it in close quarters.

Moving to the Fourth floor, he spends DP on the basic Kobolds, upgrading all to the various branches before selecting an ambush Kobold to evolve into the floor Boss. Baal of the Shadow Cloak is now the floor Boss and in possession of a Perk that grants the Boss a limited number of smoke bombs. He upgrades the floor Boss before moving to reset the various traps. He visits the other floors to upgrade the monsters there and picking a monster to evolve into the floor Boss, using DP to upgrade them to his satisfaction before resetting the traps.

His DP now low, he rather hopes that there isn't going to be another party tomorrow as he's got a Research Project going on and it'll be done the day after tomorrow. The Dungeon Lord goes through his Dungeon Interface, looking through the shop for better equipment then he's currently possessing before going over the Dungeon Stats. In the end, he dismisses it and gets up off his throne, stretching, his black feather wings arch out of his back and then up. His Race is Fallen Angel.

"I suppose it might be getting to the time I should upgrade myself..." He murmurs as he runs a hand through his long, brown hair, a pair of short horns coming out near his temples. Looking down at his current attire, he shakes his head before willing his wings back into his back. "Nay, best keep my focus on the Dungeon still. None of them have yet to make it to floor seventeen..." The Dungeon Lord reminds himself as he studies the Throne Room, to his right is the Armor Vault where the no-consumed armor gets stored while to his current left is the Weapon Vault, the doorway behind his throne and a good forty feet up is where his personal Crafting Stations are located, a minor balcony allowing him to land on it with ease.

His eyes take in the pair of stone statues, the featured beast don't fully fit in any descriptions within his Bestiary. Hooking his thumbs into his belt, he glances up at the large orange crystal that's lighting up his Throne Room easily, the various torches that once featured in the room have long since vanished, not needed it seems. "Observe." The Fallen Angel states and the same information filters into his mind, that the Crystal is now fully charged and awaiting the Final Assault upon the Tenth Dungeon of Vongola.

"Hard to believe, almost twenty years..." The Dungeon Lord, a Fallen Angel answering to the name Suna reflects. "I wonder... What should I get myself for my upcoming Twentieth Birthday?" He wonders out loud once he begins walking out of the Throne Room. His Dungeon is in possession of Twenty-three floors, his Room and Throne Room automatically move to the new floor once he evolves one of the floor monsters into a Floor Boss with no cost on his part.

It's not long before he's in his room and with a soft sigh, he heads for his pool for a soak. He doesn't need to be in his Throne Room to attend to his Dungeon, it just helps him get into the mood.

Hayato marches into the only bar after using his Teleportation Scroll to return to Victor Town, the nearest settlement near the final Vongola Dungeon, where his Sky and Boss is being held captive, at the mercy of the Dungeon Lord. The other nine Vongola Dungeons each had the former Dons as a captive to the ultimate Boss of the Dungeon, the so called Lords and each had a torture chamber. He orders a drink and meal before getting lost in his own thoughts.

The first Vongola Dungeon Lord had been a Flame Dragon by the name of Gooti while the second Dungeon Lord had been a blood red coat with dark orange striped Rakshasa, a demon that looks like a humanoid tiger with backward hands, named Ciro, and so on with the former Ninth Don had been held captive by a Barghest by the name of Itteo. None know that the Tenth Dungeon Lord is or name and body had every seriously tried to Conquer the Dungeon back when they first found it, not even venturing far into it, these Adventurers formed a group dedicated to Farming said Dungeon, it was a common occurrence a decade ago but now, it only gave said Dungeon Lords time to firm up their defenses, digging more Dungeon levels, and likely spending time torturing their captive Skies.

Yes, all the Dungeons scattered about this strange world are based off of those who once possessed the Tri-Ni-Set and unsurprisingly, those who had once held the Sky Pacifier prove to be far more numerous compared to the Mare Dungeons and the Vongola Dungeons. It's one thing to know that the Sky Pacifier existed before the two sets of Rings but it's another thing to see clear evidence of it. Not all of them are human either.

Mentally shoving that thought off to the side, he considers the fact that it's clear that the Dungeon Lord is changing the lay out of the Dungeon, after all, last time he'd been on the Fifth level, its monsters had only been Giant Centipedes and now, now it's got two monster types, Bats and Rats, which brought up the idea that the levels beyond the fifth might also have more levels where more then one type of monster holds sway. Hayato knew that this was a very unwelcome development and one he needs to tell the others.

Pulling out a notebook and begins to update the his information concerning the Last Hope's Fifth level. It's also the first time a mid-Boss monster ever appeared in any Dungeon. Please hold on a little longer, we'll get you out of there soon!

"Why would I want to Create a Shop?" Suna wonders in bewilderment upon skimming the Research Project and now actually reading it more carefully. "Out of... Why would I want to leave?" He can't help but find himself bewildered at the idea of leaving his Dungeon.

In the end, he shakes his head and moves to do something else, it's been three days since the last party of Sinners ventured into his Dungeon and he's got some DP to spend on upgrading Traps on the Fifteenth floor. As he finishes the final pit fall and moves to begin upgrading the arrow traps, the Dungeon Interface flickers off as he feels the first Sinner enter into his Dungeon. With little thought, he's now observing the incoming party, the Sinner Alchemist from before is again a member of this party. It's a full party of fifteen, each seem rather grim faced and one seems to Sense him Observing the happenings, a Sinner dressed in white with a purple marking upon the face.

"He's watching." The purple marked Sinner remarks and another Sinner, a trident welder, chuckles while at few seem to smirk in a blood thirsty manner. "Good, the trash and curse as we breeze through his fucking Dungeon." The Sinner that's wearing feathers in their hair states in a confident manner.

"We shall see, won't we?" The Dungeon Lord muses and sits back in his throne. "Let's see you lot make it pass floor Fifteen."

"VOI! Shit! God damn fucking snake!" Squalo bellows after one of the Spiter Snakes manages to fire venom into his face while Hayato curses while pulling out another Anti-Venom Potion. "VOI!"

They're on the Eleventh level of the Dungeon and this level is crawling with Giant Snakes and demi-human Yuan-ti. It's hard to know what you're dealing with in regards to the Yuan-ti they can transform into Snakes. The level is Jungle terrain and the scales of the two monsters help blend them into the terrain. It doesn't help that they've lost members of their party.

Lambo, Chrome, and Belphegor died to the previous final Boss, an Orc Shaman named Torn of the Phantom Tooth when the Boss summoned Orc Skeletons to fight by his side. The mid-Boss had been a Dire Bear named Demon, it very much did live up to that name, even entering into a Berserk state the moment it reached half of its life, never mind that it possesses the usual Rage Stat when at ten percent of health left. The size of each level also changes with the Eighth level being more focus on Problem Solving solutions then just wipe out all the monsters, a change given it once had been a Giant Ant level, it did sport some Giant Ants by the end and it's Boss had been a Solider Ant named For the Royalty.

It's clear evidence that this Dungeon Lord is evolving his level design, something rather unheard and causing them all to wonder if this Dungeon Lord knew that they Conquered the Ninth Vongola Dungeon about a year ago, thus realized he's next on their hit list. It means that this one is smart and has made good use of the pass almost twenty years. "I'm don't have enough to make more Anti-Venom potions." He says once they finish clearing the room, he's got two hastily made Anti-Venmon Potions on him, none of the Crafting Material could be used to make more without certain plants and Mukuro glares at him but even he can see that the Mist is reaching his limit, they all were honestly.

You'd think with the limit of fifteen members to a party, we wouldn't have this trouble. He thinks sourly as they all pretty much feel exhaustion. The old research concerning this Dungeon is clearly out of date and according to Byakuran, the Dungeon Lord hasn't done anything save for watch their progress.

"Anything?" Xanxus asks the former captive and the other Sky gets a thoughtful look on his face. "Just glimpses of the Sky Crystal in the Throne Room, it feels like its filled right up with Sky Flames and... we've got a lot of distance between us and said room."

His stomach drops upon hearing that, after all, the Ninth Dungeon of Vongola sported only Fifteen levels and no party has completed the Fifteenth level of the Tenth Dungeon of Vongola, few make it to that level in the first place. The largest Dungeon known since this began had been one of the Pacifier Dungeons, back before the term Acrobaleno was used, of Thirty levels. It had been one of those single theme Dungeons, which hinted that there might be some kind of bonus to sticking to a single theme for a Dungeon, but still, it had been possessed Thirty levels and caused them all to wonder just how many levels Dungeons can have.

"VOI! This fucker! Shit, you mean we have to use That Method? That we need to use that damn fucking coward tactic?" Squalo demands and it takes him a second to realize what method they are talking about.

Mukuro chuckles while Kyoya looks personally offended at the very idea they need to use it. "He's listening in." Byakuran reminds them all before anyone of them could think to comment on that tactic here.

"We're leaving. Scrolls work here, trash?" Xanxus asks and he shrugs, replying, "I don't think anyone tried to Teleport out directly, just at the Entrance Hall."

"Best not to tempt it, we know they have complete control over everything in their Dungeons." Viper pipes in simply and end the end, they head back the way they came. All the while knowing that they were dealing with a very smart and patient Dungeon Lord, who's got the final Don of Vongola captive.

"What method were they talking about?" Suna wonders as he floats in his warm pool, it's been a day since that party of fifteen Sinners quit on the Eleventh floor, staring up at the Mural overhead. It disturbed him so much that he hadn't slept well that night, curiosity eating at him, never mind the fact that the purple marked Sinner had been able to connect slightly to his Dungeon enough to glimpse his Throne Room.

The warmth of the pool doesn't help so, he calls up his Dungeon Interface and begins going through his Personal Equipment but then changes his mind about upgrading it, wanting to check on his Entrance Hall to see if any new feature got unlocked, nothing new greets him. The party limit is still active, same with the allotment of one party at a time, and so is the weekly limit, which numbers six for a week, almost one for each day of the week, he set it up back when that group of Sinners 'claimed' his Dungeon, keeping the party limit to six and the weekly runs to six as well. The Dungeon Lord mentally counts the tries of this week and sighs in relief.

His worry fades now that he's certain that whatever trickery the Sinners thought up won't succeed, at least, for now. It seems that I need more information about their tactics and it's clear, they are coming for me.

The Wave Method is simple but at the same time, it needs a lot of warm bodies to cooperate as a lot of parties will just be cannon folder, paving the way through the various levels. It's worked wonders with pretty much all Dungeons before, yet now, now it seems that there's a snag to their plan as it turns out, yes, you can limit the number of times a Dungeon could be run for a week and it seems that the Dungeon Lord of the Tenth Vongola Dungeon set the limit to six runs a week. It seems, upon investigating the previous members of that Farming group and found out that the limit has always been six and once upon a time, so had been the party size.

Now... now they're going to have to make each of those first five Wave Parties matter but first, they need to investigate the each of the levels so they can be prepared to defeat each level as fast as they can. Which means that he's going to be dealing with a lot of people he dislikes for the sake of rescuing his Sky and Boss, namely a certain Cloud and a deranged Mist. Kyoya Hibari and Mukuro Rokudo, their relationship hasn't changed much save that they now don't have a reason to get together as much as they once did. Honestly, he doesn't get how the Tenth once managed the two.

Anyway, he's heard about a new shop that opened up in Victor Town, the Adventure is a Mist from what he's heard as the owner sports a pair of short horns and the decor is Biblical themed. Hayato is hoping for a damn better selection of Alchemist Crafting Materials as Mists' Construction allows them to be great at creating stuff but they can be flaky as hell too. Sometimes adding an bonus, unneeded extra feature to said Enchanted Item, like a sword that laughs in a sinister fashion upon being pulled from a dead enemy or arrows that scream as they are fired from a bow of any sort.

The shop isn't much and the new, freshly painted sign that sports in black Dare the Gate? Taking a moment to stares at the sign and yea, the owner is more then likely a Mist as only a Mist would think to use such a name for their shop. Still, he enters the store anyway.

Glancing up from his new Shop Interface, he finds a familiar looking Sinner entering into the ramshackle building. Ah, the Alchemist... Suna, currently disguised as a Sinner by the name of Sai Yasha, also a 'Mist User'.

"Greetings, what brings you into my Shop?" He asks with a hint of curiosity. His current appearance is based on his actual one, the changes were to age, facial hair, color chances to the eyes and hair, plus using layered Illusions upon his horns to give the impression that they are fake. The Dungeon Lord's 'age' is near the late thirties or early forties, a short trimmed beard, a dark gray for the hair color and beard, and a rich green for his eyes.

"Tsk, just show me your Store Inventory." The Alchemist Sinner orders in a gruff tone and he moves to a different part of his Interface to do just that. The scowl slightly fades while their eyes begin to glint at what's being shown.

I guess it's a good thing I focused on buying such a wide selection instead of improving the building. The Dungeon Lord reflects as the Sinner is already marking what he wishes to buy and in what quantities. This store won't generate any DP for him to use, in stead, it grands him the opinion to actually Buy Crafting Materials that his Dungeon does not produces, which does happen at different rates that depend upon the floor's monsters and theme. Or a chance dropped from a Sinner upon their death in his Dungeon either.

Once the Shop reaches level Five, he'll be able to sell the Items he's made in boredom and just cluttering up his personal Inventory Vault. Also, given that this Shop doesn't generate DP for him, it doesn't cost him DP to upgrade either, just the coins Sinners seem to value so much and, again, is just cluttering up his personal Inventory Vault from chance drops of Sinners or when the Sinners decide to ignore the lowest value coins and said coins end up in getting sent to his personal Inventory Vault. He's only set this up just yesterday, venturing out of his Dungeon right after the Sinner Party exited out of it, following their tracks to this town.

A ding-a-ling signals the purchase going through and it seems that by dent of how much the Alchemist Sinner had bought, he's Shop is now level Three and with a simple promise, "I'll be coming back here as long as you keep such a wide stock of Alchemist Crafting Material."

"Thanks?" He calls after before pulling up his Shop Inventory's Log to see what the Alchemist Sinner purchased. As he does so, another Sinner enters, this one sporting a fake smile and cold eyes. "Greetings."

"Heya, name's Takeshi Yamamoto and I don't suppose you sell swords, do yea?" Why give me his name? He wonders as he replies, "Sai Yasha and I have a small selection."

"Are any on display?" The Sinner named Takeshi asks and he turns his head in the direction, "Three on display but I warn you, they are fairly pricey."

"Ok, thanks." And with a nod of acknowledgement, the Sinner named Takeshi wanders off in that direction and he can't help but feel as though this Sinner seems to be taking stock of him and the Shop he is the owner of. He calls up his own Interface and checks what this level increase means for him plus if anything new has been unlocked.

"Interesting name, Dare the Gate?" The Sinner remarks and he glances towards the Swordsman, replying, "I thought it had a certain... something." He can't help but smile by the end before allowing it to fade.

"Well, there is a Dungeon near here, the last Vongola." Takeshi the Sinner remarks and he hums, recalling, "The Ninth was Conquered almost a year ago."

"Yea, we did, saved Timoteo from the Werewolf Dungeon Lord." Takeshi the Sinner states and he blinks, Saved? "Something about that doesn't sound right..."

"Oh? Oh! Hahaha, yea, I guess so." The Sinner remarks with a shrug. "Either way, the Dungeon Lord looked like a canine."

That's not what sounds wrong... He mentally thinks to himself. "I take it he's recovering from his captivity?" He inquires politely.

"As well as expected, then again, even the Primo hasn't fully recovered from his own captivity and he was the first one we rescued." Takeshi the Sinner remarks as he tests the weight of a two-handed sword called Shimmering Star. "His Guardians are having a tough time getting through to him and he relapses ever so often." A trail of stars dripping from the path of the swinging sword, fading away before touching the ground.

Then Takeshi the Sinner proceeds to talk about different subjects, switching between them fairly rapidly and trying to follow the flow of words is... hard, then again, he's never interacted with anyone before beyond his Interface and the fairly short exchange of Buyer and Seller since opening up his Shop. At some point, the Sinner finishes studying the three on display swords and is standing before the counter, sometimes using his hands and fingers to demonstrate something or as positions of people and/or objects.

Suna just lets the Sinner talk, doing his best to answer any random question the Sinner fires at him. At some point, Takeshi the Sinner's eyes seem to thaw and that fake smile plus cheer also fades, he doubts that Takeshi notices the change but he does and for some reason, it makes the Sinner seem frail. So when the Sinner's chatter dies down, he asks, "So?"

"So?" Takeshi the Sinner's defenses snap into place and he presses, "So the reason your worried is...?"

"Who says I'm worried? Sure, this last Dungeon Lord is sneaky and smart but we got plenty of people who are as well! Also, ah, what time is it?" Takeshi the Sinner asks, clearly side stepping the actual inquiry and it's not long before the Sinner leaves with a simple good bye.

"Your Sky." He answers with a sigh and then shakes his head, trying to clear it. After all, it's best to not get too friendly with Sinners, particularly those who are clearly driven to clear his Dungeon in the name of this 'Sky' of theirs.

Once he closes up, he uses the Teleportation feature of his Interface to arrive at his personal rooms, the persona of Sai fades to reveal the Dungeon Lord Suna and he calls forth his wings to stretch them out a bit before allowing them to fold up onto his back. He glances around his room before checking each floor of his Dungeon, checking to be sure that there's no holding cell before doing a Search for Sinners only to get nothing. "No hidden cell nor are there any Sinners."

Still, he can't shake the feeling that it's true what Takeshi the Sinner said, that the other nine Dungeons of Vongola had Sinners captive and being tortured by the Dungeon Lords of each Dungeon. He's moving out of his rooms and heading for his Throne Room. Once within, he tilts his head and stares hard up at the Crystal, again trying to get information about the Crystal but other then it now being labeled a Sky Crystal, the usual description remains and even flying up, he taps the surface of the Sky Crystal but other then gentle ripples moving within the light upon his tapping, there's nothing.

In the end, Suna lands on the floor and calls his wings back into himself as he scowls at the Sky Crystal. He doesn't like this, there's something more to this bit of information and the Sinners seem so confident that he's torturing this Sky Sinner yet, there's nothing for him to find to confirm that. Glaring a bit more at the Sky Crystal with his sky blue eyes, he resists the temptation of loading Spells into a Slot and firing it at the Sky Crystal. Looking away, he marches out of his Throne Room, returning to his personal rooms.

I can't believe someone actually managed to make it this far. The Dungeon Lord admits to himself as he waits for the Sinner, Takeshi, to enter. The one Sinner called Kyoya Hibari had almost made it here along with the Swordsman Sinner but the acid finally ate through that one's neck before the floor Boss died.

For some reason, the only times Takeshi the Sinner would enter into his Shop would be in the company of other Sinners and it's rare that the Sinner talks directly at him either. It's been a good four years since he opened up that Shop and his Dungeon has grown from it's previous Twenty-three floors to Twenty-nine floors. The rapid growth having to do with their sending research parties into his Dungeon and he's had to keep throwing them off in little but surprisingly effective ways, often times, it's as simple as altering a floor plan's layout to selecting monster upgrades he doesn't usually use, never mind the changing of trap locations or just adding Logic Puzzles before facing a mid-Boss or even entering that floor.

Finally it seems that Takeshi the Sinner is ready as the doors open to permit the weaken Sinner into his Throne Room. He wonders just what is going through Takeshi the Sinner's mind upon laying eyes upon him or upon the Sky Crystal that's lighting up his Throne Room.

He enters once his vision clears upon the bright orange light that assaulted his eyes. There is, of course, the Dungeon Lord sitting upon his Throne but it's the ceiling crystal that he can't help but stare at as it's so much bigger then the other Vongola Dungeon's Sky Crystals and the source of the light for this room. Takeshi knows that the others will be interested in what that means but, to him, it's light is welcoming and calls up memories of his Sky... Damn it, his name still escapes me.

He glances about the room but it's rather... bland ultimately nor does there seem to be anyone here save the Lord. There's a pair of Fu Dog statues on either side of the walk way that leads up to the Throne and the occupant of said Throne. As he slowly makes his way deeper into the room, he gets a better look at the Lord, it's easy to spy the horns from some ways off and the hair is oddly longer then expected along with styled differently. The features the Dungeon Lord is currently wearing are of his Sky yet... he's not identical to him either.

Sky blue eyes watch him approaching and the size is different as well. Then again, the door hinted that he's likely dealing with a Devil or perhaps a Demon, which explains the way this Lord looks rather fetching, seduction could be something he has to watch out for. The Rain Adventurer takes stock up the armor and notes that it's leather, meaning that the Lord is a mobile fighter. There's a pair of daggers hanging upon the belt.

He stares at the Lord sitting upon a rather plain stone Throne, standing just before the Fu Dog statues. He's going to die in this room and by way of this Lord but before he does... "Where is he?" He asks in a soft yet icy tone.

The Lord's eyes flash a bit of pity for a second, which he notes but doesn't concern himself with. "Where is who?" Asks the Lord with a hint of curiosity and he uses Observe to get the name Suna and he's got the race as well, Fallen Angel, which hadn't been what he had guessed but it still suited the hint the door gave.

"Your captive Sky." He states and Lord Suna hums before replying, "It seems you wasted your time traveling here then, as I do not have a prisoner residing within my Dungeon."

Lair almost slips out but... He's not lying. Takeshi realizes and he freezes at the realization of what that even means. His focus goes straight inwards as he doesn't know what he feels about that.

{ + [= - X - =] + }

I should attack now, he's clearly not in any state to defend himself. He thinks to himself, yet... He doesn't and for some reason, he feels pity for this Sinner's emotional Plight.

And now he's crying. He realizes and sighs, placing a hand over his eyes. It calls to mind that only time they had been alone together and his insight into why certain Sinners are so driven to Conquer his Dungeon.

A soft sob and Suna rubs his forehead, mentally reminding himself that he's not responsible for the expectations Sinners have in venturing into his Dungeon. It rings hollow though and the sight before him is heart wrenching in all honesty. This... isn't how it should be happening. He admits to himself as he looks at the weeping Sinner who's clearly drowning in his own emotions.

With ease, he pushes himself up and he's moving down the stairs that lead up to his throne. He is within attacking distance yet Takeshi the Sinner doesn't seem aware that he's so close. Gently, he puts a hand upon the shoulder and for a few seconds, the Sinner sniffles and looks at him before moving to grip his upper body with arms wrapped around his back while the face is firmly planted in his chest. After a few seconds, he awkwardly wraps his own arms about the Sinner's own body and just holds Takeshi.

He's not sure when it happens but at some point, Takeshi falls asleep, likely a combination of emotional exhaustion and just plain exhaustion. Looking up at the Sky Crystal, he wonders if it would just be faster to slice his own throat at this point as it's clear that he's got a viper in his arms, one that will most likely kill him once he's recovered enough of his senses to realize where he is and who's company he's in. Surprise, surprise, the Sky Crystal doesn't give him an answer to his dilemma.

So, for a while, all he has is a sleeping Sinner and that he ultimately can't bring himself to kill Takeshi right now.

He's slow to wake up but that might have to do with how comfortable and safe he feels, which is odd, as he can't recall the last time he's felt safe since waking in this world that's pretty much a RPG game. Yet, safe he feels and he opens an eye in a lazy fashion to find a brunette laying a few feet away. Takeshi tries to recall when he got drunk upon reviving after dying in the Dungeon, only to draw a blank and then he realizes a pair of horn buds near the temple of the brunette and he yelps, pushing himself further away from the brunette.

It's then he notices just how big of a bed he's resting on and that he's clothed in a set of sleepwear. Lord Suna doesn't stir or wake from his startled cry and he just turns to regard the Lord with a hint of disbelief at the fact that he's still asleep and that... he's still alive, in the Dungeon too, but mostly alive. Heart is slowing down as he does his best to organize his thoughts and resists the urge to start crying again or reach over to cling to the still sleeping Lord.

His face reddens as he recalls how he clung to the Lord, sobbing into the Lord's chest, and of the comfort the Lord gave. It's clear that he had been rather exhausted and had fallen asleep clinging to the Lord, who could have killed him at any point during his emotional break down. The Rain glances up at the ceiling, wondering what he's suppose to do now only for his Message Interface to decide he's been awake long enough and shows itself.

It's hardly surprising that it's from the others and the tone of each message changes at different times and it seems that the other did try to re-enter the Dungeon only for the Entrance Hall to keep them from venturing into the Dungeon, dis-proving the whole Revived party members can returner the Dungeon if they still have a member within it. He looks to at the Lord, who still hasn't woken up and wonders why the horns can change sizes before realizing it's likely to keep them from destroying the pillows, bed sheets, and the bed.

I could try smothering him... Takeshi mentally reviews but, well, that would just wake the Lord up and there's a good chance that Suna will easily overpower him. I could try looking for my stuff and... Or maybe for his daggers...

He lays back down on the bed and the Message Interface follows him. In the end, he types out he camped out after the Boss and will get back to them later. Dismissing the Interface, he tries to make sense of the situation he finds himself in. His Sky, who should be here, isn't, the Dungeon Lord did not kill him while he was emotionally vulnerable, the self same Lord changed him out of his pretty much destroyed armor into what he's wearing, and finally, didn't put him in a prison cell or bind him in anyway. "This is so confusing..."

After all, does this make him Lord Suna's guest? Or was this an attempt at seduction? Better yet, what does he expect to get out of this? He wonders to himself. What's his angle? Takeshi frowns with narrow eyes glaring upwards.

Then the Lord yawns and begins to stretch, causing him to break out of his thoughts as he turns his head to watch the Lord sits up and flexing his back, a pair of black feathered wings sprout, also stretching out before they return into the back. Then the Lord turns to look at him with his sky blue eyes and the Lord muses after a second, "Feeling better I take it?"

"Why?" He asks once he sits up and turns to face the Lord with a serious expression on his face. "Why didn't you kill me when you had the chance?" Because if it had been reversed, I won't have hasted.

"That's the question, isn't it? Why didn't I?" The Lord muses and he's a tad disturbed to realize that not even the Lord knew the answer to that question. "Your stuff's outside in the hall. You can leave." I won't stop you.

He glances down as he hears the Lord move out of the bed, he catches a glimpse of the Lord walking through a doorway, realizing that the other doorways likely where part of this bedroom area. And wasn't that a strange thing to learn? That Lords could have private sleeping quarters, as in, a bedroom to sleep in. Likely well hidden too. He muses as he's still not sure what to make of... this...

Still confused, he does crawl the last few feet to the edge of the bed but, instead of heading for the small hallway, moves to check out what's in what doorway. The one Lord Suna entered proved to be a walk in closet that also features a secure Vault Door across the room from the doorway and the next one sports a fairly large pool that he walks up to. The room is rather warm and putting a toe into the water reveals it's a decent temperature.

Then he moves to the final door way on this side of the bed room ends up being divided into a kitchen with a small dinning table and Award Room. So, they can earn Awards too... He muses but beyond the ability to see the various Awards in the form of Trophies, Plaques, and Medals, there's no listing of why they were awarded, which might be due to the personal nature of the Awards or it could be because he is not a Dungeon Lord. He does note that this room is fairly dusty and doesn't have anything save for Awards, meaning that this room isn't a place the Lord likes to linger or visit.

Still, there's no point in tempting fate, no matter how... nice this Lord seems to be, they were enemies and all that needs to happen is for the Lord to decide he's changed his mind. Glancing towards the walk in closet, Takeshi heads for the minor hallway. "Thanks for your hospitality." He murmurs before walking through the door.

His belongings are next to the wall and glancing backwards, it's clear that this door is hidden behind a very good illusion. Then looking around the hallway, he finds it bemusing that the door is pretty much across from the Throne Room, which has open doors. The light coming from the Sky Crystal...

He's standing in the Throne Room before he knows it and gazing up at the Sky Crystal. Glancing backwards, the Lord hasn't arrived nor automatically teleported into the room either upon glancing around. He notices a balcony spot a bit up behind the Throne. Glancing to the sides of the room, he notices a pair of doors. "I don't recall seeing those before..." Then again, he'd been exhausted from the Boss and been fairly focused on readying himself for seeing his Sky all injured and at the mercy of the Dungeon Lord, which hadn't been what ultimately awaited him.

He heads explores the two, one holds armors and the other weapons, the range of armor and weapons are common to exalted just from looking into the room. He wonders if he actually went through the two if he couldn't find a few pieces of legendary equipment. Not that it matters, going through the rooms would likely bring Lord Suna to the room the moment he crossed into either. So, he wanders over to the simple stone Throne that doesn't seem to sport any kind of decoration yet, matches the room's simple nature.

"Should I?" He wonders to himself before smirking slyly and moves to sit down, it's... cold and there doesn't seem to be an enchantment in away way as it's just like sitting on a flat rock ultimately. Calling up his Interface, there's no new option there, which likely means that like them, Dungeon Lords also have their own Interface Menu. Whether they need to be in the Throne Room to access it, he doesn't know and after a few minutes of having the stone's cold try to suck out his own body heat, he gets out of it.

Which leaves him standing before the Throne as he returns to gazing up at the bright Sky Crystal and the gentle comfort it seems to grant his nerves, soothing his Flames, and seem to feel like he's Home. Again, the Lord doesn't suddenly appear in the room and, well, there's something he kind of... decides to try. After all, it's not like it could do any lasting harm, right?

Before he can though, his Message Interface pops up, it seems the number of messages have grown to be too many once again. With a soft sigh, he skims through them and decides to give them something of the truth, which is, he's in the Throne Room right now and that he's looking at the Sky Crystal, along with he hasn't engaged in battle with the Dungeon Lord as of yet, he also gives them the information on race and name, Fallen Angel and is named Suna. After a few seconds, he also adds before sending, there's no sign of the captive Sky anywhere.

The backlash of that tid bit of information is met with disbelief but then, they cut off with a promise that they'll be having a very long discussion about this once he's been revived. With a weak chuckle, he dismisses the Interface and glances towards the open doors, still finding it hard to believe he's still being left alone by the Lord in his Throne Room. Then again... He looks down at his attire and could only guess that since he hasn't changed into his final set of leather armor or brought out his last, battle beaten sword, the Lord doesn't feel threatened by him.

With a slight shake of his head, he calls upon his Rain Flames, slowly pooling them around his body. Again, there's no sudden appearance of the Lord nor does it trigger any hidden feature of the room. Feeling a bit more confident and secure, he speeds up the process until he's whole body is covered in Rain Flames. Feeling his emotions become rather numb from his own Tranquility, he moves his right hand up at the ceiling and wills his Rain Flames to erupt to the Sky Crystal.

His Rain Flames fade and it's then that the Lord Teleports in by the Throne, asking in bewilderment, "What did you do?" He watches as his Rain Flames cause ripples in the trapped Sky Flames, it's kind of beautiful, actually, as the orange slowly moves to break up the rings of blue, causing whirlpools to form where the blue begins to swirl in the orange.

"Not sure but it's kind of pretty, don't you think?" He answers cheerfully as the light coming from the Sky Crystal begins to release some blue light and orange. He half expects the Lord to attack him viva his exposed back, only the Lord seems to lean on the Throne.

He turns his full attention as the Lord seems to be having trouble standing and the sky blue eyes are now flickering orange. Sky Flames also seem to erupt for a few seconds from the Lord's own body. "Tsuna?" He whispers softly in a questioning tone and it's like a dam breaks as black wings erupt from the back as the tiny horn buds grow to be very impressive as they curve back a bit.

Sky Flame erupt all over Tsuna's body, and he Knows this is Tsunayoshi, as the head goes back and the mouth opens to scream but there's no sound, tears do flow from the eyes only they evaporate away. "Tsuna!" He moves towards his Friend, the Sky Flames burn upon him touching them but he refuses to let go. "TSUNA!" He shouts and his Rain Flames flow out of him, moving to mingle with his friend's Flames.

As the two Flames met, the Sky Flames move to engulf him as well but he refuses to let go. His memories of the other fully restored and his heart wrenches at the thought that he'd be made to forget, and that's what the Sky Flames want to so, make him forget Tsunayoshi, that Tsuna is the Dungeon Lord Suna, and about this whole encounter from the moment he entered into the Throne Room to the Now that's happened, is happening, will be happening? But he fights it, he doesn't want to be ignorant of the Truth.

"Yamamoto..." He hears Tsuna whisper, guilt coloring the tone and he can only imagine what his Sky is going through, knowing what he's been doing as Suna. "Call me Takeshi, Tsuna." He says as he manages to pull the other towards him, yes, at the moment, Tsuna's far taller then him right now plus there's his wings out as well and he can't really see anything, it's all orange and blue.

"So sorry... I... I..." Tsuna says but he shushes him, saying, "Neither of us knew, none of us could Know."

The Dungeons always have a Sky as a captive and it always set things up to torture them, it's just that in this case, the captive also served as the Lord of the Dungeon by being made ignorant of who he was. What greater torture could such a place inflict upon the kind Tsuna then having that Sky be the reason for his friends and Guardians deaths time and again? How much more devastating for us upon realizing we killed the very person we wanted to rescue?

"Please don't leave me." He says as he feels Tsuna try to pull away. "Please... Don't leave me."

"But your burning! You'll die if we stay in contact, Takeshi-kun!" Tsuna whimpers but he just does his best to tighten his grip.

"Then I'll die knowing you are with me, please... It's trying to make me forget about this... about you." He whispers and he feels Tsuna stiffen before pulling him close.

And he blacks out a few seconds later.

Suna lets out a sob as he feels Takeshi's body vanish and their mingling Flames fade, the Sky Crystal's light dims, not that it matters. The pressure in his own mind is gone yet, he still remembers who he'd been but also... Also the number of things done to him throughout his life as Tsunayoshi, intentionally and otherwise, and having been given a insight in the minds of those around him. Takeshi was one of the few who genuinely cared about him, so it hurts so much to know that he'd killed the Rain.

"Your wrong, I didn't have that many objections to being transformed into a Dungeon Lord." He murmurs, he wanted to return the favor after all. His life had been Hell because of the Ninth Don of the Vongola Famiglia Sealed him with that Man's permission when he went Active and then they lied about so many things, never mind Reborn didn't really Tutor him on the important matters that a Mafia Don needed to know, never mind what a Don of the Alliance needed to know but then, Reborn had been an outsider to the Alliance, even if he 'tutored' Dino.

The lack of memories had been a blessing as it was to ensure he doesn't get 'cold' feet in regards to his purpose in this Purgatory. Then again, what were the odds that Takeshi would be the only one to arrive to my Throne Room? Suna muses as he then realizes something new in his Dungeon, namely... a new room.
